

THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY

From the collection of James Collins,
Drumcondra, Ireland.
Purchased, 1918.

910.3
P239
v.2

THE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Engraved by W. N. Scott

Drawn by J. C. Brownie

LIVERPOOL FROM SEACOMBE.

THE
PARLIAMENTARY GAZETTEER
OF
ENGLAND AND WALES,

ADAPTED TO THE NEW POOR-LAW, FRANCHISE, MUNICIPAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL ARRANGEMENTS, AND COMPILED WITH A SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE LINES OF RAILROAD AND CANAL COMMUNICATION, AS EXISTING IN 1840-44.

ILLUSTRATED BY A SERIES OF MAPS
FORMING A COMPLETE COUNTY-ATLAS OF ENGLAND, AND BY FOUR LARGE MAPS OF WALES.

WITH AN APPENDIX
CONTAINING THE RESULTS, IN DETAIL, OF THE CENSUS OF 1841.

Volume II.
E—K.

LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN:
A. FULLARTON AND CO.

1845.

THE

PARLIAMENTARY GAZETTEER

OF THE

REVENUE AND FINANCE

FOR THE YEAR 1850-51
IN WHICH ARE GIVEN THE NAMES OF THE MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AND THE NAMES OF THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE NAMES OF THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS

1850-51

PRINTED BY J. H. B. & CO. 10, N. B. ST. N. B.

EDINBURGH: J. H. B. & CO. 10, N. B. ST. N. B.

PRINTED BY J. H. B. & CO. 10, N. B. ST. N. B.

EDINBURGH: J. H. B. & CO. 10, N. B. ST. N. B.

EDINBURGH:

FULLARTON AND CO., PRINTERS, LEITH WALK.

910.3

P239

v. 2

THE

PARLIAMENTARY GAZETTEER

OF

ENGLAND AND WALES.

EAC

EACHWICK, a township in the parish of Heddon-on-the-Wall, county of Northumberland; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on the river Pont. Here is a daily school. This was anciently a place of considerable importance. Acres 200. Houses 23. A. P. £1,003. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 113. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 5s.

EAGLE, a parish in the hund. of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, union and county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, returned at £120; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Ingilby, Bart. The Wesleyans have a chapel here; and there are 3 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Acres 2,450. Houses 93. A. P. £1,219. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 477. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 15s.

EAGLE-HALL, a hamlet in the above parish; 9 miles west-south-west of Lincoln. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 45. Other returns with the parish.

EAGLE-WOODHOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty in the lower division of Boothby-Graffo. Acres 80. Pop., in 1831, 10.

EAGLESCLIFFE, or EGGLESCLIFFE, a parish in the south-west division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton-upon-Tees, co.-palatine of Durham; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-east of Yarm, comprising the townships of Newsam, Aislaby, and Eaglescliffe; bounded on the east and south by the Tees, which in this place is navigable, and is crossed by a cast-iron bridge of one arch, from which a railway extends to the Stockton and Darlington railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £28 17s. 1d.; gross income £1,120. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1830, £6 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £329 9s.; of the township, £170 18s. Acres of the parish 3,970. Houses 133. A. P. £6,891. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 625. Acres of the township, 1,580. Houses 99. A. P. £3,325. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 424.

EAGLESFIELD, a township in the parish of Brigham, county of Cumberland; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-west of Cockermouth. All tithes, moduses, &c., of the townships of Eaglesfield and Blindbothel, in the manor of Five Towns, with Eaglesfield, the property of the lay rector, were commuted in 1812. Here are 3 daily schools. This township is now comprehended within the boundaries of Cockermouth. Acreage with the parish. Houses 85. A. P. £1,434.

EAL

Pop., in 1801, 310; in 1831, 411. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 16s.

EAKRING, a parish in the South-clay division of the hund. of Bassetlaw, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south-south-east of Allerton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 16s. 1½d.; gross income £544. Patrons, in 1835, Earls Manvers and Scarborough, alternately. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,240. Houses 126. A. P. £3,479. Pop., in 1801, 441; in 1831, 598. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 9s.

EALING, with OLD BRENTFORD, a parish in Kensington division, wapentake of Ossulston, union of Brentford, county of Middlesex; 10 miles west of St. Paul's cathedral, and near the Great Western railway. Acres 3,930. Houses 1,325. A. P. £30,187. Pop., in 1801, 5,035; in 1831, 7,783. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £694. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are 17 daily and 8 boarding schools, one of which, the Boy's charity school, is endowed with a fixed income of £150 7s. 6d., and an average annual produce of subscriptions, &c., amounting to £100. A number of the boys are clothed as well as educated at this school: another, the Girl's charity school, is endowed with about £200 per annum: a number of the girls are also clothed at this school. The Industrial School at Ealing Grove, is a highly beneficial institution; the objects of which are to educate children, destined for country pursuits. They are trained into habits of patient industry, by being required to labour for 3 hours a-day, partly for the institution, and partly for themselves, in gardens appropriated to each of them. They are paid for the work done on behalf of the institution, according to the labour they are able to perform; the monitor who watches over them reporting the industry of each to the master, who remunerates them accordingly. They pay rents for their gardens, purchase their seeds, and reap the produce. In 1838, one of them cleared £1 18s. 10d., from his sixteenth of an acre, after paying the rent, seeds, manure, &c. Each boy keeps a little book of receipt and expenditure; and habits of accurate accounting are cultivated, as are likewise habits of order and neatness in the use and arrangement of their tools, plants, &c. These more industrial and manual branches of education are blended with religious and other instruction of the most beneficial description. Charities possessed by this parish, inclusive of the school charities, amounted, at the time of the inquiry, to £602 7s. 1d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,883 5s. The parish is adorned with many elegant villas.

EAMONT (THE), a river of Cumberland, which derives its crystal stream from some of the highest and most romantic mountains in England. Its most distant branch rises nearly upon the height of Kirkstone, in Westmoreland, and falls down that mountain in a continual rumbling cataract, thence in a gentle current it flows through Patterdale to Ullswater; and issuing from this lake to Pooley Bridge, proceeds in a south-east direction, through a pleasant woody vale, to the Eden.

EAMONT-BRIDGE. See YANWATH AND EAMONT-BRIDGE.

EARDINGTON, a township in Quatford parish, county of Salop; 2 miles south of Bridgenorth, and west of the river Severn. Acres 1,200. Houses 63. A. P. £1,773. Pop., in 1801, 328; in 1831, 325. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 4s.

EARDISLAND, a parish in the hund. of Stretford, union of Weobly, county of Hereford; 5 miles west of Leominster, on the river Arrow. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 9s. 7d.; gross income £200. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. Here is a free-school, founded by William Whittington in 1607: income £49 7s., and a day and Sunday school partly supported by endowment. Charities, in 1836, upwards of £50 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £517 15s. The Roman road, Watling-street, is supposed to have passed through this parish. Acres 4,170. Houses 181. A. P. £6,064. Pop., in 1801, 744; in 1831, 813.

EARDISLEY, a parish in the hund. of Huntingdon, union of Kington, county of Hereford; 5 miles south by east of Kington, north of the river Wye. The Hay railway from the wharf of the Brecknock and Abergavenny canal near Brecon, ends at the village of Parton-Cross in this parish, where it is joined by the Kington railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Bollingham, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 12s. 6d.; gross income £148. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £286 17s. 4d. impropriate, and £503 vicarial. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Perrey, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £6 2s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £478 3s. Half-a-mile hence is an oak-tree covering a surface of 324 feet in circular extent, said to be 400 years old; some of its branches are 2 feet in diameter; its girth at the bottom is 60 feet. Acres 4,460. Houses 149. A. P. £5,590. Pop., in 1801, 575; in 1831, 825.

EARDLEY-END, a township in the parish of Audley, county of Stafford; about 5 miles north-west of Newcastle. Houses 22. Pop., in 1811, 158; in 1831, 165. Other returns with the parish.

EARTH. See BLUNTISHAM, Huntingdonshire.
EARL or YEARD-HILL, a township in the parish of Doddington, county of Northumberland. Acreage with the parish. Houses 12. A. P. £1,972. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 8s.

EARLAS, a township in the parish of Gresford, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 5 miles north of Wrexham. Houses 13. Pop., in 1811, 77; in 1831, 69. Other returns with the parish.

EARL'S-BARTON. See BARTON-EARL'S.

EARL-SHILTON, a chapelry in the parish of Kirby-Mallory, county of Leicester; 4 miles north-east of Hinckley. Living, a curacy not in charge, subordinate to the rectory of Kirby-Mallory. The great and small tithes of the lordship of Earl-Shilton, the property of the clerical rector and lay impropriator, were commuted in 1778. Here is a place of worship for Independents; the church was formed in 1810. There are 3 daily schools in this chapelry, one of which is endowed with funds bequeathed by the late Alderman Gabriel Newton. Poor rates, in 1838, £911 18s. Acres 920. Houses 406. A. P. £4,522. Pop., in 1801, 1,287; in 1831, 2,017.

EARLSTOKE, a parish in the hund. of Melksham, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by south of East Lavington. Living, a curacy not in charge, subordinate to the vicarage of Melksham. The great and small tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of Sarum and vicar, were commuted in 1777. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,400. Houses 75. A. P. £2,590. Pop., in 1801, 342; in 1831, 420. Poor rates, in 1838, £168 9s.

EARLSTON. See BURGHCLERE.

EARLY, a liberty in the parish of Sonning, county of Berks; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Reading. Here is a small daily school. Acres 2,280. Houses 89. Pop., in 1821, 447; in 1831, 441. Poor rates, in 1838, £547 15s.

EARNLEY, or ERNLEY, with ALMODINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Manhood, rape of Chichester, union of Westhampnett, county of Sussex; 6 miles south-west by south of Chichester. Living, a rectory with that of Almodington, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 6s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £365. The bishop of Chichester is patron alternately with the duke of Norfolk. Here is an Independent chapel. Acres 1,120. Houses 16. A. P., £2,192. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 153. Poor rates, in 1838, £54.

EARNSFORD, a liberty in the parish of Binley, county of Warwick; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Coventry; near the London and Birmingham railway. Returns with the parish.

EARNSHILL, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Langport, county of Somerset; 4 miles south-west by south of Langport, and south of the river Isle. Living, a sinecure rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £2 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £30. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Combe, Esq. Acres 390. House 1. A. P. £1,220. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 12. Poor rates, in 1838, £5 9s.

EARSDON, a parish in the east division of Castle ward, union of Tynemouth, Northumberland; 4 miles north-west by north of North Shields. It contains the townships of Brierden, Blackworth, Blyth, South and Newsham, Earsdon, Hartley, Holywell, Seaton-Delaval, and Sighill. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; valued at £11; gross income £119. Patrons, landowners. An elegant new church, erected on an eminence in the vicinity of the town, was consecrated in 1837. It contains 600 sittings, of which 200 are free. The tower has an imposing appearance from the north for a considerable distance both by sea and land. The cost exceeds £2,200, collected by voluntary subscription. There are 20 daily schools in this parish. Acres 11,060. Houses 1,154. A. P. £23,301. Pop., in 1801, 3,451; in 1831, 6,460. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,096 19s. Pop., of the township, in 1801, 206; in 1831, 628. Houses 116. A. P. £2,353. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 15s.

EARSDON, a township in the parish of Hebburn, Northumberland; 5 miles north of Morpeth, and north of the Line water. Houses 19. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 5s.

EARSDON-FOREST, a township in the parish of Hebburn, county of Northumberland; 6 miles west of Morpeth, and north of the river Wansbeck. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 32. Poor rates, in 1838, £20 7s.

EARSHAM HUNDRED, on the south-east side of the county of Norfolk, separated from Suffolk by the river Waveney. Area 24,560 acres. Houses 1,513. Pop., in 1831, 8,485.

EARSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Earsham, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 1 mile west by south of Bungay; bounded on the east and south by the river Waveney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15; gross income £507. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £486 6s. 3d. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Dalling, Bart. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1834, about £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £408. Earsham hall is an elegant mansion. Acres 2,960. Houses 94. A. P. £4,139. Pop., in 1801, 638; in 1831, 759.

EARSWICK, a township, partly within the liberty of St. Peter's at York, but chiefly in the parish of Huntingdon, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-north-east of York, and on the eastern bank of the river Foss. All tithes, the property of the manor of Strensall. Bedern college, and vicar, were commuted in 1770. Acres 1,020. Houses 10. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 6s.

EARTHAM, a parish in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, union of West-hampnett, county of Sussex; 5½ miles north-east by east of Chichester. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 5s. 10½d., returned at £145 15s.; gross income £190. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £192 12s. Patron, the prebendary of Eartham in the cathedral of Chichester. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,110. Houses 16. A. P. £955. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 113. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 1s.

EASBY, a parish in the wapentakes of East and West Gilling, union of Richmond, north riding of Yorkshire. It comprises the townships of Aske, Brompton-upon-Swale, Easby, and Skeeby. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £96. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are two daily schools. Acres 5,090. Houses 162. A. P. £9,255. Pop., in 1801, 693; in 1831, 822. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 6s. Acres of the township, 940. Houses 13. A. P. £2,644. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £22 14s.

EASBY, a township in the parish of Stokesley, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east by north of Stokesley. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,170. Houses 25. A. P. £1,278. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 151. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 4s.

EASBY, a township in the parish of Brampton, Cumberland; 10½ miles north-east by east of Carlisle, and south of the river Irthing. Houses 16. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 98. Other returns with the parish.

EASEBOURNE HUNDRED, in the county of Sussex. Area 29,860 acres. Houses 1,047. Pop., in 1831, 6,716.

EASEBOURNE, a parish in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; 1 mile north-east of Midhurst; on the northern bank of the Rother. It includes the chapelry of Lodsworth liberty. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 6s. 8d., returned at £35; gross income £118. Patron, in 1835, W. S. Poyntz, Esq. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is a National school. One of the Bohun family, formerly lords of Midhurst, founded a convent here. Its possessions were valued, about the time of the dissolution, at £29 16s. 7d. per ann. Dugd. Acres 5,680. Houses 253. A. P. £4,841. Pop., in 1801, 1,207; in 1831, 1,503. Poor rates, in 1838, £700 13s.

EASENHALL, a hamlet in the parish of Monks-Kirby, county of Warwick; 4 miles north-west of Rugby; in the immediate vicinity of the Oxford canal. Acreage with the parish. Houses 41. A. P. £2,032. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 202. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 11s.

EASINGTON. See CHILTON WITH EASINGTON.

EASINGTON WARD, in the county of Durham, consists of two divisions, north and south. Its situation is in the central part of the eastern side of the county, and it is bounded on the west by the river Wear, which takes a circuitous route from Croxdale to the sea. Area 77,120 acres. Houses 8,011. Pop., in 1831, 47,321.

EASINGTON, a parish in the south division of Easington ward, union of Easington, co-palatine of Durham; 9½ miles east by north of Durham, and comprising the townships of Haswell, Easington, Hawthorn, and Shotton. Acres 12,400. Houses 234. A. P. £8,277. Pop., in 1801, 944; in 1831, 1,390. The town of Easington, which is of considerable extent, and occupies an elevated situation near the North sea, was the ancient head of the ward, deanery, and parish of Easington. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge; gross income £1,437. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Here are places of worship for the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and eight daily schools, besides an endowed day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1830, upwards of £20, of which £10 constituted an endowment of a school at Hawthorn. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £555; of the township £213 18s. The Easington poor-law union comprehends 19 parishes, embracing an area of 96 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,984. Acres of the township, 4,980. Houses 119. A. P. £3,389. Pop., in 1801, 487; in 1831, 693.

EASINGTON, a township in the parish of Bel-ford, Northumberland; 1½ mile north-east of Bel-ford. Here are 2 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 43. A. P. £2,456. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 17s.

EASINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Ewelme, union of Thame, county of Oxford; 4 miles south-west by south of Tetworth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £4 12s. 6d., returned at £80; gross income £80. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Charities, £5 per annum. Acres 380. Houses 3. A. P. £265. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 13.

EASINGTON, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Holderness, union of Patrington, east riding of the county of York; 6 miles south-east of Patrington, on the coast of the North sea, containing the townships of Easington and Out-Newton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £10; gross income £58. Patron, the archbishop of York. The great and small tithes, &c. of Easington township, the property of the archbishop of York, were commuted in 1770. Here are three daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1823, £12 14s. Acres 3,020. Houses 104. A. P. £4,073. Pop., in 1801, 341; in 1831, 542. Poor rates, in 1838, £223 6s.

EASINGTON, a parish in the east division of the liberty of Langbaurgh, union of Guisborough, north riding of the county of York; 9 miles east by north of Guisborough. It contains the hamlet of Boulby. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Liverton, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £14 8s. 6½d.; gross income £685. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are two daily schools, and a day and Sunday school. Some extensive alum works were established here about the year 1615. Acres 3,856. Houses 90. A. P. £4,767. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 477. Poor rates, in 1838, £230 19s.

EASINGTON, a township in Slaidburn parish, west riding of the county of York; 7 miles north-north-west of Clitheroe. Here is a daily school, partly supported by endowment. Acres 11,740. Houses 68. A. P. £4,514. Pop., in 1801, 376, in 1831, 424. Poor rates, in 1838, £314 5s.

EASINGTON. See AMPNEY (ST. PETER), Gloucestershire.

EASINGTON-GRANGE, a township in the parish of Belford, Northumberland; 1½ mile north-east of Belford. Acreage with the parish. Houses 12. A. P. £1,772. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 62.

EASINGWOLD, a market-town and parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Easingwold, north riding of the county of York; 210½ miles north-north-west of London, and 13 of York. It contains the chapelry of Raskelf. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £12 11s. 0½d.; gross income £250. Patron, the bishop of Chester. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of the bishop of Chester and vicar, were commuted in 1808. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1815; and places of worship for Independents and Roman Catholics; together with 10 daily schools, one of which was endowed in 1781 by Eleanor, the wife of Mr. G. Westernman of London, with funds amounting to £73 per annum. Charities, in 1821, about £190 per annum. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Easingwold, capable of accommodating 130 persons. The Easingwold poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing 89 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 8,503. Poor rates, in 1838, £844 4s.—Great quantities of bacon and butter are sent from hence to York, and thence forwarded to London by water. The town of Easingwold is irregularly built: the environs are flat, and not very fertile. The market is on Friday. Fairs are held for horned cattle, horses, sheep, linen and woollen cloth, on the 5th of July and 25th of September. Here are branches of the Knaresborough and Claro banking company, of the Yorkshire district bank, and of the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial banking company. In the vicinity are some chalybeate springs. Acres 10,070. Houses 464. A. P. £12,026. Pop., in 1801, 1,805; in 1831, 2,381.

EAST-ACRE. See CASTLE-ACRE.

EASTBOURNE, a parish and hund. in the union of Eastbourne, county of Sussex. Acres 5,850. Houses 482. A. P. £8,866. Pop., in 1801, 1,668; in 1831, 2,726. The village of Eastbourne is 6 miles south of Hailsham. It consists of 4 straggling divisions: Lea-Houses, the south-eastern extremity; Meads, the south-western; and South and East Bourne, at a distance of 1½ mile from the sea. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes, and dio. of Chichester; rated at £26 1s. 8d.; gross income £560. Patron, the treasurer of Chichester cathedral. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship in this parish. There are 8 daily schools, attended by upwards of 250 children, and 2 day and Sunday National schools. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,130 11s.—The Eastbourne poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 53 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 7,823. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,641. Expenditure in 1838, £4,732; in 1839, £4,928 9s. Eastbourne has lately become a fashionable bathing-place. It is furnished with the requisite sources of amusement, a theatre, ball-room, and circulating library; and it has a chalybeate spring of the same properties as the Bristol waters. The Sea-houses are chiefly frequented by the bathers, on account of the proximity of that part of the village to the beach; the bathing-place here is excellent. The whole coast of Sussex has, from the earliest records, been gradually suffering from the encroachments of the sea. At Eastbourne it is protected by strong groins or frames of wood-work and shingle. A little to the south of Eastbourne is Beachey-head, the highest head-land on all the south coast. See BEACHEY-HEAD.—On the surrounding hills large quantities of the birds called wheatears are caught, during the months of July and August. In the vicinity various relics of the Romans have been found. The market-day is Saturday. A fair is held here for cattle and pedlery on the 10th of October.

EASTBRIDGE, a parish in the liberty and union of Romney-marsh, lathe of Shepway, county of Kent; 5 miles north of New Romney, near the military canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £71 17s.; gross income £75. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Charities, in 1836, £18 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 5s. Acres 1,090. Houses 3. A. P. £2,909. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 16.

EASTBRIDGE, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Westgate, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; about 2 miles west of Canterbury. This place is mostly occupied by an hospital; and contains a daily school, endowed by a late ordinance from the archbishop of Canterbury. Houses 3. Pop., in 1821, 34; in 1831, 30.

EASTBURN, a township in the parish of Kirkburn, East riding of the county of York; 3 miles south-west of Great Driffield, at the source of the river Hull. Acres 1,420. Houses 1. A. P. 1,205. Pop., in 1801, 11; in 1831, 14. Poor rates, in 1838, £20.

EASTBURY WITH BOCKHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of Lambourn, county of Berks; 1½ mile south-east by east of Lambourn, and north of the river Kennet. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and a daily school, endowed with £10 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 87. A. P. £3,606. Pop., in 1801, 398; in 1831, 419.

EASTBURY, a hamlet located in the hund. of Pimperne, county of Dorset, north of Blandford-Forum; now almost depopulated, and known only as the seat of the late Lord Melcombe-Regis.

EAST-CHURCH, a parish in the Isle of Sheppey, lathe of Scray, union of Sheppey, county of Kent; 5 miles east by south of Queenborough. Living, a rectory and vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,971. Patron, in 1835, Miles Barton, Esq. Here are 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1836, £31 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 16s. A fair for toys is held on Holy Thursday. Acres 6,220. Houses 103. A. P. £8,419. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 857.

EASTCOTT, a tything in the parish of Urchfont, county of Wilts; 1¼ mile north-east of Lavington. Houses 26. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 110. Other returns with the parish.

EASTCOTTS, a chapelry in Cardington parish, county of Bedford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Bedford. Houses 145. Pop., in 1801, 504; in 1831, 710. Poor rates, in 1838, £388 6s.

EASTCOURT, a tything in the parish of Crudwell, county of Wilts; 4 miles north-east by north of Malmesbury. Pop., in 1811, 150; in 1821, 157. Other returns with the parish.

EASTER (Good), a parish in the hund. of Dunmow, union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Chelmsford, near a branch of the river Chelmer. Living, a vicarage anited to that of High Easter in 1771, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £171. Patrons, the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, London. This parish possesses a daily school. Charities, in 1836, between £7 and £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £213 18s. There is a chalybeate spring here. Acres 1,800. Houses 85. A. P. £2,303. Pop., in 1801, 429; in 1831, 487.

EASTER (High), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 8 miles north-west of Chelmsford. Living, a vicarage consolidated with that of Good Easter. Here are an infant and a daily school. Acres 3,730. Houses 134. A. P. £5,115. Pop., in 1801, 801; in 1831, 864. Poor rates, in 1838, £674 7s.

EASTERGATE, a parish in the hund. of Avisford, rape of Arundel, union of Westhamptnett, county of Sussex; 5 miles west by south of Arundel, and near the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 19s. 9d.; gross income £312. Patron, the dean and chapter of Chichester. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 890. Houses 29. A. P. £1,272. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 208. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 18s.

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY. See ESSEX.

EAST-EASWRITH HUNDRED, in the rape of Bramer, nearly central in the county of Sussex. Area 8,000 acres. Houses 207. Pop., in 1831, 1,386.

EASTFIELD WITH NEWARK, a hamlet in the parish of St. John the Baptist, county of Northampton. Acres 1,360. Houses 57. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 265.

EAST GRINSTEAD, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hund. and union of East Grinstead, county of Sussex; 29 miles south by east of London, and 19 miles south-south by east of Croydon. Acres 13,390. Houses 524. A. P. £11,631. Pop., in 1801, 2,659; in 1831, 3,364. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Felbridge, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £20; gross income £350. Patrons, in 1835, the Duke of Dorset and Earls of Plymouth and Delawarr. There are 10 daily schools here, one of which is the Grammar National school, endowed with £44 per annum. At the eastern extremity of the town, is a fine quadrangular building, named Sackville college, founded in 1616, by Sackville, duke of Dorset, for 24 aged individuals of both sexes, each person having a separate apartment and £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,525 19s. The East Grinstead poor-law union comprehends 7 parishes, embracing an area of 90 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 11,476. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,053. Expenditure in 1838, £6,871; in 1839, £6,928 12s. This was a borough by prescription, and sent two representatives to parliament since the 1st of Edward II., until its disfranchisement by the reform act, which took it out of the hands of the duke of Dorset. The government of the town is vested in a bailiff. The market-day is Thursday. Fairs are held, April 21st July 13th for horned cattle, and December 11th for cattle and pedlery.

EASTHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles east-north-east of Great Nestor, and west of the river Mersey, containing the townships of Eastham, Nether-Pool, Hooton, Sutton-Great, Sutton-Little, Over-Pool, Thornton-Childer, and part of Whitby. Thornton-Childer is the central township of the parish of Eastham, Eastham itself being at one of its extremities. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £12 13s.; gross income £263. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £150 impropriated, and £133 15s. 3d. vicarial. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chester. There are 4 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday school, one of which is National. Charities, about £24 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £540; of the township, £108. Acres 7,170. Houses 282. A. P. £13,392. Pop., in 1801, 1,142; in 1831, 1,644. Acres of the township 1,550. Houses 63. A. P. £2,302. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 350.

EASTHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Doddington, union of Tenbury, county of Worcester; 4 miles east of Tenbury, on the southern bank of the Teme, comprising the chapelries of Orleton and Child-Hanley. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Hanley-William, Hanley-Child, and Orleton, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £28 15s. 10d.; gross income £920. Here is a day and boarding-school. Acres 4,660. Houses 127. A. P. £4,824. Pop., in 1801, 632; in 1831, 671. Poor rates, in 1838, £196 13s.

EASTHAMPSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Ripplesmere, union of Easthampstead, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Workington. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1821. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Charities, about £46 per annum; besides 8 cottages now taken possession of by the poor-law commissioners. Poor rates, in 1838, £264 11s. A work-house has been erected here for the union of Easthampstead. The Easthampstead poor-law union comprehends 5 parishes, embracing an area of 43 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,980. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,700. Expenditure in 1838, £2,099; in 1839, £2,305 18s. Acres 5,300. Houses 125. A. P. £2,662. Pop., in 1801, 566; in 1831, 647.

EASTHOPE, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Church-Stretton, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Much-Wenlock. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £3 3s. 1½d.; gross income £133. Patron, in 1835, R. Benson, Esq. Acres 1,480. Houses 16. A. P. £698. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 2s.

EASTHORPE, a parish in the Colchester division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; 4 miles east by south of Great-Coggeshall, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £12; nett income £211. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. Colonel Onslow. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,300. Houses 27. A. P. £1,277. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £90.

EASTHOTHLY, a parish in the hund. of Ship-lake, rape of Penvensey, union of Uckfield, county of Sussex; 7 miles north-east of Lewes. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £266 6s. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,000. Houses 76. A. P. £2,163. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 505. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 7s.

EAST HUNDRED, in the county of Rutland. Area 20,300 acres. Houses 667. Population, in 1831, 3,466.

EASTINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Naunton, county of Gloucester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east of North Leach. Living, a curacy not in charge, annexed to the vicarage of North Leach. The great and small tithes of the hamlet of Eastington, the property of the bishop of Gloucester and vicar, were commuted in 1782. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,380. Houses 45. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 266. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 10s.

EASTINGTON, a parish and tything in the lower division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatenhurst, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Stroud, close on the Stroud-Water canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £32 14s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £552. Patron, in 1835, A. Hatherell, Esq. There are a chapel here for the Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 day and Sunday National schools, endowed with £18 12s., besides voluntary subscriptions. Other charities, £11 8s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £929 17s. In 1838, 3 woollen mills here employed 447 hands. Acres 1,400. Houses 349. A. P. £4,949. Pop., including that of the tything of Alkerton, in 1801, 988; in 1831, 1,770.

EASTLEACH-MARTIN, or BURTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Brightwell's Barrow, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north by east of Lechdale, on the river Leach. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10; gross income £161. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,960. Houses 39. A. P. £1,933. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 159. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 16s.

EASTLEACH-TURVILLE, a parish in the hund. of Brightwell's Barrow, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north of Lechdale, on the western bank of the river Leach. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £18; gross income £66. All tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of Gloucester, were commuted in 1772. Here are 2 daily schools. The Roman Iknield-street enters this parish on the east from Oxfordshire, and joins the fosse at Cirencester. Acres 2,670. Houses 89. A. P. £3,502. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 370. Poor rates, in 1838, £178 7s.

EASTLEY AND BARTON. See STONEHAM (South).

EASTLING, a parish in the hund. and union of Faversham, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 5 miles south-west by south of Faversham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £16; gross income £560; nett income £368. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Winchelsea. There is a daily school here. A fair is held here on the 14th of September. Acres 1,880. Houses 68. A. P. £1,576. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 420. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 9s.

EAST-MEON HUNDRED, in South Alton division of Southampton, towards the south-east part of the county. Area 22,830 acres. Houses 223. Pop., in 1831, 2,908.

EAST-MEON, a parish in the above hund., union of Petersfield; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Bishop's-Waltham. It includes the hamlet of Westbury-Peak, and the tythings of Borecan, Coombe. East Meon, Langrish, and Riplington. Living, a vicarage, valued at £35 1s. 8d., with the chapels of Froxfield and Steep annexed to it; gross income £997; a peculiar, in the patronage of the bishop of Winchester. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. A fair is held on the 19th of September, for horses. Acres 11,380. Houses 219. A. P. £8,601. Pop., in 1801, 1,026; in 1831, 1,455. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,135 15s.

EASTNOR, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east by south of Ledbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 15s. 5d.; gross income £363. Patron, in 1835, Earl Somers. Tithes, the property of the clerical rector and vicar, were commuted in 1813. There are 2 daily schools here. Eastnor castle, the seat of Earl Somers, is a splendid mansion, built on the plan of ancient baronial castles. Acres 3,100. Houses 83. A. P. £2,900. Pop., in 1801, 384; in 1831, 493. Poor rates, in 1838, £111.

EASTOFT, a township in the parish of Crowle, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-east of Crowle, on the river Don. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the lay impropiators and vicar, were commuted in 1813. There are 2 daily schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 50. A. P. £1,466. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 224. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 18s.

EASTOFT. See HALDENBY AND EASTOFT.

EASTON, a hamlet in the parish of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire. Acres 800. Houses 2. A. P. £1,005. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 17. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 7s.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; 7 miles north-north-west of Ludgershall. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1833, £26 3s. 9d. Poor rates, in 1838, £241 8s. An hospital or priory for canons of the Trinitarian order existed in ancient times here. Acres 2,080. Houses 81. A. P. £2,710. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 488.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plumegate, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Wickham-Market, and east of the river Deben. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10 18s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £262. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Hamilton. Acres 1,360. Houses 77. A. P. £2,335. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 366. Poor rates, in 1838, £372.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Kimbolton. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, a peculiar, in the dio. of Ely; gross income £68. All tithes, the property of the prebend of Long Stow and vicar, were commuted in 1774. Charities, in 1830, £73 3s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 18s. Acres 1,300. Houses 36. A. P. £1,641. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 151.

EASTON, a hamlet in the parish of South Stoke county of Lincoln; 2 miles north of Colsterworth. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1806. Here is a daily school, endowed with £15 per annum. Formerly there was a chapel here, but it has fallen to decay. Stoke church and parsonage are both in this hamlet. Acres 2,550. Houses 38. A. P. £1,877. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 221. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 16s.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 7 miles west-north-west of Norwich, and west of the Wensum. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 11s. 10½d., returned at £105 13s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, E. R. Fellows, Esq. Here are a place of worship for Baptists, and a daily school. Acres 1,910. Houses 52. A. P. £1,321. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 239. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 9s.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. of Willybrook, union of Stamford, county of Northampton; 2½ miles south-west by south of Stamford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £19 8s. 9d.; gross income £462. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Exeter. There are four daily schools here, one of which was endowed, in 1670, by Mr. Garford; income, in 1830, £82. Other charities, £65 15s. per annum, of which £62 15s. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £284. Acres 3,170. Houses 170. A. P. £1,876. Pop., in 1801, 579; in 1831, 769.

EASTON, a parish in the hund. and division of Fawley, union of Winchester, county of Southampton; 2½ miles north-east by north of Winchester. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £26 6s. 8½d.; gross income £539. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Here are a daily school, and a Sunday National school. Charities, in 1824, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £263 15s. Acres 2,840. Houses 86. A. P. £3,347. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 494.

EASTON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 3 miles north-north-west of Great Dunmow, on the river Chelmer. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £18 13s. 4d.; gross income £598. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £713 15s. 11d. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Maynard. Here are two day and Sunday schools. Acres 2,290. Houses 164. A. P. £3,177. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 840. Poor rates, in 1838, £569 6s.

EASTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow; 2 miles north-west of Great Dunmow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £310. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Maynard, whose handsome and venerable mansion, called Easton-lodge, is pleasantly situated here in the midst of a fine park. Here are 2 daily schools. The parish is entitled to send 6 boys to Lord Maynard's school. There are alms-houses for 4 poor widows, endowed with £20 per annum, besides voluntary donations from Lord Maynard to the amount of about £10 8s. yearly, and occasionally fuel. Here also is the clerk's house, a gift, kept in repair by Lord Maynard, and occupied by the parish clerk. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 2s. Acres 1,400. Houses 64. A. P. £2,316. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 350.

EASTON-BAVENTS, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north-north-east of Southwold, on the coast at the North sea. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Benacre. The place is now of very little importance, having suffered considerably from repeated encroachments of the sea. Acres 770. Houses 2. A. P. with Reyden. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 16. Poor rates, in 1838, £5 9s.

EASTON-IN-GORDANO, a parish in the hund. of Portbury, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; 5 miles west-north-west of Bristol, and west of the river Avon. It includes the hamlet of Crockerne Pill. There are beautiful prospects from this spot: it is rather elevated, and overlooks Bristol and King's Road harbour. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar in the dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 9s. 4½d., returned at £120; gross income £180. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £269 12s. 6d. vicarial, and £60 belonging to the prebendary of Easton-in-Gordano. Patron, the prebendary of Easton, in Wells cathedral. Here are a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, a Baptist meeting-house, and 10 infant, and 3 daily, schools. Charities, in 1825, £17 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £586 18s. Acres 1,440. Houses 433. A. P. £4,511. Pop., in 1801, 1,668; in 1831, 2,251.

EASTON-GREY, a parish in a detached part of the hund. of Chippenham, union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 3½ miles west of Malmesbury, close on the Ackman street Roman way. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6 0s. 5d.; gross income £234. Patron, in 1835, William Davis, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities, in 1833, £4 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £78 17s. The Roman station, Matuantonis, is supposed to have been in this neighbourhood. Acres 790. Houses 37. A. P. £2,181. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 151.

EASTON-MAGNA, a chapelry in the parish of Brighthelm, county of Leicester; 2 miles north-west of Rockingham, south of the river Welland, and west of the Eye. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Brighthelm. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the dean and chapter of Peterborough and vicar, were commuted in 1804. Here are 4 daily schools. Acres 2,180. Houses 117. A. P. £2,972. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 541. Poor rates, in 1838, £375 15s.

EASTON-MAUDIT, a parish in the hund. of Higham-Ferrars, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; 6½ miles south of Wellingborough. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; returned at £130; gross income £144. Patron, Christ church, Oxford. Charities, in 1830, £2 11s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £107. Acres 2,070. Houses 44. A. P. £1,939. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 210.

EASTON-NESTON WITH HULCOTE, a parish in the hund. of Cleley, union of Towcester, county of Northampton; 1½ mile north-east of Towcester. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8; gross income £151. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Pomfret. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish, supported by endowment. The church estate, in 1825, produced £144 1s. 9d., chiefly applied to parochial purposes. Here is the splendid mansion of the earls of Pomfret, partly built by Sir C. Wren, and celebrated for the valuable collection of ancient marbles and pictures which in former times adorned its walls. The statues were presented to the university of Oxford in 1755, by the countess of Pomfret. Acres 720. Houses 32. A. P. £3,692. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 144. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 18s.

EASTON-PERCY, a tything in the parish of Kington-St.-Michael, county of Wilts. It was the birth-place of John Aubrey, the celebrated antiquary. Returns with the parish.

EASTRIDGE, a tything in the parish of Ramsbury, county of Wilts; 6 miles north-west by north of Hungerford. Houses 52. Pop., in 1821, 254; in 1831, 302. Other returns with the parish.

EASTRINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Howdenshire, union of Howden, east riding of the county of York; 3½ miles east-north-east of Howden, intersected by the Selby and Hull railway, on which there is here a station; it comprises the townships of Eastington, Gilderdike, Newport-Wallingfen, Bellasize, Portingen, and Cavil, with the hamlet of Bennet Land. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £12 9s. 7d.; gross income £205. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed. The great and small tithes, compositions, &c., the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1813; the great and small tithes of the township of Wallingfen, in 1777. All tithes, of the township of Gilberdike, commuted. Charities, £41 per annum. Acres 6,910. Houses 338. A. P. £7,959. Pop., in 1801, 1,089; in 1831, 1,676. Poor rates, in 1838, £647 5s. Acres of the township, 3,580. Houses 59. A. P. £1,964. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 323. Poor rates, in 1838, £152 7s.

EASTRIP, an extra-parochial liberty in the hundred of Bruton, county of Somerset; 2 miles west of Bruton, on the river Brue. Acres 160. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 12.

EASTWOOD, a village in the parish of Halifax, wapentake of Morley, union of Halifax, west riding of York. The railway from Manchester to Leeds passes through this village. The Independents have a handsome chapel here.

EASROP, a parish in the hund. and union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile east of Basingstoke, close on the Southampton and London railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £2, returned at £42 10s.; gross income £73. Tithes commuted in 1839, aggregate amount £73 14s. 9d. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of the late G. Glover. The children of this parish attend the National school at Basingstoke. Acres 440. Houses 12. A. P. £759. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 69. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 10s.

EASTRY HUNDRED, in the lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; bounded on the east by the straits of Dover, and on the north by the river Stour. Area 14,690 acres. Houses 636. Population, in 1831, 3,913.

EASTRY, a parish in the upper division of the hund. and union of Eastry, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Sandwich. Living, a vicarage annexed to the curacy of Worth, in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £19 12s. 1d.; gross income £683. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £300; vicarial. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There are 2 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday National school, one of which has a small endowment. Here are endowed almshouses for 6 old persons and 2 out-pensioners. Other charities, in 1836, £21 8s. 10d. Poor rates, in 1838, £450 14s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Eastry, capable of accommodating 500 persons. The Eastry poor-law union comprehends 30 parishes, embracing an area of 65 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 23,868. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £18,998. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,426; in 1839, £8,147 1s. Here is an annual fair for cattle, held on the 2d of October. Acres 2,750. Houses 204. A. P. £5,114. Pop., in 1801, 852; in 1831, 1,245.

EAST-SOHAM. See SOHAM-EARL's, or EAST.

EAST WARD, in the county of Westmoreland. Area 182,080 acres. Houses 2,748. Pop., in 1831, 14,450.

EASTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Wye, lathe of Scray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north of Ashford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 16s. 8d.; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Winchelsea. Here are 2 day and Sunday National schools, for this and 5 neighbouring parishes. Acres 820. Houses 14. A. P. £1,040. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 97. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 18s.

EASTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 7 miles north-east by north of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 12s. 1d., returned at £122 16s. 6d.; gross income £374. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a Roman catholic chapel, and 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £1, and a cottage inhabited by a pauper. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 11s. Acres 1,370. Houses 24. A. P. £2,026. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 125.

EASTWICK, a parish in the hund. of Braughin, union of Ware, county of Hertford; 4 miles south-west by west of Sawbridgeworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £7 11s. 8d., returned at £130; gross income £211. Patron, in 1835, R. P. Ward, Esq. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1834, £6 per annum, and a house occupied by paupers. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 13s. The petty-sessions for Eastwick division are held here. Henry III. granted the privileges of a market and annual fair, to this parish, but they have long since been disused. Acres 750. Houses 33. A. P. £1,083. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 169.

EASTWOOD, a parish in the hund. and union of Rochford, county of Essex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Rochford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £12; gross income £222. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. About 20 children from this parish attend the National school at Rochford. Acres 4,780. Houses 67. A. P. £4,815. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 531. Poor rates, in 1838, £442 3s.

EASTWOOD, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Broxtow, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 9 miles north-west by west of Nottingham, close on the Nottingham canal. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 13s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £360. Patron, in 1835, J. P. Plumpton, Esq. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1791. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are 5 daily schools. There are many coal-mines in this parish, often containing vegetable and animal remains. Acres 940. Houses 270. A. P. £1,707. Pop., in 1801, 735; in 1831, 1,395. Poor rates, in 1838, £557 4s.

EATHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Wappenbury, county of Warwick; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Southam. Houses 37. Pop., in 1831, 145. Other returns with the parish.

EATINGTON (LOWER AND UPPER), a parish in Kingston division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Stratford-upon-Avon, county of Warwick; 6 miles west by south of Kingston. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £12 0s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £125; gross income £154. Patron, in 1835, E. G. Shirley, Esq. The Baptists have a chapel here, and there is a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1825, £6 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £454 6s. Acres 4,080. Houses 146. A. P. £5,440. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 728.

EATON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 8 miles north-north-east of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 11s. 3d.; gross income £83. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the lay impropriators and vicar, were commuted in 1769. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £32 2s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £162 6s. Acres 2,470. Houses 65. A. P. £2,351. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 350.

EATON, a township in the parish of Eccleston, co.-palatine of Chester; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south of Chester. Acres 1,130. Houses 13. A. P. £1,483. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £144 4s.

EATON, a township in the parish of Tarporley, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-east of Tarporley. There are 3 daily schools here, 2 of which have lending libraries attached. Acres 1,290. Houses 105. A. P. £2,018. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 502. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 1s.

EATON, a township in the parish of Prestbury, co.-palatine of Chester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Congleton, and north of the river Dane. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,110. Houses 82. A. P. £2,239. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 525. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 3s.

EATON, a township in the parish of Davenham, co.-palatine of Chester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Northwich, intersected by the Birmingham railway. Acres 520. House 1. A. P. £630. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 13. Poor rates, in 1838, £4 5s.

EATON, a township in the parish of Appleton, county of Berks; 5 miles north-west by north of Abingdon, and east of the river Thames. Acreage with the parish. Houses 19. A. P. £2,149. Pop., in 1801, 341; in 1831, 332.

EATON, a parish in the south-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 2 miles south-south-east of East Retford, on the post-road from Doncaster to Tuxford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the collegiate church of Southwell, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £63. Patron, the prebendary of Eaton, in Southwell college church. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the prebendary of Eaton and vicar, were commuted in 1809. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,540. Houses 47. A. P. £1,455. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 11s.

EATON, a parish within the liberty of the borough of Wenlock, union of Church-Stretton, county of Salop; 4 miles south-east by east of Church-Stretton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Sandford. Acres 5,200. Houses 78. A. P. £996. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 539. Poor rates, in 1838, £252 5s.

EATON, a township in the parish of Stoke-upon-Tern, county of Salop; 6 miles north-west of Newport. Houses 25. Pop., in 1821, 123; in 1831, 148. Other returns with the parish.

EATON AND ALSOP-LE-DALE, a township in the parish of Ashborne, county of Derby; 7 miles north-north-west of Ashborne, and east of the river Dove. Acreage with the parish. Houses 9. A. P. £1,884. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 60. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 19s.

EATON-BISHOP, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union and county of Hereford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Hereford. Living, a discharged rectory and peculiar in the deanery of Hereford; rated at £13; gross income £489. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, with a Sunday school attached, is supported by property bequeathed for that purpose by the late Mr. Edward Goff of London. Other charities, in 1836, £17 10s. 6d., besides bread, &c., to poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £297 2s. Acres 2,270. Houses 81. A. P. £2,649. Pop., in 1801, 351; in 1831, 489.

EATON-BRAY, a parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Luton, county of Bedford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Dunstable. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £12 6s. 3d.; gross income £181. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1801; and there is a daily school. Charities, in 1821, the great tithes, consisting of one quarter each of wheat, barley, and beans, besides 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £381 11s. Acres 2,650. Houses 185. A. P. £2,889. Pop., in 1801, 583; in 1831, 957.

EATON-CHURCH. See CHURCH-EATON.

EATON-CONSTANTINE, a parish in Welling-ton division of the hund. of South Bradford, union of Ateham, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Much-Wenlock, and north of the Severn. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £201. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Cleveland. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1830, £4 6s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 15s. Acres 890. Houses 49. A. P. £1,225. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 244.

EATON-HALL. See PULFORD.

EATON-HASTINGS, a parish in the hund. of Shrivenham, union of Farringdon, county of Berks; 3 miles north-west of Great Farringdon, on the southern bank of the Thames. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £18 7s. 1d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Rice. Acres 1,330. Houses 18. A. P. £2,347. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £160 10s.

EATON (LITTLE), a chapelry in the parish of St. Alkmund, county of Derby; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Derby, and east of the Derwent, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £94. In the patronage of the dean of Lincoln. There are 4 daily schools here. Acres 490. Houses 132. A. P. £1,085. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 610. Poor rates, in 1838, £161 10s.

EATON (LONG), a township and chapelry in the parish of Sawley, Derbyshire; near the Midland Counties railway, by which it is $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from Nottingham. Living, a curacy annexed to the perpetual curacy of Sawley. The chapel is a singular old edifice. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, erected in 1836; and there are 4 daily schools, one of them a National school. Houses 144. A. P. £3,198. Pop., in 1801, 504; in 1831, 750. Poor rates, in 1838, £163 17s.

EATON-SOCON WITH WYBOSTON, a parish in the hund. of Barford, union of St. Neots, county of Bedford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of St. Neots, on the post-road from Biggleswade to Huntingdon. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £20 13s. 9d.; gross income £439. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Bedford. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1795. Here are 4 daily and 3 infant schools. Charities, in 1823, £25 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,369 18s. Here was formerly a castle belonging to the Beauchamp family, two of whom, Oliver Beauchamp and his son Hugh, in the reign of Henry II., founded the priory of Bushmead or Bismede for Austin canons: its revenue, at the dissolution, was estimated at £71 13s. 9d. per annum. The site was granted, in 1537, to Sir William Gascoyne, comptroller of the household to Cardinal Wolsey. Of the conventual buildings the refectory only remains. Acres 7,530. Houses 485. A. P. £8,177. Pop., in 1801, 1,625; in 1831, 2,490.

EATON-TREGOES. See FOY.

EAVES, a township in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Houses 46. Pop., in 1811, 232; in 1831, 281. Other returns with the parish.

EAVESTONE, a township in the parish of Ripon, west riding of Yorkshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Ripon. Acres 1,170. Houses 14. A. P. £390. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 6s.

EBBERSTON, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Pickering lythe, union of Pickering, north-riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles east by south of Pickering, and north of the Derwent. Snainton township extends into this parish, but is wholly returned with Brompton. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Allerston, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £5 17s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £138. All tithes of the township of Snainton, the property of the clerical rector and curates, were commuted in 1768. The great and small tithes, &c., of the township of Ebberston, the property of the dean of York and curate, were commuted in 1769. Here are two daily schools. Acres 6,350. Houses 99. A. P. £2,814. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 509. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 2s.

EBBESBORNE-WAKE, a parish in the hund. of Chalk, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 8 miles south-west of Wilton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £18; gross income £130. Patron, the subchorister of Salisbury cathedral. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1782. Acres 2,700. Houses 53. A. P. £1,773. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 278. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 7s.

EBBS-FLEET, a hamlet in the parish of Minster, county of Kent; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Ramsgate, near the river Stour. It is said that this was the landing-place of Hengist and Horsa, A. D. 449; also of St. Augustine, A. D. 596.

EBCHESTER, a chapelry in the parish of Lanchester, co.-palatine of Durham; 14 miles north-west of Durham, on the eastern bank of the Derwent. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham; valued at £16 7s. 5d.; gross income £86. Patron, the master of Sherburn hospital. In 1838, a woollen mill here employed 13 hands. Tanner says—"St. Ebba, daughter of Ethelfred, king of Northumberland, afterwards abbess of Coldingham, built here, upon the banks of the Derwent, a monastery before the year of Christ 660, which was afterwards destroyed by the Danes." The Roman road from Lanchester and Corbridge leads to Ebchester, where Gale places Ptolemy's Epicum; but Horsley states that it was at Hexham. Acres 550. Houses 52. A. P. £1,221. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 255. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 10s.

EBONY, a parish in the hund. of Oxney, lathe of Shepway, union of Tenterden, county of Kent; 4 miles south-east of Tenterden. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicarage of Appledore. Here is a small daily school. Acres 2,000. Houses 8. Pop., in 1831, 59. Poor rates, in 1838, £247 7s.

EBRINGTON, or EBBERTON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Shipston-on-Stour, county of Gloucester; 2 miles east by north of Chipping-Campden. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Mickleton. All tithes, &c. the property of the lay impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1813. Charities, in 1829, "the milk of ten kyne," bequeathed by William Keyte, 17^o Car. I. Poor rates, in 1838, £318. Ebrington gives the title of Viscount to Earl Fortesque. Acres 3,690. Houses 107. A. P. £2,912. Pop., including the hamlets of Charingworth and Hitcoat-Boyce, in 1801, 410; in 1831, 573.

EBWY (THE). See MONMOUTHSHIRE.

ECHINSWELL, a chapelry in the parish of Kingsclere, county of Southampton; 9 miles north-north-east of Whitechurch. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1816. Acres 900. Houses 90. A. P. £1,970. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 449. Poor rates, in 1838, £321 3s.

ECCLES, a parish in the hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Manchester, and north of the river Mersey, comprising the townships of Barton, Clifton, Pendlebury, Pendleton, and Worsley. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 8s.; gross income £500. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. It belonged to Whalley abbey previous to the suppression of monasteries. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1800; a Presbyterian, in 1697; a Baptist, in 1831; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1826; one of the New Connexion, in 1809; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are 41 daily and 10 infant schools here, three of which have endowments amounting, in all, to £38 4s.: other charities, in 1826, £18 1s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,500. In 1838, 13 cotton and 3 silk mills, in this parish, were employing 2,525 hands. Besides the populous townships mentioned above, this parish comprehends the morass called CHAT-MOSS,—which see. The irruption of Solway moss in 1771 is well known, and a like accident occurred to Chat-moss, in the reign of Henry VIII., when it disgorged its vast contents into the Mersey, and by its black waters killed the fish. Robert Ainsworth, author of the well-known Latin and English Dictionary, was born here in 1660. Acres 20,240. Houses 4,787. A. P. £55,250. Pop., in 1801, 16,119; in 1831, 28,083.

ECCLES, a parish in the hund. of Shropham, union of Giltcross, county of Norfolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Hasling. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £14; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, Sir Thomas Beevor, Bart. Acres 1,490. Houses 12. A. P. £1,516. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 18s.

ECCLES. See HEMPSTEAD WITH ECCLES.

ECCLESALL-BIERLOW, a township and chapelry in the parish of Sheffield, union of Ecclesall-Bierlow, west riding of York; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Sheffield. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Sheffield; valued at £9 10s.; gross income £160. Patron, the vicar of Sheffield. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of the lay impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1779. Here are 13 daily and 3 day and boarding-schools. Acres 4,400. Houses 2,519. A. P. £19,164. Pop., in 1801, 5,362; in 1831, 14,279. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,818 9s. The Ecclesall-Bierlow poor-law union comprehends 7 parishes, embracing an area of 37 square miles, with a population returned in 1831 at 22,685; expenditure in relief of poor for year ending 25th March, 1839, £5,702 5s.

ECCLESBOURN (THE), a river of Derbyshire, falling into the Derwent at Duffield.

ECCLESFIELD, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Wortley, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north of Sheffield; comprising the townships of Aldward and Ecclesfield, and the chapelry of BRADFIELD,—which see. Acres 43,540. Houses 2,492. A. P. £35,534. Pop., in 1801, 9,216; in 1831, 13,415. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £19 3s. 4d.; gross income £585. All tithes, the property of the lay impropriator, curate of Bradfield and vicar, were commuted in 1811; and the great and small tithes, of the manor of Bolsterstone, in 1778. Patron, in 1835, T. Ryder, Esq. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, and there are 25 daily schools in the parish, several of which are endowed, especially those of BRADFIELD,—which see.—Grenoside school also has been endowed with £25 13s. per annum for teaching 20 scholars; and Wadsley school with £7 per annum. Here are hospitals and almshouses:—Sylvester's hospital for 7 poor persons, founded in 1693; income in 1829, £102 11s. 6d.;—Barrie's hall hospital for 5 poor people, founded in 1668, and endowed with £30 per annum. The heirs of the founder, Sir Richard Scott, Knight, are special visitors:—Bamforth's almshouse consists of 6 tenements, with small gardens inhabited by 6 poor persons; but not endowed. The valuable charities connected with this parish in 1829, produced, in all, an income of no less than upwards of £720 per annum, £292 6s. 6d. of which arose from feoffees' estates, and were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,595 18s. In 1838, a flax-mill here was employing 102 hands. Near Ecclesfield are vestiges of a Roman fortification, with a deep trench, vulgarly termed the Devil's ditch. Tanner says—"An alien priory of Benedictine monks, to the abbey of St. Wandrasisilus, in the dio. of Roan, in Normandy, formerly stood here. It was given by King Richard II. to the Carthusian monastery of St. Anne, near Coventry."

ECCLESHALL, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Pirehill, union of Stone, county of Stafford; on the line of the Grand Junction railway, at its junction with the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and with a branch of a projected Stone and Rugby railway: it comprises the townships of Broughton, Bromley, Aspley, Haseley, Charnes, Coldmeere, Chatcull, Cotes, Croxton, Eccleshall, Millmece, Pershall, Slindon, Podmore, Sugnall-Magna, Sugnall-Parva, Three Farms, Walton, Wootton, Chorlton-Hill, and the chapelry of Chorlton. Acres 20,930. Houses 824. A. P. £25,955. Pop., in 1801, 3,487; in 1831, 4,471. Acres of the township, 1,850. Houses 233. Pop., in 1811, 1,016; in 1831, 1,285. The market-town of Eccleshall is pleasantly situated near the river Sow; 148 miles north-west of London, and 7½ north-west by west of Stafford. It is neat and regularly built, and is supposed to be of great antiquity. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lichfield; rated at £7 14s. 4d.; gross income £170. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £148 14s. 4d. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. The church was the sanctuary of Queen Margaret, when she fled from Maccleston. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1822, with a very neat chapel, opened 18th August, 1840. Here are a day and Sunday National and 5 daily schools, one with a small endowment. Charities, £106 17s. 5d. per annum, besides an expectancy of £800. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,648. At the time of the Conquest, the town of Eccleshall belonged to the bishops of Lichfield. The bishop is still lord of the manor, and at his court-leet appoints

2 constables and 4 head-boroughs. In the year 1160, a grant of a weekly market and an annual fair was obtained for it by Bishop Durdent. The market is on Friday; the fairs, principally for cattle, sheep, and saddle-horses, are held on the Thursday before Mid lent, Holy Thursday, August 16th, and the first Friday in November. Large quantities of young wood are sent hence to the potteries for making crates to pack the wares. The bishop's castle, an ancient edifice, has belonged to the bishops of Lichfield since the 13th century. In the parliamentary war it sustained so much damage as to be unfit for the residence of the bishops, until 1695, when Bishop Lloyd rebuilt the southern part and restored the whole structure to its former magnificence, since which time it has been enlarged and improved by his successors. The Bishop's woods, two or three miles east of Eccleshall, contain 1,300 acres, principally of oak, with a large quantity of underwood.

ECCLESHILL, a township in the parish of Blackburn, county of Lancaster; 3¼ miles south-south-east of Blackburn. Acres 820. Houses 93. A. P. £1,048. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 715. Poor rates, in 1838, £220 18s.

ECCLESHILL, a township in the parish of Bradford, west riding of the county of York; 3 miles north-north-east of Bradford, and south of the river Aire. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1823; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1775; and 7 daily schools. This township is connected with the Leeds clothing district. In 1839, there were 369 looms here, of which 20 were worsted looms. Acres 1,070. Houses 505. A. P. £3,115. Pop., in 1801, 1,351; in 1831, 2,570. Poor rates, in 1838, £376 2s.

ECCLESTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Broxtow, union of Great Boughton, co.-palatine of Chester; 2½ miles south of Chester, on the western bank of the river Dee: it comprises the townships of Eaton and Eccleston. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £15 13s. 11½d.; gross income £443; in the patronage of the Marchioness of Westminster. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £13 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £352 16s. Eccleston-hill commands a fine prospect over part of Salop and the extensive environs of Wales and Cheshire. There are traces of a Roman road between Eccleston and Chester. Acres 2,330. Houses 58. A. P. £3,968. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 361.

ECCLESTON, a parish in the hund. of Leyland, union of Chorley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles west of Chorley, on the southern bank of the river Yarrow, comprising the townships of Hiskin, Wrightington, Parbold, and Eccleston. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £28 16s. 0½d.; gross income £1,010; nett income £965. Patron, in 1835, W. Yates, Esq. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities connected with the parish, in 1826, £35 16s. 4d., besides participation to some extent in those of Croston. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,215 12s. Acres 8,090. Houses 525. A. P. £17,054. Pop., in 1801, 2,133; in 1831, 3,068. Acres of the township, 2,320. Houses 126. A. P. £5,036. Pop., in 1801, 489; in 1831, 761. Poor rates, in 1838, £423 1s.

ECCLESTON, a township in the parish of Prescott, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 1 mile north-north-east of Prescott, in the neighbourhood of the Liverpool and Manchester railway. Here are 10 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Crown-glass and earthenware have been extensively manufactured here. The vicinity abounds in coal, slate, and stone. Acres 3,480. Houses 624. A. P. £9,309. Pop., in 1801, 1,362; in 1831, 3,239. Poor rates, in 1838, £831 19s.

ECCLESTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of St. Michael, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Kirkham. Here are a Roman Catholic chapel, and 4 daily schools, one of which, called Copp school, is endowed with lands and money producing £34 10s. 6d. Acres 1,590. Houses 125. A. P. £2,827. Pop., in 1801, 455; in 1831, 624. Poor rates, in 1838, £207 11s.

ECCLESTON (LITTLE), WITH LARBRICK, a township in the parish of Kirkham, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6 miles north-east by north of Kirkham. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £156 19s. 11d., belonging to the dean and chapter of Christ's church, Oxford, and £26 14s. 8d. to the vicar and parish clerk of Kirkham. Acres 1,210. Houses 39. A. P. £2,241. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 230. Poor rates, in 1838, £115.

ECCUP. See ADDLE.

ECKINGTON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Pershore; bounded on the north and west by the river Avon, and close upon the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 1s. 8d.; gross income £149. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Westminster. All tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the dean and chapter of Westminster, vicar, and lord of the manor, were commuted in 1810. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £2 3s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £168 6s. Acres 2,260. Houses 146. A. P. £4,151. Pop., in 1801, 550; in 1831, 700.

ECKINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Chesterfield, county of Derby, comprising the townships of Mosborough, Troway, Renishaw, and Eckington. Acres 6,610. Houses 786. A. P. £12,767. Pop., in 1801, 2,694; in 1831, 3,948. Poor rates, in 1838, £876 16s. Pop. of the township of Eckington, in 1811, 1,012. It is situated west of the river Rother, in the vicinity of the Chesterfield canal, and of the North Midland, or Derby and Leeds, railway, distant 6 miles north-east by north of Chesterfield, and 30 of Derby, by railway. See DERBYSHIRE—Railways. Living, a rectory with that of Killmarsh annexed, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £40 13s. 4d.; gross income £1,600. Patron, the Crown. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1795. There is a chapel-of-ease at Killmarsh, and within the parish there are two places of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists, with a Roman Catholic chapel, and 18 daily schools, 3 of which are endowed; namely, Renishaw school, in 1830, with £58 9s.; Mosbrough school with £28 9s. 7d., and Ridgeway school with £4 10s. Other charities, about £50 per annum. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in the formation of pottery ware, and in the manufacture of scythes, sickles, and nails, for exportation.

ECTON, a parish in the hund. of Hamfordshoe, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; 5 miles south-west of Wellingborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton, and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £21 8s. 1½d.; gross income £600. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1759. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. C. Whalley. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment and a school-house. Charities, in 1829, £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £176 14s. Acres 1,790. Houses 115. A. P. £4,517. Pop., in 1801, 474; in 1831, 570.

EDALE, a chapelry in the parish of Castleton, county of Derby; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by east of Chapel-in-le-Frith, on the river Edale. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £126. Patrons, the trustees. There are here a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a daily school, endowed with £14 10s. per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 64. A. P. £4,429. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 333. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 18s.

EDBURTON, a parish partly in the hund. of Burbeach and rape of Blamber, and partly in the hund. of Poynings, rape of Lewis, union of Steyning, county of Sussex; 4 miles east of Steyning, and east of the river Adur. It includes the hamlet of Fulking. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £16; gross income £383. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The pulpit of the church here is carved in the fashion of the time of James I., and was probably done by direction of archbishop Laud, who was very exact in his directions respecting the pulpit and communion rails. Acres 2,580. Houses 45. A. P. £2,863. Pop., in 1801, 425; in 1831, 267. Poor rates, in 1838, £165 6s.

EDDINGTON WITH HIDDON, a tything in the parish of Hungerford, county of Berks; 1 mile north-east by east of Hungerford, on the northern bank of the river Kennet. Houses 99. Pop. in 1811, 383; in 1831, 479. Other returns with the parish.

EDDINSHALL, a township in the parish of St. Oswald, co.-palatine of Chester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Chester. Acres 530. Houses 2. A. P. £601. Pop., in 1801, 18; in 1831, 24. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 4s.

EDDISBURY HUNDRED, in the co.-palatine of Chester. Area 90,000 acres. Houses 4,917. Pop., in 1831, 26,891.

EDDISBURY. See DE-LA-MERE.

EDDLESBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Leighton Buzzard, county of Buckingham; 3 miles north-east of Ivinghoe, comprising the hamlets of Hudnall, Northall, and Dag-nell. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 17s.; no return. Patroness, in 1835, the countess of Bridgewater. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., of the hamlet of Horton, were commuted in 1810. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1833, £46 1s. 4d., with 49 bushels of wheat per annum, and 2 tenements occupied by paupers. Poor rates, in 1838, £947 10s. Acres 4,350. Houses 241. A. P. £1,744. Pop., in 1801, 997; in 1831, 1,490.

EDDLESTON, a township in the parish of Acton, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles south by west of Nantwich, near the Liverpool Junction canal. Acres 420. Houses 17. A. P. £782. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 104. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 13s.

EDDLATHORPE, a township in the parish of Westow, east riding of the county of York; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of New Malton, and east of the river Derwent. Acres 460. Houses 9. A. P., with Firby, £1,687. Pop., in 1811, 55; in 1831, 53. Poor rates, in 1838, including Grange, £17 10s.

EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE, a celebrated pharos erected on one of the Eddystone rocks, in the English channel, about 14 miles south-south-west of Plymouth. The land nearest to these rocks is a point to the west of Plymouth called the Ram Head, from which they are about 10 miles almost directly south. As the Eddystone rocks—so called probably from the eddy or whirl occasioned by the waters striking against them—are not at any time very much elevated above the sea, and at high water are quite covered by it, they had formed a most dangerous and alarming obstacle to navigation, and every season several vessels had been lost upon them.

It was therefore extremely desirable that the danger should, if possible, be pointed out by a warning light; but the same circumstances which made the Eddystone rocks so formidable to the mariner, rendered the attempt to erect a lighthouse upon them a peculiarly difficult enterprise. The task, however, was at last undertaken by a Mr. Henry Winstanley, of Littlebury in Essex, who began to erect a lighthouse on the Eddystone rocks in 1696, and finished it about four years afterwards. It appears to have been a polygonal building of stone, about 100 feet in height when it had received its last additions. Still the sea in stormy weather ascended far above this elevation. On 26th November, 1703, when some material repairs were required, the architect visited the Eddystone that he might superintend them himself. Confident in the stability of his work, he declared it to be his wish that the most violent storm which ever blew should occur whilst he was at the lighthouse, that he might see what effect it produced on the structure. His wish was unhappily granted: a violent gale of wind came on, and in the morning not a trace of the lighthouse was left. Three years afterwards, a second was begun under the direction of Mr. Rudyard, a silk mercer on Ludgate-hill, assisted by Messrs. Smith and Northcott, shipwrights, of Woolwich. In July, 1708, it was furnished with a light; and the whole was completed in the succeeding year. For 46 years Rudyard's edifice answered all the purposes of its erection; but, being made of wood, in December, 1755, it was entirely consumed by fire. To this conflagration we owe one of the strangest anecdotes perhaps recorded in the physical history of man. Whilst one of the keepers was looking up to the flames which raged above, and literally gaping with horror at the sight, a quantity of melted lead, exceeding 7 ounces in weight, dropped down his throat! Strange to say, but trifling inconvenience was at the time felt, and the sufferer survived the extraordinary dose eleven days. His body was then opened, and the mass was found in the stomach. Notwithstanding the disastrous fate of these successive structures, Mr. Smeaton, the celebrated civil engineer, commenced preparations for erecting the present lighthouse, on 5th August, 1756, having previously devoted much time and attention to a careful consideration of the best method of grafting his work securely into the solid rock, and giving it the form best suited to ensure stability; and one of the most interesting parts of his interesting account, is that in which he narrates how he was led to choose the shape which he adopted, by considering the means employed by nature to produce stability in her works. The building is modelled on the trunk of an oak, which spreads out in a sweeping curve near the roots, so as to give breadth and strength to its base; and again swells out, to give room to the strong insertion of the principal boughs as it approaches to the bushy head. The latter is represented by a curved cornice, the effect of which is to throw off the heavy seas, and thus prevent their striking the lantern, even when they seem entirely to enclose it. Being suddenly checked, the seas fly up, it is said, from 50 to 100 feet above the top of the building, which itself is between 80 and 90 feet in height. The efficacy of this ingenious and elegant construction is such, that, after a storm and spring-tide of unequalled violence, in 1762, in which the greatest fears were entertained at Plymouth for the safety of the lighthouse, the only article requisite to repair it was a pot of putty, to replace some that had been washed from the lantern. On 12th June, 1757, the first stone—the general weight of each of which is about a ton or more—was laid; the material used being Portland stone, encased in hard granite, or moorstone, partly quarried from the rock itself, into which the foundations were dovetailed, as were the courses of masonry themselves, one with another, to give, as far as possible, a unity of endurance to both rock and superstructure: on 26th August, 1759, all the stone-work was completed: on 9th October following, the building was finished in every part; and on 16th of same month the saving light was again streaming from its summit over the waves. Thus the whole undertaking was accomplished within a space of little more than three years, "without the loss of life or limb," says Mr. Smeaton, "to any one concerned in it; or accident, by which the work could be said to be materially retarded." During all this time there had been only 421 days, comprising 2,674 hours, wherein it had been possible for the men to be on the rock; and they had been at work there only 111 days 10 hours, or scarcely 16 weeks.

The position of the rock, exposed as it is to the unbroken swell of the Atlantic, renders it extremely difficult to land at the lighthouse, even when the weather in the vicinity is most serene; the swell being frequently an undulation proceeding from causes not otherwise apparent on the spot; and often thus depending more on the winds that may chance to prevail at a distance, in the channel, or even in the Atlantic, than on the state of the weather near shore. Communication is, however, maintained with as much regularity as possible, for the purpose of supplying the light-keepers with fresh provisions and materials for the sustenance of the lights; and though, during summer, this service may be said to be performed twice a-week; such is, at times, the difficulty of access, that, in the winter of 1828, an interval of 13 weeks elapsed without a single opportunity of communicating with the light-keepers. The access is somewhat difficult even in the deepest calm. At some distance from the long chain which forms the principal reef on one side, and from a smaller reef, with a conical detached rock between them, on the other, this beautiful light-bearer and life-guide to endangered mariners is seen, "rising from the sea," in solemn majesty and grandeur. "On a rock scarce larger than its own diameter, entirely covered at the flood-tide, with miles of ocean spread between it and the nearest land; exposed to all the fury of Atlantic seas; yet firm as its foundation of rock, in proud defiance of its powerful assailant, stands this graceful structure. Painting may represent the scene in part; but what art can portray the wide expanse that everywhere surrounds it?"

The external stone-work of the Eddystone lighthouse is, generally, as perfect as when it was finished; and the cement which unites the stones, so far from exhibiting any marks of decay, actually stands forward beyond the surface of the stone, with a calcareous incrustation; and it is a remarkable circumstance, that, in the very few instances in which the persons intrusted with the care of the structure have had occasion to perform some trifling repairs, the Roman cement has been resorted to for the purpose, and found inferior in its adhesive powers to the cement originally employed by Smeaton. The lower part of the building is so overgrown with green slimy weed, that the base appears as if it were a continuation of the rock itself. The height of the rock from the water to the highest elevation at the base of the structure is about 8 feet, the vertical face of the rock is ascended by a ladder fixed to irons for the purpose. The base of the building is about 26 feet in diameter. On the flat surface by the side of the house a narrow slippery path not a foot broad, cut into steps, leads round the rock to another ladder ascending to the door, which is other 8 feet above the rock. The ladder is jointed, so that when pulled up it lies in the narrow passage to which it leads. The reason for placing the door so high, appears to have been to provide a mass of solid masonry at the bottom of the building, and perhaps to prevent the possibility of invasion by pirates, who might be anxious to recruit their stock of provisions: these are hoisted up by a crane to the store-room on the second floor. The house consists of 4 rooms or distinct stories, with a gallery and lantern at the top. The floors are of stone, concave beneath, and flat on the upper surface. A stone staircase leads upwards through the pillar or tower, which is altogether of solid stone-masonry, to the lantern, the base of which is stone, and the height 24 feet; the diameter below the cornice being 15 feet. The glass of the lantern, though strong plate, has been more than once broken by the lash of the waves. The lantern is octagonal, and composed of cast-iron and copper: the whole is surmounted by a gilt ball. The arrangement of the house is completely detailed in Smeaton's splendid work.

Three men are constantly resident in this place of true retirement. The eldest is styled Captain. It appears that, though they have liberty to remain on shore each a month at a time at intervals in the year, they gradually lose all inclination to leave the house, and feel that their residence on shore constantly makes them ill—an effect probably arising from the irregularities of living, scarcely separable from a removal to the pleasures of society after extreme retirement. Each man has a salary amounting to nearly £80 a-year, besides provisions and a bottle of porter every day. The house is constantly furnished with three months' provisions of salt meat, biscuit, and water, and an additional supply of one hundred pounds of beef. There is likewise a stock of five hundred gallons of oil for the lights. When the house was first built, the light consisted of twenty-four tallow candles, placed without reflectors. It must have been a very inefficient light, and extremely troublesome to the men, who were required to snuff the candles every half hour; but as candles were found to yield less soot than common lamps, they proved the best method of lighting then known. The invention of the Argand lamp was a valuable discovery for marine lights: about 40 years ago that lamp was introduced in the Eddystone, the North and South Forelands, and many other light-houses. The lamps were placed in the focus of a parabolic reflector of twenty-one inches diameter, plated with silver, which projects a cylinder of light with surprising intensity. At first, a lens of the same diameter as the reflector was placed opposite each light in the window of the lantern; but subsequent experience proved, that though in certain points of the horizon the light was more intense, yet it was less generally diffused, so that it often happened that a distant vessel, unless in the axis of a lens, did not see the light at all: the lenses have been therefore removed in all the light-houses for some years. In the Eddystone there were originally 24 Argand lamps, disposed in 3 circles over each other; but afterwards only 16 were used; one row having been removed, probably on the score of economy.

EDECLIFT, a township in the parish of Clun, county of Salop; about 4 miles north of Kingston. Houses 90. Pop., in 1811, 461; in 1831, 460. Other returns with the parish.

EDEN (THE), one of the largest rivers in the north of England; it issues from the side of a hill in Westmoreland, near the borders of Yorkshire, and after receiving the waters of various smaller streams, enters Cumberland at its confluence with the Eamont. In its progress through the country, it takes rather a north-west direction; and having passed Kirk Oswald and Carlisle, flows into the Solway Frith near Rockcliffe Marsh, where it forms a fine estuary. Its course is enclosed on each side with high grounds, which sometimes approach to the water's edge; but generally there is a flat vale, or level tract of land, between its borders and the high land. These vales are from twenty yards to half-a-mile in breadth; but their most common size is from 100 to 200 and 300 yards. They are provincially termed Holm-lands, and appear to have been formed by the river varying its course. The banks of the Eden are in many parts beautifully clothed with wood; and its channel is in general either paved with rock, or covered with smooth pebbles. It produces fine trout, and various other kinds of fish, but principally salmon, which are very plentiful, and of an excellent quality. On this river are several fisheries belonging to different proprietors.

EDENBRIDGE, a parish in the hund. of Westerham, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Seven-Oaks, county of Kent; 8 miles south-west of Seven-Oaks, in the vicinity of the South-eastern railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Westerham. Here are an Independent church, formed about the year 1800, and 4 daily schools. There are fairs for cattle and toys, on May 6th, and October 16th. Acres 5,290. Houses 244. A. P. £4,694. Pop., in 1801, 910; in 1831, 1,432. Poor rates, in 1838, £535 13s.

EDEN-CASTLE. See CASTLE-EDEN.

EDENFIELD, or EATON-FIELD, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Bury, county of Lancaster; 6 miles north by west of Bury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £117 14s.; gross income £117. Patron, the rector of Bury. The manufacture of cotton is carried on here to a very considerable extent.

EDENHALL, a parish in Leath ward, union of Penrith, county of Cumberland; 3 miles east-north-east of Penrith, and west of the river Eden, comprising the chapelry of Langwathby and the township of Edenhall. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Langwathby, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £17 12s. 1d.; gross income £182. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. Here are two day and Sunday schools. Charities, in 1820, £40 12s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £109; of the township, £42 8s. The church contains several monuments to the memory of the Musgrave family, whose elegant mansion gives name to the parish.—Edenhall is a splendid edifice built in the architectural style of the 17th century. Acres 6,110. Houses 85. A. P. £5,063. Pop., in 1801, 374; in 1831, 544. Acres of the township 3,570. Houses 40. A. P. £2,898. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 294.

EDENHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Beltsloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 2½ miles west-north-west of Bourn, on the river Glen, comprising the hamlets of Ellsthorpe, Scottlethorpe, and Grimsthorpe. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, not in charge; gross income £52. Patron, Lord Wiloughby D'Eresby. Here are four daily schools. Grimsthorpe castle, in this vicinity, is a very handsome edifice, surrounded by a park about 16 miles in circumference. In the park, about a mile from the present mansion, formerly stood a Cistercian abbey, founded by William, Earl of Albemarle, about the year 1451. It was called Vallis Dei, and vulgarly Vaudy. Three or four large sculptured stones are all that now remain of this religious edifice. Edenham Spa was much frequented many years ago by asthmatic and consumptive persons, but it fell into disuse. Acres 7,760. Houses 128 A. P. £8,217. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 777. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 19s.

EDENSOR WITH CHATSWORTH, a parish in the hund. of High Peak, union of Bakewell, county of Derby; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Bakewell, and west of the Derwent. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £40. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. The church, which stands on the side of a hill in the upper part of the village, is a handsome Gothic structure, with tower and pinnacles. The chancel contains a beautiful alabaster monument to the memory of the first earl of Devonshire. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1827, about £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £92. CHATSWORTH HOUSE, one of the wonders of the Peak, is in this parish:—see article. Acres, including the hamlet of Pilsley, 4,900. Houses 123. A. P. £3,725. Pop., in 1801, 605; in 1831, 703.

EDERNION HUNDRED, in the county of Merioneth, North Wales. The vale of Edernion, situated betwixt Corwen and Bala, is one of the most beautiful in the kingdom, and is adorned with several splendid residences; one of the most remarkable is Crogen, the seat of Earl Dudley and Ward. Houses 1,008. Pop., in 1831, 4,905.

EDEYRN, a parish in the hund. of Dinlleuan, union of Pwllheli, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 3 miles west by south of Nevin. Living, a discharged rectory, with the curacies of Cerngiwch and Pistyll, in the archd. and dio. of Bangor; rated at £8 5s.; gross income £386. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship in this parish, and there are two daily schools. Charities, in 1833, £7 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £98 5s. Here is a bay called Port Dinlleyn, sheltered from the westerly winds by a headland projecting into the sea. Houses 118. A. P. £1,284. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 563.

EDGE, a quarter in the parish of Pontisbury, county of Salop. Pop., in 1811, 338; in 1821, 372. Other returns with the parish.

EDGE, a tything in the parish of Painswick, county of Gloucester; about 2 miles north of Stroud. Houses 314. Pop., in 1821, 1,627; in 1831, 1,559. Other returns with the parish.

EDGE, a township in the parish of Malpas, upper division of the hund. of Broxton, co-palatine of Chester; 8 miles north-north-west of Whitechurch. Acres 1,870. Houses 55. A. P. £2,540. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 310. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 10s.

EDGECASTON, a parish in the Birmingham division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of King's Norton, county of Warwick; 2 miles south-west of Birmingham. The appearance of the village of Edgecaston is very attractive: the houses are well built, the streets wide, straight, and lighted with gas; there are also numerous villas; and altogether it forms a fashionable appendage to the town of Birmingham. Living, a curacy and peculiar, formerly in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; valued at £35; gross income £542. Patron, in 1835, Lord Calthorpe. St. George's chapel, the first stone of which was laid on 17th August, 1836, is in the early pointed style of the 13th century: it contains seats for 1,000 persons, and has 100 free sittings. Lord Calthorpe has erected it at his own expense, aided by a legacy of £500, from the late Mr. Wheely of Edgecaston. The vicarial tithes were commuted in 1821. Here are 12 daily and 11 boarding schools. Charities, in 1834, £11 5s. 4d., besides £30 principal, the recovery of which was questionable. Poor rates, in 1838, £975 9s. Acres 2,790. Houses 715. A. P. with Birmingham, Pop., in 1831, 3,954.

EDGEBOLTON, a township in the parish of Shawbury, county of Salop; 8 miles north-north-east of Shrewsbury, on the eastern bank of the river Rodan. It includes Muckleston and Great Witchford. Houses 70. Pop., in 1811, 393; in 1831, 421. Other returns with the parish.

EDGECUMBE-MOUNT or MOUNT-EDGE-CUMBE, a hill in Devonshire, on the Cornish side of the Tamar, opposite Plymouth harbour, of which, and of all the surrounding country, a most delightful and extensive view is obtained from its summit. MOUNT EDGECUMBE HOUSE was built by Sir Richard Edgecumbe, son of Sir Piers Edgecumbe, who died in 1539. Sir Richard became possessed of the estate by marrying the heiress of Durnford. The mansion is a square building, and had, originally, at each corner, circular towers; the hall, in the centre, rising above the other parts of the building. It has, at various times, undergone considerable alterations: the towers, which have been much enlarged, are now octagonal. The beautiful situation of this mansion, with that of the parks, and the fine and interesting views with which it abounds, have been frequently described. Carew, who calls it a most curious and noble mansion, says, that its appearance from the sea so affected the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the commander of the memorable Spanish Armada, that he determined to reserve it for his own possession, in the partage of the kingdom which, in hope and expectation, he had already conquered. The scenery of Mount Edgecumbe is of the most varied description. There are terraces, gardens, and evergreen shrubberies of unequalled beauty, intermingled with wild recesses, groves, and valleys, through which delightful walks are laid out in all directions. It is considered to be one of the first places of the kind possessed by a British subject. It combines, indeed, all that can be desired of grand or picturesque. "Johnson," observes Warner, "preferred Slaines castle, the seat of Lord Errol, on the eastern coast of Scotland, to the magnificent residence of Lord Mount Edgecumbe; because, 'at the latter,' said he, 'the sea is bounded by land on the other side, and though there is the grandeur of a fleet, there is also the impression of there being a dockyard, the circumstances of which are not agreeable.' But if variety be admitted as a sine qua non in a grand and beautiful view, we cannot sacrifice the superlative claims of Mount Edgecumbe even to the authority of Johnson. No feature is wanting in the views from this place, and they are all upon a great scale; to which must be added the noble recesses of wood, both in the foregrounds, and some of the distances, which give a richness to every picture seen from it, of which no view from Slaines castle can afford an idea. Much of the timber, indeed, of Mount Edgecumbe park is of the most venerable character; and we were told, that a tree, blown down in a storm a few months before, had been sold, independently of the loppings, for £76."

EDGECOTT, a parish in the hund., union, and county of Buckingham; 12 miles west-north-west of Aylesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bucks and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 12s. 8½d., gross income £210. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of the late J. Bullock. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1833, £6 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £70. Acres 650. Houses 44. A. P. £1,139. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 180.

EDGECOTT, a parish in the hund. of Chipping-Warden, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 6 miles north-east by north of Banbury, near one of the sources of the river Cherwell, and close upon the Oxford canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12; gross income £325. Patron, in 1835, T. Carter, Esq. South of this village is the vale of Danes-moor, in which a battle was fought between the Saxons and the Danes. In the time of Edward IV. a conflict also took place here between the partizans of that monarch and a body of insurgents, in which the former were defeated, and the earl of Pembroke, with his two brothers, taken prisoners and beheaded. The spot is marked by three small mounds, in a triangular position. Acres 960. Houses 15. A. P. £2,092. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 96. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 17s.

EDGEFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Holt, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south of Holt. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11 6s. 8d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, J. Marcon, Esq. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1832, £2 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £867 18s. Acres 2,230. Houses 160. A. P. £1,730. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 774.

EDGE-HILL, a chapelry in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, county of Lancaster; 1 mile south-east of Liverpool, east of the river Mersey, and near the Liverpool and Manchester railway; agreeably situated on an eminence near the post-road to Prescott: the Liverpool Botanic-garden is at the foot of this eminence. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £170. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Mason.

EDGEHILL, a low ridge of hills in the county of Warwick; 7 miles north-west of Banbury; memorable as the spot on which the forces of Charles I. and the parliamentarians fought their first pitched battle, on the 23d of October, 1642. At the foot of this hill, a little to the west, is the vale of Redhorse, over which there is an extensive prospect; it takes its name from the representation of a horse, cut on the side of a hill, 16 feet high, and 34 feet long, supposed to have been formed in memory of Guy, earl of Warwick, whose castle was near this spot. There is a farm in the neighbourhood, charged with keeping it in repair.

EDGERLEY, a township in the parish of Aldford, co.-palatine of Chester; 2½ miles north-north-east of Holt. Acres 120. House 1. A. P. £180. Pop., in 1801, 6; in 1831, 11.

EDGEWARE, a parish in the hund. of Gore, union of Hendon, county of Middlesex; 8 miles north-west by west of London. Living, a vicarage not in charge, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £512. Patron, in 1835, J. Lee, Esq. Here are an infant and a daily school. Charities, in 1823, £33 10s. 5d. per annum, besides a benefaction to the poor, in clothing, included in Clothworkers' company. There are also almshouses; income £31 8s. 5d., included in the above charity income. Poor rates, in 1838, £248. The town of Edgeware is situated on the ancient Roman road, or Watling-street, leading to St. Alban's, and consists of one principal street, of which the western side is in the parish of Little Stanmore, or Whitechurch; where, in the early part of the 18th century, the duke of Chandos erected a magnificent palace, upon which he expended upwards of £250,000. A weekly market was formerly held here, but it has been discontinued. A fair is held annually on the 1st of May. Petty-sessions for the hund. of Gore are held in that part of the village which is in Little Stanmore. Acres 1,990. Houses 115. A. P. £5,423. Pop., in 1801, 412; in 1831, 591.

EDGEWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Bisley, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 5½ miles north-west of Cirencester. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £8; gross income £244. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £266 10s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, C. Grevile, Esq. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed with £5 per annum, by Mrs. Ridler. Acres 1,620. Houses 26. A. P. £1,309. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 10s.

EDGMOND, a parish in Newport division of the hund. of Bradford, union of Newport, county of Salop; 2 miles west of Newport; comprising the townships of Chetwynd-Aston, and Cherrington, and chapelries of Tibbinton and Church-Aston. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Tibbinton and Aston, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £46 8s. 1½d.; gross income £2,900. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. D. Pigott. Here are 14 daily schools. Charities, in 1820, £77 0s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £657 5s. Acres 7,270. Houses 453. A. P. £14,709. Pop., in 1801, 1,699; in 1831, 2,300.

EDGTON, a parish in the hund. of Purslow, union of Clun, county of Salop; 4½ miles east-south-east of Bishop's-Castle, on the post-road from Montgomery to Ludlow. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, not in charge. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £232 10s. 3d.; impropriated. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Sandford. Charities, in 1830, 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 19s. Acres 2,840. Houses 47. A. P. £1,400. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 233.

EDGWORTH, a township in the parish of Bolton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles north-west by west of Bury. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1800. There is also a daily school here with a small endowment. Acres 2,480. Houses 367. A. P. £2,989. Pop., in 1801, 1,003; in 1831, 2,068. Poor rates, in 1838, £249.

EDINGHALL, or EDINGALE, a parish, with Croxall, partly in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford, and partly in that of Repton and Gresley, union of Tamworth, county of Derby; 5 miles north of Tamworth, bounded on the south and south-west by the river Meese, and in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the patronage and peculiar jurisdiction of the chancellor of Lichfield cathedral; gross income £80. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., of Edingale Field, the property of the prebend of Alrewas, lay impropiator, perpetual curate and vicar, were commuted in 1791. Here is a daily school. Acres 750. Houses 41. A. P. £1,222. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 5s.

EDINGLY, a parish within the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, but located in the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles west-north-west of Southwell, and near the source of the Greet river. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4; gross income £51. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Charities, in 1828, £14 8s. per annum, besides upwards of 5 acres of land possessed by the schoolmaster. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 15s. Acres 1,800. Houses 84. A. P. £1,840. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 393.

EDINGTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Tynstead, union of Tynstead and Happing, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles north-east by east of North Walsham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 5s. 2½d.;

gross income £202. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £223 7s. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Here is a daily school. Acres 590. Houses 40. A. P. £708. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 11s.

EDINGTON, a township in the parish of Mitford, Northumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Morpeth. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £14 8s. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Acreage with the parish. Houses 6. A. P. £980. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 41.

EDINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Moorlinch, county of Somerset; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Bridgewater. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Bath and Wells, a peculiar of Glastonbury, not in charge; gross income £19. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. J. Bowden. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,920. Houses 59. A. P. £2,996. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 401.

EDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Whorwelsdown, union of Westbury and Whorwelsdown, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Westbury, comprising the tythings of West Coulston and Baynton, Tinhead, and Edington. Acres 5,260. Houses 226. A. P. £3,001. Pop., in 1801, 834; in 1831, 1,112. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; returned at £74; gross income £87. Patron, in 1835, W. Taylor, Esq. Here are 3 infant and 2 Sunday schools. Charities, in 1833, £3 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £654. "The church and a manor here were anciently a prebend of the abbey of Rumsey in Hampshire, said to be worth 100 marks by the year and more. William de Edindon, bishop of Winchester, built a new church at this his native place, and therein founded, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin, St. Katharine, and All Saints, a large chantry or college, of a dean and twelve ministers, whereof part were prebendaries, about the year 1347. These were afterwards, at the desire of the Black Prince, changed into a reformed sort of friars of the order of St. Austin, called Bonhommes, who were settled here under the government of a rector, A. D. 1358. Its yearly revenues, at the suppression, amounted to £442 9s. 7d., ob. q. Dugd.; £521 12s. 5d., ob. Speed. The site was granted to Sir Thomas Seymour, 3rd Henry VIII., and to William Pawlet Lord St. John, 3rd Edward VI."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Formerly the bishops of Salisbury had a palace here, but it was plundered and destroyed at the time of Jack Cade's rebellion in 1450, when Bishop Ayscough was dragged from the altar, whilst performing mass, and stoned to death. "In the tyme of Kinge Henry VI.," says Lambard, "William Askoth, byshop of Salisburie, was, for his greedie extortion, first robbed of ten thousande markes, and then taken by his owne parishners at Edington, and caryed up to a high hyl, whear, stripinge him not only out of his pontificalibus, but also out of his nearest appareil, they slew him in most cruel maner."—Ex chron. incerti autoris Anglice. On an eminence about 2 miles from the village is Beaton-castle, an ancient Danish encampment, where Alfred besieged the Danes for the space of 14 days. On the south-west of this eminence is the figure of a white horse, supposed to have been cut in commemoration of Alfred's victory.

EDINGWORTH, or ENDESTON, a hamlet partly in the parish of East Brent, and partly in that of Lympham, county of Somerset; 5 miles west by south of Axbridge; and west of the Axe river, in the vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Here was in ancient times an alien priory of Benedictine monks.

EDITH-WESTON, or EDWESTON, a parish in the hund. of Martinsley, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Oakham, and south of the river Gwash. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £14 7s. 6d.; gross income £162. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Lucas. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1758. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1820, £2 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 18s. Here was an alien priory of Benedictine monks. Acres 1,810. Houses 79. A. P. £1,856. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 337.

EDLASTON AND WYASTON, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, county of Derby; 3 miles south of Ashbourne, and east of the river Dove. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £3 18s. 4d.; gross income £233. Patron, the dean of Lincoln. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1826, upwards of £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 15s. Acres 1,560. Houses 41. A. P. £1,784. Pop., in 1801, 164; in 1831, 225.

EDLINGHAM, a parish in the north division of Coquetdale ward, union of Alnwick, Northumberland; 6 miles west by south of Alnwick; comprising the townships of Abberwick, Broom-Park, Bolton, Edlingham, Leachild, and Lemmington. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Bolton, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £6 14s. 4d.; gross income £499. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Formerly there was a castle here, some of the ruins of which are still to be seen. Acres 11,570. Houses 118. A. P. £9,693. Pop., in 1801, 638; in 1831, 568. Poor rates, in 1838, £293 9s. Houses of the township 28. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 16s.

EDLINGTON, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Gartree, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Horncastle, and west of the river Bain. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 4s. 7d.; gross income £263. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 2,900. Houses 38. A. P. £2,877. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 216.

EDLINGTON, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by south of Doncaster, and south of the river Dearne. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £9; gross income £260. Patron, in 1835, W. B. Wrightson. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, lay impropriator, and vicar, were commuted in 1810. Acres 1,680. Houses 28. A. P. £2,437. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 12s.

EDMONDBYERS, a parish in the west division of Chester ward, union of Weardale, co.-palatine of Durham, comprising the chapelry of Hunstonworth and the township of Edmondbyers; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Wolsingham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £6 11s. 4d.; gross income £178. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. Here are 3 daily schools. There is a smelting-mill here, the parish abounding with lead-ore. Acres 15,260. Houses 161. A. P. £2,063. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 995. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 9s.

EDMONDSLEY, a township in the parish of Chester-le-Street, co.-palatine of Durham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Durham, and in the vicinity of the Great North of England railway. Acres 1,870. Houses 30. A. P. £1,785. Pop., in 1801, 439; in 1831, 150. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 4s.

EDMONDTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 7 miles east by south of Melton-Mowbray, and close on the Melton-Mowbray canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £14 12s. 8½d.; gross income £474. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1837, £15 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 19s. Acres 2,100. Houses 41. A. P. £3,352. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 211.

EDMONSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Cranborne, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; 1½ mile south of Cranborne. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6 5s.; gross income £280. Patrons, in 1835, the Earls of Shaftsbury, and Mrs. Munro, alternately. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £14 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £211 14s. Acres 2,720. Houses 51. A. P. £679. Pop., in 1801, including that of Romford and Westworth, 179; in 1831, 272.

EDMONTON HUNDRED, at the north-east point of the county of Middlesex, separated from Epsom by the river Lea. Area 31,410 acres. Houses 4,801. Pop., in 1831, 26,930.

EDMONTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Edmonton, county of Middlesex; 7 miles north of London, in the vicinity of the London and Cambridge railway. It is divided into 4 wards, distinguished by the names of Bury-street, Church-street, Fore-street, and South-street, and includes a part of Enfield chase. Acres 7,480. Houses 1,394. A. P. £37,795. Pop., in 1801, 5,093; in 1831, 8,092. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £18; gross income £1,641; nett income £1,550. Patrons, the dean and chapter of St. Paul's. The great and small tithes, the property of Trinity college, Cambridge, dean and chapter of St. Paul's and vicars, were commuted in 1799-1800. The church is spacious, with a square tower. The interior consists of a nave, chancel, and north aisle. It contains several ancient monuments. Here are two Independent churches, formed in 1778, and 1788. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Society of Friends, have places of worship. There are 13 daily and 10 boarding schools in this parish: several of the former are endowed. The annual produce of numerous charities connected with the parish amounted, at the time of the inquiry, in 1823, to upwards of £671 0s. 7d.; of which £326 12s. 6d. constituted the income of the principal charity school, originally founded by a small bequest of Henry Smith, in 1606, and subsequently established by various benefactions, the first of which was made by Edward Latymer, 22^o James I. 81 boys of this parish were instructed in the ordinary branches of education; about twenty of them being taught Latin: 33 were annually clothed from Latymer's charity: these wear a cross, as a badge, prescribed in the will. From increased income, an extension of the benefits of the charity was anticipated by the commissioners, which has since been realized: the number of scholars now exceeds 100, of whom 60 or more are clothed. Of the total charity income of this parish, the other more important items consisted of sums varying from £27 to £66 per annum, appropriated to the education, clothing, and apprenticeship of poor children; to the maintenance of poor in numerous almshouses and otherwise; to parochial purposes; &c. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,636 7s. The Edmonton poor-law union comprehends 7 parishes, embracing an area of 77 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831 at 46,510. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £22,821. Expenditure, in 1833, £15,164; in 1839, £13,644 13s.

This was a place of some consideration as early as the Conquest. The village is pleasantly situated on the high road from London to Ware and Hertford. It consists of several ranges of good houses, the two principal of which extend for upwards of a mile along the road. The vicinity is adorned with many elegant mansions and villas. The New river, winding through the village, adds to the picturesque appearance of it. Southgate, a detached village west of Edmonton, contains many most respectable residences. An extensive trade in timber is carried on here by means of the Lea river navigation. A fair, continuing three days, the 14th, 15th, and 16th of September, for hiring servants, &c., is annually held. The 'Bell at Edmonton,' has obtained celebrity from Cowper's well-known ballad of 'John Gilpin.' Charles Lamb died here on 27th December, 1834, at the age of 60.

EDMUND'S BURY. See BURY (ST EDMUND'S).

EDNOL, a township in the borough and parish of Old Radnor, county of Radnor, South Wales; about 5 miles west of Kington. Houses 6. A. P. £180. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 45. Poor rates, in 1838, £10 19s.

EDREN'S (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Dewisland, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales, 10 miles east-east by north of St. David's. Houses 20. A. P. £487. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 113. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 2s.

EDSTASTON, a chapelry in the parish of Wem, county of Salop; 2 miles north-north-east of Wem. Houses 82. Pop., in 1821, 397; in 1831, 397. Other returns with the parish.

EDSTOCK AND BEER, a hamlet in the parish of Cannington, county of Somerset; 3 miles west-west by north of Bridgewater, and west of the Parrot river. Acreage with the parish. Houses 3. A. P. £658. Pop., in 1801, 28; in 1831, 13. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 16s.

EDSTONE (GREAT), a parish in the wapentake of Ryedale, union of Helmsley, north-riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles west by south of Pickering. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £7 10s.; gross income £188. Patron, in 1835, G. W. Dowken. Here is a daily school. This parish participates in Viscountess Lumley's charities to various parishes in this county for the apprenticeship of poor children, &c. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 16s. Acres 1,190. Houses 31. A. P. £1,381. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 156.

EDSTONE (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Sinnington, north riding of Yorkshire; 6¼ miles west of Pickering. The great and small tithes, the property of Hensworth school, lay impropriator, vicar and curate, were commuted in 1786. Acres 790. Houses 2. Pop., in 1811, 14; in 1831, 13. Poor rates, in 1838, £8 19s.

EDWALTON, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 3½ miles south-south-east of Nottingham, on the post-road from Nottingham to Melton-Mowbray. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York; now in the dio. of Lincoln; gross income £97. Patron, in 1835, J. Musters, Esq. Acres 830. Houses 26. A. P. £1,044. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 130. Poor rates, in 1838, £62 14s.

EDWARDSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles west of Hadleigh. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £203. Patron, in 1835, C. Dawson, Esq. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1823. Charities, in 1823, £36 18s. per annum, besides a small interest in Boxford school. Poor rates, in 1838, £337 6s. Acres 1,780. Houses 56. A. P. £2,104. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 503.

EDWAY (THE), a river of Radnorshire, which falls into the Wye at Abenudway.

EDWESTON. See EDITHWESTON.

EDWIN-LOACH, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Doddingtree, union of Bromyard, county of Worcester, locally situated in Herefordshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Bromyard. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Tedstone-Wafer, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £2 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £168. Patron, in 1835, E. Higginson, Esq. Charities, in 1836, £4 7s. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 15s. Acres 360. Houses 11. A. P. £626. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 62.

EDWIN-RALPH WITH BUTTERLEY, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 2 miles north-north-west of Bromyard. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 6s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £318. Patron, in 1835, W. Child, Esq. Charities, in 1836, about £8 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 11s. Acres 1,060. Houses 27. A. P. £1,556. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 170.

EDWINSTOW, a parish in Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 2 miles west of Ollerton, comprising the townships of Budby and Clipstone, and the chapelrys of Carburton, Ollerton, and Palethorpe; the river Maun flows through the parish. Living, a vicarage, with the curacies of Ollerton, Palethorpe, and Carburton, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14; gross income £641. Patron, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Here are 12 daily schools, and a day and Sunday school, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1827, £116 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., of which £44 12s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £593 3s. A fair for cattle, horses, and swine, is held here on the 29th of October. The northern part of the Forest of Sherwood is the principal object of note in Edwinstow: it extends $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from east to west, and 2 miles from north to south, and was celebrated as the scene of Robin Hood's feats. Of this once extensive forest little wood now remains, the whole being enclosed and cultivated. Acres 17,270. Houses 397. A. P. £7,149. Pop., in 1801, 1,419; in 1831, 1,992.

EDWINSTREE HUNDRED, on the east side of the county of Hertford, extending from Royston to Bishop's-Stortford. Area 38,190 acres. Houses 1,782. Pop., in 1831, 9,237.

EDWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Biggleswade, about half-a-mile east of the Roman way. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £15 16s. 3d.; gross income £167. Patron, in 1835, W. Hale, Esq. Acres 1,100. Houses 24. A. P. £1,084. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 95. Poor rates, in 1838, £100 6s.

EFENECHTYD, a parish in the hund and union of Ruthin, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 2 miles south-west of Ruthin, and west of the river Clwyd. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of Bangor and prov. of Canterbury; rated at £6 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £200. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. There is here a Calvinistic Methodist chapel. Charities, in 1836, about £2 6s. 8d. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 17s. Houses 49. A. P. £872. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 242.

EFFINGHAM HUNDRED, in the new western division of the county of Surrey. Area 7,060 acres. Houses 242. Pop., in 1831, 1,646.

EFFINGHAM, a parish in the above hund., union of Dorking; 4 miles west by south of Leatherhead. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £7 18s. 9d.; gross income £226. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay impropiator, were commuted in 1802; the great tithes of the manor of Byfleet, in 1814. Here is a day and Sunday school. This village was formerly a place of some importance, and is said to have contained 16 churches. It gives the title of earl to a branch of the Howard family. Acres 2,940. Houses 78. A. P. £2,654. Pop., in 1801, 379; in 1831, 565. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 6s.

EGBROUGH, a township in the parish of Kellingington, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west by north of Snaith, and close upon the KNOTTINGBEY and GOOLE canal. Acres 2,370. Houses 46. A. P. £1,625. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 220. Poor rates, in 1838, £142 10s.

EGDEAN, a parish in the hund. of Rotherbridge, county of Sussex; 2 miles south-east of Petworth, and north of the river Rother. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £1 9s. 2d.; gross income £80. Patron, in 1835, — Biddulph. The children of this parish attend school at Fettleworth and Petworth. Fairs for horses and cattle are held here on the 1st of May and 4th of September. Acres 620. Houses 13. A. P. £476. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 88. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 6s.

EGERTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles south by west of Tarporley. Acres 850. Houses 14. A. P. £1,201. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 114. Poor rates, in 1838, £100 13s.

EGERTON, a parish in the hund. of Calehill, lathe of Scray, union of West Ashford, county of Kent; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Ashford, in the neighbourhood of the South-eastern railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £30; gross income £111; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of St. Paul's. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £1 16s. 8d. Poor rates, in 1838, £686 15s. A fair is held here on the 5th of August. Acres 2,750. Houses 106. A. P. £3,862. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 866.

EGG-BUCKLAND, or BUCKLAND-EGG, a parish in the hund. of Roborough, union of Plympton-St.-Mary, county of Devon; 3 miles north-north-east of Plymouth, near the Dartmoor railway. Living, a vicarage with the rectory of Filleigh, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 4s. 4d.; gross income £522. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £188 11s. 6d. inappropriate, and £462 17s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. vicarial. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 5 daily schools. Acres 3,800. Houses 197. A. P. £7,896. Pop., in 1801, 711; in 1831, 1,117. Poor rates, in 1838, £492 5s.

EGGERTON HUNDRED, in Bridport division, north-west of the county of Dorset. Area 8,990 acres. Houses 178. Population, in 1831, 1,033.

EGGESFORD, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, union of Crediton, county of Devon; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Chumleigh, on the western bank of the river Taw. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £7 18s. 9d.; gross income £132. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. N. Fellowes. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1823, £1 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 8s. Acres 2,500. Houses 30. A. P. £524. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 168.

EGGINTON, a chapelry in the parish of Leighton-Buzzard, county of Bedford; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles east of Leighton-Buzzard. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; returned at £60; gross income £45; in the patronage of the parishioners. Here are 4 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 63. A. P. £1,249. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 348. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 11s.

EGGINTON, a parish in the hund. of Morleston, and Litchurch, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 4 miles north-north-east of Burton-upon-Trent, situated on a stream which flows into the river Dove. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £8 2s. 8½d.; gross income £455. Improprate tithes, the property of the clerical rector and impropiator, were commuted in 1791. Patrons, in 1835, Sir H. Every and others. Here is a small daily school endowed with £5 per annum. Charities, in 1826, £114 7s. 6d. of which the sum of £51 14s. 6d. was applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 2s. Acres 2,030. Houses 70. A. P. £3,388. Pop., in 1801, 360; in 1831, 361.

EGGLESTON-ABBEY. See ROKEBY WITH EGGLESTON-ABBEY.

EGGLESTONE, a chapelry in the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale, co.-palatine of Durham; 5½ miles north-north-west of Barnard-Castle, and east of the river Tees. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham, not in charge; returned at £60; gross income £62. Patron, the rector of Middleton-in-Teesdale. There are 3 daily schools here. Here are several lead-mines, said to have been in operation from the time of Henry VI., and probably known to the Romans. Acres 7,700. Houses 105. A. P., with Forest and Frith, £2,014. Pop., in 1811, 335; in 1831, 623. Poor rates, in 1838, £136.

EGGLETON, a township in the parish of Bishop's-Frome, county of Hereford; 9½ miles east-north-east of Hereford, and west of the river Frome. The great and small tithes, the property of the bishop of Hereford and vicars, were commuted in 1813. Acreage with the parish. Houses 29. A. P. £604. Pop. in 1811, 156; in 1831, 153. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 5s.

EGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Godley, union of Windsor, Surrey; 3 miles east of Windsor. Acres 7,440. Houses 778. A. P. £10,761. Pop., in 1801, 2,190; in 1831, 4,203. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £119s. 7d.; gross income £636. Patron, in 1835, G. Gostling, Esq. The charity school was founded, in 1793, by Henry Strode, who bequeathed the sum of £6,000 for that purpose; and for the foundation and endowment of 12 almshouses. The income of this charity, in 1823, was £768 16s. 6d. Lee's charity for apprenticing children of poor parents of this parish, then yielded an income of £126; and Sir John Denham's almshouses for 5 poor widows, an income of £38 8s.; other charities possessed by this parish, £21 17s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,128 5s. The village of Egham is delightfully situated on the banks of the Thames, which here separates Surrey from Middlesex. It is connected with the market-town of Staines by an iron-bridge; and the great road from London to the west passes through both villages. Before the Great Western and Southampton railroads were opened, between 70 and 80 long stages passed through Egham during the day. There are none now, and several of the inns are entirely closed. A railroad from Staines to London was at one time contemplated, but has been entirely given up by the parties who projected the undertaking. An annual fair is held on 19th September, when races are annually held in Runymede, the plains of which are celebrated as the place appointed by King John for holding the famous conference with his barons, which terminated in his signing Magna Charta. Cooper's-hill, within this parish, was first celebrated by the muse of Denham, who resided here, and afterwards by Pope and Somerville. In the Thames, and the streams running into it here, are many ozier-beds, locally termed aits, which produce considerable rents. Near the western extremity of the parish is Camomile hill, so called from the herb, which is abundant there, and was formerly cultivated for sale.

EGLETON, a parish in the soke and union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 2 miles south-east of Oakham, on a branch of the river Gwash. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Oakham. The church is a small portion of a very extensive Gothic building restored. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1820, £4 1s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £86 13s. Acres 1,450. Houses 29. A. P. £1,893. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 137.

EGLINGHAM, an extensive parish and township in the north division of Coquetdale ward, union of Alnwick, county of Northumberland; 6 miles north-west of Alnwick; comprising the townships of Basington, Beanley, New Bewick, Old Bewick, Brandon, Branton, Crawley, Eglingham, Hareup, or Harehope, Hedgeley, East Lilburn, West Lilburn, Tiltington, Wooperton. The river Breamish flows through the parish. Acres 17,650. Houses 278. A. P. £19,926. Pop., in 1801, 1,341; in 1831, 1,633. Houses of the township 44. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 221. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £23 3s. 1½d.; gross income £906. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Here are 5 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £2 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £765 11s.; of the township, £32 9s. Here is a mineral spring emanating from an old drift for the draining of coal pits, and tintured with true vitriol. Here also is a lake covering 5 acres, called Keemer Lough, abounding in perch and pike, the latter of which attains a great size, sometimes upwards of 12 pounds. The eastern and southern parts are extensive moor lands. Limestone, freestone, and coal, abound here. There are some vestiges of British and Roman encampments, and the ruins of an old border tower.

EGLOSHAYLE, a parish in the hund. of Trigg, union of Bodmin, county of Cornwall; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile south-east of Wade-bridge, and east of the river Camel, across which there is here a fine bridge built in the reign of Edward IV. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16; gross income £389. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £191 2s. 6d., new $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. annuities, besides £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £399 11s. Acres 6,170. Houses 227. A. P. £6,757. Pop., in 1801, 780; in 1831, 1,335.

EGLOSKERRY, a parish in the north division of the hund. of East, union of Launceston, county of Cornwall; about 3 miles west-north-west of Launceston. Living, a perpetual curacy, with that of Tremayne, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £61; gross income £118. Patron, in 1835, — Owen, Esq. Here are 2 small daily schools and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £19 3s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 3s. Acres 3,060. Houses 86. A. P. £2,195. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 535.

EGLWYS-BREWIS, a parish in the hund. of Cowbridge, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4 miles south-east of Cowbridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £37 19s.; gross income £93. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £68 6s. 11½d. Patron, in 1835, J. D. Llewellyn. Houses 3. A. P. £473. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 19. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 7s.

EGLWYS-CYMMYN, a parish in the hund. of Derllys, union of Narberth, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 4 miles of Llangham. Living, a rectory in the dio. of St. David's; returned at £94; gross income £147. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and Sunday National school, supported by funds bequeathed by the late Mrs. Bevan. Charities, in 1833, £1 6s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 15s. Here are the ruins of two castles. Two subterranean rivers pass this place and fall into Carmarthen bay. Houses 62. A. P. £1,035. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 373.

EGLWYS-EIRW, or EGLWYS-WRW, a parish in the hund. of Kemess, union of Cardigan, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 6 miles south of Cardigan. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. David's; returned at £85 15s.; gross income £115. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are the ruins of Pencilli chapel, and a range of hills called the Pencilli-hills, over which formerly passed the Fleming's-way. Fairs are held here on Ascension-day, and the first Monday after November 22d, for cattle, horses, and sheep. Houses 111. A. P. £1,584. Pop., in 1801, 434; in 1831, 563. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 10s.

EGLWYS-FACK, a parish in the hund. of Isdulas, union of Llanrwst, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 6 miles north of Llanrwst, on a branch of the river Conwy. It includes the township of Malnan, county of Carnarvon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. Asaph. Here are two places of worship for the Calvinistic Methodists. Charities, in 1836, £34 16s. 8d. per annum, of which £21 constituted an endowment of a charity school, wherein 50 boys and as many girls were then educated. Fairs are held on February 24th, May 11th, August 24th, and November 24th, for cattle. Houses 308. A. P. £5,745. Pop., in 1801, 1,249; in 1831, 1,460. Poor rates, in 1838, £850 13s.

EGLWYS-FAIR-ACHYRIG, a chapelry in the parish of Henllan-Amgoed, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 6 miles east-north-east of Narberth, on the river Taff. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Henllan-Amgoed. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Houses 50. A. P. £854. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 257. Poor rates, in 1838, £126.

EGLWYS-FAIR-GLAN-TAFF, a parish in the hund. of Derllys, union of Narberth, county of Carmarthen; 5 miles north-east of Narberth, situated upon the river Taff. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Carmarthen and dio. of St. David's; rated at £29 18s.; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, F. Bludworth, Esq.

EGLWYS-ILAN, a parish in the hund. of Caerphilly, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorganshire, South Wales; 9½ miles north-west of Cardiff, east of the river Taff, near the Cardiff and Merthyr-tydfil canal, and intersected by the projected Taff-vale railway, which it is proposed to carry across a public highway here on a level with the road. This parish comprises the hamlets of Ener-Glynn, Glyn-taff, Hendredenny, Park, Rhyd-y-Boithan. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Llan-fabon; returned at £120; gross income £140. St. Martin's is a perpetual curacy; gross income £120; the patronage is vested in the chapter of Llandaff. Here are 7 daily schools, 2 of which are endowed with upwards of £70 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £891 1s. There are coal mines in this vicinity, wherein many of the inhabitants are employed. The Taff well here is greatly esteemed in rheumatic ailments. Here is the Pont-y-Prydd, or New Bridge, an elegant structure, which stretches over the river Taff, by a single arch 140 feet in the chord, and 35 feet in height above the level of the river at low water, and forms the section of a circle of 175 feet in diameter. It rises from the steep banks of the river like a rainbow, and its appearance from every point of view in which it can be seen is exceedingly beautiful and picturesque. The architect of this bridge, which formed, at the time of its erection, with very few exceptions, the largest arch in the world, was William Edwards, a self-taught genius, who never received the least assistance or instruction in his craft from a master. Houses 344. A. P. £3,199. Pop., in 1801, 865; in 1831, 2,813.

EGLWYS-RHOS, a parish in the hund. of Creuddyn, union of Conwy, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 2¼ miles north-north-east of Conwy, situated near the mouth of the river Conwy. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of St. Asaph, a peculiar; returned at £36 12s. 4d.; gross income £81. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. There is a day and Sunday school here, supported by endowment from the late Mrs. F. Mostyn. Charities, in 1833, £12 4s. per annum; besides a charity for clothing, and an annual distribution of barley, beef, and cloth, to the amount of nearly £50 to this and other two parishes. Poor rates, in 1838, £562. Houses 102. A. P. £2,672. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 568.

EGMANTON, a parish in the South-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 1½ mile south of Tuxford. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 6s. 0½d., returned at £100; gross income £148. Patron, in 1835, P. Barry, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay impropriator and the vicar, were commuted in 1821. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1827, £10 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 7s. Acres 2,220. Houses 67. A. P. £1,642. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 341.

EGMERE, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Greenhoe, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west by north of Walsingham. Living, a rectory with the vicarage of Holkham, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £3; gross income £189. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Coke, Esq. Acres 1,440. Houses 9. A. P. £1,745. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 46.

EGREMONT, a market-town and parish in Allderale ward above Derwent, union of Whitehaven, county of Cumberland; 45 miles south-west by south of Carlisle, and 290 miles north-west by north of London, situated 2 miles east of St. George's channel on the western bank of the river Ehen. Acres 2,850. Houses 352. A. P. £6,807. Pop., in 1801, 1,515; in 1831, 1,741. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 12s. 1d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, 9 daily schools, and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1819, £10 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £427 8s. The town is chiefly disposed in one long and spacious street: many of the houses have piazzas in front, and appear to be of considerable antiquity. The ruins of an ancient castle occupy the summit of an eminence on the west side of the town. It seems to have been of great strength, though not very extensive. It is supposed to have been coeval with the entrance of the Normans into this country. The government of this town was vested by charter in a jury and a chief magistrate, called the sergeant, annually chosen. It was anciently a borough, and in the reign of Edward I. sent members to parliament, but, on its own petition, it was disfranchised in the 24th of the same reign. It is one of the polling-places for the members for the eastern division of the county. The chief manufactures are linens, checks, canvas, sail-cloth, and paper; there are also very productive mines of iron-stone. The market is Saturday. It is noted for the sale of corn, especially oats and barley, and is otherwise well-supplied; a fair is held on the 19th of September for horned cattle, sheep, &c. Egremont gives the title of earl to the family of Wyndham.

EGREMONT, a parish in the hund. of Derllys, union of Narberth, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 4 miles north-west of Narberth, situated on the East Cleddau. Living, a donative curacy, not in charge, in the dio. of St. David's; returned at £32 12s. per annum; gross income £51. Patron, in 1835, Sir M. Phillips, Bart. Houses 24. A. P. £647. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 18s.

EGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Ulverstone, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-north-east of Ulverstone, and west of the river Leven. Living, a curacy, with that of Newland, in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £97; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, J. P. Machell, Esq. This chapelry, including the township of Newland, possesses 4 daily schools. Acres, including Newland, 3,390. Houses 100. Pop., in 1811, 495; in 1831, 496.

EGTON, a parish in the east division of the liberty of Langbaugh, union of Whitby, north riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Whitby. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, returned at £30; gross income £33. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here are a Catholic chapel, and a daily school. Fairs are held on Tuesday before February 15th, Tuesday before May 11th, September 4th, Tuesday before November 22d, for horned cattle, boots, and shoes. Acres 13,570. Houses 194. A. P. £6,842. Pop., in 1801, 971; in 1831, 1,071. Poor rates, in 1838, £281 5s.

EHEN (THE), a river in Cumberland, which rises among the mountains surrounding Borrowdale, and having formed the lake called Ennerdale-water, proceeds in a semicircular direction through the pleasant vales of Ennerdale and Kimmiside to Egremont, and then flows south through a flat country to the sea.

EIDDA, a township in the parish of Epytty-Evan; 9 miles south-south-east of Llanrwst, on the river Conwy, county of Carnarvon, North Wales. Houses 67. A. P. £812. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 12s.

EIRIAS, a township in the parish of Llandrillo-yn-Rhos, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 5 miles east-north-east of Aberconwy. Here is a Sunday school, containing about 100 children. Houses 50. A. P. £806. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 262. Poor rates, in 1838, £126.

EISEY, a parish in the hund. of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, union of Cricklade and Wootton Bassett, county of Wilts; 1 mile north-north-east of Cricklade, on the river Thames, and close on the Thames and Severn canal. It contains the township of Water-Eaton. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Latton. Acres 1,840. Houses 32. A. P. £4,275. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 8s.

EITHIG, a township in the parish of Gressford, county of Denbigh; 2 miles south of Wrexham.

Houses 30. Pop., in 1811, 81; in 1831, 141. Other returns with the parish.

ELAND (THE), a river of Radnor, which falls into the Clarwen on the borders of Cardigan, South Wales.

ELBERTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Thornbury, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Thornbury. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Olveston, formerly in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £6 12s. 6d.; gross income £231. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1826, £4 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 7s. Acres 1,430. Houses 35. A. P. £3,845. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 199.

ELDEN. See ELVEDON.

ELDERSFIELD, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Upton-upon-Severn, county of Worcester; 6 miles west-west by south of Tewkesbury. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 16s. 3d.; gross income £260. Patron, in 1835, Sir A. Lechmere, Bart. Here is a daily school, endowed by Mrs. Pollock with the interest of £500. Other charities, in 1829, £17 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £460. Acres 3,400. Houses 144. A. P. £5,337. Pop., in 1801, 750; in 1831, 787.

ELDON, a township in the parish of St. Andrew-Auckland, co.-palatine of Durham; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east by east of Bishop-Auckland, in the vicinity of the Clarence railway. It was the property of, and gave title to, the late Right Hon. John Scott, earl of Eldon, sometime lord-high-chancellor of England. Acres 1,540. Houses 26. A. P. £1,738. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 13s.

ELDROTH, a hamlet in the parish of Clapham, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by north of Settle. Formerly there was a chapel-of-ease here, but it is now converted into an endowed school.

ELEIGH-MONKS, or MONKS-ELEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Costford, county of Suffolk; 5 miles north-west by north of Hauleigh, near the source of the river Bret. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £14 18s. 11d.; gross income £451. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1828, £11 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £325 8s. A fair for toys is held on Whitmonday. Acres 1,670. Houses 86. A. P. £2,520. Pop., in 1801, 542; in 1831, 733.

ELERCH, a township in the parish of Llanbadarn-Fawr, county of Cardigan; about 2 miles south-east of Aberystwyth. Here is a daily school. Houses 28. A. P. £586. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 6s.

ELFORD, a small village in the parish of Bam-brough, Northumberland; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Belford. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 30. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 149. Poor rates, in 1838, £55.

ELFORD, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Tamworth, on the northern bank of the Tame, which bounds it on the south-west; and in the line of the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. F. G. Howard. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1765. Here is a day and Sunday National school, with an endowment. Charities, in 1822, £30 1s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 2s. Acres 1,840. Houses

92. A. P. £4,250. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 483.

ELHAM, or ELEHAM, a parish in the hund. of Loinborough, lathe of Shepway, union of Elham, county of Kent; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Folkstone, near the source of a large branch of the river Stour. Acres 6,240. Houses 199. A. P. £5,284. Pop., in 1811, 992; in 1831, 1,302. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £20; gross income £460. The archbishop of Canterbury nominates, and the warden and fellows of Merton college, Oxford, present. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1831. There are 6 daily schools, one of which has an endowment of £64 17s. 6d. per annum for educating, clothing, and apprenticing scholars. Other charities, in 1836, £2 18s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £558 13s. A workhouse has been erected here, by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Elham, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Elham poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, embracing an area of 66 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 14,137. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,710. Expenditure in 1838, £5,209; in 1839, £5,250 19s. The county magistrates hold monthly petty-sessions for this and the neighbouring parishes. The market is on Monday. Fairs are held annually on Palm-monday, Easter-monday, and Whit-monday, and October 20th, for horses, cattle, and pedlery. The village of Elham, in ancient times, was a place of some importance. At the Conquest it belonged to Norman Earl Ewe, a relation of the Conqueror's, who obtained for it many privileges.

ELING, a parish in the hund. of Redbridge, union of New Forest, county of Southampton; 4 miles west by north of Southampton, at the mouth of the Anton or Test river. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 18s. 1½d.; gross income £906. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. J. G. Phillips. Tithes, the property of the clerical rector, lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1810. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1818. Here are 9 daily schools, and almshouses for 4 poor widows. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,823 18s. This place has a very considerable trade in coal, timber, and corn; and there are here many granaries and storehouses, and several docks for building and repairing ships. A fair is held on July 5th for toys. Acres 14,950. Houses 889. A. P. £13,161. Pop., including that of Wigley, Baldox-fee, North Eling, and a part of Cadnam, in 1801, 2,889; in 1831, 4,624.

ELISHAW, a hamlet in the parish of Elsdan, Northumberland; $22\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Hexham, and west of the river Reed. This place used to be much frequented by gipsy rovers.

ELKINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Rugby, county of Northampton; 11 miles north-north-east of Daventry: the Union canal passes through this parish. The church has long since been demolished, and the inhabitants have resorted to the neighbouring parochial churches. Acres 1,720. Houses 7. A. P. £2,413. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 43. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 6s.

ELKINGTON (NORTH), a parish in the wold division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-west by north of Louth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 19s. 4½d.; gross income £167. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Smyth, jun. Here is a small daily school. Acres 1,290. Houses 16. A. P. £967. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 13s.

ELKINGTON (SOUTH), a parish in the above hund., union and county; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Louth. It includes the hamlet of Ackthrope and Cotes Grange. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 7s. 6d.; gross income £209. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £309 1s. vicarial, and £509 0s. 2d. impropriate. Patron, the Rev. W. Smyth, jun. Acres 2,660. Houses 52. A. P. £2,869. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 271. Poor rates, in 1838, £109 1s.

ELKSLEY, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East-Retford, county of Nottingham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Tuxford, and north of the river Poulter. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; returned at £110; gross income £120. Patron, the Duke of Newcastle. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriators and vicar, were commuted in 1779. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1827, 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £87. Acres 2,500. Houses 72. A. P. £2,038. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 377.

ELKSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Rapsgate, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Cirencester, and east of the Ermine street. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £12 9s. 2d.; gross income £382. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. A. B. Craven. The church is supposed to be the most ancient in the county. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,100. Houses 64. A. P. £1,688. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 299. Poor rates, in 1838, £96.

ELKSTONE (UPPER AND LOWER), a township in the parish of Alstonefield, county of Stafford; 5 miles east-north-east of Leek, and west of the river Dove. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £33; gross income £74. Patron, the vicar of Alstonefield. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., of the township of Lower Elkstone are commuted. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,150. Houses 137. A. P. £2,138. Pop., in 1801, 208; in 1831, 626.

ELLA-KIRK, a parish in the county of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, union of Seuloates, located in the east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west by north of Hull; comprising the townships of Ella-West, Ella-Kirk, part of Anlaby, and part of Witherby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding of York; rated at £13 2s. 8½d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, R. Sykes, Esq. All tithes of the townships of Kirk-Ella, West-Ella, and Witherby, were commuted in 1796-1824. Here are 4 daily schools. Many of the merchants of Hull have handsome residences here. Acres 4,390. Houses 196. A. P. £9,784. Pop., in 1801, 655; in 1831, 974. Poor rates, in 1838, £296. Acres of the township 980. Houses 54. A. P. £2,780. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 285.

ELLAND WITH GREETLAND, a chapelry in the parish of Halifax, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east of Halifax, on the southern bank of the Calder. The Leeds and Manchester railway, in intersecting this chapelry, is carried through a tunnel 424 yards in length. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Halifax; returned at £130 13s.; gross income £147. Patron, the vicar of Halifax. Here are a Unitarian church, formed in 1740; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1808; an Independent chapel, and 12 daily, and 5 infant, schools. The principal trade of the town and neighbourhood is the manufacture of paddings and coarse woollen goods. On the Calder stood the mansion of the knightly family of Elland, memorable for the fatal feuds in which it was engaged with the Beaumonts, in the reign of Edward III. Acres 3,360. Houses 1,077. A. P. £7,461. Pop., in 1801, 3,385; in 1821, 5,500. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,111 3s.

ELLASTONE, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Totmonslow, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Ashbourne; comprising the townships of Calwick, Prestwood, Ramshorn, Stanton, and Wootton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £4 9s 2d.; gross income £154. Patron, in 1835, D. Davenport. Here are 5 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1824, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £514 18s. The village is of considerable extent, and is pleasantly situated about a mile north-west of the river Dove. The petty-sessions for the south division of the hund. are held here. Acres 7,970. Houses 243. A. P. £9,161. Pop., in 1801, 1,109; in 1831, 1,344.

ELLA-WEST, a township in the parish of Ella-Kirk, east riding of Yorkshire. Acres 570. Houses 16. A. P. £1,190. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 102. Poor rates, in 1838, £37.

ELLEL, a chapelry in the parish of Cockerham, county of Lancaster; 4 miles south by east of Lancaster, and close upon the Lancaster and Preston railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; gross income £97. Patron, the vicar of Cockerham. Here are 3 daily and 2 day and Sunday schools. Acres 5,560. Houses 349. A. P. £8,148. Pop., in 1801, 1,167; in 1831, 2,217. Poor rates, in 1838, £629 8s.

ELLEN (THE), a small river of Cumberland, taking its rise in Caldbeck-fells: it is swelled by numerous streams issuing from the declivities of the range of hills forming the western boundary of the Derwent. Having reached the low grounds, it passes Udale and Ireby, and meanders, in a westerly direction, through an open vale, till it falls into the sea at Maryport.

ELLENBOROUGH AND UNERIGG, a township in the parish of Dearham, Cumberland; 6 miles north-west by west of Cockerham, near St. George's channel, and in the immediate vicinity of the Maryport and Carlisle railway. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £9 18s 4d. The inhabitants are principally colliers. This was formerly an important Roman station. The late lord-chief-justice, Sir Edward Law, derived his title from this place, being created Baron Ellenborough in 1802. Acreage with the parish. Houses 133. A. P. £1,888. Pop., in 1801, 471; in 1831, 713. Poor rates, in 1838, £260 12s.

ELLENHALL, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Pirehill, union and county of Stafford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Eccleshall. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lichfield. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,800. Houses 49. A. P. £1,998. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 286. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 5s.

ELLERBECK, a township in the parish of Os-motherley, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-east of North Allerton. Here is a daily school. Acres 880. Houses 15. A. P. £1,507. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 7s.

ELLERBURN, a parish in the west division of Pickering-Lythe, union of Pickering, north riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by north of Pickering, in the vicinity of the Pickering and Whitby railway, comprising the township of Wilton, and part of Farmanby. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Wilton, in the dio. of York, a peculiar; rated at £7 4s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £143. Patron, the dean of York. The great and small tithes, of the township of Wilton, were commuted in 1773; all tithes of the township of Ellerburn, in 1796. Charities, in 1821, £1 15s. 10d. per annum. Acres 2,060. Houses 34. A. P. £1,858. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 192.

ELLERBY, a township in the parish of Swine, east riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Hull. Here is a daily school. Acres 3,470. Houses 44. A. P. £2,964. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 251. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 19s.

ELLERBY, a small township in the parish of Lythe, north riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Whitby, about a mile west of the North sea. Acres 630. Houses 15. A. P. £1,266. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £29.

ELLERKER, a township in the parish of Brantingham, wapentake of Howdenshire, east riding of Yorkshire; 1 mile south of South Cave, in the vicinity of the Selby and Hull railway. Living, a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Brantingham. The great and small tithes, of lands and grounds in Ellerker, the property of the dean and chapter of Durham, and vicar, were commuted in 1765. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 3 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 56. A. P. £2,713. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 278. Poor rates, in 1838, £77 18s.

ELLERTON-ABBAY, a township in the parish of Downholme, north riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles west-south-west of Richmond, on the southern bank of the Swale. The following is from Tanner's Not. Mon.—“On the south side of the Swale, a mile beneath Maryke, was a small priory of White-clothed or Cistercian nuns, thought to have been founded by Warnerius, classifer to the earl of Richmond, or his son Wymerius, temp. Hen. II.” Acres 1,490. Houses 7. A. P., with Stainton, £2,176. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 61. Poor rates, in 1838, £33.

ELLERTON-PRIORY, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Howden, east riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles north-north-west of Howden, on the eastern bank of the Derwent. Living, a curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; returned at £127; gross income £110. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. B. Codrington. Great and small tithes, the property of the lord of the manor, were commuted in 1802. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1823, £68 1s. per annum, of which £28 15s. constituted the income of Sir H. Bethell's almshouses for six poor people. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 9s. Before the year 1212, William Fitz-Peter founded here a priory of canons of the Sempingham order. Acres 2,320. Houses 59. A. P. £2,076. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 305.

ELLERTON-UPON-SWALE, a township in the parish of Catterick, north riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east by south of Catterick. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £86 5s. 7d. This was the birth-place of Henry Jenkins, who attained to the amazing age of 169. This extraordinary person retained his faculties to the last; his death took place on the 8th of December, 1670; he was interred at Bolton-upon-Swale, where a monument was erected to his memory in 1743. Acres 1,310. Houses 27. A. P. £2,588. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 147. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 2s.

ELLESBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Aylesbury, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Wendover. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 9s. 7d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. G. Russell. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rectors and lay-impropriators, were commuted in 1803. Here are endowed almshouses for eight men and women; income, in 1832, £97 1s. 2d.; other charities, 50 acres of poors allotment cut for fuel. Poor rates, in 1838, £264. Near the church is an ancient fortification called Belinus' castle, above which is Belinesbury hill. What Lambard says, in the 16th century, may be yet said, regarding the town of Ellesborough:—"It should seme, by H. Huntington, that it was of more accompte in auncient tyme, then it is at this day, for he nombreth it amongst the chief townes of that parte." Acres 3,310. Houses 138. A. P. £3,839. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 665.

ELLESMERE, a market-town and parish, partly in the hund. of Maylor, county of Flint, and partly in the hund. of Pimblin, union of Ellesmere, county of Salop; 17 miles north-north-west of Shrewsbury. It includes the chapelry of Penley. Acres 25,280. Houses 1,257. A. P. £9,902. Pop., in 1801, 5,909; in 1831, 7,057. Living, a vicarage, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £17 18s. 1½d.; gross income £397. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Bridgewater. Vicarial tithes, the property of lay-impropriators and vicars, were commuted in 1806; aggregate amount £376 10s. 4½d. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1780; and 16 daily and 2 day and boarding-schools. Charities, in 1830, £92 1s. 8d. per annum; besides an interest in Philip's charity to Shrewsbury, &c. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,464 15s. The Ellesmere poor-law union comprehends 18 parishes, embracing an area of 109 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 16,254. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,559. Expenditure in 1838, £5,312; in 1839, £4,205 3s. Ellesmere derives its name from an adjoining lake or mere, 120 acres in extent, bordered on one side by the town, and on the other by Oatley park. The principal traffic is in malt, the cultivation of barley being particularly attended to in the neighbouring country. Commercial intercourse is facilitated by the Ellesmere canal. Mr. Telfer constructed this canal under an act obtained in 1793. From the Montgomery canal, beginning at Newton and running by Welshpool, it affords a continuous line of inland navigation to Nantwich, where it communicates with the other Cheshire canals, and from Nantwich, by Chester, to the Mersey. There are branches,—the chief one running into DENBIGHSHIRE—which see—with CHESHIRE, CHIRK, SALOP, &c. A railway runs from Ellesmere to the collieries of Plas Kynaston. The market is on Tuesday. The fairs are, on the first Tuesday after the 2d of February, the 3d Tuesday in April, Whit-Tuesday, 1st Tuesday in July, last Tuesday in August, and 3d Tuesday in November, for horses, cattle, and sheep. There is here a branch of the Commercial bank of England. Here was formerly a castle of some strength as a fortress; but the site has been converted into a bowling-green, whence is a delightful prospect into 9 counties, including highly picturesque ruins, and very lofty eminences, forming a charming contrast with the fertile vales, studded with villages, and enriched with pellucid streams.

ELLINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-east by east of Bungay, on the northern bank of the river Waveney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £421. Patron, the master of Magdalene college, Cambridge. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £51 9s. 6d. per annum; besides an interest in Banfellow's charity to Kirby Cane. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 4s. Acres 1,260. Houses 52. A. P. £2,092. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 333.

ELLINGHAM, a parish in the south division of Bambrough ward, union of Belford, Northumberland; 8 miles north of Alnwick; comprising the townships of North Charlton, South Charlton, Chathill, East and West Ditchburn, Doxford, Preston, Shipley, and Ellingham. It is about 5½ miles long, and 5 broad. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £6 5s. 5d.; gross income £564. Patron, the dean and chapter of Durham. The church was founded in the 12th century by Ranulph de Guagy, but has been almost entirely rebuilt. "Richard Marshe, byshope of Durham," says Lambard, "gave thadwovson of this churche to William, abbot of St. Albons, and to his monkes, ad meliorationem Cerrisia, as Matthew Paris, in his Chronicles of St. Albons, confesseth: belyke the wise fellows had bidd him welcome with a cupp of small drink, of purpose to make him pytie their dyet." Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 13,970. Houses 201. A. P. £8,194. Pop., in 1801, 944; in 1831, 1,125. Poor rates, in 1838, £347 15s. Houses of the township, 56. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 328. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 19s.

ELLINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Fording-bridge, union of Ringwood, New Forest, west division of the county of Southampton; 2½ miles north by west of Ringwood; on the river Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 4s. 9d.; gross income £167. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1825, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £231 16s. Acres 1,860. Houses 81. A. P. £2,242. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 420.

ELLINGHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Shropham, union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north-west of Attleburgh. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectory of Little Ellingham, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 5s. 10d.; gross income £735. Tithes of Little Ellingham commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £420 10s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. Colby. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1699; and 2 daily and 2 infant schools. Acres 2,540. Houses 122. A. P. £4,402. Pop., in 1801, 655; in 1831, 882. Poor rates, in 1838, £826 4s.

ELLINGHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 4 miles north-west of Attleburgh. Living, a rectory, united as above. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £45 per annum, besides 1 acre, 2 roods of land, called the clerk's close, and possessed by the parish clerk. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 2s. This place, at the time of the Conquest, was of some importance, but is now a very inconsiderable village. Acres 1,410. Houses 52. A. P. £2,405. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 240.

ELLINGSTRING, a township in the parish of Masham, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-east of Middleham. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 760. Houses 49. A. P. £538. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 228. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 15s.

ELLINGTON, a township in the parish of Woodhorn, Northumberland; 6 miles north-east of Morpeth, and north of the Lime water. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £46 9s. 3d., vicarial; and £243 1s. 8d., impropriate. Here is a daily school. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 53. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 270. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 2s.

ELLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Leigh-tonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; 5 miles west of Huntingdon; and south of a large branch of the Ouse. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £20; gross income £86. Patrons, the master and fellows of Peter house, Cambridge. Great and small tithes, the property of Peter-house college, Cambridge, were commuted in 1774. Here is a day and Sunday school endowed with £12 per annum. Charities, in 1830, £55 11s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £200 12s. Acres 2,910. Houses 85. A. P. £3,190. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 376.

ELLINGTON (HIGH and LOW), two townships in the parish of Masham, north riding of Yorkshire; about 3 miles north-west of Masham. Acres 1,670. Houses 28. A. P. £1,823. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 148. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 15s.

ELLISFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Bermond-spit, union of Basingstoke, county of Southampton; 4 miles south of Basingstoke. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 3s. 6½d.; gross income £315. Patron, in 1835, B. Brocas, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1825, £3 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 4s. Acres 2,360. Houses 36. A. P. £1,804. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 245.

ELLOE WAPENTAKE, in the parts of Holland, county of Lincoln, at the southern extremity of the county. Area 148,560 acres. Houses 5,723. Pop., in 1831, 29,314.

ELLOUGH, a parish in the hund. and union of Wangford, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-east by south of Beccles. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £257. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Gosford. Here is a daily school. Acres 500. Houses 15. A. P. £1,068. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 19s.

ELLOUGHTON WITH BROUGH, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, but chiefly in Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-east by south of South Cave; in the vicinity of the Selby and Hull railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £5 0s. 5d.; gross income £97. Patron, the prebendary of Wetwang, in the cathedral of York. All tithes, of the townships of Elloughton, Brough, and Waldby, the property of the prebend of Wetwang, lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1794. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1814; and a Friends' meeting-house. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1823, £13 1s. 10d. applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 19s. Acres 1,420. Houses 83. A. P. £2,058. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 355.

ELM, a parish in the hund. of Wisbeach, Isle of Ely, union of Wisbeach, county of Cambridge; 2 miles south-south-east of Wisbeach; close on the Wisbeach canal. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Enneth, and sinecure rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Ely; gross income of the former, £824; of the latter, £1,769. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is endowed with 25 acres of freehold land; rent, in 1836, £53 6s. per annum. The school-room is a modern structure; the average number of scholars 70. This school is open also to the children of parishioners in Enneth. Other charities, in 1836, £154 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,257. Acres 11,230. Houses 298. A. P. £19,090. Pop., in 1801, 951; in 1831, 1,410.

ELM (GREAT and LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Frome, county of Somerset; 2 miles west by north of Frome. The river Frome flows through the parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 13s. 6½d.; gross income £208. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £100. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. T. Griffith. Here are 2 daily schools. In 1838, 2 woollen mills, in this parish, employed 33 hands. On the banks of the Frome are some extensive iron-works. Acres, exclusive of Little Elm, 820. Houses 89. A. P. £1,331. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 427. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 11s.

ELMBRIDGE, a chapelry in the parish of Dodderhill, county of Worcester; 4 miles north of Droitwich; in the neighbourhood of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Dodderhill. Here is a Sunday school, with a lending library attached.—See ELMLEY-LOVETT.—Acreage with the parish. Houses 73. A. P. £2,231. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 334. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 9s.

ELMBRIDGE HUNDRED, in the western division of the county of Surrey, on the north bank of the Thames, extending from Weybridge to East Moulsey. Area 21,100 acres. Houses 1,518. Pop., in 1831, 8,048.

ELMDON, a parish in the Solihull division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Solihull, county of Warwick; 5 miles south-west by south of Coleshill; in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway, and the Birmingham and Warwick canal. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £3 8s. 1½d.; gross income £234. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £222 11s. 7d. Patron, in 1835, A. S. Lillingston. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish. Acres 1,180. Houses 27. A. P. £1,524. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 157. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 13s.

ELMDON, a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Saffron-Walden, county of Essex; 5½ miles west by north of Saffron-Walden; in the neighbourhood of the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a vicarage annexed to the rectory of Wendon-Loughts. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector and lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1824. Here is a daily school, endowed with £17 per annum. In 1837 there were about 70 scholars in attendance. Other charities, in 1837, £3 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £405 5s. Acres 2,480. Houses 131. A. P. £2,864. Pop., in 1801, 534; in 1831, 697.

ELMER WITH CRAKEHALL, a township in the parish of Topcliffe, north riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-north-east of Boroughbridge. Acres 900. Houses 16. A. P. £891. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 77.

ELMHAM (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 6 miles north-north-east of East Dearnham; on the river Wensum. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 15s.; gross income £324. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. G. J. Miles. Great tithes, &c., the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, commuted. Other tithes commuted in 1838. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed by the late Richard Miles, Esq. Charities, in 1834, £121 14s. 10d. per annum, of which £74 2s. 6d. arose from church-lands, and £19 10s. constituted income of school. Poor rates, in 1838, £226 19s. Tanner says, "The kingdom of the East Angles, which, from its first conversion by Felix, had been under one bishop, was, about the year 673, divided into two dioceses, when one of the episcopal seats was fixed in this ancient town. Here was a constant succession of bishops till the martyrdom of Humbert by the Danes with King Edmond, A. D. 870. About the year 950, the see of Dunwich appears to have been united to this kingdom of the East Angles. This bishopric was translated from hence to Thetford, A. D. 1075, and from thence it was quickly removed to Norwich, whose first bishop, Herbert, rebuilt the church here, and this manor continued part of the possessions of the bishopric of Norwich till 27° Hen. VIII." Some traces of the episcopal castle are still visible. There are nearly 500 deer in the park belonging to it. It is supposed there was a Roman station here in Broom close, where upwards of 100 urns, many coins, and other Roman antiquities, were found in 1711. A fair is held on April 5th for horses, cattle, &c. Acres 5,000. Houses 139. A. P. £4,401. Pop., in 1801, 836; in 1831, 1,153.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ALL SAINTS. See ALL SAINTS, South Elmham.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ST. CROFT WITH SAND-CROFT. See CROSS, ST., South Elmham.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ST. MARGARET. See MARGARET, ST., South Elmham.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ST. MICHAEL. See MICHAEL, ST., South Elmham.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ST. PETER. See PETER, ST., South Elmham.

ELMHAM (SOUTH), ST. NICHOLAS. See NICHOLAS, ST., South Elmham.

ELMHURST. See CURBOROUGH with ELMHURST.

ELMINGTON. See OUNDLE.

ELMLEY-CASTLE, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 4 miles west-south-west of Evesham, and south-east of the river Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 6s. 5d., and returned at £96; gross income £112. Patron, the bishop of Worcester. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £114 12s. Acres 2,260. Houses 72. A. P. £3,113. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 333.

ELMLEY (ISLE OF), a parish in the liberty of the Isle of Sheppey, lathe of Scray, union of Sheppey, county of Kent; 3½ miles south-east by east of Queenborough. This isle is about 3 miles in length and 2 in breadth. There is a ferry across the Swale on the south to Milton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5; gross income £340. Patrons, the warden and fellows of All Soul's college, Oxford. Acres 1,640. Houses 3. A. P. £2,842. Pop., in 1811, 21; in 1831, 29. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 18s.

ELMLEY-LOVETT, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; 5 miles south-south-east of Kidderminster. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £2 17s. 6d.; gross income £630. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Lynes. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which, confined to the instruction of children belonging to the chapelry of Elmbridge and the parish of Rushock, is supported by endowment from William Norris: the other is also endowed. Charities, in 1832, for church, school, and poor, £132 4s. per annum; also, in 1824, £171 6s. 1d. consols: of the annual income, £80 15s. applied to education. Poor rates, in 1838, £296 5s. This place gives the title of Viscount to the Lydon family. Acres 2,350. Houses 77. A. P. £3,723. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 432.

ELMORE, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Dudstone and King's Barton, union and county of Gloucester; 5 miles west-south-west of Gloucester. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; returned at £50; gross income £73. Patron, in 1835, Sir B. W. Guise, Bart. There is a day and Sunday school here. Charities, in 1826, £17 0s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 19s. Acres 1,790. Houses 60. A. P. £2,189. Pop., in 1801, 381; in 1831, 401.

ELMORE, or ENMORE-GREEN, a hamlet in the parish of Motcomb, county of Dorset; ½ mile south of Shaftesbury. On the Green there are three or four wells from which the town of Shaftesbury is supplied; and on this account an ancient custom is still kept up by the corporation; an order being recorded on the manor roll of Gillingham, that, "if the dance fail on the Sunday next after Holyrood day, and the bailiff have not his due, the bailiff and his men shall stop the water of the Enmore wells from the borough, from time to time," &c.

ELMSALL (NORTH), a township in the parish of South Kirby, west riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles south by east of Pontefract. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,740. Houses 46. A. P. £2,530. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 256. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 19s.

ELMSALL (SOUTH), a township in the above parish; 7 miles south-east of Pontefract. All tithes, moduses, &c., the property of impropriators and the vicar, were commuted in 1807. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,740. Houses 104. A. P. £1,463. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 494. Poor rates, in 1838, £299 5s.

ELMSETT, a parish in the hund. and union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; 4 miles north-east by north of Hadleigh. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 7s. 1d.; gross income £601. Patrons, the master and fellows of Clare-hall, Cambridge. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1828, £2 13s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £263. On the declivity of a hill in this neighbourhood there is a singular calcareous crystallizing spring, called the Dropping well. A fair is held here on Whit-Tuesday, for toys. Acres 1,810. Houses 49. A. P. £2,489. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 437.

ELMSTEAD, a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 4 miles east by north of Colchester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £310. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus college, Cambridge. Here are a Wesleyan chapel, and 3 daily schools; a work house, and 3 almshouses with small gardens, possessed by poor people. Poor rates, in 1838, £237. A fair for toys is held here on the 15th of May. The name of this parish signifies the place of Elms, as being remarkable for the growth of elm-trees. Acres 3,490. Houses 156. A. P. £4,705. Pop., in 1801, 550; in 1831, 732.

ELMSTED, a parish in the hund. of Stouting, lathe of Shepway, union of Elham, county of Kent; 7 miles east by north of Ashford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £80. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There is a daily school in this parish. An annual fair is held here on the 25th of July. Acres 2,530. Houses 68. A. P. £2,155. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 502. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 11s.

ELMSTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Sparkehoe, union of Huckleby, county of Leicester; 3 miles north-east by east of Hinckley. Living, a inecure rectory. The town was depopulated soon after the battle of Bosworth: the officers of Richard's army made use of the church as their head-quarters previous to the battle: it is now in ruins. Acres 1,650. Houses 4. A. P. £1,179. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 34. Poor rates, in 1838, £17 2s.

ELMSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Preston, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Eastry, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Wingham, and south of the river Stour. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £6 7s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1836, W. Delmar, Esq. There is a school here. Acres 360. Houses 15. A. P. £911. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 97. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 17s.

ELMSTONE-HARDWICKE, a parish partly in the hund. of Deerhurst, and partly in the lower division of the hund. of Westminster, union of Tewkesbury, county of Gloucester; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Cheltenham, near the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar of Deerhurst, formerly in the dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £9 2s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £140; gross income £181. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and boarding school. Acres 2,730. Houses 72. A. P. £2,940. Pop., in 1801, including the chapelry of Uckington, 230; in 1831, 372. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 9s.

ELMSWELL, a parish in the hund. of Blackburn, union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 6 miles north-west of Stow-market. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 7s. 11d.; gross income £436. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. T. Lawton. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1811. Here are a Wesleyan chapel, 3 daily schools, and an endowed almshouse, with an income, in 1828, of £41 per annum: church and poor's estate, income £84 10s. Poor rates, in 1838, £240 5s. Acres 2,380. Houses 84. A. P. £2,293. Pop., in 1801, 451; in 1831, 694.

ELMTON, a parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Workop, county of Derby; 8 miles east by north of Chesterfield. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5 1s. 3d.; gross income £55. Patron, in 1835, C. H. Rhodes, Esq. Here is a daily school. The celebrated arithmetical calculator, Jedediah Buxton, a day-labourer, totally devoid of ordinary education, was born here in 1707. Amongst other instances of his extraordinary performances, "we are told," say the Lysons, "that he measured most accurately the extensive manor of Elinton by striding over the land, and brought Sir John Rodes the contents, not only in acres, roods, and perches, but in square inches; and afterwards, for his own amusement, reduced them into square hair's-breaths." Acres 2,970. Houses 63. A. P. £1,290. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 1s.

ELSDON, an extensive parish, forming the whole south division of Coquetdale ward, union of Rothbury, Northumberland; 18 miles west-north-west of Morpeth. It comprises the township of Elsdon ward, situated on a branch of the river Reed, and those of Monkridge ward, Otterburn ward, Rochester ward, Troughend ward, and Woodside ward. It has been calculated that this parish is about 23 miles in length, and 12 in its greatest breadth. "It is an extensive vale, formed on the north side by an irregular ridge of hills, and on the south by a ridge much more regular. The hills on both sides are of considerable height, and invariably clad in heath, except a small part of those near the source of the river, where they begin to participate in the nature of those in Roxburghshire. Several brooks or burns fall into the Reed from the hills on both sides. The parish appears to have been at one time almost an entire forest, several remnants of which still remain on the banks of some parts of the Reed, consisting chiefly of birch, alder, and willow, with here and there a mountain ash." In the forests of the Reed and the Tyne those brave and dexterous archers were reared who often tried their skill with the bold foresters of Ettrick Forest:—

"In Redesdale his youth had heard
Each art her wily dalesmen dared;
When Rookan-edge, and Redswair high,
To bugle rung, and blood-hound's cry,
Announcing Jedwood's axe and spear,
And Lid'sdale riders in the rear;
And well his venturous life had proved
The lessons that his childhood loved."

ROKEBY, Canto iii. 23.

Some years ago this parish displayed little else than large neglected heaths and extensive morasses, which exhibited the most desolate appearance: but the spirit of improvement at length changed the face of these uncultivated wilds, and large tracts of barren moor were enclosed, and converted into grazing ground for rearing and feeding cattle and sheep. Acres 62,470. Houses 317. A. P. £19,508. Pop., in 1801, 1,694; in 1831, 1,724. Houses of the township 65. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 308.

Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £20; gross income £700. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £800. Patron, the Duke of Northumberland. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £1 11s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,042 15s.; of the township £123. This parish contains some fine seams of coal; and there are various collieries throughout the district. Limestone and iron-stone also abound here. The market is held on Tuesday. A fair for cattle, sheep, linen, and woollen cloth, is held on the 26th of August. Elsdon castle, or tower, now the rectory-house, was built in the reign of Henry III. by David, king of Scotland. The town of Elsdon is supposed to have belonged to the Romans in the time of M. Aurelius Antoninus, and was probably the first of a chain of forts between Watling-street and its eastern branch called the Devil's causeway. At a short distance, north-east of the village, is an intrenchment, designated Mote-hill: it is of a conical shape, surrounded by a moat or ditch, and is supposed to have been used by the Romans as a watch-hill and place of sepulture.

ELSENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Bishop Stortford, county of Essex; 2 miles north-east of Stansted-Mountchet; near the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £11 10s.; gross income £122. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £413 17s. 1d. impropriate, and £152 4s. 11d. vicarial. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Canning. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £4 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £452 17s. Acres 1,810. Houses 61. A. P. £2,170. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 483.

ELSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Bullington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Oxford, and east of the river Cherwell. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £6 8s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £215. Patroness, in 1835, Lady S. North. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1824, £9 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £143 17s. Acres 1,200. Houses 37. A. P. £1,238. Pop., in 1801, 175; in 1831, 185.

ELSHAM, or ALIESHAM, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford-Bridge, county of Lincoln; 5 miles north-east of Glandford-Bridge, and near the post-road from Lincoln to Barton-Humber. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 14s. 4d.; gross income £46. Patron, in 1835, T. G. Corbett, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. There was a priory here dedicated to St. Mary and St. Edmund, which had five canons a little before the suppression, when its possessions were valued at £43 per annum. Acres 4,110. Houses 75. A. P. £5,237. Pop., in 1801, 310; in 1831, 471. Poor rates, in 1838, £164 3s.

ELSING, a parish in the hund. of Eynsford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5 miles north-east by east of East Dereham, and south of the river Wensum. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 11s. 8d.; gross income £300. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £324 10s. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. F. Browne. Charities, in 1834, £27 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £288 8s. Acres 1,530. Houses 53. A. P. £1,650. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 437.

ELSLACK. See BROUGHTON in Aredale.

ELSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Farnham, union of Hambledon, county of Surrey; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Godalming, on the southern bank of the river Wey. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; returned at £31 10s.; gross income £78. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Colmer. The Independents have a place of worship here, and there are 4 daily schools. Acres 4,400. Houses 100. A. P. £1,985. Pop., in 1801, 466; in 1831, 711. Poor rates, in 1838, £214 18s.

ELSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Dumppford, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Midhurst. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £11 13s. 4d.; gross income £187. Patron, in 1835, Lord Selsey. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1798. Acres 1,790. Houses 25. A. P. £1,503. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 174. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 3s.

ELSTOB, or ELSTOL, a township in the parish of Stainton, co.-palatine of Durham; 8 miles west-north-west of Stockton-upon-Tees, intersected by the Clarence railway. Acres 880. Houses 6. A. P. £558. Pop., in 1801, 37; in 1831, 94. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 18s.

ELSTON, a township in the parish of Preston, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles east-north-east of Preston, on the western bank of the river Ribble. Acres 970. Houses 10. A. P. £1,204. Pop., in 1801, 58; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £20 1s.

ELSTON, or ELVESTON, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south-west by south of Newark, and east of the river Trent. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 8s. 9d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, W. B. Darwin, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1829, £32 6s. per annum, of which £12 constituted the endowment of an hospital: there was also a piece of land, consisting of upwards of 5 acres, held by a schoolmaster. Acres 1,640. Houses 104. A. P. £2,088. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 552. Poor rates, in 1838, £216 1s.

ELSTON, a chapelry in the parish of East Stoke, county of Nottingham; 3 miles south-east of Southwell. Great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the prebend of Stoke, &c., were commuted in 1795. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

ELSTON. See ORCHESTON-ST.-GEORGE.

ELSTOW, a parish in the hund. of Redborne-Stoke, union and county of Bedford; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south from Bedford, and south of the river Ouse. Acres 1,522. Houses 108. A. P. £2,416. Pop., in 1801, 475; in 1831, 561. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 9s.; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, W. H. Whitbread, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay impropriator, were commuted in 1797. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1821, £44 10s. 9d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £231 3s. Fairs are held here on the 14th and 15th of May, and on the 5th and 6th of November, for cattle of all sorts. This was the birth-place of the celebrated John Bunyan, author of the 'Pilgrim's Progress';—an admirable religious allegory, which has remained unrivalled amidst a host of imitators. Bunyan himself again attempted the same kind of composition, but by no means with equal success. His 'Holy War made by Shaddai upon Diabolus,' his other religious parables, and his numerous devotional tracts, are now deservedly consigned to oblivion. There is, however, a curious piece of autobiography of Bunyan extant, entitled 'Grace abounding to the chief of Sinners,' possessing much of the same kind of interest which attaches to some of the publications of William Huntingdon and other fanatics. Bunyan was the son of a tinker, and for some time wandered about as a tinker himself. During the civil war he served as a soldier in the army of the parliament. He afterwards became an Anabaptist preacher; and defying the severe laws against dissenters, was imprisoned for 12 years, during which time he laid the foundation of his literary fame by composing the 'Pilgrim's Progress.' On obtaining his liberty, he resumed his function as a minister at Bedford, and became extremely popular. He died during a visit in London, in 1688. His natural turn for wit and repartee appears in the following story:—Towards the close of his imprisonment, a quaker called on him, probably hoping to make a convert of the author of 'The Pilgrim.' He thus addressed him: "Friend John, I am come to thee with a message from the Lord; and after having searched for thee in half the prisons in England, I am glad that I have found thee at last." "If the Lord had sent you," sarcastically returned Bunyan, "you need not have taken so much pains to find me out, for the Lord knows that I have been a prisoner in Bedford gaol for these twelve years past." In the reign of William the Conqueror, Judith, wife to Waltheof, earl of Huntingdon, raised a priory here for nuns of the order of St. Bennet, which was dedicated to the honour of the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, and St. Helen, the mother of Constantine the Great. It was valued at the dissolution at £325 2s. 1½d. according to Burton, but according to the Monasticon, at £284 12s. 11½d. This religious house, which is said to have been very beautiful, was called Helenstow, and ultimately Elstow.

ELSTREE, or IDLESTREE, a parish in the hund. of Cushio, union of Barnet, county of Hertford; 3 miles north-north-west of Edgware. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of St. Albans and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £317. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1776. Here is a daily National school. Charities, in 1832, £27 3s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £314 15s. In the churchyard lies interred the body of William Weare, who was murdered by John Thurtell and his accomplices Probert and Hunt. Thurtell was executed for this crime at Hertford, 9th January, 1824, dying with a firmness worthy of a better cause. Hunt was transported for life; and Probert, who had been admitted as king's evidence, was afterwards hung at Newgate for horse-stealing. Acres 1,370. Houses 67. A. P. £3,234. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 341.

ELSTORNWICK, a township in the parish of Humbleton, east riding of Yorkshire; 9½ miles east-north-east of Kingston-upon-Hull. Living, a curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Humbleton. The chapel is of great antiquity. Great and small tithes, the property of the lay impropiator and vicar, were commuted in 1806. There is a daily school here, supported by an endowment from the late Thomas Thompson, Esq. Acres 910. Houses 27. A. P. £1,615. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 153. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 17s.

ELSTUB AND EVERLEY HUNDRED, on the eastern side of the county of Wilts. Area 40,590 acres. Houses 1,130. Pop., in 1831, 5,722.

ELSWICK, a township in the parish of St. Michael, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles north of Kirkham. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £132 6s. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1670 or 1680. Acres 1,010. Houses 64. A. P. £2,313. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 327. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 4s.

ELSWICKE, a township in the parish of St. John, Newcastle, Northumberland; 1 mile west of Newcastle, and north of the river Tyne. It contains several good houses, and various manufactories, among which are extensive lead-works. Acres 720. Houses 128. A. P., including that of the township of Westgate, £8,968. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 787. Poor rates, in 1838, £217 7s.

ELSWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Papworth, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 3 miles north-north-east of Caxton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £14 6s. 0½d.; gross income £520. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. M. Holworthy. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1799-1800. Here are 4 daily schools, and alms-houses for 3 widows, endowed with £29 15s. per annum. Other charities, in 1836, £8 6s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £545 15s. Acres 3,700. Houses 111. A. P. £2,920. Pop., in 1801, 585; in 1831, 689.

ELTHAM, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the lower half-hund. of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Lewisham, county of Kent; 8½ miles south-east by east of London, containing part of the hamlet of Mottingham. Acres 4,230. Houses 370. A. P. £13,175. Pop., in 1801, 1,627; in 1831, 2,005. The manor of Eltham is leased at rents, amounting, in all, to £4,750 per annum. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £3 2s. 6d.; gross income £381. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. O. P. Turner. The church, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, consists of a nave, aisles, and chancel, with a western tower and lofty spire, and is the depository of the remains of the learned and pious Bishop Horne. Among the celebrated persons buried in the churchyard, we may mention John Philipott, Somerset herald; John Lilbourn, a noted republican of the 17th century; Doggett, the actor, cotemporary with Colley Cibber; and Dr. Sherard, the celebrated botanist. Here are chapels for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, 9 daily schools, 2 of which belong to the National school society, and several almshouses, 6 of which, founded by T. Philipott in 1680, are endowed with a gross income of £165 12s. 6d. per annum, greater part of which is expended on the alms-people, two of whom are of the parish of Chislehurst. Other charities, chiefly for behoof of the poor of this parish, produced, in 1836, from numerous sources, about £400 per annum. This parish has also a right to send 3 pensioners to Queen Elizabeth's college at Greenwich. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,265 19s.

Eltham is chiefly celebrated as having anciently been the site of one of the most magnificent of English palaces. The property is ascertained to have belonged to the Crown in the time of the Saxons. The Conqueror granted it to one of his Norman followers; but having again been forfeited to the Crown, it was given by Edward I. to John de Vesci, one of the most powerful barons of those times. Soon after this it came into the possession of Anthony Bee, the famous military bishop of Durham, who built a large and splendid mansion, which appears to have been completed soon after the middle of the 13th century,—King Henry III., accompanied by his queen, and all the principal nobility, having kept Christmas here in 1269. On the death of the bishop, which took place here in 1310, the manor of Eltham fell again to the Crown, in the possession of which it has ever since remained. For the next two centuries the place was a favourite residence of our monarchs. Edward II.'s son, John, was born here in 1315, and was thence called John of Eltham. In the reign of Edward III. the parliament was on several occasions assembled at Eltham; and here that prince, in 1365, entertained his captive John, King of France, with sumptuous hospitality. The palace was almost entirely rebuilt by Edward IV. Large additions were afterwards made to the building by Henry VII., who, like his predecessors, generally lived here, and was wont to dine every day in the hall, surrounded by his barons. At this time the royal palace of Eltham consisted of four quadrangles enclosed within a high wall, beyond which was a moat of great width: the whole formed an irregular area, approaching in shape to a square. To the palace were attached a garden and three parks, comprehending together above 1,300 acres, besides the demesne lands of 400 acres more. These parks were stocked with deer, and many fine old trees that still remain testify how richly wooded they must have formerly been. Of all this magnificence but little now remains; and many parts of the buildings can scarcely be traced even in their foundations. Henry VIII. deserted Eltham for the new palace of Greenwich, which, as being nearer to London, was probably found to be a more convenient residence. After this Eltham was only occasionally visited by the sovereign; which it sometimes was even in the time of James I. On the establishment of the Commonwealth, it was seized by the parliament and sold; and at the same time the parks were broken into, and the deer dispersed and killed by the soldiers and the common people. The work of devastation, thus begun, was continued until the greater part of the palace, also, was first reduced to a heap of ruins, and then altogether swept away: and though the property was recovered by the Crown at the Restoration, no pains seem to have been taken to save the remnant of the pile from spoliation and destruction. On the contrary, the business of demolition was now systematically carried on: the old palace was turned into a quarry; and stone after stone was carried away as it was wanted even for the meanest purposes, until scarcely anything worth removal remained. Fortunately, it was considered that the hall would make a good barn; and to this ignoble appropriation, which so well hit the economical humour of the times, we owe the preservation, in a state of comparative entireness, of this principal and most interesting portion of the noble old palace of Eltham. According to Buckler, who some years since published a valuable account of this palace, the length of the hall in the interior is above 101 feet, by about 36½ in width. "The interior," says this writer, "is magnificent. The taste and talent of ages are concentrated in its design; and it is scarcely possible to imagine proportions more just and noble, a plan more perfect, ornaments more appropriate and beautiful,—in a word, a whole more harmonious than this regal banquetting room." The windows, which, however, have been long built up, are ranged in couples along both sides; and each series is terminated by a bay window at the west or upper end of the hall. But the most conspicuous ornament of this fine room is its splendid roof. "The main beams of the roof," says Buckler, "are full 17 inches square and 28 feet long, perfectly straight and sound throughout, and are the produce of trees of the most stately growth. A forest must have yielded its choicest timber for the supply of this building; and it is evident that the material has been wrought with incredible labour and admirable skill." Some years ago the public attention was called to the state of this beautiful remnant of our ancient architecture, which it was understood there was an intention of levelling with the ground, on the pretext that the roof threatened to fall if not taken down. By the exertions, however, of some individuals of taste and influence, a reconsideration of the subject was obtained; and eventually it was determined by the government to advance a small sum, in order to effect such a partial repair of the hall as might at least secure its stability for the present. The work was committed to the superintendence of Mr. Smirke, by whom it was executed with much ability; and the roof is now once more restored, as far as was practicable, to its original strength and beauty. Some curious subterraneous passages were discovered on the site of this palace in 1834.

The market-town of Eltham anciently derived considerable importance from the vicinity of the palace; but after its desertion, sunk into an insignificant village, which it still is; and in which neither markets nor fairs are now held. It contains some good houses, however, though the streets are irregularly built; and the environs are adorned with numerous and handsome villas and mansions. At the north-east extremity of the parish is Shooter's hill, formerly the haunt of highwaymen, and fixed on by Shakspeare as the scene of some of Falstaff's exploits. On its summit is a triangular tower about 45 feet in height, erected in memory of Sir William James, Bart., an officer in the East India Company's service, and called Severndroog castle, from the name of a fortress taken, by Sir William, in 1756, from Angria, an Indian piratical chief.

ELTHORNE HUNDRED on the western extremity of the county of Middlesex. It borders on Buckinghamshire, from which it is separated by the river Colne. Area 35,690 acres. Houses 3,791. Pop., in 1831, 20,091.

ELTISLEY, a parish in the hund. of Long-Stow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 2½ miles west-north-west of Caxton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £7 16s. 8d.; gross income £51. Patron, in 1835, John Newton. Here are a daily and an infant school. Tanner says—"A nunnery near the vicarage—where St. Pandiana, the daughter of the king of Scotland, is said to have been buried—was destroyed before or about the time of the Conquest, whereupon a new nunnery was erected not far off at Hinchinbrook, in Huntingdonshire." Acres of the parish, 1,941. Houses 60. A. P. £918. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £190 8s.

ELTON, a township in the parish of Thornton, co.-palatine of Chester; 4 miles west-south-west of Frodsham, and south of the river Mersey. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,100. Houses 37. A. P. £1,424. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 19s.

ELTON, a township in the parish of Warmingham, co.-palatine of Chester; 2½ miles west by south of Sandbach; close upon the Nantwich and Birmingham railway. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 630. Houses 90. A. P. £1,314. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 430. Poor rates, in 1838, £189 11s.

ELTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Youlgreave, county of Derby; 6 miles north-west of Matlock. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £90; gross income £98; in the patronage of the inhabitants. Great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the impropiators and curate, were commuted in 1809. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,210. Houses 119. A. P. £1,391. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 595. Poor rates, in 1838, £175 19s.

ELTON, a parish in the south-west division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, co.-palatine of Durham; 2½ miles south-west by west of Stockton-upon-Tees. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £7 1s. 5½d.; gross income £180. Patrons, in 1835, T. Wade, Esq., two turns, and T. J. and John Hogg, Esqs., one turn. Acres 1,060. Houses 21. A. P. £1,485. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 4s.

ELTON, a parish in the hund. of Wigmore, union of Ludlow, county of Hereford; 4½ miles south-west of Ludlow; and south of the river Teme. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; gross income £50. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Cowdell. Charities, in 1836, £2 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 7s. Acres 1,700. Houses 17. A. P. £1,798. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 85.

ELTON, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, union of Oundle, county of Huntingdon; 5½ miles north-west by west of Stilton; on the eastern bank of the river Nen. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £23 9s. 2d.; gross income £564; nett income £478. Patrons, the master and fellows of University college, Oxford. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1779. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are 2 day and Sunday schools, one of which, a National, is supported by endowment. Charities, in 1830, £220 3s. 10d., of which £165 constituted income of Cooper's hospital, and £37 14s. 10d., endowment of school. Poor rates, in 1838, £456 17s. Acres 3,250. Houses 172. A. P. £5,607. Pop., in 1801, 738; in 1831, 780.

ELTON, a township in that part of the parish of Bury which is in Salford hundred, county of Lancaster; 1½ mile west of Bury. There are 4 daily schools here. Acres 1,990. Houses 663. A. P. £6,287. Pop., in 1801, 2,030; in 1831, 4,054. Poor rates, in 1838, £614 13s.

ELTON, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 13 miles east by south of Nottingham; in the vicinity of the Grantham canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 0s. 5d.; gross income £296. Great and small tithes, compositions, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1807. Patron, in 1835, W. F. N. Norton, Esq. Acres 980. Houses 16. A. P. £1,006. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 91. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 4s.

ELTRINGHAM, a township in the parish of Ovingham, Northumberland; 11 miles west by south of Newcastle; on the river Tyne, and close upon the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. T. and J. Bewick, the celebrated wood-engravers, were born here. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 11. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 50. Poor rates, in 1838, £20.

ELVASTON, a parish in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; 4 miles south-east by east of Derby; on the southern bank of the Derwent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5 3s. 9d.; gross income £160. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Harrington. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1826, £148 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £182 17s. Elvaston hall, the seat of the Stanhope family, is in this vicinity. William, third son of Sir John Stanhope of Elvaston, was created Lord Harrington in 1729, and Earl, 9th February, 1742. Acres 2,760. Houses 97. A. P. £4,538. Pop., in 1801, 465; in 1831, 522.

ELVEDON, or ELDEN, a parish in the hund. of Lackford, union of Mildenhall, county of Suffolk; 3½ miles south-west of Thetford. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £12 17s. 6d.; gross income £310. Patron, in 1835, W. Newton, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1829, £9 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 9s. Acres 5,290. Houses 39. A. P. £1,641. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 248.

ELVESTON. See ELSTON, Nottingham.

ELVET HUNDRED, in the county of Carmarthen. Houses 2,883. Pop., in 1831, 15,792.

ELVETHAM, a parish in the hund. of Odiham, union of Hartley Wintney, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; 4½ miles north-east by north of Odiham, and near the Southampton and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9; gross income £300. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £293 17s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, Lord Calthorpe. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1825, £55 9s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 5s. Acres 2,980. Houses 83. A. P. £1,750. Pop., in 1801, 459; in 1831, 481.

ELVINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent, union of York, east riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles east-south-east of York; pleasantly situated on the western bank of the Derwent. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £5 17s. 3½d.; gross income £280. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1769. Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 daily schools. Acres 2,120. Houses 78. A. P. £2,647. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1838, £118.

ELVIS (St.), a parish in the hund. of Dewisland, on St. Bride's bay, union of Haverford West, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 4½ miles east by south of St. David's. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of St. David's, returned at £50 18s. 6d.; gross income £74. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Houses 7. A. P. £185. Pop., in 1801, 27; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £9 4s.

ELWICK, a township in the parish of Hart, co. palatine of Durham; 9 miles north-north-east of Stockton-upon-Tees. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,940. Houses 53. A. P. £1,450. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 232. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 8s.

ELWICK, a township in the parish of Belford, county of Northumberland; 2 miles north-east by north of Belford. It extends into Islandshire, Durham, near the coast of the North sea. Acreage with the parish. Houses 12. A. P. £2,389. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 12s.

ELWICK-HALL, a parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, co. palatine of Durham; 9 miles north-north-east of Stockton-upon-Tees. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £20 18s. 1½d.; gross income £544. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £267 14s. 5d. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Acres 4,150. Houses 23. A. P. £2,802. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 1s.

ELWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 4½ miles north of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £297. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Roe. Acres 1,880. Houses 31. A. P. £2,791. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £86 13s.

ELWY (THE), a river in Glamorganshire, South Wales, falling into the Severn at Pennarth.

ELWY (THE), a river in Denbighshire, North Wales, falling into the Clwyd at St. Asaph.

ELY

An ancient city, capital of the isle, and seat of the see, of Ely, union of Ely, county of Cambridge; 66 miles north-east of London, and 16 north-north-east of Cambridge, on high ground at the northern extremity of the isle, and on the river Ouse, which is navigable from Lynn to Cambridge for barges. It consists of one principal street well-paved and lighted, with smaller streets branching off in various directions of the town, in the centre of which there is a spacious market-place. Many of the houses have an antiquated appearance, and, except the cathedral, the town has few architectural ornaments. The ground in the vicinity is very fertile, and is celebrated for its agricultural produce—see CAMBRIDGESHIRE. It is partly cultivated by market-gardeners. Acres 17,480. Houses 1,246. A. P. £31,208. Pop., in 1801, 3,948; in 1831, 6,189.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Soon after the introduction of Christianity into the kingdom of East Anglia, Ethelbert, the principal Saxon king, through the persuasions of Augustine, archbishop of Canterbury, is said to have founded a church at a place then called Cradindene, now Cratendon Field, about a mile from the site of the present city, and which is said to have constituted the original settlement, before the buildings at Ely had been erected round the monastery afterwards founded, and, as first abbes, governed, by the renowned Etheldreda, possessor of the Isle of Ely. The actuality of the prior foundation is however doubted:—"The tradition," says Tanner, "about king Ethelbert's founding, at the instance of St. Augustine, a church or monastery here, or at a place about a mile from hence called Cradindene, seeming not to be well grounded; Etheldreda, one of the daughters of King Anna, and wife first to Tombert prince of this country, and afterwards to Egfrid king of Northumberland, may more justly be accounted the first beginner of a very famous religious society here, about A. D. 673. This first church was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and in it the service of God was performed both by monks and nuns, who lived together under the government of an abbess, according to the usage in those early times, at Coludenberg, (where the royal foundress and first abbess made her profession of a monastic life,) and other Saxon monasteries; and in this state probably it continued near two hundred years, till this country was overrun, and all the houses of religion destroyed, by the heathen Danes, about A. D. 870. Some few years after, a small number of the religious men that had escaped the massacre returned hither, and, repairing some part of the church and buildings, lived here, as secular priests, under the government of provosts or arch-priests, for about one hundred years. But in the year 970, Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, introduced abbot and regulars, nobly re-edified the monastery, and amply endowed the same, partly by his own purchases, and partly by the munificence of King Edga, and other benefactors. A. D. 1108, the see of a new bishopric, taken out of the dio. of Lincoln, was established here, which occasioned a division of the lands of this rich abbey between the bishop—who was in place of the abbot—and the prior and monks: the share of the bishop was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £2,134 l. 8s. 6d. ob., and what remained to the convent was reckoned at £1,084 6s. 9d. ob. per ann. Dugd.; £1,301 8s. 2d. Speed. This monastery was dedicated to St. Peter, and St. Etheldreda, commonly called St. Audrey, and in it were a prior and between thirty and forty monks of the order of St. Benedict. Upon their surrender, King Henry VIII. placed here, A. D. 1541, a dean and eight secular canons or prebendaries, with vicars, lay clerks, choristers, a schoolmaster and usher, and twenty-four king's scholars, &c., and endowed them with the site and greatest part of the lands belonging to the priory."

To constitute the bishop's diocese, in 1108, the whole of the county of Cambridge, with the exception of a few parishes, was taken out of the jurisdiction of the see of Lincoln, and added to the isle of Ely, the abbots of which, even previously, when the county was part of the diocese of Lincoln, had always claimed an independent jurisdiction within the limits of their own isle. The manor of Spaldwick, in Huntingdonshire, was given to the bishop of Lincoln, as some compensation for the diminution of his jurisdiction. All those parishes, being 15 in number, which lie on the east side of the ancient boundary of Mercia, and never formed part of the diocese of Lincoln, continued to be comprised within that of Norwich, to which they originally belonged; constituting part of the deanery of Fordham, within the archdeaconry of Sudbury; the parish of Isleham belonging to the diocese of Rochester; and Emneth, in the county of Norfolk, to the diocese of Ely.—Whilst Cambridgeshire was in the diocese of Lincoln, that county, with Huntingdonshire, and part of Hertfordshire, was under the jurisdiction of one archdeacon: immediately after the foundation of the see of Ely, Cambridgeshire was placed under the jurisdiction of an archdeacon, who took his title from the county town; the sacrist of the abbey exercising archidiaconal powers within the isle of Ely, as he had been accustomed to do before the foundation of the bishopric; but the second archdeacon, William de Lavington, having assumed the title of archdeacon of Ely, claimed jurisdiction in the isle, as well as in other parts of the county. From this time disputes were perpetually arising between the bishop and the archdeacon, till the year 1401, when their respective jurisdictions were finally settled by an award, which is in the bishop of Ely's register. Until order of council of date 19th April, 1837, the diocese of Ely consisted of the archdeaconry of Ely, comprehending the deaneries of Wisbeach, Ely, Chesterton, Bourne or Knapwell, Berton, Cambridge, Camps, and Shenegay. The number of benefices in the diocese returned to the commissioners, in 1831, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 150, besides 2 not returned. The aggregate amount of the gross incomes of incumbents in the 150 returned benefices, was £56,495; average gross income £376. The total number of curates was 75: stipends, included in the income of incumbents, £6,583; average £87. By orders in council of date 19th April, 1837, in the reign of Will. IV., and of date 10th April, 1839, in the reign of her present majesty, Victoria I., and with the consent of the bishop of Lincoln, the diocese of Ely was increased by the counties of Huntingdon and Bedford, previously in the diocese of Lincoln,—whence, as already said, that of Ely was originally altogether taken,—and by the archdeaconry of Sudbury, with the exception of the deaneries of Hartismere and Stow, in the county of Suffolk, and previously in the diocese of Norwich. The deanery of Camps, in the archdeaconry of Ely, was transferred to the archdeaconry of Sudbury, thus included in the diocese of Ely. The total number of benefices in the diocese, in 1838, was 515, the incumbents in 226 of which were non-resident.

The total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see of this diocese, and of the ecclesiastical preferments, for 3 years ending 31st December, 1831, was £12,627: nett yearly income, £11,105; rather above the general average. By order in council of 19th April, 1837, already alluded to, the bishop was called upon to pay half-yearly into the Bank of England, to the credit of the ecclesiastical commissioners for England, the fixed annual sum of £2,500, so as to leave him an average annual income of £5,500; two-third parts only of the sum theretofore paid by bishops of Ely on account of first-fruits, being, by said order of council, appointed to be thereafter paid; the other one-third to be paid by the commissioners;—and the fees and stipends granted out of the revenues of the see by the bishop, to any secular officer of the Isle of Ely who held his office by patent for life, at the time of the passing of an act of the previous session of parliament, intituled, "An act for extinguishing the secular jurisdiction of the archbishop of York and the bishop of Ely in certain liberties in the counties of York, Nottingham, and Cambridge," being thenceforth, during the life of such officer,—whether his said office was abolished by the said act or not,—also paid by the commissioners:—such payments being made out of the sums lodged in the bank of England to their credit. The bishop has patronage to a considerable extent at Cambridge; he is visitor of 4 colleges, and appoints absolutely to the mastership of one fellowship of Jesus' college: of two candidates nominated for the mastership of St. Peter's college, by the fellows, he decides on one: he has besides about 100 livings in his gift.

The amount of the average gross yearly income of the dean and chapter, or corporation, of the cathedral, as a corporation aggregate, in 1831, was £8,651: the average gross yearly amount of the separate revenues possessed by all the members, as a corporation sole, in right of the prebends and of the deanery, was £260. The corporation, as already observed in the quotation from Tanner, consists, besides other officers, of the dean and eight prebendaries, whose stipends, out of the revenues of the corporation aggregate, amounted together to £300 7s. 7d. The sums paid to the other ecclesiastical members of the cathedral, amounted together to the sum of £267. The sum divided among the dean and prebendaries was, according to the said average, £6,069. There are 4 minor canons, each of whom, in addition to his minor canonry, holds some office in the cathedral. The dean and each of the prebendaries have, with their residences, a small portion of land, which they let in virtue of their rights as a corporation sole. The minor canons have no houses as minor canons; but as registrar, and upper grammar-schoolmaster, two of them have houses assigned to them for residence. The fabric of the church, which was reported, in 1831, to be in a sound state, is repaired out of the domus or church fund, comprising that portion of the revenues which arises from the profits of manors in hand; from a defined portion of the reserved rents; a legacy; and a small payment from a turnpike trust. When deficient, the chapter have supplied the deficiency out of their own dividends.

THE CATHEDRAL is the workmanship of various periods, and displays a singular admixture of the Saxon, Norman, and Gothic styles of architecture; yet, notwithstanding the dissimilarity of its parts, when considered as a whole, it must unquestionably be regarded as a very magnificent structure. The north and south transepts, which are the most ancient parts of the building, were erected in the reigns of William Rufus and Henry I. The arches are circular here, as well as in the nave, which was begun about the middle of the reign of Henry I., and completed before the year 1174. Between 1174 and 1189, Bishop Rydel erected the great west tower, which was anciently flanked on the north side by a building of the same kind as that on the south; but it either fell, or was taken down, and another building was begun in its place, but never carried higher than 12 or 14 feet. The interior view of this tower, which is decorated with small columns and arches running round in several stories, and lighted by 27 windows, in a double range, is extremely beautiful. The lower part was repaired, and new cased with stone, in the middle of the 15th century; but the beauty of the tower was destroyed in a considerable degree, by the insertion of a belfry-floor, and various beams irregularly disposed to direct the course of the bell-ropes. This belfry, with other cumbrous obstructions, was removed some years ago, through the munificence and taste of the Right Rev. James Yorke, the bishop, who also enabled the dean and chapter to repair the mutilated decorations of the tower, and restore the whole to its original splendour. The handsome vestibule at the entrance, formerly called the Galilee,* which was built about the year 1200, by bishop Eustachius, has also been repaired; and the ground in front so much lowered, that, instead of a descent of three or four steps at the entrance, as formerly, there is now an ascent into it of one step. In the year 1234, Hugh Northwold, the eighth bishop, laid the foundation of the elegant structure which now forms the choir, but which was originally the presbytery; it was finished in 1250. The three most western arches were destroyed by the fall of the lofty stone tower in the night of the 12th of February, 1322. This tower stood in the centre of the building, on four arches, which gave way, and precipitated it to the ground. To prevent any similar accident, Alan de Walsingham, sub-prior of the convent, and sacrist of the church, designed and erected the present magnificent octagonal tower, which is supported on eight pillars, surmounted by a dome, and terminated by an elegant lantern. The capitals of the pillars are ornamented with rude historical carvings, intended to represent the principal events in the life of Etheldreda. The stone-work of this octagonal tower, which is probably unequalled by any other of the kind, was completed in six years, and the wood-work raised, and covered with lead, in about fifteen. The whole was completed in the year 1342, at the expense of £2,406 4s. 11d. About the same period, the three arches eastward of the octagon were rebuilt by bishop Hotham: they are very highly embellished. The vaulting is divided into regular compartments by various ribs, which spring from the capitals of the pillars, and are ornamented at the intersections with flowers and elegant foliage, very skilfully executed. The arches of the second arcade, and the windows above them, are decorated with graceful and delicate tracery work. The wood-work of the dome and lantern, with part of the roof, was repaired between the years 1757 and 1762, by Mr. James Essex, of Cambridge; and the choir, which was then under the lantern, was also removed to its present situation. This was an important improvement, contributing greatly to the beauty of the cathedral. The stalls in the new choir were originally constructed by Alan de Walsingham. The east window is embellished with a good painting of St. Peter. The altar-piece, which is a fine old painting, representing St. Peter delivered from prison by the angel, was purchased in Italy by the late Earl of Grantham, and presented to the dean and chapter of Ely, by Dr. Yorke. At the east end of the north aisle is a sumptuous chapel, erected by bishop Alcock, who died at his castle at Wisbech, in the year 1500. His tomb, with his effigies, lying thereon, but much defaced, is placed under an arch of stone on the north side. In the south aisle, and in some respects corresponding with the former, but much superior in its embellishments, is another chapel, erected by bishop West, about the year 1530, and highly enriched with delicate Gothic ornaments and carving. The bones of Wolstan, archbishop of York; of Brithnoth, duke of Northumberland; and of the bishops Alwin, Elfgar, Athelstan, and Eadnoth, are deposited in this chapel, in small cells, similar to those in which they were immured in the walls of the old choir. These chapels were greatly dilapidated by the fanatical reformers of the civil wars, who seem to have had an invincible antipathy to every elegant or tasteful religious edifice. In the aisles are the remains of several ancient monuments, which appear to have been of good workmanship, but are much damaged. Among the monuments are those of the Bishops Northwold, Kilkenny, De Luda, Hotham, Barnet, Grey, Redman, Standley, and many modern bishops; and also a curious tomb to the memory of the famous John Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester, and his two wives of the time of Richard III. The font, which is of very elegantly wrought marble, adorned with several small statues, was given to the church by Dean Spencer. The outward extent of the cathedral, from east to west, is 535 feet; but the interior length is only 517. The length of the transept is 190 feet, the height of the lantern over the dome 170, the extreme height of the western tower 270, the two towers on the south wing of the latter 120, the length of the nave 203, the height of the roof over it 104, and the height of the eastern front to the top of the cross 112.

The bishop's palace, a very neat brick structure, was built by the Bishops Alcock and Gooderich, and much improved by the late Bishop Keene, partly at his own expense, and partly with the large sums recovered from the executors of his predecessor, Bishop Mawson, to whose philanthropy and public spirit the inhabitants of Ely were greatly indebted. The cloisters and other buildings belonging to the ancient monastery have been long since demolished.

On the north side of the cathedral, near the east end, is St. Mary's chapel, now Trinity church; it having been assigned to the use of the inhabitants of that parish soon after the restoration, by the dean and chapter. This elegant structure, which was commenced in the reign of Edward II., is one of the most perfect buildings of the age. Its shape is oblong; the interior length about 200 feet, the breadth 46, and the height of the vaulted roof 60. This building has neither pillars nor side aisles, but is supported by strong spring buttresses, surmounted with pinnacles. Formerly the space over the east and west windows was decorated with statues, and a variety of other well-executed sculpture. The interior was also embellished with niches, highly carved, and enriched with statues, ornamental foliage, and flower-work; but the fanatical soldiers of the commonwealth defaced the beauty of the sculpture, and what escaped their hands has been so miserably clogged and obscured by white-wash, that none of the finer parts of the carving are distinct. This edifice was built at the charge of the convent by John de Wisbech, one of the monks, and Alan de Walsingham. The first stone was laid by the latter on Lady-day, 1321. Exclusive of the extraparochial liberty of the college, this city comprises the parishes of St. Mary, and the Holy Trinity, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, returned at £87; gross income £94. The living of the Holy Trinity is a perpetual curacy, returned at £95 11s.; gross income £116. Here are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists: there is also a Countess of Huntingdon's chapel.

* See article DURHAM, note on Cathedral:—The Galilee of this church is smaller than that of Durham.

Schools and Charities.—There are 20 daily schools in this city. The King's grammar-school, founded by Henry VIII., in 1541, is under the control of the dean and chapter and appendant to the cathedral: provision is made by the statutes for the education of 24 boys, commonly called King's scholars. Here is now a National school for boys and girls, supported by voluntary contributions. In 1730, a charity school was founded by Mrs. Catherine Needham, for the education, maintenance, clothing, and apprenticement of poor children. The income of this charity, in 1836, was £323 ls. The original number of free scholars was 24. In 1819, there were 36 on the free list. In 1823, the number was reduced to 30; and in 1830, the list was further reduced to 24, the original number. They have annually a complete suit of clothes. No boys are apprenticed except those brought up in the Needham school: the premium is £20, half paid at a time. The school is well conducted, and the children improve: they are admitted at from 9 to 14 years of age, and are instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic. A valuable charity was founded here by one Thomas Parsons, about 200 years previous to 1622, as stated in a decree in Chancery relative thereto. The original purpose of this charity appears to have been "for the use of all the inhabitants of and in the city and town of Ely, to the intent that the same should be paid in discharge of fifteenths, which should in future be granted to the king's majesty, his heirs and successors, from the said city of Ely and the members thereof; but by reason that few taxes and fifteenths had been granted to his majesty, the yearly rents lay dead—which, if applied in relieving the aged, sickly, and impotent and other poor people of the said city, would greatly ease its inhabitants:" it was therefore decreed that the charity income should be thus applied. The funds were appointed by charter of King Charles, dated 6th January, 1633, to be held in trust by the bishop, dean, and archdeacon, with 9 other persons, as a body corporate and politic, "by the name of the Governors of the lands and possessions of the poor of Ely." The property thus administered consisted of various estates, the principal of which amounted to 6,000 acres, all within the Great Level of the Fens: the right of the governors to these, out of 12,000 acres over which they had a disputed claim of common pasture, was confirmed to them, as trustees for the use of the poor, by a decree of the commissioners, under the act of parliament passed in the 18th Charles II., called the Bedford Level Act, bearing date 18th December, 1666, and filed in the Petty Bag office. The nett rental of all these estates amounted, in the year 1835, to the sum of £757 6s. 3d., besides £5 annually derived from another source: it is applied by the governors in relief tickets to the poor of the two city parishes, who receive for them from the treasurer sums varying from 5s. to 8s.;—in payment of taxes chargeable on the parish, and of repairs;—in the purchase of coals for retail among the poor;—in the hire of a piece of ground divided into 54 allotments of about a rood each, and let to the poor at a very small rental;—and in sundry incidental expenses, including an annual donation of £30 towards clothing 40 of the National school, and £10 for a similar purpose in the Girls' school, the clerk's salary, and the wages of the superintendent, whose duty consists in superintending the sale and distribution of coals, digging and distribution of turf, stocking the commons, &c. The average quantity of turfs annually dug from the lands is about 1,700,000: the average quantity given to each family is supposed to be 6,000. It was recommended by the charity commissioners that the governors should take into their serious consideration the propriety of giving larger sums to fewer persons, and of industrious habits, as the charity thus applied seemed capable of acting as a stimulus to the industry and moral character of the participants. Other charities possessed by this city, in 1836, amounted to about £101 2s. per annum, chiefly expended for behoof of the poor:—£11 10s. of this sum consisted of the charities, more particularly connected with the parish of St. Mary, and about £76 2s. of those of the Holy Trinity, belonging to which parish there are also a number of tenements inhabited by the poor, either at nominal rents or rent free. "An ancient hospital here," says Tanner, "founded probably by some of the bishops, and partly maintained out of the revenues of the bishopric, occurs 16th Hen. II., in the account of the vacancy upon the death of Bishop Nigell. But it is not evident whether the hospital of Ely, there mentioned, was that of St. John Baptist or that of St. Mary Magdalene, two hospitals, both in Ely, which were united by Bishop Hugh Norwold, about A. D. 1240, and managed by some of the monks of the priory till the year 1458, when Bishop William Gray made one of his secular chaplains master or warden. It was valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £25 5s. 3d. ob. q. per annum; and, 4th Eliz. settled on the master and fellows of Clare-hall in Cambridge," to whom the site still belongs; but no part of the buildings of either of these hospitals now remains. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,269 13s. The Ely poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 128 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 17,327. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,777. Expenditure in 1838, £6,125; in 1839, £6,965 4s.

Government, &c.—Ely is not incorporated as a borough, and it is the only city in England which does not send members to parliament. It did so 23rd Edward I., but on no subsequent occasion. By grant of Henry I. the abbots and bishops of Ely, like those of Durham, possessed the jura regalia; exercising all the authority in the city and isle of Ely that the sovereign elsewhere exercised. They appointed their own chief justices, chief bailiffs, &c.; the jurisdiction of the city magistrates appointed by the bishop extending over all the isle; the judge holding assizes, gaol delivery, and quarter-sessions. But Henry VIII. abridged their palatinate privileges, and, by 6th and 7th William IV. c. 87, their secular jurisdiction was extinguished; being thereby vested in the sovereign, who is now empowered to appoint a custos rotulorum for the isle. Committals are now made to the county-gaol at Cambridge, and the palatine gaol is abolished. The quarter-sessions are held by justices of peace for the isle, and the assizes by the judges on the Norfolk circuit.

Trade and manufactures.—There are potteries of coarse ware and tobacco pipes here, and several mills for the extraction of oils from hemp, flax, and cole seed, throughout the isle. Being encompassed with rich and fertile garden and other ground, great quantities of strawberries, cherries, greens, asparagus, &c., and dairy produce, especially butter, is sent to Cambridge and London. The market is Thursday; and fairs are held on Holy Thursday and October 29th for horses, cheese, and hops.

History.—The city of Ely was denominated Suth Gureva by the Saxons. The etymology of its present name has been variously explained. Those who derive it from Helig, signifying willows, in the British language, or from the Saxon Æl, an eel, are amongst the most plausible; as, from the marshy nature of the soil, both willows and eels have been here very abundant. The Venerable Bede, who lived in the eighth century, adopts the latter derivation; and it appears, by the Norman Survey, that the number of eels to which the several lords of manors in the island were annually entitled, amounted to upwards of 100,000. Wisbech alone paid 28,000, and Stuntney 27,250. The origin and history of Ely are intimately connected with its ecclesiastical affairs, &c., and have been already partially treated of:—see, also, ELY ISLE.—“Clito Alfred, the brother of Edward the Confessor,” says Lambard, “comynge to the court by commandment of Harold their kinge, was, by procurement of Earle Godwyn, taken and caryed to Elye, and there he had his eyes putt out, and was delivered over to the custodie of the monkes of Ely, wheare he dyed of the anguyshe shortly after.—In the tyme of King Jhon, dyvers of the nobilitie flyng his fury, toke this ile, but Fulco followed them over upon the ice, and toke 15 of them prisoners, and did much damage to the town beside. Hugh, byshop in Hen. III. tyme, buylded a great part of that which belongeth to the byshop theare, and covered the hall with leade. The same kinge fell out with the covent, bycause they would not chose Wengham his seale bearer to their byshop, and therefore comitted the byshoprike to one Walleran, which did greatespoile in their woodes: for he had told them playnly, that it was nedefull to have a discrete man theare, not a sylly monke, forasmuche as that ile was a comon refuge for rebelles.”—For further historical information regarding Ely, see articles CAMBRIDGE-SHIRE:—see also BENTHAM’S ‘History of Ely.’

ELY, a small village in the parish of Llandaff, Glamorganshire, South Wales; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Cardiff. It has a bridge across the river Ely. An annual fair is held here on the 22d of July, for cattle.

ELY-BRENT. See BRENT-ELEIGH.

ELYHAUGH, a township in the parish of Felton, Northumberland; 9 miles south-south-west of Alnwick, and south of the river Coquet. Houses 5, Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 16. Other returns with the parish.

ELY ISLE,

An extensive district of the county of Cambridge, reaching from the bridge of Tyd, on the north, to Upmere, on the south, a distance of about 28 miles, and from Abbots, on the east, to the river Mere, near Peterborough, on the west, about 25 miles. On the west, it is bounded by the counties of Northampton and Huntingdon; on the north, by Lincolnshire; on the east, by Norfolk and part of Suffolk. This district contains several considerable towns and villages, as Doddington, Wisbeach, Whittlesey, March, Leverington, Newton. Chatteris, &c., besides the city of Ely and the villages of Strettham and Thetford, Wilberton, Haddenham, Sutton, Mepal, Wenham, Wentworth, Witchford, Downham, and Chettisham, which collectively make but one island, or large tract of high land encompassed with fens, formerly overflowed with water, and more strictly called the Isle of Ely. Littleport, Coveney, and Stuntney, though sometimes reckoned part of it, were, in their original state, disjoined by small intervals of fenny ground, and therefore were distinct islands of themselves. The more restricted tract is about 7 miles in length, and 4 in breadth, and is chiefly separated from the rest of the county on the south and east by the old channel of the Ouse, which river flows from the Huntingdonshire to the Norfolk border, and washes the city of Ely in its course.

The face of the whole district is described by a modern writer to be “one vast plain, stretching beyond the reach of sight; interrupted on the southern side by one or two ridges of comparatively high land, but in all its northern portion presenting only some small elevations, which just lift the villages seated upon them above the general level. This whole tract is naturally a marsh, subject to be laid under water in rainy seasons by the rivers which creep through it to the sea, and rendered habitable and cultivable only by means of immense labour expended in cutting drains across it in various directions. Into these the water is raised by means of windmills, which pump it up from the ditches that everywhere intersect the low grounds, and it is kept in by high banks which confine it on a level higher than that of the adjacent country. Among the objects presented by nature, the botanist will find a large variety of aquatic plants in great luxuriance; and the ornithologist will be entertained with a number of birds, not indeed equal to that of some of the unreclaimed fens of Lincolnshire, but sufficient to excite his attention. The heron is frequent by the sides of the drains, or in the watery splashes, and by his tall stature, and wide spread of wings, makes a principal figure among the feathered tribe. These places are also the resort of various kinds of gulls, with the tern, or sea-swallow. The pewitt, or lapwing, fills the moors with its clamour. Stares, or starlings, abound throughout the fens, and often collect in such flocks as to form black clouds hovering over the ground, and amusing the spectator by their continual change of form and appearance. The common birds of prey are kites and buzzards. In winter a great variety of the duck kind, and other water-fowl, come up in the washes, and offer a valuable capture to the fowler. Of the fish, pikes and eels are the most abundant; and in the spring season, smelts run up the Bedford river in great shoals. It has been remarked, that where the energies of man are excited by circumstances of hardship and necessity, they generally proceed so far as to render his situation more abundant in conveniences than where indolence is favoured by the bounty of nature. This is the case with Holland, compared to the rest of Europe; and it appears to be that of the fens of Ely, compared to some of the more desirable counties of England. The villages in this tract are for the most part well-built, and have an air of comfort not usual in the common agricultural districts. That of Earith is even provided with a flagged foot-pavement for its whole length, a valuable accommodation in a low site, which cannot fail of being very wet and miry in the winter. The pale brick and tile manufactured in these parts give a very neat appearance to the houses, and the reed thatches of the barns and cottages is extraordinarily warm and durable. Many of the churches are handsome, and have tall steeples, visible at a great distance—the landmarks of this naked tract. The cathedral of Ely, one of the largest and most remarkable edifices of the kind, is a conspicuous object to a wide circumjacent country. The inhabitants of the fens are chiefly engaged in farming, and many of the farmers are opulent. They feed numbers of cattle, and the sheep of the upland districts are frequently sent hither in the winter to fatten on the cole seed. The brewing trade is considerable in several of the towns and villages; for the people are a thirsty tribe, and avail themselves of the excuse of a moist air and bad water, to counteract the former and correct the latter, by potations of as much strong beer as they can procure. In particular, those labourers who are employed in the important task of keeping the banks in repair—provincially termed bankers—are as mighty to drink as to work. The natives in general are a stout broad set race, many of them with black hair and dark complexions. The population is scanty in proportion to the space of ground, and much of the harvest work is done by Irish labourers. Few gentlemen of large estates reside in the fens, as the country is unfit for sporting, and certainly does not abound in rural beauty. The magistrates are principally the clergy, several of whom enjoy ample livings. Although trees are now scarce in the fens, and almost confined to willows and other aquatics, yet the bodies of oaks of large dimensions, still frequently dug up in the lowest and wettest tracts, prove that the country at some remote period was well-wooded, and probably in great part a forest. As it is certain that before the drainage, a century and a half ago, it was much more a morass than at present, conjecture is puzzled to determine at what remote era the soil could be capable of bearing timber-trees, where even now no one would think of planting them. Some of the trunks dug up are still serviceable wood. In the same parts very black turf or peat is cut, which is the common fuel. The ozers are an article of profit to the planter from their sale to the basket makers. The peeling of them, after steeping in pits, is one of the occupations of the poor. Such are the most prominent features of a portion of this island, which, from its strongly-marked character and peculiar circumstances, is well worthy of being visited by all who travel for knowledge or amusement, though a long residence, or a repetition of visits, is more than can be claimed for it, except from those who are particularly interested in the objects it presents. To the sentimental surveyor, it will afford a pleasure of a higher class than that which is merely taken in by the eye—the gratifying reflection, that the powers bestowed upon man are adequate to procure him a comfortable existence, even where nature appears to have multiplied her difficulties and discouragements."

Lambard describes Ely as 'an ile standing in that part of the realme which was some tyme East Angle, which toke the name (as Beda and Lel. say) of eles; as Grafton and suche like (harpinge muche upon the stringe of men's names) affirme, of Helius a kinge of England; and as Polydore reasonable (though peradventure beside trouthe) conjecturethe, of E~~la~~, which is a fenne or marishe in Greke. It is in lengthe about 26 myles, and in bredthe 14. It conteyned in Beda his tyme 600 families, hides or houtholdes. Polydore sayeth that there was in it an abbay of Black monkes in tyme of Ethelbert, which receyved Augustine, by whose persuasion he erected the same; which, beinge destroyed by Penda, kinge of Mercia, was afterwards repayed by Etheldred, kinge Egfride's wife, who lyvinge 12 yeares together a virgin, and yet a wife, at the last, by his consent, entred the house her selfe, and governed nunnnes in it, which order contynued til suche tyme as the Danes, occupyinge that parte, destroyed the house. Not longe after, when the furie of the Danes began to cease, dyvers preistes assembled, and made of the house a college, who, bycause they had wives, weare cast out by Ethelwold, byshop of Winchester in Edgar's dayes, and monkes broughte in. For Malmesbury hathe a tale that Ethelstane, one of these preistes, and dyvers of his fellowes, should be chaunged into eles, bycause they lyved not unmarried, and therof the place should be called Eley. But to make him a lyer, and more likely to compile a new metamorphosis, then to write a true hystorye, Beda hath saied that it was called Ely long before.—Henry the First chaunged this abbaye into a byshoprike, addinge to his diocese Cambridgeshyre:"—see city of ELY:—also, for further general information as to this isle, see article CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

ELY-PLACE, an extra-parochial liberty in Holborn division, hundred of Ossulston, county of Middlesex; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-west of St. Paul's. Houses 42. Pop., in 1801, 281; in 1831, 216.

EMBERTON, or EMMERTON, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnel, county of Buckingham; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Olney, and south-east of the river Ouse. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 2s. 11d.; gross income £485. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Frey. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of clerical rector, were commuted in 1798. Charities, in 1835, £31, besides a house converted into a school-house, in which 40 or 50 children are educated from the charity funds. Poor rates, in 1838, £356 18s. Acres 1,860. Houses 133. A. P. £3,786. Pop., including that of Okeney-cum-Petsoe, in 1801, 549; in 1831, 598.

EMBLETON, a chapelry in the parish of Brigham, county of Cumberland; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by south of Cockermouth, and south of the Derwent. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; gross income £54. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £185. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lonsdale. Here are 2 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 72. A. P. £2,140. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 442. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 10s.

EMBLETON, a township in the parish of Sedgfield, north-east division of Stockton ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 7 miles east-south-east of Hartlepool. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Sedgfield. Here is a daily school. Acres 3,160. Houses 19. A. P. £1,940. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 105. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 4s.

EMBLETON, a parish in the south division of Bambrough ward, union of Alnwick, Northumberland; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Alnwick, comprising the townships of Brockfield, Bruton High and Low, Craster, Dunston, Embleton, Fallowdon, Newton, and Stamford, with the chapelries of Rock and Rennington. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £11 3s. 4d.; gross income £856. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Merton college, Oxford. Here is an endowed daily school, regulated by special visitors: other charities, in 1830, £13 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £717 14s.; of the township, £120 7s.. Acres 12,810. Houses 402. A. P. £18,698. Pop., in 1801, 1,515; in 1831, 1,923. Houses of the township 107. A. P. 6,435. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 492.

EMBLEY. See WELLOW EAST.

EMBORROW, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 5 miles north-east of Wells, on the post-road from Bath to Bridgewater. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Chewton-Mendip. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £140 inappropriate, and £74 vicarial. Here is a daily school. Acres, including the tything of Whitnell, 2,400. Houses 38. A. P. £1,426. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 207. Poor rates, in 1838, £167 3s.

EMBSAY WITH EASTBY, a township in the parish of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-east by east of Skipton, in the vicinity of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. The Swedenborgians have a place of worship here, founded in 1833, and there are 4 daily schools. There was here a priory, which was afterwards translated to Bolton. Acres 3,960. Houses 178. A. P. £3,759. Pop., in 1801, 623; in 1831, 891. Poor rates, in 1838, £208.

EMLEY, a parish in the wapentake of Agrabrigg, union of Wakefield, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles east-south-east of Huddersfield, at one of the sources of the river Dearne. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £14 0s. 7½d.; gross income £482. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Scarborough. Tithes of the manor and township of Emley were commuted in 1817. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which has a trifling endowment. Other charities, in 1826, £24 9s.; also 6 strikes of rye, charge on land. Poor rates, in 1838, £472 13s. Acres 3,120. Houses 286. A. P. £3,382. Pop., with which a part of the township of Skelmanthorpe is reckoned, in 1801, 1,120; in 1831, 1,445.

EMMERTON. See EMBERTON, Bucks.

EMMINGTON, or AMMINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Lewknor, union of Thame, county of Oxford; 3¼ miles south-east by south of Thame. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £11 0s. 2½d.; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, H. Wykeham. Charities, in 1822, £1 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 4s. Acres 1,230. Houses 15. A. P. £1,011. Pop., in 1801, 76; in 1831, 80.

EMNETH, a parish in Marshland division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Wisbeach, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles south by east of Wisbeach, and near the Wisbeach canal. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Elm. Here is a daily school. The children of this parish have access to an endowed school at Elm, Cambridge. Town land, 1 acre, 1 rood. Poor rates, in 1838, £575. Acres 2,810. Houses 213. A. P. £5,549. Pop., in 1801, 711; in 1831, 995.

EMPINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of East, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 6¼ miles east of Oakham, situated on the northern bank of the river Gwash. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 14s. 9½d., returned at £146 19s. 11d.; gross income £216. Patron, the prebendary of Empingham in Lincoln cathedral. Tithes, the property of the prebend of Empingham and vicar, were commuted in 1794. Here are 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed. £35 were applied, in 1820, to the education of 26 children. Other charities, £60. Poor rates, in 1838, £289 11s. This was formerly a town of considerable importance: in the reign of Edward I. it had a weekly market. Acres 2,780. Houses 158. A. P., £4,658. Pop., in 1801, 778; in 1831, 913.

EMPSHOT, a parish in the hund. of Selborne, union of Petersfield, Alton division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles south-east by south of Alton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £5 15s. 5½d.; gross income £103. Patrons, in 1835, J. Eldridge, and C. Butler, Esqrs. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,320. Houses 18. A. P. £721. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 149. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 3s.

EMSWELL with KELLYTHORPE. See DRIFFIELD (GREAT).

EMSWORTH, a tything in the parish of Warblington, county of Southampton; 2 miles south-east of Havant, and 9½ east-north-east of Portsmouth, situated at the south-east of the county, on the border of Sussex, near the English channel. The line of the proposed railway between London and Portsmouth runs through Emsworth. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1819. Many small vessels are employed in the trade of this port, and the inhabitants are principally engaged in ship-building and ropemaking. It is a noted place for oysters. Fairs are held on Easter-Monday and July 18th, for toys.

ENBORNE, a parish in the hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, union of Newbury, county of Berkshire; 2¼ miles west-south-west of Newbury, near the Kennet and Avon canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £10; gross income £416. Patron, in 1835, Earl Craven. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is a National school. Acres 2,550. Houses 81. A. P. £2,232. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 420. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 19s.

ENCOMBE, a hamlet in the parish of Kingston, county of Dorset; 2½ miles south-west of Corfe-Castle. This place gave the title of Viscount to the earl of Eldon.

ENDELLION, a parish in the hund. of Trigg, union of Bodmin, county of Cornwall; 4¼ miles north-north-east of Wade Bridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £10; gross income £223. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 5 daily schools here. The chief export of this place—which is on the British channel—consists of pilchards, and slates from the Delabole quarries. Coals are imported hither from Wales. Port Quin, in this parish, was formerly a considerable fishing-town. Acres 3,530. Houses 234. A. P. £5,215. Pop., in 1801, 727; in 1831, 1,218. Poor rates, in 1838, £554 9s.

ENDERBY, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Blaby, county of Leicester; 4½ miles south-west of Leicester, bounded on the east by the river Soar. The union canal passes through the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Whetstone, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 8s. 9d.; gross income £197. Patron, in 1835, C. L. Smith, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which was endowed by R. Smith with £10 per annum. Framenkning has been here the general employment. Acres 1,810. Houses 221. A. P. £3,582. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 1,141. Poor rates, in 1838, £466 13s.

ENDERBY-BAG, a parish in the hund. of Hill, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Spilsby, at the source of the Steeping river. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 18s. 1½d.; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, W. B. Burton, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 860. Houses 20. A. P. £1,278. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 114. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 11s.

ENDERBY (MAVIS), a parish in the east division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles west-north-west of Spilsby, Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 11s. 2d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, W. Morley, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,510. Houses 41. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 7s.

ENDERBY (WOOD), a parish in the soke and union of Horncastle, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Horncastle, and near the Horncastle canal. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £23 13s. 4d.; gross income £56. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. Acres 990. Houses 38. A. P. £1,044. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 6s.

ENDFORD, or ENFORD, a parish in the hund. of Elstub and Everley, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Ludgershall, on the river Avon. It includes the tything of Fyfield. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19 4s. 9½d.; gross income £350. Patrons, the governors of Christ's hospital, London. The great and small tithes of the manor of Compton were commuted in 1770. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1833, £3 3s. 6d. Poor rates, in 1838, £604 19s. Acres 7,880. Houses 187. A. P. £6,703. Pop., in 1801, 814; in 1831, 961.

ENDON, a chapelry in the parish of Leek, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Leek, situated on the river Churnet, and intersected by the Caldon canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Macclesfield. There are 7 daily schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 93. A. P. £6,294. Pop., in 1821, 445; in 1831, 487.

ENER-GLYNN, a hamlet in the parish of Eglwys-Ilan, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2 miles north-west of Caerphilly. Houses 192. A. P. £858. Pop., in 1801, 1,013; in 1831, 882.

ENFIELD, a parish and town in the hund. and union of Edmonton, county of Middlesex; 10 miles north-east of London, agreeably situated on the New river, and the Lea navigation; and in the line of the London and Cambridge railway. Acres 12,460. Houses 1,552. A. P. £33,033. Pop., in 1801, 5,881; in 1831, 8,812. It is divided into three districts, viz. Town quarter, Green-street quarter, and Bull-cross quarter, each having a separate church-warden and overseer. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £26; gross income £1,218. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Great and small tithes, the property of Trinity college, and the vicar, were commuted in 1801. Besides the church, an ancient structure, here are a chapel-of-ease, named Jesus' chapel, erected in 1835; an Independent church, formed in 1792; a Presbyterian, in 1662; and a Roman Catholic chapel. Here are 8 daily and 5 day and boarding schools, several of which are supported by endowment and subscription. Of the numerous and rather valuable charities, the most important is the free school charity, the history of the origin of which is involved in obscurity; though, from old documents, it appears that, in 1413, Robert Blossom devised certain premises which constituted the foundation of the charity. The whole income, in 1819 was £375 per annum: the expenditure, on behalf of the school, was £210 11s. 6d.: the number of scholars 120 boys. Part of the funds was directed to be applied to the relief of poor orphans or impotent inhabitants of the parish. The master was provided with a habitation by another charity. Wilson's annuities to 6 poor men, amounted in all to £162 14s. 6d. King James's charity for the use of the town and parish to £100, expended, together with the proceeds of other charities, principally in annuities to aged and deserving persons. In all, the charities possessed by this parish, and chiefly bestowed for the relief of the poor, the education and apprenticeship of their children, the endowment of almshouses, &c., produced an annual income of about £990 5s. 3d. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,456 6s. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions here. Courts leet and baron are also held. Enfield is one of the polling-places for the county members. Here are several trading and manufacturing establishments.

Enfield chase, a large tract of woodland, well stocked with deer, was highly celebrated in former times. During the civil wars, the timber was cut down, the deer destroyed, and the land parcelled out into small farms. After the restoration, these farms were resumed, and the land once more planted and stocked with deer; but it was again disforested in 1779, by act of parliament, and the lands disposed of on the part of the Crown. In this chase rises the stream called Enfield Wash, which falls into the river Lea. In the town of Enfield are the remains of an ancient palace, in which it is said Edward VI. once held his court. The princess Elizabeth also made it her abode before she became queen, and at several periods during her reign. One room, still left as in the queen's time, displays a richly ornamented ceiling and chimney-piece, with the arms of France and England quartered, and other decorations; but great part of the edifice was destroyed in 1792, and replaced by small tenements. Saturday is market-day; and fairs are held on September 23d, for hiring servants; St. Andrew's day, and November 30th, for horses, cows, and cheese.

ENFIELD. See ENVILLE.

ENGLEFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Theale, union of Bradfield, county of Berks; 4 miles west of Reading, and north of the river Kennet. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £11 12s. 8½d.; gross income £305. Patron, in 1835, R. B. de Beauvoir. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £17 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 17s. "Englefield," says Lambard, "Anglorum campus, Mariano, a place in Barkshyre, four myles west from Readinge, wheare Etdelwulf, under Kinge Ethelred, King of Ingland, met with the great army of the Danes (that for multitude could not marche together) and kyllinge Sydrac their captein, put the rest to flighte. It seemeth that the place toke name of this victory. It is at this day part of the possessions of a man of that name, whearby it may appeare, that the place som tyme gyveth name to the parson; for wheras the auncient manor of calling men was by their Chrysten name only, with the addition of their dwelling-place, as Jhon of Combe, William of Dale, &c. it grew at lengthe to this, that they weare surnamed of the towne, as if it had bene their own proper callinge, and by this meanes Jhon of Combe became Jhon Combe, Jhon of Dale, Jhon Dale, &c.; as by the speache in Cheshyre, used at this day, is easely discerned; for they call one man Syr Thomas à Holecroft, another Syr William à Bruerton; for Sir Thomas of Holcroft, Sir William of Bruerton," &c. Acres 1,510. Houses 69. A. P. £1,893. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 411.

ENGLEWOOD FOREST stood near Carlisle, in the county of Cumberland. It was disforested by Henry VIII., and is now but a dreary moor.

ENGLISH COMBE, a parish in the hund of Wellow, union of Bath, county of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £9 3s. 11½d.; nett income £185. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. D. Hughes. Here is a Sunday school, with a lending library of 250 volumes, accessible to the whole village. Acres 1,760. Houses 63. A. P. £2,576. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 388. Poor rates, in 1838, £125 3s.

ENHAM (KNIGHTS), a parish in the hund, and union of Andover, county of Southampton; 2 miles north of Andover, and included within the parliamentary boundaries of that borough. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10; gross income £224. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. The children of this parish attend school at Andover. Charities, in 1825, £51 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 13s. Acres 2,490. Houses 19. A. P. £770. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 123.

ENHAM (KING'S), a hamlet in the parish of Andover, county of Southampton; 2 miles north of Andover.

ENIAN (THE), a river of Cornwall, which falls into the Tamar near Brownwally.

ENMORE, a parish in the hund, of Andersfield, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 4 miles west-south-west of Bridgewater, on a branch of the river Parret. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 4s. 2d.; gross income £242. Patron, the Earl of Egremont. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1825, £12 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 18s. Enmore castle—the seat of Lord Egremont—is a large quadrangular building, of dark red stone, embattled on each side, and surrounded by a dry ditch 16 feet deep and 40 feet wide; the approach to it is by a curiously constructed drawbridge. Acres 930. Houses 52. A. P. £1,912. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 294.

ENNERDALE, or ENDERDALE, a parochial chapelry in the parish of St. Bees, Cumberland; 5 miles north-east of Egremont, on the banks of the Ehen. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £43; gross income £84. Patron, in 1835, H. Curwen, Esq. Here is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 35. A. P., including Kenneyside, £2,559. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 14s.

ENNERDALE WATER, a lake in Cumberland, formed by the waters of the river Ehen. It is situated about a mile east of the town of Ennerdale, among the mountains, whence there are very grand and extensive views: the lake, on every side, except the west, is guarded with wild and craggy heights, almost impassable. Its eastern shore is bespangled with small farms, in some degree alleviating the gloom of the situation: but on the whole, the scenery is melancholy; and the mind is apt to be depressed rather than enlivened, at the view of human habitations, sequestered and shut out for many months from the comfortable rays of the sun. The length of this lake is about two-and-a-half miles, and its breadth, at the widest part, about three quarters of a mile. This lake abounds with trout and wild fowl.

ENODER (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb Major, county of Cornwall; 3 miles north-east of St. Michael. The township of Midshall is partly in this parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £26 13s. 4d.; gross income £298. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here is a daily National school. Fairs for cattle, sheep, &c., are held at Summer Court in this parish on Holy Thursday, 28th of July, and 25th of September. Acres 4,050. Houses 206. A. P. £5,303. Pop., in 1801, 869; in 1831, 1,124. Poor rates, in 1838, £184 5s.

ENSHAM, or EYNESHAM, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 5 miles east by south of Witney, on the post-road from Witney to Oxford, and north of the river Isis, in a very delightful part of the country. Acres 5,060. Houses 343. A. P. £8,016. Pop., in 1801, 1,166; in 1831, 1,858. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £15 14s.; gross income £177. The church is a fine Gothic structure: near it is a singular tapering cross of great age. The great and small tithes, property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1799–1800. Here are an Independent chapel, and 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1823, about £119 11s. 9d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,073 2s. The approach to the town of Ensham, on the Oxford side, is over two stone bridges, the first of which, across the Isis, is a very handsome structure. This place is of great antiquity, having formed a royal villa in the reign of King Ethelred: it derives its name from the Saxon Egonesham. Here was a Benedictine abbey, built and endowed by Æthelmar, or Ailmer, earl of Cornwall and Devonshire. This monastery was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £421 16s. 1d. After the dissolution, the site became the property of the Earls of Derby. The only remains of the abbey are two windows, now used as doorways, one of which is in the vicarage garden, and is dated 1300, and adorned with a coat of arms. Till within the last century, a custom prevailed in this parish, by which the town's people were allowed on Whit-Monday, to cut down and carry away as much timber as could be drawn by men's hands into the abbey-yard, the church-wardens previously marking such timber, by giving the first chop. The monks of Ensham had a market, allowed by King Stephen to be held "every Lord's day."

ENSON. See SALT AND ENSON.

ENSTONE-CHURCH, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping-Norton, county of Oxford; ¾ mile north-east of Neat-Enstone, containing the hamlets of Cleveley, Enstone-Church, Enstone-Neat, Gagingwell, Lidstone, and Radford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 14s. 4d.; gross income £370. Patron, in 1835, Lord Dillon. Here are a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1824, £68 3s., of which about £57 were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £686 1s. Acres 4,850. Houses 227. A. P. £6,856. Pop., in 1801, 912; in 1831, 1,172. Houses of the hamlet 53. Pop., in 1821, 254; in 1831, 240.

ENSTONE (NEAT), a hamlet in the parish of Enstone-Church, county of Oxford. Houses 69. Pop., in 1821, 326; in 1831, 370. Other returns with the parish.

ENTWISLE, a township in the parish of Bolton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6½ miles north-north-east of Great-Bolton. There are 2 Sunday schools here. Acres 1,450. Houses 107. A. P. £1,684. Pop., in 1801, 447; in 1831, 701. Poor rates, in 1838, £99 18s.

ENVILLE, or ENFIELD, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Seisdon, union of Seisdon, county of Stafford; $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles west-north-west of Stourbridge, in the vicinity of the Stafford and Birmingham canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £27 2s. 11d.; gross income £1,084. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Price. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment. Charities, in 1820, £212 10s. 10d., of which £123 2s. 10d. constituted the income of Lady D. Grey's free-school. Poor rates, in 1838, £268 8s. The elegant mansion of Lord Stafford forms one of the principal ornaments of this place. It appears to have been built at different periods, and consists of a centre and two wings, the former standing in a recess between the latter. In front is a fine lawn sloping down to a beautiful lake, over which is a little rustic bridge adding much to the picturesque appearance of the whole. Acres 4,930. Houses 141. A. P. £7,076. Pop., in 1801, 799; in 1831, 766.

ENWORTH, or YANWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of Hazleton, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of North Leach. Acres 1,340. Houses 20. A. P. £1,465. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 123. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 14s.

EPPESTONE, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 5 miles south-west of Southwell, on a large branch of the river Trent. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 1s. 8d.; gross income £321. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. All tithes, moduses, &c., of Epperstone liberties, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1768. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1828, £11 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 8s. Acres 2,280. Houses 98. A. P. £2,815. Pop., in 1801, 422; in 1831, 518.

EPPING, a market-town and large parish in the hund. of Waltham, union of Epping, county of Essex. The parish lies on the borders of Epping forest, and is above 30 miles in circumference. Acres 5,250. Houses 429. A. P. £12,732. Pop., in 1801, 1,779; in 1831, with Epping-Upland, 2,440. It is divided into Epping-Upland, where the church is situated, and the Town-side, where the town stands, and which is 16 miles north-east by north of London, and $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Chelmsford, on the post-road from London to Newmarket. Living, a vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the court of the commissary of London, concurrently with the consistorial Episcopal court; rated at £17 13s. 4d.; gross income £729. Patron, in 1835, J. Conyers, Esq. Besides the church, there are here a chapel-of-ease vested in trustees for the use of the inhabitants; an Independent chapel, rebuilt in 1770; and a Quaker's meeting-house, founded in 1670. Here are 8 daily, 4 boarding, and 2 National schools. The public charities amount to between £80 and £90 a-year. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,149 11s. A work-house has been erected here, for the union of Epping, capable of accommodating 220 persons. The Epping poor-law union comprehends 18 parishes, embracing an area of 77 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 14,734. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,242. Expenditure in 1838, £4,725; in 1839, £5,960 12s.

The town of Epping was originally a hamlet of Waltham-abbey. It consists of one long and wide street, on a ridge of hills rising to about 380 feet, running north and south. It is well supplied with water from land springs. In the summer months it is resorted to on account of its healthy and pleasant situation. It has long been celebrated for its royal chase, extending from Epping to the vicinity of London, and formerly including a great part of the county of Essex. A little to the south-east, and divided from Epping forest by the river Roding, is the forest of Hainault, once an appendage to Epping forest, and where stood the venerable Fairlop-oak, which flourished for many centuries, its branches extending over a space of nearly 300 feet in diameter; around it an annual fair was kept called Fairlop fair, which originated in a social meeting commenced by Daniel Day, a blockmaker, at Wapping, and who left a fund for keeping up the custom. This tree was cut down some years ago, and furnished timber for the pulpit of St. Pancras church. Large parties, however, have still continued to proceed annually to the spot in boats, placed on wheels, and accompanied by bands of music, banners, &c., and to rendezvous in the romantic glades and alleys of the forest—see HAINAULT. Anciently this forest was the favourite resort of the citizens of London for the enjoyment of the pleasures of archery, shooting with the cross-bow, &c. Up to the middle of the last century it was a noted resort for gipsies; but the rapid increase of buildings and traffic has long broken up their haunts. It has long been, and is still, however, the scene of an annual festival on Easter-Monday, when a stag is turned out to be hunted for the amusement of the civic sportsmen. Both of the forest districts display great beauty of rural scenery, interspersed with many villas, gentlemen's seats, and plantations. The original limits of the forest have been thus gradually contracted, and several thousand acres have been thrown into cultivation. The town of Epping, and the surrounding district, which is fertilized by the river Roding, are famous for the richness of their cream and butter; the latter of which is nearly all consumed in London. Epping sausages and pork are also a considerable article of consumption in London. The market is on Friday. The fairs are on Whit-Tuesday and the 13th of November, for horses, cows, and sheep.

EPPLEBY, a township in the parish of Gilling, north riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles north-east of Richmond. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,490. Houses 46. A. P. £1,224. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 206. Poor rates, in 1838, £54.

EPPLETON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, co.-palatine of Durham; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Durham, intersected by the Durham and Sunderland railway. Acres 790. Houses 7. A. P. £727. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 47. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 14s.

EPPLETON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, co.-palatine of Durham. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £38 12s. $3\frac{1}{4}$ d. Acres 170. Houses 3. A. P. £400. Pop., in 1801, 6; in 1831, 17. Poor rates, in 1838, £7 10s.

EPSOM, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the first division of the hund. of Copthorne, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; 16 miles east-north-east of Guildford. Acres 3,970. Houses 548. A. P. £13,056. Pop., in 1801, 2,404; in 1831, 3,231. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 9s. 9d.; gross income £381. Patron, in 1835, W. Speer, Esq. Among the incumbents of Epsom was the Rev. J. Boucher, who made some valuable collections for an improved edition of Johnson's Dictionary. Here are two Independent churches, formed in 1690 and 1780; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are also 14 daily schools, one of which, a National school, is endowed with £72 14s. 2d.; and almshouses endowed, in 1824, with £24: other charities, about £95 5s. 11d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,319 11s.—The Epsom poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes, embracing an area of 63 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 15,723. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,335. Expenditure in 1838, £6,512; in 1839, £8,858 3s. Epsom, to which the Saxons gave the name of Elusham, does not appear to have been of any great extent until the discovery in 1618, of a medicinal spa, which issues from a hillock, near Ashted, to the south-east of the town. Its properties are aperient, and the sulphate of magnesia still retains the appellation of Epsom salts, from having been, at one time, to a great extent, prepared from the waters of this spring. Epsom became a fashionable resort, and rapidly increased in buildings and population, and was long noted as a watering-place after the discovery of this spa; but, like other places of fashionable resort, it gradually became neglected and deserted, and the public rooms having fallen to ruin, were pulled down in 1804. Another source of attraction, however, was the more recent institution of annual races on the downs. These commence on Tuesday, and continue till the end of the week preceding Whitsuntide. They never fail to be numerous and fashionably attended. During the race-week, it has been calculated that Epsom is visited by from 300,000 to 400,000 persons. A grand stand was erected at a great expense for the accommodation of the company. A railway has been projected for the purpose of uniting Epsom with Croydon, and with London through the Croydon railway; and it is anticipated that a large traffic will be commanded by a line, thus bringing so populous and beautiful a district of country as that in this vicinity, within less than an hour's ride of London bridge. The county-magistrates hold petty-sessions here for the division once a month, and the town is within the jurisdiction of a court held at Kingston for the recovery of debts. A new town-hall is in course of erection or completed.

EPWELL, a chapelry in the parish of Swalcliffe, county of Oxford; 7 miles west of Banbury. Living, a curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Swalcliffe. The great and small tithes, the property of New College, Oxford, and the vicar, were commuted in 1772. Acres 1,270. Houses 80. A. P. £1,528. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 367. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 14s.

EPWORTH, a market-town and parish in the west division of the wapentake of Manley, union of Thorne, county of Lincoln; 10 miles north-west of Gainsborough, and 160 miles north-west of London. Acres 8,140. Houses 389. A. P. £8,312. Pop., in 1801, 1,434; in 1831, 1,825. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £28 16s. 8d.; gross income £955. Patron, the Crown. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1821; and places of worship for the Baptists, Society of Friends, and Primitive and other Methodists. There are also 9 daily schools, one of which, founded in 1694, is endowed with about £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £751 11s. John Wesley, the celebrated founder of the sect of Arminian Methodists, was born in this parish in 1703, during the incumbency of his father, who held the rectory 59 years. In his memoirs, he relates a wonderful escape he had when the parsonage-house was burnt down;—having been left in his cradle, and forgotten, when all the rest of the family had escaped, but afterwards rescued, at the moment the roof fell in. Alexander Kilham, founder of a class of seceders from that sect, called Kilhamites, was also a native of this place. The town is of considerable extent, but narrow and irregularly built: the surrounding lands are flat. Quantities of large oaks, with acorns, fir, and other kinds of trees, some of which appear to have been burnt, have been frequently found at the depth of 3 feet beneath the surface. Great quantities of flax are grown in this neighbourhood, the dressing, spinning, and other manufacture of which form the chief branches of trade. The market is on Thursday, the fairs are on the first Thursday after May 1st, and first Thursday after September 29th for cattle, hemp, and flax. There is a branch of the Lincoln and Lindsey banking company here.

ERBISTOCK, a parish partly in the hund. of Bromfield, county of Denbigh, North Wales, and partly in that of Maylor, union of Wrexham, county of Flint; 5 miles north-west of Ellesmere, on the river Dee. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; gross income £271. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £3 per annum, besides the privilege of occupying one of the Ruabon almshouses. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 1s. Houses 66. A. P. £730. Pop., in 1831, 398.

ERCALL (CHILD'S). See CHILD'S ERCALL.

ERCALL (MAGNA), or HIGH ERCALL, a parish in Wellington division of the hund. of South Bradford, union of Wellington, county of Salop; 6 miles north-west of Wellington, and east of the river Roden. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £17 6s. 8d.; gross income £290. Tithes of Erccall, Walton, Cotwall, Moorton, and Osbaston, commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £107 18s. 3d. vicarial; and of Crudington and Sleaf, aggregate amount £6. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Darlington. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with land producing £100 per annum: other charities, in 1830, £102 12s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £617 2s. Acres 11,780. Houses 363. A. P. £14,210. Pop., in 1801, 1,091; in 1831, 2,048.

ERDSBURY—formerly OSERRY—in the parish of Chilvers-Coton, hund. of Hemlingford, county of Warwick; 2 miles west of Nuneaton. “Ralph de Sudley, temp. Henry II., built and endowed here a priory of the order of St. Austin, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Herein, about the time of the suppression, were a prior and about six or seven canons, whose yearly income was rated at £94 6s. 1d. Dugd.; £122 8s. 6d. Speed. The site and demesnes were granted, 30th Henry VIII., to Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk.”—Tanner's Not. Mon.

ERDINGTON. See ASTON, in Warwickshire.

ERISWELL, a parish in the hund. of Lackford, union of Mildenhall, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles north-north-east of Mildenhall. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 6s. 8d.; gross income £540. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £640 18s. 11d. Patron, in 1835, J. B. Evans, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1829, £4 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £360 2s. Acres 6,620. Houses 56. A. P. £1,839. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 403.

ERITH, a parish in the hund. of Lessness, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Dartford, county of Kent; 2½ miles north of Crayford, on the banks of the Thames. Acres 3,860. Houses 265. A. P. £8,968. Pop., in 1801, 969; in 1831, 1,533. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £9 12s. 6d.; gross income £426. Patron, in 1835, Lord Wynford. The church is an ancient structure, one side of which is covered with ivy.

The Baptists have a chapel here, founded in 1799; and there are 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £7 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £612 15s. This place is said to derive its name from the Saxon Ærre-hythe,—or 'old haven.' East Indiamen coming up the river frequently stop here, and discharge part of their cargo, and, in connexion with the custom-house, there is an establishment of a surveyor and two watermen, who have charge of the haven formed here by the river Thames. Here stood the abbey of Lessness, founded in 1178 by Lord-chief-justice Lacy: it was subsequently given to Cardinal Wolsey. Belvidere-house, the seat of Lord Eardley, is situated on the brow of a hill, and commands an extensive prospect. The apartments are elegantly fitted up, and the grounds are beautifully wooded and laid out.

ERME (ST.), a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of Truro, county of Cornwall: $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Truro. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £492. Patron, in 1835, E. W. W. Pendarvis. The ancient church was taken down in 1819, and rebuilt. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 4s. Fairs are held on Thursday after April 7th, and Thursday after November 4th. Acres 3,780. Houses 107. A. P. £2,935. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 586.

ERME (THE), a river which rises about 5 miles from Brent in Dartmoor, Devonshire, and, flowing south by Ermington, falls into the English channel, 5 miles south-south-west of Modbury.

ERMING-STREET. See CASTOR.

ERMINGTON HUNDRED, in the western extremity of the county of Devon. Area 51,610 acres. Houses 1,835. Pop., in 1831, 10,524.

ERMINGTON, a parish in the above hund., union of Plympton, St. Mary, county of Devon; 2 miles north-west by north of Modbury, on the Erme river. Living, a vicarage and sinecure rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; the former rated at £33 11s. 3d.; gross income £411: the latter at £24; gross income £556. Patrons, in 1835, the Crown, and J. B. Cholwich, Esq. There are three daily schools here. Charities, in 1820, £30 6s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £573 6s. Two cattle fairs are held here, February 2d, and June 23d. Formerly this place had a market. In 1838 there were two woollen-mills, employing 57 hands, within this parish. Risdon relates that in the year 1623, a meteoric stone* of 27lbs. weight, fell with a great noise in the lordship of Streteleigh in this parish: he describes it as being like a stone half burnt for lime. It was buried a yard deep in the ground of an orchard, near some men who were planting trees: it measured $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet by 2 $\frac{1}{2}$, and was $\frac{1}{2}$ foot thick. Acres 4,920. Houses 233. A. P. £8,984. Pop., in 1801, 917; in 1831, 1,471.

ERNEY (ST.) See LANDRAKE WITH ST. ERNEY.

ERNESBY. See ARNESBY, Leicestershire.

ERPINGHAM (NORTH) HUNDRED, of the county of Norfolk, on the sea-coast from Munsley beyond Cromer. Area 35,770 acres. Houses 2,018. Pop., in 1831, 10,160. The workhouse for the union of Erpingham has been enlarged by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £836. The Erpingham poor-law union comprehends 49 parishes, embracing an area of 104 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 21,034. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,534. Expenditure in 1838, £8,963; in 1839, £9,547 19s.

ERPINGHAM (SOUTH) HUNDRED, in the south-east quarter of the same county. Area 50,760 acres. Houses 2,994. Pop., in 1831, 14,898.

ERPINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of South Erpingham, union of Aylesham, county of Norfolk; 3 miles north-north-east of Aylesham, on the river Bure. Living, a rectory annexed to the vicarage of Blickling. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £474 6s. 1d. Here are 2 daily schools. This place gives name to the Erpingham family. Acres 1,350. Houses 86. A. P. £1,697. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 434. Poor rates, in 1838, £248 18s.

ERRINGDEN, a township in the parish of Halifax, west riding of the county of York; 7 miles west of Halifax, and near the York and Manchester railway. Here are 2 Sunday schools, one of which is a National school. Acres 2,980. Houses 324. A. P. £2,532. Pop., in 1801, 1,313; in 1831, 1,933. Poor rates, in 1838, £436 2s.

ERTH (ST.), a parish in the east division of the hund. of Penwith, union of Penzance, county of Cornwall; 4 miles north-east of Marazion, near St. Ives bay. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £14 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £300. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter. There are here a chapel for Wesleyan Methodists; and 5 daily schools, one of which has an endowment of £7 2s. 6d. for the education of 6 children: other charities, in 1836, £1 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £458 15s. Acres 3,050. Houses 346. A. P. £4,708. Pop., in 1801, 1,122; in 1831, 1,922.

ERVAN (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb Major, county of Cornwall; 4 miles south-south-west of Padstow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £18 6s. 8d.; gross income £466. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Molesworth, Bart. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 3,110. Houses 90. A. P. £2,812. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 453. Poor rates, in 1838, £228 15s.

ERWARTON, or ARWERTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Samford, county of Suffolk; 8 miles south-south-east of Ipswich, on the northern bank of the Stour. Living, a rectory, with that of Woolverstone, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10 13s. 4d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. D. Berners. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 870. Houses 36. A. P. £1,450. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 3s.

ERWASH (THE). See NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

ERWYRYS, a township in the parish of Llanarmon, county of Denbigh, North Wales, situated on the river Alun, about 4 miles east of Ruthin. Pop., in 1801, 908; in 1821, 649. Other returns with the parish.

ERYHOLME, a chapelry in the parish of Gilling, north riding of Yorkshire, situated on the banks of the Tees; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Darlington, and near the Great North of England railway. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of

* The attention of the learned world was first called to the subject of the extraordinary phenomena of falling stones, by one which was said to have fallen in Yorkshire in 1795, and was exhibited in London. Sir Joseph Banks having received fragments of a stone which was said to have fallen in India, proposed that they should be analyzed and compared. They proved to be similar, and of very peculiar ingredients, containing, among others, iron and nickel. Inquiry was called forth: the records of such occurrences in various parts of the world were sought for, and there is no longer any doubt that these stones, or meteoric masses, have fallen from the atmosphere. Various attempts have been made to explain this singular and not unfrequent phenomenon: it has even been supposed that the stones are projected from the moon; but the most feasible idea is that they are formed within our own atmosphere.

Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £55. Patron, the vicar of Gilling. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,790. Houses 35. A. P. £3,708. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 172. Poor rates, in 1838, £107 2s.

ESCLUSHAM (ABOVE), a township in the parish of Wrexham, county of Denbigh, North Wales; about 5 miles south-west of Holt. Houses 104. A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1801, 327; in 1831, 349. Poor rates, in 1838, £175 17s.

ESCLUSHAM (BELOW), a township in the above parish and county. There is a daily school here. Houses 113. A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1801, 485; in 1831, 570. Poor rates, in 1838, £249 17s.

ESCOMBE, a parochial chapelry in the north-west division of Darlington ward, co.-palatine of Durham; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-north-west of Bishop-Auckland, on the southern bank of the river Wear, and intersected by the Auckland and Weardale railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham; gross income £90. By order in council, of 21st June, 1837, this sum has been increased to £120. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The church was formerly prebendal to Auckland college, but Bishop Fox annexed it to the deanery in 1501. Here is a daily school. Acres 840. Houses 61. A. P. £834. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 282. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 12s.

ESCRICK, a parish comprising the townships of Deighton and Escrick, in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent, union of York, east riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-south-east of York, on a branch of the Derwent. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £23 3s. 9d.; gross income £530. Patron, in 1835, P. B. Thompson. Here are a day and Sunday National school and 2 infant schools. Charities, in 1823, £30 1s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £286 6s. Acres 6,400. Houses 144. A. P. £6,218. Pop., in 1801, 578; in 1831, 896.

ESH, a chapelry in the parish of Lanchester, co.-palatine of Durham; 5 miles west-north-west of Durham, and south of the river Wear. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham; gross income £65. By order in council of 21st June, 1837, this sum has been increased to £125. Patron, the curate of Lanchester. In the village there are a Roman Catholic chapel; and 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 a-year, by Sir E. J. Smythe, Bart. Here is also a seminary for the education of the Roman Catholic youth, called Ushaw college—a handsome and splendid edifice, which contains 130 students, besides professors, &c. Acres 2,910. Houses 72. A. P. £2,418. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 486.

ESHER, a parish partly in the hund. of Kingston, but chiefly in the second division of the hund. of Elmbridge, union of Kingston, county of Surrey; $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Guildford, on the road from London to Portsmouth, and east of the river Mole. The parish is intersected by the Northampton railway. The town is 13 miles distant by railway from London. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 18s. 4d.; gross income £452. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Wadham college, Oxford. Here are 4 daily schools, and an endowed Sunday school, with a lending library attached. Charities, in 1823, £39 17s. 11d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £559 11s. In the reign of Henry II. a priory was founded at Sandon in this parish; it was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and in 1436 was annexed to the hospital of St. Thomas, Southwark; the site of it is now called Sandon farm. Here are situated the mansions of Claremont and Esher place, the former built for the celebrated Lord Clive, the conqueror of India, and purchased for Leopold, prince of Coburg, on his marriage with the late Princess Charlotte of Wales, in 1816. Esher-place is a splendid Gothic structure. It was occupied by Cardinal Wolsey when bishop of Winchester, and was also his retreat when disgraced by his capricious sovereign. It now belongs to the Pelham family. Fairs are held at Esher on Old Bartholomew-day, and September 4th, for horses. Acres 2,120. Houses 213. A. P. £6,080. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 1,215.

ESHOLT, or ESSEHOLT, a township in the parish of Otley, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-south-west of Otley, on the river Aire, and intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There are 2 daily schools here. The site of a small Cistercian nunnery here is now occupied by a splendid mansion called Esholt hall. Acres 810. Houses 69. A. P. with Hawksworth. Pop., in 1821, 355; in 1831, 404. Poor rates, in 1838, £98 2s.

ESHOT, a township in the parish of Felton, Northumberland; 8 miles north-west of Morpeth, and south of the Cocket river. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 24. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 132. Poor rates, in 1838, £89 10s.

ESHTON, a township in the parish of Gargrave, west riding of the county of York; 5 miles north-west of Skipton. Acreage with Gargrave. Houses 12. A. P. £1,372. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £40.

ESK (THE), from Scotland, a river which enters Cumberland at a place called the Moat, where it is joined by the Liddel, another river from Scotland, which borders Cumberland from its junction with the Kershope river or burn at Kershope foot: the Esk then flows past Netherby and Longtown to its junction with the Line—another river of Cumberland—near the Solway Firth, where it flows into the estuary common to it with the Eden.

ESK (THE), a small river of Cumberland, rising in the Sea Fell by several sources which unite near Eskdale: it flows past Underbank to Ravenglass, where it falls into an estuary common to it with the Mite.

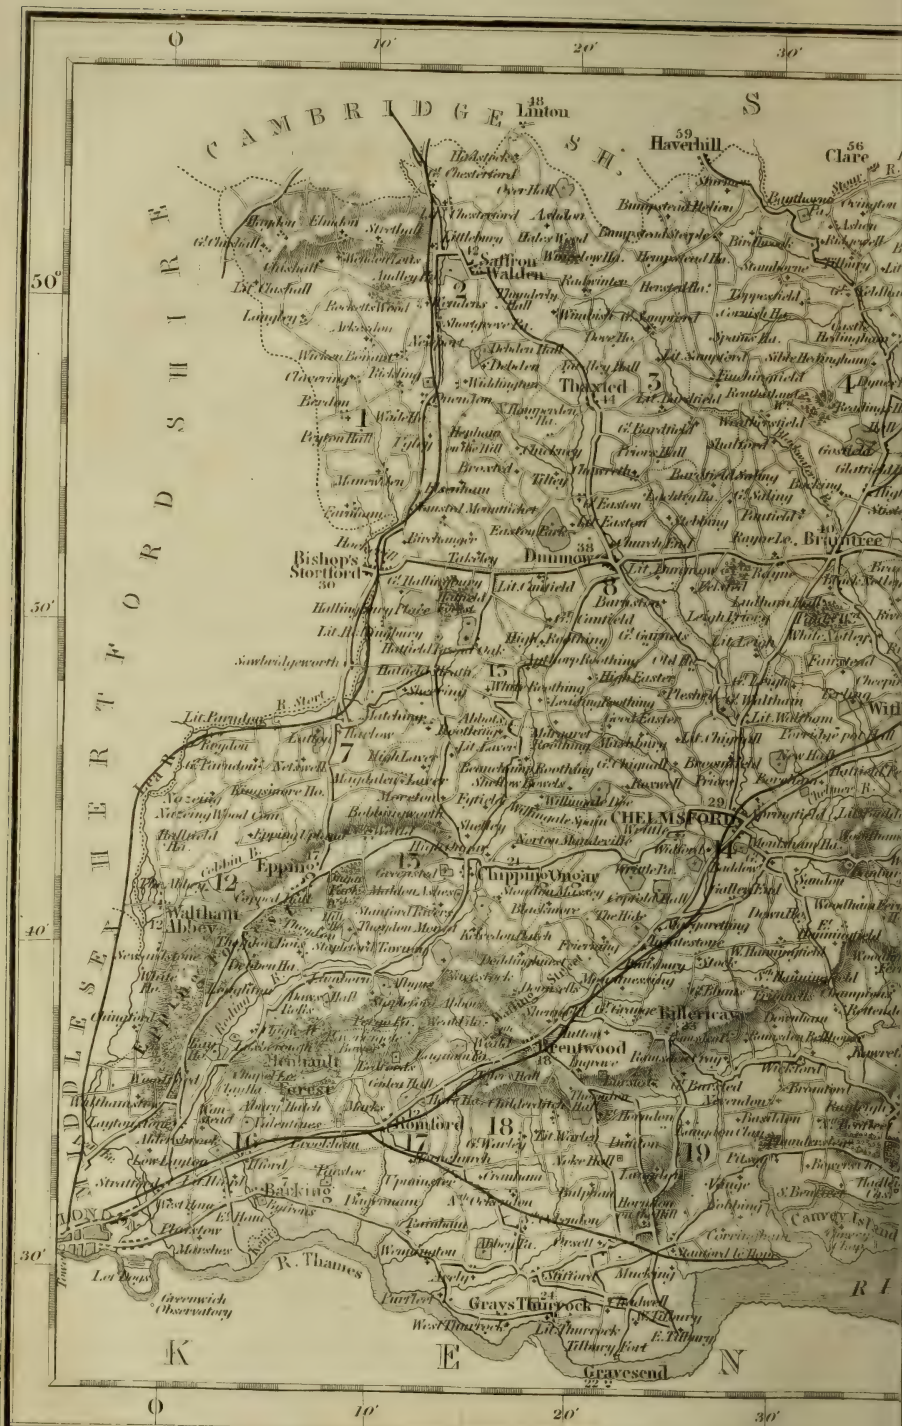

ESKDALE WARD, in the eastern division of Cumberland. Area 204,120 acres. Houses 4,161. Pop., in 1831, 23,991.

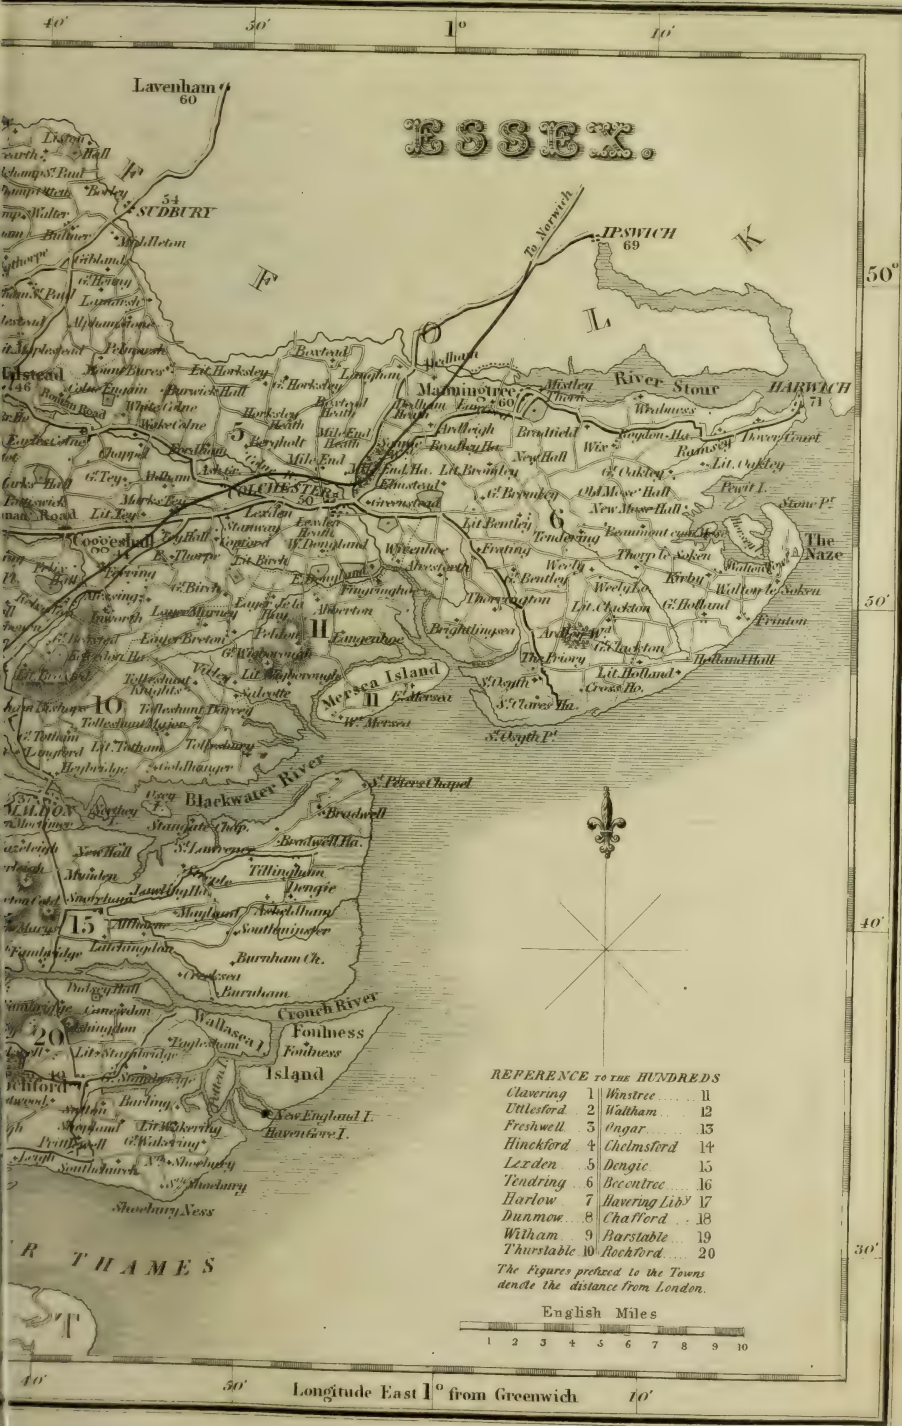

ESKDALE AND WASDALE, a chapelry in the parish of St. Bees, county of Cumberland; 7 miles north-east by east of Ravenglass, on the river Esk. It includes the township of Wasdale-Head. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, E. Stanley, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with the interest of £138. Acreage with the parish. Houses 57. A. P. £1,239. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 354. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 4s.

ESKDALE-SIDE, a township and chapelry in the parish of Whitby, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Whitby, intersected by the Pickering and Whitby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Ugglebarnby, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; gross income £333. Patron, in 1835, J. Walker, Esq. Here is a daily school. Eskdale-side forms part of a beautiful valley on the river Esk. Acres 4,150. Houses 71. A. P. £1,491. Pop., in 1801, 344; in 1831, 277. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 2s.

ESKE (THE), a river of Yorkshire, which rises by many sources, in the centre of the eastern Moorland dales, and flowing eastward, is joined by various other streams until it falls into the North sea at Whitby, which it divides into two nearly equal parts, connected by a drawbridge. The spring-tide ries at this place from 14 to 20 feet, and the neap-tides from 9 to 12. On 17th July, 1761, they rose and fell here 4 times in less than 30 minutes.

ESKE, a township in the parish of St. John Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by north of Beverley, on the eastern bank of the river Hull. Acres 1,130. Houses 2. A. P. £1,575. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 17. Poor rates, in 1838 £15.

ESKLE (THE), a river in Hertfordshire, which falls into the Monnow, near Landtown.

ESPERSHIELDS AND MILLSHIELD, a township in the parish of Bywell St. Peter, Northumberland; 7 miles south-west by south of Bywell, on the northern bank of the Derwent. Here is a daily school. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 33. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1838, £10 6s.

ESSENDINE, a parish in the hund. of East, union of Stamford, county of Rutland; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Stamford. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Ryhall. Acres 1,440. Houses 31. A. P. £1,872. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £48.

ESSENDON, a parish in the hund. of Hertford, union of Hatfield, county of Herts; 3 miles east of Hatfield, on the river Lea. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Bayford annexed, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £18; gross income £550. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Salisbury. Here is a daily school, and also an infant school on the national system. Charities, in 1834, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 15s. Acres 2,170. Houses 127. A. P. £2,728. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 672.

ESSEX,

A maritime county on the eastern coast of England; bounded on the north by Suffolk, from which it is divided by the river Stour; and by Cambridgeshire; on the west by Hertfordshire and Middlesex, from which it is separated by the rivers Stort and Lea; on the south by Kent, from which it is separated by the river Thames; and on the east by the German ocean. It is of an irregular four-sided form, about 225 miles in circumference, 60 miles in extent from east to west, and 50 from north to south: area 979,000 acres. According to the ordnance map it contains only 942,720 acres: its area is estimated, in the highway returns, at 1,533 square miles; in the returns of poor rates at 976,000 acres. About 15,000 acres, including forests, are reckoned waste lands. Houses 57,152. A. P. £1,556,836. Pop., in 1801, 226,437; in 1831, 317,200, consisting of 65,319 families, of whom 34,589 were chiefly employed in agriculture, 18,282 in manufactures, trade, &c., and 12,448 otherwise occupied.

Natural divisions, coasts, &c.—The natural divisions of this district may be noticed as continent and islands, there being a number of the latter, though they are not extensive. They border partly on the German ocean and partly on the Thames. The island of Mersea, or Mersey, is the most valuable: it lies in the estuary or bay formed between the rivers Colne and Blackwater, about 10 miles south of Colchester. Those of Foulness, Wallasea, Potten, Havengore, and New England, are contiguous to each other, and form a kind of broken promontory in the German ocean between the rivers Crouch and Thames: they are comprehended in the civil division of the hundred of Rochford. Canvey Isle is situated to the south-west of these, near the mouth of the Thames, and is surrounded by arms of that river. There are also various minor islands, the principal of which are Horsey on the north-eastern coast, and Northey and Osey at the mouth of the Blackwater. It is from the violent action of the sea that the coasts of Essex have been thus broken into islands, promontories, and peninsulas. The effect of the waves is particularly evident at Naze tower near Walton, which formerly extended much farther to the east than at present. The ruins of buildings have been discovered at considerable distances from the land; and a shoal, called West Rock, is 5 miles off the shore. The sea also encroaches on the coast between the Blackwater and the Crouch. The coast is so irregular and broken that it is difficult to estimate the exact length of it; but without reckoning the estuaries, the length is about 105 miles from the mouth of the Lea in the Thames, to the mouth of the Stour at the port of Harwich. The coast, except to a trifling extent at Harwich, Southend, and Purfleet, is protected from further invasions of the sea by strong embankments, by which extensive and valuable salt marshes have been retained.

Civil and Ecclesiastical divisions, &c.—The county is politically divided into North and South Essex. Of 14 hundreds, 5 half hundreds, and 1 royal liberty, into which it is subdivided, the northern division comprises the hundreds of Uttlesford, Huckford, Lexden, Tendring, Winstree, Thurstable, Witham, and Dunmow, and the half hundreds of Clavering, and Freshwell; the southern, the hundreds of Ongar, Chefford, Barstable, Chelmsford, Dengie, and Rochford, the half hundreds of Harlow, Waltham, Becontree, and the royal liberty of Havering. Each division sends 2 members to parliament. The polling-places in the northern division are at Braintree, Tendring, Colchester, and Saffron Walden, the principal place of election being at Braintree: those in the southern division are at Chelmsford, Billericay, Romford, and Epping, the principal place of election being at Chelmsford. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was 11,446: the number who actually polled for the southern division at the general election, in 1837, was 3,933, out of a total of 5,236. In the northern division there are 2 boroughs, each returning 2 members, namely, Harwich, in Tendring hundred, and Colchester, in Lexden hundred: in the southern, 1 returning 2 members, namely, Maldon, in Dengie hundred. Previous to 1832, this county returned 2 members, with 2 each for the same boroughs. Essex is in the home circuit: the assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Chelmsford, where the shire hall and the old county jail are situated: the new county jail is at Springfield, about a mile from the town. The total income of county rates, in 1801, was £12,650; expenditure on jails, £862; on prisoners with prosecutions, £4,639; on constables and vagrants, £639; on bridges, £1,225: total expenditure £11,187: in 1831, the accounts were defective; but the total income was supposed to be £23,887: expenditure on jails, £3,083; on prisoners with prosecutions, £13,204; on constables and vagrants, £1,869; on bridges, £1,690: total expenditure, £23,887: in 1838, the total income was £23,714: expenditure on jails, £944; on prisoners with prosecutions, £10,638; on constables and vagrants, £536; on bridges, £329: total expenditure £17,579.

Essex is in the diocese of London and province of Canterbury; but the ecclesiastical commissioners have proposed to transfer it, with the exception of several parishes, to the diocese of Rochester. It comprises the archdeaconries of Essex and Colchester, and part of that of Middlesex. The archdeaconry of Essex contains the deaneries of Barstable, Barking, Chafford, Chelmsford, Dengie, Ongar, and Rochford;—that of Colchester the deaneries of Colchester, Lexden, Newport, Sandford, Tendring, and Witham; and that portion of the archdeaconry of Middlesex, which is in this county, those of Dunmow, Harlow, and Hedingham. There are 400 parishes and townships in the county, besides parts of 4 other parishes. Morant, and Wright, in their histories of Essex, give the number of churches and chapels as follows:—In the archdeaconry of Essex 175; in that of Colchester 161; and in that of Middlesex 83. The total amount of church rates, received for 1831–2, was £19,207; for 1838–9, £16,473, with nearly an equivalent expenditure. Besides numerous Independent and other dissenting places of worship, there are 7 Roman Catholic chapels in this county. The poor rate returns for 3 years to Easter 1750, show an average expenditure of £38,233 on the poor of this county; for 1803, an expenditure of £184,428; for 1813, an expenditure of £325,219; for 1821, an expenditure of £288,921; since which period the expenditure on the poor has gradually decreased to £152,318, in 1838. In 1835, there were 1,075 daily schools, attended by 30,605 children; 88 infant schools, and 438 Sunday schools, including 32,032 children.

The chief market towns in this county, are Colchester, Coggeshall, Witham, Maldon, Chelmsford, Romford, Epping, Walden, Braintree, and Halstead: others are Barking, Billericay, Brentwood, Chipping-Ongar, Dunmow, Gray's Thurrock, Harwich, Manningtree, Rayleigh, Rochford, Thaxted, and Waltham-Abbey; besides Bradfield, Dedham, and Horn-don, the markets for which are disused: in all there are 25 towns in this county, usually called market towns, though some of them are small and of little importance.

Rivers.—Besides the Thames, the Stour, the Lea, and the Stort—which see—as they only bound the county, the principal rivers are the Colne, the Blackwater, the Chelmer, the Crouch, the Roding, the Ingerbourn, and the Cam. The Colne rises near Redgwell, in the north-western part of the county, and runs south-east, passing in its course by Hedingham, Halstead, the Colnes, and Colchester; after which it receives two considerable brooks from the vicinity of Fingrinhon and Brightlingsea, and discharges itself into the sea, between St. Osith and the isle of Mersey, about 8 miles below Colchester, to the harbour of which town it is navigable for vessels about 150 tons burthen; and for those of greater tonnage to Wivenhoe, about 5 miles from the sea. The Blackwater rises in the north-west, near Saffron-Walden, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, and flows south-eastwards by Radwinter, Great Bardfield, Bocking, Coggeshall, Kelvedon, and Wickham mills, receiving the influx of the Pant, a small stream, which rises near Shalford, and various others, in its course; and being joined by the Chelmer at Maldon, both together enter the wide estuary called Blackwater bay, and the sea, between Mersey and Bradwell. The Chelmer rises also in the north-west near Thaxted, and running south-east by Dunmow, Waltham, &c., passes Chelmsford, where, being joined by the Cam and other smaller streams, it proceeds eastwards to Maldon, where it joins the Blackwater, the estuary of which extends 12 miles into the country, while the navigation has been further extended to Chelmsford. The Crouch flows from two springs in Little Burgsted and Landon, and running east divides the hundreds of Rochford and Dengie, and partly those of Barstable and Chelmsford, passing Wickford, and Hullbridge, where it is navigable at high water: it then flows by Criksey and Burnham, to the sea at Foulness. It is tidal for 16 miles. The Roding rises in the central part of the county near Dunmow: passing southward through an extensive tract to which it gives the name of the Rod-ings, it turns to the west at Chipping Ongar, in Epping Forest, and again to the east by Wanstead; then winding through a pleasant vale, adorned with fine villages and splendid mansions, it flows through a level district, by Ilford, to which it has been rendered navigable, and Barking, to the Thames at Barking Reach near East Ham, 7 miles from London. The Ingerbourn is a small stream rising south-east of Stapleford Abbots, and, winding south to Upminster, flows thence to Rainham, and falls into the Thames at Earith Reach. The Cam is composed of two branches, one of which rises on the borders of Bedfordshire; the other, bearing the classic name of the Granta, rises at Quendon, and flowing northwards through the highly ornamented grounds of Audley End, Chesterford, and Icardun, hastens, with its sister stream, to Cambridge. All the Essex rivers, except the Crouch and other minor streams, have their sources in the north-west and highest part of the county; thence diverging to various points as already described. Numerous brooks and rivulets add to the beauty and fertility of almost every parish in this county.

Canal and other inland navigation.—In a county termed, with propriety, maritime, it could not be expected that much occasion would be found for canals, even before the prospective or partial introduction of railways; yet some works of this kind have been constructed, communicating with the metropolis, and considerable river navigations have been formed which have been highly beneficial to trade and commerce. The Stour is navigable to Sudbury, 30 miles above Harwich. The Thames is navigable throughout that part of its course which bounds this county; and,—besides the navigation of the Colne, to Colchester;—of the Blackwater, and Chelmer, to Chelmsford,—with a canal running from opposite Northey isle to Heybridge;—and of the Crouch, to Hull bridge for large vessels;—a canal navigation has been formed between the Thames, the Lea, and the Stort—though this may be said to belong more to Middlesex than to Essex—whereby the Lea is made navigable throughout that part of its course which is connected with this county, and the Stort, from Bishop Stortford to its junction with the Lea. A navigable canal from the former, along the valley of the Cam, to the navigable portion of that river near Cambridge, thus uniting the Thames and the Lea with the Ouse and the Cam, was projected and authorized by act of parliament, so long ago as 1812–14; but has not yet been accomplished.

Roads.—The principal of these are the roads from London to Harwich and to Newmarket: they enter this county together, by crossing the Lea river, at Stratford-le-Bow, and proceeding to Stratford, the Newmarket road branches off through Epping to the Stort, north of Bromley, where it quits this county, but re-enters it by again crossing the Stort near Bishop-Stortford: it then runs through Newport, Littlebury, and Chesterford, north of which it finally quits the county. The Harwich road runs through Romford, Brentwood, Chelmsford, Witham, and Colchester, by Manningtree to Harwich. Chelmsford, Colchester, &c., are united, by other principal roads, with Braintree, Halstead, Dunmow, &c., and the adjoining counties; and otherwise this county is completely interlaced with roads in every direction. This county, from its comparatively even surface and the nature of its soils, is well adapted, with suitable materials, to the formation of good roads; and these advantages have been so well improved, that it may safely be asserted no better roads are to be found in England. They are particularly excellent through Tendring hundred, and incomparably so in that of Dengie. The highway returns for 3 years, ending 1814, show an average total expenditure of £51,460 on 320 miles of paved streets and turnpike roads, and 2,813 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages: the returns of turnpike trusts for 1836, a total expenditure of £33,462 10s. 6d. by 11 turnpike trusts in this county: and the highway returns for 1839, an expenditure of £31,669 on 3,113 miles of road.

Railways.—It is considered that the partial introduction of railways into Essex, is already opening up a new and important era in its history. The Eastern Counties railway was first projected in 1833, or 1834; but it was not till 4th July, 1836, that an act was procured to make a line of railway from Shoreditch through Ilford, Romford, Chelmsford, Colchester, Ipswich, and Norwich, to Yarmouth. The original capital of the company was to be £1,600,000, and they had an additional power of raising by mortgages a further sum of £533,300. During the progress of the railway, however, from the London terminus to Colchester, in 1840, an estimate of the entire cost of that part of the line alone amounted to £2,137,143 0s. 6d. In the half yearly report of the engineer, dated 22d February, 1840, an act of liberality connected with the expense of this railway is stated, no less noble in itself than honourable to the individual by whom it was performed: we allude to the voluntary relinquishment of a sum of £15,000 due to the Right Hon. Henry Labouchere, by the company, for possession of a certain portion of his estate at Hylands in this county. On 18th June, 1839, a portion of this line of railway was opened from a temporary terminus at Devonshire-street, Mile-end, to Romford, 10½ miles. The line commences on a viaduct at Shoreditch, about 21 feet from the level of the ground, containing several archways or bridges faced with stone, which gives them a handsome and imposing character: such are Charles-street bridge, and the bridge over Devonshire-street adjoining the site of the temporary station: this last bridge is oblique. There are several iron bridges of considerable span and great obliquity, and of a plain and handsome character. The line passes over the Regent canal by an iron bridge. The Lea bridge is elliptical, the span being 70 feet, and the rise only ¼ or 17½ feet. In the progress of this work considerable difficulties arose from want of solidity in the under strata. The Stratford marshes were with similar difficulties passed over by an embankment. Here are numerous bridges over the intersected streams and rivers. The Stratford viaduct is of 5 arches, each 36 feet span. The Stratford station is in the style of a plain Italian villa, with extensive and commodious waiting-rooms, &c. Cuttings from 10 to 20 feet, over which are numerous bridges, now continue nearly to Ilford. Leytonstone turnpike road bridge, one of these, has a width of roadway over it of 50 feet. The Roding or Ilford valley is crossed by an embankment about 20 feet high, with bridges over the Aldersbrook and Roding, each 40 feet in span. The Ilford station is of a pleasing character, with extensive accommodation for the public: the approach to it is in the centre of the town. The great Essex road is crossed by a tunnel or archway, 130 feet long and 28 wide: the side walls or abutments are of brick-work, on which are laid iron girders, with broad iron flanges cast on their lower part, from which small arches are turned, carrying the turnpike road above: there are also extensive wing walls sustaining the embankment forming the approaches to this tunnel-bridge. Farther onwards the railway passes below the large stream, called the Seven Kings' brook: this is ingeniously got over by constructing culverts with immense iron pipes, similar to a syphon tube, through which the water is passed. The railway then passes under several bridges to a level where there are Coke sheds, &c., and thence, on an embankment to Romford, passing over the river Rom by an elliptical arched bridge, in 32 feet embankment, and of suitable strength. On 3d June, 1840, having reached its terminus in Shoreditch, the line was further opened thence throughout to Brentwood, a distance of 18 miles. A projected railway from THAMES-HAVEN—which see—joins the eastern counties railway at Romford; and a projected railway from Harwich joins it near Colchester. The northern and eastern railway from Cambridge to London, now in progress from London to Stratford, and to be opened to Broxbourne in August 1840, enters this county by crossing the river Lea to the north-east of Broxbourne, and running nearly in the line of the New-market road, near to Bishop-Stortford, and by Newport, Littlebury, and Chesterford, quits the county near the junction of the New-market road with the road from Cambridge. In the event of the Eastern Counties railway not being continued further than Colchester, it has been proposed to extend this railway to Norwich.

Physical aspect, climate, &c.—Essex composes part of that tract of country on the eastern side of England which forms the largest connected space of level ground in the whole island; not one lofty eminence or rocky ridge being found in several contiguous counties. The surface of Essex is not, however, totally flat; having many gentle hills and dales; and towards the north-west, whence most of the rivers proceed, the country rises and presents a continued inequality of surface. The most level tracts are those of the southern and eastern hundreds. Extensive salt-marshes border most of the coast, the greater part of which, as already observed, is protected by embankments. The banks of the Thames, and the lower parts near the sea, are likewise low and marshy. The hundreds of Essex, on the south coast, are proverbially unhealthy from their being exposed to the easterly winds and sea fogs, which, together with the unwholesome exhalations from the marshes, and the constant dampness, give rise to intermittent fevers and other diseases; but the middle and northern districts are justly noted for a wholesome, clear air, and a fine dry soil. From the Registrar-General's abstract of the causes of death in various counties and districts in England, we find, that the relative proportions of those most prevalent in this county, for the half year, from July 1st to December 31st, 1837, are:—

		Males.	Females.	Total.
Diseases of respiratory organs	Consumption	160	205	749
	Decline	85	108
	Pneumonia	62	50
	All others	45	34
Epidemic, Endemic, and Contagious diseases
Nervous diseases		252	240	492
Old age		220	199	419
Diseases of digestive organs		157	149	306
Violence		66	67	133
		33	13	46

This county presents an ever-varying and pleasing succession of rural landscapes, bordering its numerous rivers, which flow beside villages as picturesque, and residences of noblemen and wealthy citizens as princely, as any to be found in the kingdom. The finest scenery is in the liberty of Havering. The road and railway from Romford to Brentwood exhibit highly beautiful and attractive views. In this district a perpetual variety is presented: it is in many parts thickly wooded, with much fine timber: gentlemen's houses, ornamental plantations, and rich meadow-ground, are seen in every direction. The most extensive view in Essex is from the brow of Langdon, which is believed to present the finest prospect in England. "The ascent, on the northern side of this eminence," observes Thomas Wright, Esq. of Trinity college, Cambridge, in his splendid history of Essex, published in 1836, "is gradual and easy; but on the south-south-east, and south-west, the traveller is astonished at the descent before him, which exhibits a very beautiful and extensive scene, with London to the right, the Thames winding through the vale, and to the left the river Medway. Mr. Young, in his southern tour, gives us the following animated description:—"On the summit of a vast hill, one of the most astonishing prospects to behold, breaks out almost at once upon one of the dark lanes. Such a prodigious valley, everywhere painted with the finest verdure, and intersected with numberless hedges and woods, appears beneath you, that it is past description;—the Thames winding through it, full of ships, and bounded by the hills of Kent. Nothing can exceed it, unless that which Hannibal exhibited to his disconsolate troops when he bade them behold the glories of the Italian plains!—If ever a turnpike road should lead through this country, I beg you will go and view this enchanting scene, though a journey of 40 miles is necessary for it. I never beheld anything equal to it in the West of England, that region of landscape!" This turnpike road," adds Mr. Wright, "is not now wanting to augment the pleasure of the traveller who may be inclined to gratify a laudable curiosity, and feel the emotions approaching to sublimity which swell the heart when contemplating scenes of immense extent."

Geological character.—Few counties possess less minerals than Essex, which is so nearly exempt from quarries, or any mass of rock, that the houses are almost wholly built of brick.* The London clay extends nearly over all Essex. It has been pierced in various places, and found of great thickness. Geologists have distinguished the district which includes this county as that in which the superior strata rest on chalk. Amongst these superstrata, besides the vegetable mould and the London clay, are found brick-earth, sand, crag, pipe-clay, and the "plastic clay formation." The alternation of fresh water formations with those of marine origin, establish a complete and highly important analogy between the French and English series. The crag is a stratum of sand or gravel, which has obtained the local appellation of the Crag of Suffolk. The north-east coast is covered with this upper marine formation, which, with the enclosed organic remains, often exhibits impregnation with iron. The great argillaceous "London clay" formation is highly interesting from the variety of its organic remains, and the inferences deducible from them. This formation chiefly, and sometimes wholly, consists of bluish or blackish clay, in general very tough, and containing nearly horizontal layers of ovate or flattish masses of argillaceous limestone, termed septaria, from having apparently been traversed by cracks, since partially or wholly filled with calcareous spar, or sulphate of barytes. The septaria on the south of Walton on the coast are very imperfect; but they are collected into heaps and shipped to Harwich, where they are manufactured by government into cement. Dale, in his history of Harwich, speaking of the septaria so abundantly found in the cliffs off that vicinity, says, "with these the walls of the town were for the most part built, and the streets generally pitched; they, by ancient custom, belonging to the town as by right." The long cliff of London clay extending along the Isle of Sheppey, opposite the Essex coast, furnishes abundance of septaria, from which the excellent material for building under water, and for stucco, is made, and which is known under the name of "Parker's Cement."—Geol. Trans. vol. ii. p. 193.—Some mineral waters rise in this county, but few have obtained much repute: that of Tilbury is impregnated with some earthy and muriatic salts.

Soil and produce.—There are great varieties of soil in this county. Every species of loam is found, light gravelly land, and a good share of meadow and marsh ground. On the east and south it is most generally marshy with gravel intermixed: on the west the soils vary from light thin loam upon gravel to tough clay upon brick earth. In the district of the Rodings the soil is strong wet loam. In the northern and central parts there are strong and moist soils, as well as light loam upon marl. The county is on the whole fertile, and possesses some particularly fine land. The greater part is enclosed, and rendered highly productive by the skilful management of the agriculturists. The farmers of Essex are reckoned amongst the best in the kingdom. It is their universal practice to apply to their land chalk, obtained in the north-western parts of the county and in Hertfordshire: great quantities are also sent from Kent; and near Purfleet, on the banks of the Thames, there are chalk-pits. Essex is an arable county. Besides the usual crops, including turnips, potatoes, &c., a considerable quantity of rape seed is reared: mustard, rye-grass, tares, and trefoil are also produced. The cultivation of hops is on the increase: on an average of 7 years to 1835, the number of acres annually devoted to this purpose was 378½, and the quantity produced 177,174 lbs.: the chief localities of the hop gardens were Weathersfield, Hedingham Castle, Halstead, &c. The cultivation of caraway, coriander, and tealz, is peculiar to this county: the tealz, for its prickly heads, is used for the purpose of raising the nap on woollen cloths. These 3 articles are all sown together, in a kind of treble crop, but they come to maturity at different periods, and the succession of the whole crop lasts 3 or 4 years. Saffron Walden even by its name signifies the product for which it has long been famous. Saffron, which was at one time cultivated in various parts of the kingdom, has been ultimately grown almost solely in a circuit of about 10 miles between this place and Cambridge. The variety and goodness of the agricultural products of this county are not exceeded by those of any other part of the kingdom. The average produce of wheat is 24½, barley 33½, oats 36½, beans 27, and pease 20½ bushels per acre. The annual quantity of grain sent to the metropolis was estimated, by Mr. Howlett, at 250,000 quarters of wheat, and 150,000 quarters of malt, besides large quantities of beans, pease, &c., but now the exports considerably exceed these quantities. Beans and pease are of great importance to the Essex farmer, and no land in England is better adapted to their growth: the crops alternate with fallow, barley, or wheat. The finest wheat crops are those sown in September, and the earliest sown are the best. March is the common time for sowing barley, and the culture of oats is much the same as that of barley. The broad-cast sowing is generally preferred to drilling. Turnips, in which the drill husbandry is preferred, are largely cultivated. Potatoes, also, are extensively reared for the London market, in those parts nearest its vicinity; and cabbages are cultivated in almost every part of the county, as food for cattle, sheep, and pigs. Draining, which is so necessary, especially in the marsh districts, is carried on here with great skill; and wheat has, in such cases, been found to return sometimes 30 bushels per acre, and barley between 40 and 50. In the marshy districts osiers are considered a profitable cultivation. The greater part of the county is well wooded: besides the timber growing in the hedge rows, there are about 50,000 acres in wood and woodlands. In the reign of James II., the forest of Essex extended almost over all the county. There are now on the south-west, commencing a few miles from London, two forests, Epping, and Hainault, near each other, but separated by the Roding: these together cover about 10,000 acres, and contain some noble trees.

* Many of them certainly are singular and curious specimens of brick-architecture: in constructing the castles, the monastic buildings, and many of the old mansion-houses, the builders have endeavoured to render them not only durable monuments of their skill; but also examples of their taste, displayed by a variety of ornaments in the cornices, doors, pilasters, and particularly the chimneys. The latter are studiously varied in their shape and workmanship, and are seen with zig-zag grooves running round them, with spiral and with diamond and square grooves, and several other whimsical adornments.

Though this county is not highly celebrated for its dairies, yet those in the parish of Epping and its vicinity have long been famous for the richness of their cream and butter: the latter is mostly sent to London, where it bears a high character and price. Pigs in great numbers are fattened for the London markets on the refuse of the dairies, and otherwise; and Essex is proverbially distinguished for its fattened calves, of which more are reared here than in any other county: they have long been held in high estimation in the London market. Besides those bred in the county, great numbers are brought from other parts of England, principally from Suffolk, as are oxen even from Scotland, and sheep from Sussex, Wiltshire, &c., to fatten. To promote the fattening of the calves, some feeders have been in the habit of preparing a small ball or bolus of about two ounces in weight, composed of the powder of fenugreek, wheat meal, and a small quantity of powdered chalk, blended together with mild ale, and given to the calves morning and evening just before sucking: from its soporific and composing effects, this nutritious opiate has been found to facilitate their fattening; and to whiten the veal: a calf thus managed has been generally rendered fit for market in about 12 weeks. The marsh lands are the principal grazing districts. There is no peculiar breed of horses; but the Suffolk punches seem to be favourites. The farms and estates vary immensely in size; but there are few counties containing so many small and moderate sized farms occupied by their proprietors: some of the rented ones, however, are amongst the largest in the empire.

Trade and manufactures.—Essex derives many advantages from its maritime trade, as well as from its vicinity to the metropolis. The convenience of its water-carriage, and the goodness of its roads, have hitherto given it a commercial superiority over many other counties, which the introduction of railways might now tend to diminish, were not the incalculable and universal benefits to be derived from these about to be conferred on Essex itself. Being peculiarly an agricultural county, its trade consists principally in its vegetable and animal produce. The celebrated oyster fisheries must also be noticed as a branch of trade of some importance. The fisheries of Essex are very productive of oysters: above 30 decked boats, from 8 to 50 tons burden, belonging to the island of Mersey, are almost always at work; and vessels come from Kent to purchase oysters. Sometimes upwards of 150 vessels may be seen at work within sight of Mersey: the number is about 200, employing about 500 hands. The principal breeding rivers are the Crouch—by far the most certain in produce—the Blackwater, and the Colne. The beds or layings are in the adjoining creeks; and from these the stock is supplied to other oyster beds. It is calculated that not less than 15,000 bushels are supplied in a season; and the capital employed in this trade is stated to be from 60 to £80,000. The oysters are taken to London, Hamburgh, Bremen, and, in time of peace, to Holland, France, and Flanders. Some of the inhabitants are employed in other fisheries, and in taking ducks, dun birds, &c., which are very numerous in Mersey isle and elsewhere.

The woollen manufacture was formerly of some importance here, but has continued to decline, and has now ceased to be of any importance. In 1838 there was only one woollen mill in the county, at Little Coggeshall, employing 10 hands. Silk manufactures of different kinds are carried on in several towns. In 1838 there were 7 silk mills, employing 1,441 hands: of these there was one each at Bocking, Braintree, Coggeshall, Colchester, Halstead, Pebmarsh, and Waltham Abbey; at the first five of which places, there are also hand-loom weavers in the trade. The silk weaving, in all, is sent from the manufacturers in Spitalfields; these towns, as far as their silk manufactures are concerned, being thus merely out-posts or dependencies of London. Accounts of the state of hand-loom weaving and other manufactures or trades, will be found under the several towns in which they are carried on. At Gosfield straw-plait manufacture has been introduced by the Marquis and Marchioness of Buckingham, which fully answers the benevolent purposes of contributing to the comfortable subsistence of the poor.

History and Antiquities.—At the time of the Roman invasion, Essex, with all Middlesex, was inhabited by the Trinobantes. That people, as appears from the testimony of ancient authors, possessed two considerable cities or fortified stations: one of them occupied, says Whitaker, “the eminence betwixt the Thames and Fleet-brook,”—the centre of modern London;—the other seems to have been at Colchester in this county. Dissensions among the Trinobantes paved the way to the conquest of Britain by the Romans; Mandubratius, a prince of this nation, having been the first to invite Cæsar to invade the country. For this purpose Mandubratius went to Gaul, and, returning with the Romans, became instrumental, by his influence, to the subjugation of the Britons; the Trinobantes setting the example of submission to the invaders. On the subdivision of Great Britain by Constantine, this county was included in the province termed Flavia Cæsariensis. From the Itinerary of Antoninus, five principal stations appear to have been either formed or occupied by the Romans in this county. These were Duro-litum, Cæsaromagus, Canonium, Camulodunum, and Ad Ansam. These places were all seated on the road which formed the fifth Iter from Londunum to Venta Icenorum. Camulodunum was unquestionably the principal station in Essex, and though its site has been much contested by different writers, an attentive examination of the places assigned by the various disputants, combined with a knowledge of the antiquities discovered in the vicinity of each, will admit little doubt of Colchester being the real situation. Essex formed a separate and distinct kingdom during a certain part of the Saxon heptarchy, and from its situation relative to the other Saxon kingdoms, was called East-Seaxa, a name which the Normans retained with very little alteration, calling it Exsessa or Exsessa, from whence by contraction its present name resulted. “This,” say the editors of the old Mag. Brit., “was the least and weakest of the Saxon kingdoms, which, almost from their first settlement, were ever warring and encroaching one upon another, and so was always a feudatory either to the kingdom of Kent or Mercia, till it was subdued quite by Egbert, and made a province to the West-Saxon kings; yet it bore up the face of a principality for the space of 281 years, and had the following kings:—Uffa, Erkenwine, Sledda, Sebert, Seward, Sigebert I., Sigebert II., Swithelm, Sighere, Sebba, Sigherd, Secfrid, Offa, Selrid, Suthred, conquered by Egbert.—This kingdom was one of the first that embraced Christianity; for King Sebert being nephew to Ethelbert, king of Kent, the first Christian prince of the Saxons in this isle, was so wrought upon by his uncle, that he became a zealous Christian, and among many other pious acts, converted the heathen temples of Diana at London, his chief city, into a cathedral church, of which he made Melitus bishop, and of Apollo at Westminster into a collegiate, dedicating the one to St. Peter, and the other to St. Paul. After the Saxon heptarchy was dissolved, and become a monarchy, we find nothing particularly related in history concerning the inhabitants of this shire, save that when the Danes became formidable for their power, they were said to favour them more than any other part of England. At the Norman conquest, they submitted to the same fate, as other parts did, and continued in their loyalty to the Conqueror's posterity, save that in the reign of King Richard II. they began that terrible insurrection which ended in Wat Tyler's rebellion; but they made some amends for this fault, in rising under Colonel Far and Sir Charles Lucas to support King Charles I.'s interests, and prevent his death, and again under Mr. Thomas Fanshaw, in 1659, to promote King Charles II.'s restoration, though in both these attempts they were disappointed, and showed only their good design."

A Roman road, the line of which is still visible, crossed this county from Colchester to Coggeshall, Dunmow, and Bishop-Stortford. Of the British track-ways, or roads, known to the Saxons by the name of Streets—and, with the Roman roads, by Bede termed stratæ, the principal were Icknield-street, Ryknield-street, Ermyrn-street, the Fosseway, and the Watling-street: several branches appear to have passed through different parts of Essex. Of these, one undoubtedly ran from Londinium, on the Thames, to the British capital of the Trinobantes, Camulodunum; and others, perhaps, led from this place, through the north-western parts of the county, to the Iceni and Cassii. The former has been considered as a branch of the Watling-street. The Roman invaders are supposed to have followed the course of the Watling-street in their progress from the coast towards London; and it is not improbable that this branch might lead them to Camulodunum. In several instances British remains have been found in various parts of Essex in the vicinity of these roads. Formerly there were 12 castles, or fortified edifices, in this county, 4 of which were denominated Royal Castles, as built for national security: these were Colchester, Hadleigh, Langard fort, and Tilbury fort: the other 8 were castellated mansions; but formed for great strength and security. These very formidable fortresses, once the pride of the nobility, and the terror of the peasantry, are now mostly all razed to the ground: the only parts remaining are their high keeps and wide fosses. At Colchester, Hadleigh, Heddingham, and Walden, some parts of the buildings or walls remain. Previous to the dissolution, Essex contained no fewer than 47 religious houses: of these, 2 were mitred abbeys; 6 common abbeys; 22 priories; 3 nunneries; 3 colleges; 2 preceptories of templars; and 9 hospitals. The yearly revenue of these monasteries amounted to £7,500, which, considering the advance in the value of land since that time, was, indeed, a very great sum.

ESSINGTON, a township in the parish of Bushbury, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Wolverhampton, and east of the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £26 10s. 11d. vicarial, and £411 4s. 13d. impropriate. Here is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 111. A. P. £3,619. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 598. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 11s.

ESTIMANER HUNDRED, in the county of Merioneth, North Wales. It is a very mountainous district, watered on the west by the Irish sea. Houses 852. Pop., in 1831, £4,631.

ESTON, a chapelry in the parish of Ormsby, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Guisbrough, and south of the mouth of the Tees. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Ormsby. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £315 19s. 2d. This village stands on the ascent of a detached hill called Barnaby, or Eston-moor, on the summit of which, called Eston-Mab, and commanding an extensive and beautiful prospect, a telegraphic beacon has been erected. Acres 1,870. Houses 70. A. P. £2,152. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 334. Poor rates, in 1838, £97 8s.

ETAL, a township in the parish of Ford, Northumberland; 9 miles north-north-west of Wooler, on the river Till. Here are two schools and a Presbyterian chapel. At the west end of the village are the ruins of Etal castle, built in the reign of Edward I., by Sir Robert Manners.

ETCHELLS, a township, partly in the parish of Northern and partly in that of Stockport, co.-palatine of Chester; 4 miles west-south-west of Stockport. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £135 6s. 9d. Acres 4,120. Houses 245. A. P. £6,421. Pop., in 1801, 1,269; in 1831, 1,443. Poor rates, in 1838, £273 3s.

ETCHILHAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Swanborough, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Devizes, at the source of the Avon. Living, a curacy subordinate to the rectory of All-Cannings. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 3,160. Houses 57. A. P. £2,035. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 270. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 13s.

ETCHINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Henhurst, rape of Hastings, union of Ticehurst, county of Sussex; 6 miles south-east of Wadhurst, on the river Rother. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £11; gross income £530. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of William Clulow, deceased. Here is a daily school. Acres 4,240. Houses 115. A. P. £2,815. Pop., in 1801, 414; in 1831, 631. Poor rates, in 1838, 387 16s.

ETLOE. See AWRE.

ETON, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Stoke, deanery of Burnham, union of Eton, county of Buckingham; 1 mile north of Windsor, and 23 miles west by south of London. Acres 690. Houses 444. A. P. £9,095. Pop., in 1801, 2,026; in 1831, 3,232. Living, a rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and incumbency of the provost of Eton college. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £266 2s. 23d. The church having fallen to decay, public worship is performed in the college chapel. There is also a chapel-of-ease in the town; and, besides the college, there are 5 daily schools, one of which, containing 90 free scholars, was endowed by Mark Antony Porney, with funds producing, in 1832, £153 4s. 4d. per annum: other charities £396 3s. per annum, of which £197 8s. 6d. constituted the income of Baldwin's charity for repairs of bridge, and other wise for benefit of parishioners; and £125 13s. 2d., income of poor's estate. There are also alms-houses not subject to inquiry, as part of Eton college. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,043. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Eton, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Eton poor-law union comprehends 19 parishes, embracing an area of 65 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 18,101. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,964. Expenditure in 1838, £6,382; in 1839, £6,321 5s. The town of Eton is situated in a fertile and salubrious valley, on the northern side of the Thames, opposite to Windsor, with which it is connected by a neat iron-bridge: it consists principally of one narrow street, which is well-paved and lighted, and has of late years been much improved; many of the houses having been rebuilt, and others fitted up in a modern style.

Eton has long been celebrated, or, as Lambard has it, been "notorious for a scوله which King Henry VI. buylded, as he did the kinge's college of Cambridge, wherto, by order of their foundation, this scوله sendeth her ripe fruite. The kinge endowed it withe revennue, but the buildinge was raised for the more part at the charges of William Wanflet, byshop of Wynchester, who, of his proper cost, erected a goodly colledge in Oxford also. It was very liberally endowed at the begynninge; but Edward IV., that followed his pleasure as earnestly as Henry VI., loved virtue dearly, toke bothe from it and the king's college to enryche a college at Windsor castle withall." "The Kynges college of our Lady by Etone besyde Wyndesore," says Tanner, "was founded by King Henry VI., ann. reg. 19, (1446,) for a provost, 10 priests, 4 clerks, 6 choristers, 25 poor grammar-scholars, with a master to teach them, and 25 poor old men. It was valued, 26th Henry VIII., as having in spiritualities £547 7s. 1d., in temporalities £554 5s. 6d., in all £1,101 12s. 7d.; but clear, after prizes and deductions, only £886 12s." The school is divided into upper and lower; and these are subdivided into three classes. Besides the 70 scholars on the foundation, there are a great number of stipendiary pupils, generally 400 or 500, the sons of noblemen. The foundation-scholars are entitled to fellowships and scholarships in King's college, Cambridge, for which there is an annual election; though they are only removed as vacancies occur, which are about 9 in two years. They succeed according to seniority; on three years' residence at college obtain a fellowship; and are superannuated at 19. The fellows of King's college, Cambridge, are altogether elected from the foundation-boys of Eton. For the unsuccessful candidates, there are two scholarships in Merton college, Oxford, where they are called post-masters. These scholarships are of the annual value of between £40 and £50 each. There are likewise three exhibitions at £20 each, for 7 years, at Pembroke college. Almost all the Prime ministers of the last century were 'Eton men.' Sir Robert Walpole and Lord Bolingbroke commenced their animosities, as boys together, at Eton, where, it is recorded, they had "more than one good stand-up fight." Lord Chatham, Lord North, and Charles James Fox, were distinguished as scholars at this ancient seat of learning. In the 17th century, Eton can refer to the names of Bishop Pearson and the poet Waller; Fielding, the poet Gray, the scholar Porson, and Bishop Sherlock, were also 'Eton men.' At a later period Eton can boast of having produced the Duke of Wellington, Mr. Canning, Lord Wellesley, Lord Grenville, Lord Grey, and that fine scholar and philosophical writer, Mr. Hallam.

Eton school consists of two courts or quadrangles, communicating by a beautiful ancient gateway. In the centre of the outer court is a statue of Henry VI. The chapel, formerly called Christopher-hall, is an elegant Gothic structure, resembling, in its style and decorations, the chapel of King's college, Cambridge. The inner court contains apartments for the provost and fellows, and the splendid college library, supposed to be one of the most valuable collections in Europe: it contains some rare MSS.; but it is not generally accessible. The pleasure-grounds on the north-west of the college are very extensive. It appears that the manner in which the boys on the foundation of the college are now lodged not being considered by the provost and fellows of Eton in accordance with the present habits and feelings of society, and being in many respects objectionable, the authorities of the college have determined that extensive alterations shall be forthwith carried into effect, in order that commodious apartments may be provided for sleeping and for study, and likewise for those meals which the boys do not at present take in their college-hall.

The peculiar custom designated the Montem, has long taken place here triennially, on Whit-Tuesday: the object of the ceremony being to collect 'salt-money' from those whom curiosity may have led to the spot. The sum collected has generally been from £600 to £800, and given to the captain or senior scholar on his removal to Cambridge. The origin of this singular custom cannot be satisfactorily ascertained; but has been traced as far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth: when on a visit to the college, she desired to see an account of the ancient ceremonies observed there from the period of its foundation, and was shown a list whereon was described an annual procession of the scholars, who, on these occasions, repeated verses, and gathered money from the public for a dinner—and other purposes. The oldest printed account of the Eton montem—then biennial—is in the 'Public Advertiser,' of 1778:—"On Tuesday, being Whit-Tuesday, the gentlemen of Eton-school went as usual in military procession to Salt-hill. This custom of walking to the hill returns every second year, and generally collects together a great deal of company of all ranks. The king and queen, in their phaeton, met the procession on Arbour-hill, in Slough-road. When they halted, the flag was flourished by the ensign. The boys went, according to custom, round the hill, &c. The parson and clerk were then called, and these temporary ecclesiastics went through the usual Latin service. The collection was an extraordinarily good one, as each of their majesties gave fifty guineas."—It was anciently a custom for the butcher of the college to give, on the election Saturday, a ram—to be hunted by the scholars; but the long runs being considered injurious to the health of the students, the ram was hamstrung and knocked on the head with large clubs in the stable-yard. This barbarous custom was discontinued in 1747, and the ram, killed by the butcher, was ultimately served up in pasties. In 'The Gentleman's Magazine,' for August 1731, is the following notice of the usage:—"Monday, August 2d, was the election at Eton-college, when the scholars, according to custom, hunted a ram, by which the provost and fellows hold a manor." By an act of parliament, passed in the 25th year of Henry VI., no person was allowed to take a lodger within this town without leave of the provost, under a penalty of £10. Formerly it had a market, but it has been discontinued. A fair for horses and cattle, however, is held on Ash-Wednesday.

ETRURIA, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; 1½ mile north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne, intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway and the Grand Trunk canal. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. This village, remarkable for the beauty of its situation and the arrangement of its buildings, is celebrated as the seat of Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., the original inventor of the beautiful description of ware which bears his name. The village itself obtains its name of Etruria, from Mr. Wedgwood's excellent imitations of Etruscan vases. To the same ingenious gentleman's experiments, we are indebted for the invention of several other species of earthenware and porcelain, adapted to various purposes of ornament and use. These, with the Wedgwood or Queen's ware, expanded by the industry and ingenuity of the different manufacturers, into an infinity of forms, for ornament and use, variously painted and embellished, constitute nearly the whole of the present fine English earthenwares and porcelain, which are the source of a very extensive trade, and, considered as objects of national art, industry, and commerce, may be ranked among the most important manufactures in the kingdom.

Etruria was the scene of those improvements through which Mr. Wedgwood brought the Staffordshire pottery wares to a state of perfection. The process observed in the manufacture of porcelain, at the potteries here, is similar to that already described under articles BURSLEM and DERBY,—which see:—the materials are the whitest clays from Cornwall, Devonshire, and Dorsetshire, and ground flint. From this composition the following exquisitely beautiful articles—exclusive of the table ware—have been made:—A black ware, called Basaltes, which receives a glossy polish; will produce fire in collision with steel; will bear the strongest fire without fusion; will resist every acid; and, when applied as a test, will readily distinguish the qualities or species of metals:—A white porcelain biscuit of the finest texture and appearance, called Jasper; taking, from the mixture of metallic calces with its materials, such colours as they communicate to glass in fusion. From this the famous reliefs and cameos are made; the raised parts of fine white, the ground of any colour fancy may suggest:—A cane-coloured biscuit porcelain, called Bamboo; of a smooth, unpolished surface, possessing the same properties as the Basaltes:—A white porcelain biscuit of exactly the same properties and appearance with the last, except the absence of colour:—A terra cotta, which has the beautiful appearance and durability of the Egyptian pebble, granite, and porphyry:—A porcelain biscuit, of a hardness that defies fire, and of a property to resist all acids and corrosives; applied chiefly to the manufacture of chemical vessels.

Wedgwood was the son of a potter: he was the proposer of the Grand Trunk canal, and the chief agent in obtaining the act of parliament for making it, in the face of the prejudices of the landed interest. He acquired a large fortune in his business, and died at Etruria in January 1795, at the age of 64.

ETTERBY, a township in the parish of Stanwix, Cumberland; 1 mile west of Carlisle, and south of the river Eden. Houses 21. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 110. Other returns with the parish.

ETTINGSHALL, a hamlet in the parish of Sedgley, county of Stafford; 3 miles south-south-east of Wolverhampton. A new church, school-house, and parsonage, were erected here in 1838. The church contains 926 sittings: being built over the mines,—see SEDGLEY—it is constructed in half timber, braced together, and painted black and white. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield.

ETTON, a parish in Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Beverley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £29 9s. 4d.; gross income £876. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here is a day and Sunday national school. Acres 3,960. Houses 71. A. P. £3,739. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 407. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 15s.

ETTON WITH WOODCROFT, a parish in the liberty and union of Peterborough, county of Northampton; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Peterborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 9s. 9d.; gross income £400. Patron, Earl Fitzwilliam. Acres 1,270. Houses 22. A. P. £2,425. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £210 10s.

ETWALL, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 6 miles west-south-west of Derby, on a branch of the river Trent. It contains the township of Etwall with Bearward-Cote, and the hamlet of Burnaston. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £8; gross income £380. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Hugh Ker. There is here a very important charity founded by Sir John Port, Knight, in 1556; and comprehending an hospital, or almshouse, and school. The hospital consists of 15 houses of 2 rooms each, and 1 of 3 rooms, inhabited by 16 alms-people, under the superintendence of a master who has a good house about half-a-mile from the hospital, and about £230 per annum; besides the vicarage of Willington in the presentation of the governors of this charity, and worth £82 per annum.

The free school is in the parish of Repton, for teaching the classics and other branches of education to children of parishioners of Repton and Etwall. There are 8 scholars on the foundation: the 4 senior receive £45, and the others £40 a-year for 7 years. They are entitled, on going to either of the universities, to an exhibition of £50 for 4 years, provided there are not more than 2 exhibitions at a time. Besides the 8 scholars on the foundation, the sons of all persons resident in Etwall and Repton are admitted and taught free: in August, 1836, the number of free scholars, including the 8 foundation boys, was 22; and there were between 40 and 50 boarders with the head master and one of the ushers: there were also 4 or 5 scholars not entitled to the freedom of the school. The head schoolmaster has £400 a-year; the first usher £223; the second £158; the writing master £30. The annual revenues of this important charity amounted, in 1836, to £2,568 12s. 8d. Other charities, in 1826, £11 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £266 11s. Acres 3,630. Houses 118. A. P. £4,527. Pop., in 1801, 621; in 1831, 605.

EUSTON, a parish in the hund. of Blackburn, union of Thetford, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-east by south of Thetford, situated on the Lesser Ouse. Living, a rectory, with those of Burnham and Little Fakenham, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 7s. 11d.; gross income £676. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Grafton. Here is a day and Sunday-school. This place gives the title of Earl to the eldest son of the duke of Grafton. Acres 3,910. Houses 35. A. P. £1,592. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 202. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 15s.

EUXTON, a chapelry in the parish of Leyland, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles west-north-west of Chorley, intersected by the Wigan and Preston railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £128; gross income £125. Patrons, in 1835, the representatives of the late Rev. J. Armetriding. Here is a daily school, endowed with £26 per annum. Acres 2,481

Houses 266. A. P. £5,813. Pop., in 1801, 831; in 1831, 1,501. Poor rates, in 1838, £278 2s.

EVAL (Sr.), a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb-Major, county of Cornwall; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of St. Columb-Major. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £179. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,970. Houses 55. A. P. £2,399. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 354. Poor rates, in 1838, £106.

EVEDON, a parish in the wapentake of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-east of Sleaford, and near the Sleaford canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 8s. 1½d.; gross income £163. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Winchelsea. Acres 2,300. Houses 15. A. P. £1,503. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £78 10s.

EVENJOBB, NEWCASTLE, BARLAND, AND BURROA, a township in the parish of Old Radnor, county of Radnor, South Wales; 5 miles north-west of Kingston. Houses 68. A. P. £1,664. Pop., in 1801, 322; in 1831, 369. Poor rates, in 1838, £242 2s.

EVENLEY, a parish in the hund. of King's-Sutton, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 1 mile south of Brackley, and south of the Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7; gross income £182. Patrons, the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. The great and small tithes, the property of Magdalene college, and the vicar, were commuted in 1779; aggregate amount fixed by tithe commissioners, in 1839, at £264 5s. 2d. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,760. Houses 110. A. P. £4,091. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 506. Poor rates, in 1838, £231.

EVENLODE, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Worcester, but located in the upper division of the hund. of Westminster, county of Gloucester; 4 miles east of Moreton-in-the-Marsh. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £11 11s. 8d.; gross income £420. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £44 15s. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. James. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £155 1s. Acres 1,560. Houses 65. A. P. £3,276. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 312.

EVENLODE (THE), a river in Oxfordshire, which rises in the north-western parts of the county, and takes a south-eastern course past Blandford and Blenheim Parks, near the latter of which it is reinforced by the waters of the Glyme, and then running southwards, falls into the Isis about 5 miles north-west of Oxford.

EVENWOOD, a township and barony in the parish of St. Andrew-Auckland, co. palatine of Durham; 5 miles south-west of Bishop-Auckland, and south of the river Gaunless. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 daily schools. Acres 1,630. A. P. £4,880. Pop., in 1801, 769; in 1831, 1,019. Poor rates, in 1838, £436 11s.

EVERCREECH, a parish in the hund. of Wells-Forum, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east by south of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Chesterblade, in the dio. of Bath and Wells, a peculiar; rated at £16 19s.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. J. Talbot. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here; and there are 2 daily schools, to one of which a small endowment is attached. Charities, in 1819, £42 11s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £493 19s. In 1838, a silk mill here employed 84 hands. Acres

3,130. Houses 294. A. P. £5,802. Pop., in 1801, 918; in 1831, 1,490.

EVERDON, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 4 miles south-south-east of Daventry. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £24 2s. 11d.; gross income £530. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. The rectorial, predial tithes, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1764. The Independents have a place of worship here; and there are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £17 4s. 6d. per annum: other charities, in 1824, £52 18s. 7d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £389 10s. "This manor being given by —, before A.D. 1217, to the abbey of Bernay in Normandy, it was some time a distinct alien priory, at other times reckoned as parcel of Creeting in Suffolk, which was the chief cell in England to that abbey. It was given, 19^o Hen. VI., and afterwards, 1^o Edw. IV. to Eton college."—Tanner's Not. Mon. In 1786 this village suffered considerably by fire, nearly 40 houses having been consumed. Acres 1,900. Houses 155. A. P. £4,043. Pop., in 1801, 586; in 1831, 745.

EVERINGHAM, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Poplington, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west-north-west of Market-Weighton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £8 6s. 8d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Alderson. All tithes, &c., of the manor and township, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1765. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel in a style of splendour unequalled by any in England: the building cost £30,000. There is a daily school. Charities, in 1823, £1 3s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 10s. Acres 3,080. Houses 38. A. P. £2,673. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 276.

EVERLEY. See SUFFIELD WITH EVERLEY.

EVERLEY, a parish in the hund. of Elstub and Everley, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by north of Ludgershall. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £16 4s. 4½d.; gross income £700. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. D. Astley, Bart. Here are 2 daily schools. Poor rates, in 1838, £155 19s. The petty-sessions for Everley division are holden here. This was anciently a place of great importance, and had a market. Ina, king of the West Saxons, had a palace here. There are several interesting British remains in the vicinity. Acres 3,370. Houses 63. A. P. £2,576. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 352.

EVERSDEN (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Longstow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 5 miles east by south of Caxton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £6 14s. 2d.; gross income £70. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Great and small tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1811. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1694. Charities, in 1836, 7s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £140 19s. Acres 1,200. Houses 45. A. P. £1,521. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 316.

EVERSDEN (LITTLE), a parish in the above hund., union, and county; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east by east of Caxton. Living, a rectory; rated at £5 2s. 6d.; gross income £190. Patrons, the president and fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge. Great and small tithes, moduses, &c., were commuted in 1811. There is a daily National school here for the parishes of Great and Little Eversden. Charities, in 1836, £6 5s. per annum; besides a right to the admission of one patient at a time to Addonbrooke hospital, Cambridge. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 15s. Acres 670. Houses 30. A. P. £780. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 196.

EVERSHOLT, a parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Woburn, county of Bedford; 2½ miles east by south of Woburn. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 11s. 3d.; gross income £481. Patroness, in 1835, the Marchioness of Downshire. Here is a daily school endowed with £10 per annum: other charities, arising from the town estate, in 1824, £142 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £415 3s. Acres 2,040. Houses 177. A. P. £3,171. Pop., in 1801, 715; in 1831, 901.

EVERSHOT, a parish in the hund. of Tollerford, union of Beaminster, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 7¼ miles east by north of Beaminster. Living, a curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Frome-St.-Quintin. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment, amounting, in 1836, to about £60 per annum, besides a house and an acre of land: other charities about £75 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £189 17s. Among the many elegant seats in this parish, the most conspicuous is Melbury-hall, belonging to the Earl of Ilchester. It is a very ancient building, partly in the Gothic, and partly in the Grecian style. It stands in a fine park. Evershot was formerly a market-town; a fair for bullocks and toys is held here on the 12th of May. Acres 1,030. Houses 110. A. P. £2,177. Pop., in 1801, 497; in 1831, 569.

EVERSLEY, a parish in the hund. of Holdshott, union of Hartley Wintney, county of Southampton; 2 miles north of Hartford-Bridge, and comprising the tythings of Great and Little Bramhill. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 8s. 9d.; gross income £475. Patron, in 1835, Sir John Cope, Bart. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Charities, in 1825, £3 6s. 8d., with 4 houses occupied by paupers. Poor rates, in 1838, £468 4s. Fairs for cattle and toys are held here on the 16th of May and 18th of October. Acres 5,400. Houses 146. A. P. £3,554. Pop., in 1801, 590; in 1831, 755.

EVERTHORP. See DREWTON.

EVERTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; 4½ miles north-north-east of Biggleswade. Living, a vicarage, together with Tetworth, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £6 13s. 9d.; gross income £200. Patrons, the master and fellows of Clare-hall, Cambridge. The church is in Huntingdonshire. The great and small tithes, of the hamlet of Everton, were commuted in 1802. Charities, in 1820, £5 15s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 16s. Everton and Graingley cars, with Misserton moss, containing about 6,000 acres, are effectually drained by a steam-engine of 40 horse power. Acres 975. Houses 33. A. P. £1,302. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 213.

EVERTON a chapelry in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 1 mile north-north-east of Liverpool. This village, though of greater antiquity than Liverpool, derives its present importance from its proximity to that great town; and it has become the residence of many wealthy merchants, whose elegant villas adorn it. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £300. The church, ded. to St. George, is a modern edifice, the roof and window-frames of which are of cast-iron. St. Augustine's is also a perpetual curacy; gross income £201. The patronage of both is vested in trustees. There is a cemetery here, formed in 1825. There are 15 daily schools. Acres 600. Houses 737. A. P. £9,721. Pop., in 1801, 499; in 1831, 4,518. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,592 9s. In the year 1716, 115 acres of land here, (Cheshire measure, 10,000 yards to the acre), were sold on lease for a thousand years for £115, being £1 per acre. Since that period some of the land in question has been let at the rate of £20 per acre per annum, and some of it sold at 20s. per yard, being the price paid for 10,000 yards little more than a century ago. In the year 1731-2 the whole amount for parish disbursements, church-rates, support of the poor, &c., in the township of Everton, was £6 4s. 8d. In 1835, the assessed taxes amounted to £7,000 per annum,—parish rates, poor rates, highways, &c., to £3,500, making a total of £10,500, and forming one of the many striking instances of the great changes which have taken place in this neighbourhood within the last 100 years.

EVERTON, a parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, but located in the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 3 miles south-east by east of Bawtry, and north of the river Idle. It includes the township of Scaftworth. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 2s. 2d.; gross income £224. Patron, in 1835, J. Hall, Esq. Great and small tithes, the property of lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1759; the great and small tithes, of the township of Scaftworth, were commuted in 1772. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Charities, in 1827, £7 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £321 18s. Acres 4,630. Houses 169. A. P. £7,820. Pop., in 1801, 580; in 1831, 786.

EVESBATCH, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 5½ miles south-east by south of Bromyard. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £1 16s. 10½d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Hughes. Acres 830. Houses 15. A. P. £1,825. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 84. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 19s.

EVESHAM, a borough and market-town in the lower division of the hund. of Blackenhurst, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 92½ miles north-west of London, and 15 south-east of Worcester, delightfully situated in the beautiful vale of Evesham, on an acclivity rising from a bend in the banks of the Avon, which surrounds it on all sides but the north, and is navigable for vessels of 60 tons, by locks, as high as Stratford. There is here a commodious wharf for barges, but the trade is small. Over the Avon there is here a narrow and inconvenient stone bridge of 8 arches, leading to Bengeworth. The projected railway line of communication between London and the western coast, alluded to under article DUDCOTE—which see—runs in this direction. The town principally consists of 4 or 5 regular wide streets, with well-built houses. Acres, with St. Peter-Bengeworth, 2,150. Houses 813. A. P. £14,863. Pop., in 1801, 2,937; in 1831, 3,991.

There are three parishes comprised in this town,—All Saints, St. Lawrence, and St. Peter-Bengeworth, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester. The living of All Saints is a discharged vicarage with that of St. Lawrence; rated at £10 16s. 0½d.; gross income £210. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—See also BENGWORTH (ST. PETER). The church of St. Lawrence had been for many years a partial ruin. In 1837 the restoration of this edifice was completed at an expense of nearly £4,000, which was defrayed by voluntary subscription; and it now forms one of the most elegant parish-churches in the county. All tithes, of the borough of Evesham, the property of the dean and chapter of Worcester, and the vicar, were commuted in 1765. Here are a Unitarian church, formed in 1720; a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, founded in 1808; a Friends' meeting-house; and two places of worship for Baptists. There are 5 daily, 3 day and boarding, and 2 day and Sunday schools here; one of the first is a free grammar-school, with an endowment of £12 12s. per annum. This school was originally connected with the abbey of Evesham: after the alienation of its revenues by the dissolution of the abbey, Henry VIII. refounded and endowed it for the instruction of the children of the town in Latin. James I., by charter dated in 1605, incorporated the mayor and common council as governors of this school, under the style of "The Governors of the possessions and revenues of the Free Grammar-school of Prince Henry in Evesham." About 10 boys are taught the classics and English literature on this foundation. Other charities, including £256 6s. 5d., the income of Deacles' school at St. Peter-Bengeworth, for educating, clothing, and apprenticing poor children, and minor charities of that parish £512 4s. 5d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,161 12s.—The Evesham poor-law union comprehends 30 parishes, embracing an area of 70 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 12 567. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,204. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,900; in 1839, £5,074 19s.

Evesham is a borough by prescription, and was originally governed by a bailiff, but being incorporated by James I., in the 3^d of his reign, was, from that time, till the passing of the municipal act, in 1835, governed by a mayor, 7 aldermen, 12 capital burgesses, a recorder and chamberlain, with inferior officers. Four of the aldermen, and the mayor for the time being, were constituted justices of the peace, and held a session of oyer and terminer and gaol-delivery, with power to try and punish all offences excepting high-treason. The last infliction of capital punishment occurred here in 1740. A court of record was appointed, by the charter, to be held every Tuesday, for the recovery of debts to the amount of £100; and a court of session on the Friday after the county quarter-sessions. The Worcester assizes were occasionally held here. This borough returned members to parliament in the 23^d of Edward I.; but after that king's reign, it discontinued doing so till the accession of James I., since which it has regularly sent two members. The right of voting previous to 1818, was in "paymasters," or persons resident paying scot and lot: subsequently, and till 1832, the right was in the mayor, aldermen, capital, and other burgesses, members of the corporation. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1832 was 443. The number of electors registered in 1837 was 359. The number who actually polled at the general election in 1837, was 308. The mayor is the returning officer. The boundaries of the new parliamentary coincide with those of the old municipal and parliamentary borough, which included the three parishes of All Saints, St. Lawrence, and St. Peter-Bengeworth. By the new municipal act the boundaries of the municipal borough were to have been curtailed; but so as still to comprehend the towns of Evesham and Bengeworth. This, however, has not been done; nor has the borough been divided into wards; 4 aldermen, and 18 councillors were appointed to govern it: the style of the corporate body is 'the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, of the borough of Evesham.' It was included in Schedule A, amongst those which were to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. The income of the borough, in 1839, was £424 12s., of which £211 2s. 1d. were expended on police and constables, £66 1s. 6d. in salaries, &c., to municipal officers, £26 0s. 2d. in public works and repairs, &c.

The only manufacture carried on here is that of stocking-weaving. In 1838 a silk mill here employed 13 hands. The principal employment of the labouring poor is that of gardening, large portions of ground on each side of the Avon, in the celebrated vale of Evesham, having been converted into gardens. The produce is sent for sale to Cheltenham, Tewkesbury, Birmingham, and Liverpool. Plums, in productive seasons, are sent from the vale as far as Glasgow, and other places. The market is on Monday; fairs are held on the 2^d of February; the first Monday after Easter; Whit-Monday; the 21st of September, for cattle and horses, and the 2^d Monday in December. There is a branch of the Gloucestershire banking company here; also of the Herefordshire banking company.

Evesham is distinguished in history for one of the most remarkable and decisive battles in the English annals, fought here on the 6th of August, 1265, between the forces of Henry III., commanded by Prince Edward—afterwards Edward I.—and Simeon de Montford, earl of Leicester, who then stood, in this turbulent reign, at that stage of successful treason at which it is dangerous either to arrive or to rest. Montford lay at Evesham abbey, and was at first deceived by the appearance of the banners which Edward had taken from Montford's son, and caused to be carried in front of the army; but being informed of the reality he placed King Henry, who was then his captive, in front of his line, in armour resembling his own; thus creating a peril to his royal person, which, but for the promptitude and efficient valour of the prince, would have proved fatal. The battle was fought in a contracted field, and no quarter given. The issue of the contest was the decisive defeat of the earl and his confederates, the slaughter of 4,000 men, and of Leicester himself, the release of the king, and his subsequent reinstatement on the throne.

EVESHAM ABBEY is the principal point of interest in the history and existing features of Evesham. This noble edifice, founded, according to Leland and others, by St. Egwin, bishop of the Wiccii, and by him dedicated to the Virgin, is stated, on the authority of Browne Willis, to have once possessed 22 towns, and to have maintained 75 religious and 65 servants, a strong proof either of the luxury of the inmates or of the idleness of the dependents. In one of the MSS. relating to this abbey, contained in the Harleian and Cottonian collections, and consulted by Mr. May, author of a very interesting local history of Evesham, recently published, it is stated that at the time of the Conquest it possessed 21,862 acres of land; and the mention of orchards and "a vineyard," proves that the monks of Evesham were not behind their brethren in horticultural skill: 5 of their servants were employed in the vineyard, and 3 in the gardens, an additional proof of the great attention paid by the monastic orders, even at this early period, to horticulture. Lambard, in the 16th century, treating of Avonsham, or Evesham, says,—“A great portion of the lowe countrey thearabout is named the vale of Evesham, wherin stode som tyme a great abbay which Egwin, a byshop of Worcester, buylded above eighte hundrethe yeares now past, and was longe after enryched, bothe in buyldinge and revenue, by Leofric the erle, of whome theare is mention in Coventrye:—the house grewe to suche wealth with-in a while after, that one Robert Bloet, abbot of this house, was, by the same, abled to gyve William Rufus 5,000 poundes for the byshopric of Lincoln that then became voide.—John Bale hath mention of one Adulph, whome they of his tyme call a sainete, because he was caryed over sea in a moment to saye masse in the default of another byshop, and that he lyeth buried heere." Tanner gives us the following succinct account of this celebrated monastery:—"Egwin, the third bishop of Worcester, by the help of Ethelred and Kenred, kings of Mercia, built and endowed this abbey, A. D. 701, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for monks of the order of St. Benedict, who continued here till they were displaced, and secular canons put in their room, A. D. 941. The monks were restored A. D. 960, dispersed a second time A. D. 977, restored once more A. D. 1114, from which time they kept their footing here till the general dissolution by King Henry VIII., when their possessions were valued at £1,183 12s. 9d. per ann. Dugd.; £1,268 9s. 9d. Speed. The site was granted 34th Hen. VIII., to Philip Hobby, Esq." This abbey was one of the mitred monasteries, whose abbot had a seat in the house of peers. His person was treated with peculiar reverence: none were ever seated in his presence without his command, and nothing was ever received from or given to him by the brethren without humbly kissing his hand. It was the office of the prior to assist the abbot in preserving the strictest discipline: next to whom he was treated with the greatest respect. There were a second and third prior; a dean, precentor, sacrist, chamberlain, manciple or purveyor, cellarer, refectorer, infirmarist, hostiliarius or receiver of guests and visitors, and almoner.

As many mistakes have been made in regard to the 7 daily services of the Roman church, we subjoin the following extract, derived by Mr. May from authentic sources:—"Their day may be considered to have been thus divided: unvarying from year to year. Eight hours were allotted to transcription, labour, and study; nearly that number was absorbed in the appointed services of their church; six hours were occupied in sleep; and the remaining two or three in staid and sober recreation. At two, they left their beds, and congregated in the church, for the nocturnal, or first liturgical service. This ended, they again retired. At six, they rose, proceeding then to matins, or morning prayer. At nine, they again assembled in the church, for tierce, the service thus termed; after which, the daily sacrifice, or grand conventual mass, was offered, with all the imposing ceremonies adopted by the church of Rome. At noon, their fourth attendance in the church took place, for the observance of another service, called the sexte; which done, they dined. At three, they were again summoned to the church, for the service termed the none. At six, vespers were sung in the same place; and at seven, the concluding service, termed compline, was performed; after which, they supped, and retired to rest."

The abbey church was a magnificent building of more than ordinary length: on its south side were cloisters, with a spacious and curious walk, which communicated with the church of St. Lawrence: both the church and cloisters were of the most superb Gothic workmanship, adorned with no less than 164 pillars, and 15 altars, besides the high altar. The stately tower, which still remains, was founded by Abbot Lychfield: it is a distinct tower, or campanile. The only vestige of the demolished church of the abbey is an ancient and highly ornamented gateway, preserved in the wall of a garden, which occupies the site of the cloister-area. This gateway conducted from the cloister to the chapter-room.

EVINGAR HUNDRED, in the Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton. Area 35,300 acres. Houses 1,430. Pop., in 1831, 7,307.

EVINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Billesdon, county of Leicester; 3 miles east-south-east of Leicester, in the vicinity of the midland counties railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of the lord of the manor; rated at £7 16s. 8d.; gross income £47. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,360. Houses 53. A. P. £4,206. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 260. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 16s.

EVINGTON. See LEIGH WITH EVINGTON.

EVIONYDD HUNDRED, in the county of Carnarvon, North Wales. It is the most mountainous and picturesque district of this picturesque county. Houses 1,405. Pop., in 1831, 7,217.

EWART, a township in the parish of Doddington, Northumberland, between the rivers Till and Glen; 5 miles north-north-west of Wooler. Acreage with the parish. Houses 26. A. P. £1,975. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 173. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 14s.

EWE (ST.), a parish in the east division of the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austell, county of Cornwall; 3 miles east-north-east of Tregoney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21; gross income £680. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £10 impropriate, and £560 vicarial. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Carlyon. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 8 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, about £4 4s. 6d. per annum, besides 4 almshouses inhabited by paupers. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 13s. Acres 6,100. Houses 304. A. P. £4,685. Pop., in 1801, 1,176; in 1831, 1,699.

EWELL, a parish, partly in the first division of the hund. of Copthorne, and partly in the first division of the hund. of Reigate, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; 5 miles south-south-east of Kingston, on the road to Worthing. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8; gross income £292. Patron, in 1835, Sir L. Glyn, Bart. See BANSTEAD. All tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1801; the rectorial and vicarial tithes, of the liberty of Kingswood, were commuted in 1807. A new church was built by subscription at Kingswood in 1836. Here is a place of worship for Independents. A National school was established here in 1816. Here are also 2 daily and 3 day and boarding schools. Charities, in 1824, £169 6s.; besides an interest in Dickinson's charity to St. George Southwark. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,049 5s. The market is on Thursday. Fairs are held on the 12th of May, and 29th of October, for horses, bullocks, sheep, and toys. At the intersection of the roads to London and Kingston, rises a spring of exceedingly clear water, forming a stream called Hogsmill river, which, in its progress to the Thames, gives motion to several corn and gunpowder mills. Richard Corbett, chaplain to James I., and afterwards bishop of Norwich, was born here in 1582. Acres 4,170. Houses 328. A. P. £11,626. Pop., including that of the liberty of Kingswood, in 1801, 1,224; in 1831, 1,851.

EWELL, a parish in the hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Dover, county of Kent; 3 miles north-west of Dover. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £70. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of J. Angel. Here are 2 daily schools. The village of Ewell is beautifully situated in a valley between Barham-downs and the Land's-end, at Dover. It belonged to the knights templars as early as 1185, and was then called Temple Ewell. The principal stream of the river Dour rises in this parish. Acres 1,440. Houses 74. A. P. £942.

Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 425. Poor rates, in 1838, £197 5s.

EWELME HUNDRED, in the southern part of the county of Oxford. Area 25,190 acres. Houses 1,174. Pop., in 1831, 6,225.

EWELME, a parish in the above hund., union of Wallingford; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by east of Wallingford. Living, a rectory annexed to the Regius professorship of divinity, in the university of Oxford; rated at £21 10s. 5d.; gross income 590. Here is a day and Sunday National school. An hospital was founded and endowed here in the reign, and under the license, of Henry VI., by William De la Pole, Earl of Suffolk, and Alice his wife, for a body corporate, consisting of 2 chaplains and 13 poor men. "Considering the benefits which all Christian people might hope for at the day of judgment, by the maintaining of divine service and exercise of works of mercy; the chaplains were ordained to celebrate divine service, and the said chaplains and poor men daily to pray for the good estate of the said king, and the said earl, and Alice, for their lives, and for their souls after their decease; also for the souls of the king's progenitors, and the parents, friends, and benefactors of the said earl and countess, and of all faithful deceased, and to exercise certain suffrages and works of piety, charity, and devotion, according to the ordinance of the said earl and Alice."—The first priest was ordained master of the almshouse, and the second to teach grammar to the children of Evelme freely. Besides many statutes for the strict regulation of their conduct, it was ordained, that each of them should have a tabard, with a red cross on the breast of their gowns, and a hood according to the same. Special visitors were appointed. On the attainder of William De la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, the lordship of Evelme came to the crown, and from that period, till about 1817, the right of patronage to this hospital was exercised by the crown, except with regard to the office of master, which was granted to the university of Oxford, by James I., for the purpose of increasing the stipend of the Regius professor of medicine in that university. The right is now claimed by the Earl of Macclesfield, as owner of the lordship of Evelme. The establishment still consists of a master, grammar-master, and 13 poor men. The almshouse comprises 13 tenements, forming a quadrangle, with a common hall, apartments for the master, and a good house for the grammar-master. The annual income derived from the estates of this charity, in 1836, was about £471 11s. 3½d. Fines to the amount of £20,774, had been received on renewals of leases, &c., during the 35 years previous to 1835, averaging £593 5s. per annum; but the average of fines for 6 years previous to 1835, and included in the income as already stated, was only £286 19s. 6d. The fines are divided amongst the members of the corporation. The master's stipend in 1836, was £60, with an allowance of £10 for holding courts; the grammar-master's stipend—though never resident, and performing no duty whatever in respect of his office—£40; besides a house let for his own benefit. It appears that, by the statutes, the visitor is invested with full power to call on him to reside in the hospital, and perform the duties of his office. A room in the almshouse has been appropriated for a grammar-school on the National system, under the superintendence of the rector. The poor rates of this parish, in 1838, amounted to £338 7s. Acres 2,170. Houses 118. A. P. £3,140. Pop., in 1801, 490; in 1831, 619.

EWENNY, a parish in the hund. of Ogmores, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales, situated on the river Wenny;

5 miles west of Cowbridge. The living is a donative with the cure of souls in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; returned at £40; gross income £47. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Turberville. There is a daily school in this parish. Charities, in 1836, £1 13s. 9½d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 3s. Near the Wenny and the turnpike road from Cowbridge to Kyle, are the ruins of a monastery founded by Maurice de Londress, who in 1141 gave it as a cell to Gloucester abbey; and it was dedicated to St. Michael. The church is a Norman structure, and a cathedral in miniature, consisting of a nave, one aisle, two transepts, and a choir. The simple and elegant tombstone of the founder still remains, along with the curious and elegant pavement of the church. Close to these ruins, at the opposite side of the road, stands rather a singular object, namely, the ruins of a modern mansion intentionally dilapidated. Houses 47. A. P. £1,736. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 239.

EWENNY (THE), a river in Glamorganshire, South Wales, which passes through the parish of Ewenny, and falls into the Ogmores near Ogmores castle.

EWELBY, WITH EWERBY-THORPE, a parish in the wapentake of Aswardburn, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Sleaford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 10s. 10d.; gross income £67. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a small endowed daily school. Acres 2,520. Houses 79. A. P. £3,280. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 345. Poor rates, in 1838, £114.

EWESLEY, a township in the parish of Nether-Whitton, Northumberland; 10 miles north-west by west of Morpeth, on the river Pont. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 4. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 20. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 6s.

EWHURST, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Blackheath, union of Hambledon, county of Surrey; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Dorking. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £12 7s. 3½d.; gross income £550. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday school. Acres 4,390. Houses 120. A. P. £3,402. Pop., in 1801, 644; in 1831, 828. Poor rates, in 1838, £353 19s.

EWHURST, a parish in the hund. of Staple, rape of Hastings, union of Battle, county of Sussex; 4 miles east by north of Roberts-Bridge, on the southern bank of the river Rother. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £12 2s. 6d.; gross income £1,111. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. There are 3 daily schools here. Fairs for cattle and pedlery are held on the 21st of May and 5th of August. Acres 5,310. Houses 191. A. P. £3,936. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 1,200. Poor rates, in 1838, £758 5s.

EWHURST, a parish in the hund. and union of Kingsclere, county of Southampton; 6 miles north-west of Basingstoke. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £1 6s. 8d.; gross income £104. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Wellington. Acres 820. Houses 2. A. P. £384. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 28. Poor rates, in 1838, £3 9s.

EWLOE AND EWLOE-WOOD, a township in the parish of Hawarden, county of Flint, North Wales; 6 miles south-east by south of Flint. Houses 240. A. P. £2,643. Pop., in 1821, 1,239; in 1831, 1,328.

EWSHOTT, a tything in the parish and hund. of Crondall, county of Southampton; 4 miles east of Oldham, in the vicinity of the Basingstoke canal.

Houses 81. Pop., in 1821, 489; in 1831, 526. Other returns with the parish.

EWYAS, a deeply secluded vale, in the county of Brecknock, South Wales, surrounded by the Black mountains of Talgarth, and the Hatterell hills, near the union of the counties of Hereford, Brecknock, and Monmouth: the sparkling waters of the Honthy run through this gloomy solitude:—

"Here was it, stranger, that the patron saint
Of Cambria pass'd his age of penitence,
A solitary man; and here he made
His hermitage, the roots his food, his drink
Of Honddy's mountain stream. Perchance thy youth
Has read with eager wonder how the knight
Of Wales, in Ormandine's enchanted bower,
Slept the long sleep: and if that in thy veins
Flows the pure blood of Britain, sure that blood
Has flow'd with quicker impulse at the tale
Of Dafydd's deeds, when through the press of war
His gallant comrades followed his green crest
To conquests, Stranger! Hatterell's mountain heights,
And this fair vale of Ewais, and the stream
Of Honddy, to thine after-thoughts will rise
More grateful, thus associate with the name
Of Dafydd and the deeds of other days.

This, we need scarcely say, is the celebrated and interesting inscription for a monument in the vale of Ewyas, written by the poet laureate Southey, and already alluded to in our article CWMYGY:—which see.—St. David, the uncle of king Arthur—ancient legends say—was so struck with this sequestered recess, then almost untrodden on by human footstep, that he built a chapel on the spot, and passed many years in it as a hermit. William, a retainer of the earl of Hereford's, in the reign of William Rufus, being led into the valley in pursuit of a deer, espied the hermitage. The deep solitude of the place and the mysterious appearance of the building conspired to fill him with religious enthusiasm; and he instantly disclaimed all worldly enjoyments. The ruins of Llanthony abbey, which now occupy the supposed site of this hermitage, are venerable and grand, but wholly devoid of ornament: they partake of the character of the surrounding scenery. Not a single tendril of ivy decorates the massive walls of the structure, and but a sprinkling of shrubs and light-branched trees fringe the parapets or shade the broken fragments beneath. The area of the church is not very extensive; the length is 212 feet; the breadth 50; and it measures 100 across the transept. The roof has long since fallen in, and a great part of the east and south walls are now prostrate; but an interesting view in consequence is afforded of the interior. Lambard says of this abbey, that it was "called Llanthodeni, eyther bycause it was buylded by the two Eremites in honour of Hodenus, or els, corruptly, in stede of Nanthodeni, which signifieth a brooke runninge through a valley, as this place standeth. It was sometye a poore churche of St. David's. It is so encompassed with hilles round about, that Roger, the bishop of Salisbury—which was governour of the hole realme under Henry the First—was wont to saye merely of it that al the kinge's treasure would not suffice to make a cloyster to this house. At this place had Gyraldus Cambrensis, that wrote the Itinerary of Wales, a house and lyvinge to it."

EWYAS-HAROLD, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union of Dore, county of Hereford; 12 miles south-west of Hereford, situated on a branch of the river Monnow, and in the line of the Abergavenny and Hereford railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; valued at £20; gross income £110. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Trenchard. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, 17s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 9s. "Harold, lord of Ewyas," says Tanner, "gave the church of St. Michael, &c., here, A. D.

1100, to the abbey of St. Peter in Gloucester, upon condition that there should be a prior and small convent of Black monks from thence settled here, as there was for many years, till the revenues falling so much in value as not to be able to support this cell, it was, A. D. 1358, by decree of Thomas, bishop of St. David's, then ordinary, with the consent of the chapter, united and incorporated to the said great abbey of Gloucester." Acres 1,980. Houses 75. A. P. £1,314. Pop., in 1801, 342; in 1831, 344.

EWYAS-LACY HUNDRED in the south-west extremity of the county of Hereford. Area 35,010 acres. Houses 672. Pop., in 1831, 3,435.

EXBOURNE, a parish in the hund. of Black-Torrington, union of Okehampton, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by south of Hatherleigh, and east of the river Okement. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £27 11s. 8d.; gross income £299. Patron, in 1835, F. Berry. Here are two daily schools. Charities, in 1823, £1 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £249 5s. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held on the third Monday in April. Acres 1,600. Houses 94. A. P. £1,840. Pop., in 1801, 421; in 1831, 509.

EXBURY, a parish in the hund. of New Forest, east division of the county of Southampton; 7 miles east by north of Lymington; and north-east of the river Beaulieu. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Fawley. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £318 4s. 3d. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Acres, with the tything of Leap, 2,600. Houses 42. A. P. £1,906. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 325. Poor rates, in 1838, £214 6s.

EXELBY, LEEMING, AND NEWTON, a township in the parish of Burneston, north riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south-east of Bedale. There are 4 daily schools here. Acres 2,300. Houses 150. A. P. £4,573. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 633. Poor rates, in 1838, £277 8s.

EXE (THE). See DEVONSHIRE.

EXE (THE). See SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE.

EXETER,

A city and county of itself,—seat of the see of Exeter, and capital of the county of Devon,—locally situated in the hundred of Wanford, county of Devon; 173 miles west by south of London, 44 north-east of Plymouth, and 10 north-west of Exmouth, on the eastern side of the river Exe. Acres 4,056. Houses 6,038. A. P. £54,330. Pop., in 1801, 20,568; in 1831, 28,201.

General description.—The situation of Exeter—"the Capital of the West"—"the Emporium and principal Ornament of the West"—as Risdon has emphatically styled it—is commanding and picturesque. It stands on an eminence, or flat ridge, declining on both sides, and on the south-west and north-west rather precipitous: round the south-western side, flows the Exe; over which,—at the western entrance to the city, a little above the site of the original ancient bridge, built in 1250,—an elegant stone-bridge was erected in 1778, after many unsuccessful attempts, owing to the rapidity of the stream; and at an expense of about £20,000. Another elegant bridge, over the river from Shil-bay, was projected previous to 1835, when the act for its construction, and for removing the ferry, and establishing another, or a foot-bridge in lieu of it, was passed. The city, in its relation with the surrounding scenery, is seen to great advantage from the north-west, on Exwick-hill, where there is a most picturesque and beautiful prospect,—the low grounds through which winds the Exe in its sinuous course in front; with the rich and vivid foliage of the Northern-hay elms crowning the ramparts of the ancient castle,—whence, too, may be obtained a delightful view of the surrounding country;—the numerous churches and other buildings of the city spreading gradually from the river, till they are surmounted by the towers of the venerable cathedral;—while the distant hills and the heights of Haldon, with their bold and swelling outlines, terminate the landscape.

Exeter has all the appearance of an ancient city. The walls, and many of the streets and buildings, still invest it with the characteristic features of antiquity; although its handsome squares and terraces, and well-built modern streets and houses,—some of which do not suffer in comparison with those in most other parts of the country,—plainly show it to be not an ancient city in decay. The space within the ancient walls is nearly in the form of a parallelogram, of 4 furlongs in length and 3 in breadth: this space is intersected, in a cruciform manner, by 4 principal streets, which meet near the centre, and diverge at right angles: many other streets branch out from these; and the suburbs are principally continuations of them; though suburban streets extend, in every direction, from the walls: the suburbs are most densely inhabited towards the north-east and south-east. Many parts of the walls are now destroyed; but they were entire in 1769. Leland thus describes them:—"The town is a good mile and more in cumpace, and is right strongly waulid and maintained. There be diverse fare towers in the town wall bytwixt the south and west gate. There be four gates in the town, by names of est, west, north, and south. The est and the west gates be now the fairest, and of one fasion of building: the south gate hath been the strongest." None of these gates now exist. The Fore-street, the High-street, and St. Sidwell's, lead north-eastwardly in a continuous line, and are spacious enough streets, but many especially of the older streets are narrow. The south-western suburb of Exe island extends into several streets, and is connected with the town of St. Thomas, by the bridge erected in 1778. St. Leonard adjoins the city on the east, where also the village of Heavitree is immediately contiguous to the suburbs: this latter suburban village consists of respectable houses and villas occupied by retired officers, professional men, and persons connected with the city. It has been selected as a favourite place of residence, and is rapidly becoming a large and highly respectable community. On the north-east is the suburb of St. David's overlooking part of the city. To the south-east the suburbs consist of two streets, the one leading to the London road, the other to Topsham. Here are several new streets and squares. To the north-east are the suburbs of St. Sidwell, having 3 principal streets branching off in several directions to streets and squares, which have been recently built. The town is lighted at night with gas; well-paved; and, now especially, well supplied with water. Water-works were erected end of last century; but the works now in operation for the supply of the city were only completed in 1834: the reservoir is capable of containing 2,000,000 gallons: jets d'eau have been erected in several of the public promenades, one of which, the Northern-hay, to the north of the castle, and already alluded to, is a delightful and favourite walk by the ramparts of the castle, shaded under a grove of fine old elm-trees.

Besides the cathedral and the other churches, the charitable institutions, the sessions-house, guildhall, and city and county jails and bridewell, the new markets recently opened, &c., some of which shall be afterwards more particularly described; and the interesting remains of Rougemont castle, standing on the highest eminence in the city, towards the north, and supposed to have been founded and inhabited by the West Saxon kings, and afterwards the seat of the Dukes of Exeter; other principal buildings, institutions, or establishments, for the amusement, instruction, or convenience of the public, in this city, are, the theatre and circus; a splendid and spacious assembly or ball-room, called the Devon and Exeter subscription-rooms, for concerts, balls, and assemblies; public baths at Southern-hay; a public library in the cathedral, denominated the Devon and Exeter Institution, established in 1817, and containing about 10,000 volumes; the Athenaeum, a literary institution established in 1835, when a handsome lecture-room was erected; a Mechanics' institute established in 1825; a literary and philosophical society, founded in 1836; &c. &c. There are watering-places and tea-gardens in the vicinity, where "the busy and the gay" have been in the habit of associating for the general entertainment. Many residents are attracted to Exeter by the salubrity of the climate, the excellence of the locality, and the cheapness of provisions: the population is highly respectable, and the society good.

Bishopric, See, &c.—After its partial subjugation by the Saxons, and the conversion of that people to Christianity, Devonshire became subordinate to the bishops of Wessex, and so continued until A. D. 703, when it was deemed expedient to divide the extensive episcopacy of Wessex into two sees. On that division, Sherborne in Dorsetshire was made the seat of the new bishopric, which comprehended Devonshire; but on the subdivision of the see of Sherborne, in the year 910, Devonshire was constituted an independent diocese, and Aidolf, its first bishop, fixed his see at Crediton. About the year 1040, the bishopric of Cornwall, the seat of the see of which was St. Germans, was united to it at the solicitation of Livingus, the bishop of Devonshire. His successor, Leofric, sixth bishop of Crediton, was chancellor and chaplain to King Edward the Confessor: this saintly king, by a charter, granted in 1050, consolidated the pontifical chair at Exeter, in the monastery, it is supposed, of the blessed Virgin and St. Peter, prince of the apostles; and appointed Leofric, and his successors, for ever, to be bishops there, where the seat of the see has ever since continued. The diocese is divided into 4 archdeaconries, Cornwall being one, the limits of which are nearly the same as those of the county, including the Scilly isles, together with three Devonshire parishes; but within it are 32 parishes of exempt jurisdiction, 21 of which are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop, and 5 in that of the dean and chapter of Exeter; 3 in that of the dean of Burian, and 2 in lay hands. The archdeaconry of Cornwall is divided into 8 deaneries, East, Kirrier, Penwith, Powder, Pyder, Trigg-Major, Trigg-Minor, and West. Devon is divided into the archdeaconries of Exeter, Totness, and Barnstaple, and subdivided into 23 deaneries, which are thus distributed:—

Exeter.	Totness.	Barnstaple.
Aylesbeare,	Holsworthy,	Barum,
Cadbury,	Ilplepen,	or Barnstaple,
Christianity,	Moreton,	Chumleigh,
or Exeter,	Okehampton,	Hertland,
Dunkeswell,	Tamerton,	Shirwell,
Dunsford,	Tavistock,	South Molton,
Honiton,	Totton,	Torrington.
Kenne,	or Totness,
Plymtree,	Woodleigh.
Tiverton.

The number of benefices in the diocese returned to the commissioners in 1831, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 613, besides 16 not returned. The aggregate amount of the gross incomes of incumbents in the 613 returned benefices was £194,181; average gross income £316. The total number of curates was 323: stipends, included in the incomes of incumbents, £28,759; average £89. The total number of benefices in 1838, without exclusion, was 639, the incumbents in 178 of which were non-resident. About 240 of the parishes in this diocese are inappropriate, or in the hands of laymen. The total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see of Exeter, and of the ecclesiastical preferments for 3 years ending 31st December, 1831, was £3,147; nett yearly income £2,713: there was also thereafter £21 per annum from the dividends on stock produced by the sale of houses under a local act: other ecclesiastical preferments were, the rectory of Shobrook, Devon, permanently annexed to the bishopric; treasurer'ship of, and prebend in, Exeter cathedral, accustomably held in commendam; and prebend in Durham cathedral, in commendam. "The revenues of this bishopric," says Tanner, "were valued 26th Henry VIII., at £1,566 14s. 6d. per annum. But so much was shortly after taken from it that they have long been rated at £500 only. Besides, the separate corps of the common revenues of the dean and chapter are rated at £1,132 18s. 11d. ob. per annum. There are now belonging to this ancient cathedral a bishop, dean, 24 prebendaries, 4 archdeacons, 4 priest-vicars, 8 lay-vicars, whereof one is organist, 5 secondaries, 10 choristers, besides vergers, sextons, and other officers."

The amount of the average gross yearly income of the dean and chapter, or corporation, of the cathedral, as a corporation aggregate, in 1831, was £10,438, besides £914 appropriated to the custos and college of vicars' choral: the average gross yearly amount of the separate revenues possessed by all the members, as a corporation sole, in right of the deanery and of the prebends, was £389, besides £1,000 received by the precentor, and £180 by the dean, being the total amount of fines received on renewals of leases during the three years ending 1831. The dean, the precentor, the chancellor, the treasurer, and the subdean, have each separate revenues: there are houses assigned for the residence of the dean, the precentor, the chancellor, and 3 others for residentiaries. The chapter or corporation, &c., of the cathedral consists of 24 canons or prebendaries, of whom 9 are canons residentiary, the dean being one. The prebendaries, not being canons residentiary, receive fixed payments of £20 per annum each: the 9 canons residentiary receive each a fixed payment of £69 5s., and divide among them the surplus nett revenue, after payment of all stipends and allowances. The 3 archdeacons are paid the annual sum of £135 among them. The lecturer has a fixed stipend of £30 out of the revenues. The sum divided among the canons residentiary was, according to the said average, £5,983. The corporation of the custos and college of the vicars' choral, consists of 4 priest-vicars, of whom one is the dean's vicar and subtreasurer, and another the custos of the college. They divide the nett revenues among them. The dean's vicar has £14 per annum from surplice fees. The custos of the college has no additional stipend for that office. This corporation has no separate revenues; but there are houses belonging to the corporation, though unfit for the residence of clergymen. A tenth-part of all fines have, by ancient custom, been set apart for the reparation of the cathedral: this having been found insufficient, the deficiency was supplied out of the general revenues. The fabric is in a sound state.

THE CATHEDRAL, the principal ornament of the city, is a venerable and magnificent edifice. This noble memorial of religious zeal, and national art and science, is highly interesting to the admirer of ancient English architecture. It has neither the picturesque features nor the lofty majesty of either Durham or Lincoln cathedrals; but its high embowered stone roofs, displaying a boldness of design and a lightness of symmetry equal, if not superior, to any cathedral architecture in the kingdom, its storied windows, clustered columns, spacious aisles, sepulchral tablets, and numerous statues, with its various other appropriate appendages, must excite interesting emotions in every mind endued with taste for architectural science and grandeur. The variety of styles discovered in this edifice, and the ambiguity and silence of our early historians concerning its foundation, have been fruitful themes for various and opposite opinions. "There is no question," says Tanner, "but in a city so famous as this was in the Roman, British, and Saxon times, here were, early after their conversion to Christianity, congregations and societies of holy men and women: yet it is not certain whether this was the famous monastery of Adestancester, wherein St. Boniface, the apostle of the Germans, who was born at Crediton in this county, had his education under Abbot Wolfhard, about A. D. 690. The industrious Mr. Joseph Hooker, alias Vowell, the first restorer of the antiquities of this city—whereof he was chamberlain—saith: 'That in ancient times, within the precincts of the close, were three religious houses; the first was a nunnery, which is now the dean's house—or as Mr. Risdon will have it, the Kalendary-hay;—the other was a house of monks, reported to have been built by King Ethelred, A. D. 868; the third was a monastery, founded by King Athelstan, A. D. 932. For this last there is a pretty good authority, and that it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Peter, and endowed by the munificence of that king with 26 villages, and filled with Benedictine monks, who, not long after, forsook the same for fear of the Danes. But King Edgar, that great restorer of monasteries, A. D. 968, replaced the religious here, who were again forced to fly upon the devastation of this city and country by the Danes, under Swein, A. D. 1003. After this, King Canute encouraged the monks once more to settle here, confirming their lands and privileges, A. D. 1019. But upon the union of the episcopal sees of St. Germans and Crediton, and their translation hither, A. D. 1050, the eight monks remaining here were sent to Westminster abbey, and some secular canons placed in their stead by Bishop Leofric. However, the chapter of this cathedral was not fixed to a dean and 24 prebendaries till Bishop Brewer's time, A. D. 1225." The generality of writers, from Hooker, in 1584, to those of the present time, have stated that St. Mary's chapel, at the south end of the choir, is the ancient Saxon church, and that the whole of the present fabric was 500 years in building; yet the beautiful uniformity of the structure, as it at present stands, seems to prove, beyond a doubt, that the whole, according to the uniform tradition of different writers, was the fruit of one great design; and its singular elegance does as much honour to the taste, as its noble size does to the munificence, of the founder and successive constructors. Expense and labour seem to have been altogether disregarded, whilst picturesque effect, increased grandeur, and additional enrichments were chiefly studied by the monastic architects, who seem to have been ever exercising their genius either to invent new forms or produce novel combinations; while, at the same time, as was remarked by Sir H. Englefield, in noticing the singular felicity which attended its erection, "during the long period of 500 years no tasteless or vain prelate interfered with the regular and elegant plan of the founder. Though the taste in architecture was continually changing; so scrupulous was the adherence to the original design that the church seems rather to have been erected at once in its perfect state, than have slowly grown to its consummate beauty. Even Grandison, who, if we may judge from his screen, had a taste florid in the extreme in architecture, chastised his ideas within the church, and felt the simple grace of Quivil's design." By some historians, the most ancient part of the edifice, or rather the first considerable cathedral, is said to have been planned under the direction and patronage of Bishop Warlewast in 1112: whensoever erected, however, this structure was nearly annihilated, during the siege of Exeter, by King Stephen, in 1138, when it was plundered and burnt. Bishop Quivil re-designed and partly rebuilt it, in the pointed style, in 1280, and it was afterwards brought by degrees to its present form and appearance. It is cruciform, and consists of a nave with two side aisles; a chapter house; a choir, with side aisles; ten chapels, or oratories; with a room called the consistory court, and two short transepts formed out of the two ponderous Norman towers which flank the church, on the north and south, and which bishop Quivil and his architect daringly and most skilfully converted into transepts, by taking away the inner side of each tower nearly half its height from the ground, and constructing a great arch to support the remaining upper part: large windows were also cut out to light the newly formed transepts. In the north tower there is a curious astronomical clock, and the celebrated great bell of Exeter which weighs 12,500 pounds;* and in the south tower there are 11 bells, 10 of which are rung in peal. These unique towers, with the numerous crocketed pinnacles and flying buttresses, and the highly-pitched roof of the nave and choir, constitute a fine and prominent group of architecture from many stations southwards of the city: in the meadows, on the north-east, too, it is seen to rise boldly and grandly above surrounding objects; the Northern-hay elms being a fine feature in the scene. The western front of this cathedral is unlike any other in the kingdom, and far surpasses most of them in beauty. The lower part is adorned with a rich screen, extending beyond the walls of the aisles, and, in altitude, about a third of the central pediment. The design is magnificent. In the upper compartments is a series of canopied niches—35 in number—occupied by statues, in various positions, with sacred symbols more numerous and entire than those of any other cathedral: in the lower row most of the figures are represented sitting: two statues, in niches, on the buttresses, are those of King Athelstan and St. Edward the Confessor, restored in 1817. The western window is filled with painted glass; nearly every light being charged with armorial bearings, excepting the lower compartments, which are adorned with full length figures of saints. The windows of this cathedral are very large, and are all of the same shape, yet the architect has ornamented each with a studied variety of tracery, by which plan there are not two windows exactly similar on either side, though those opposite to each other correspond in almost every instance. The nave presents a magnificent and grand appearance on entering it from the western door, though much of its grandeur is marred by the seats and pews in this part of the fabric. A large and very grand organ, the finest instrument of the kind in England, with pipes belonging to the double diapason, nearly 23 feet in height, and 4 feet in circumference, is supported, between the nave and the choir, by the screen, which is adorned with curious ancient paintings from scriptural history. The episcopal throne in the choir is a noble ornament of carved wood in the Gothic style. The north aisle contains the tombs of Bishop Stafford and Stapleton, and many other splendid monuments. The length of the cathedral is 408 feet from east to west, including the walls: the nave is 175 feet in length, and 76 in breadth, within the walls: the choir 120 feet by about 76: the height of the roof, which is supported by 14 columns, from which rise 16 arches, is 69 feet; and the Norman towers are 130 feet in height to the top of the battlements.* For a further account of this truly magnificent edifice, and its appendages, we must refer to Oliver, Risdon, Britton, &c.

Parishes, Livings, &c.—Besides the extra-parochial precincts of the Cathedral Close, this city contains the following parishes and parochial districts:—1st. All-hallows, in Goldsmith-street. Living, a discharged rectory; rated at £6 4s. 7d.; gross income £66. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter.—2d. All-hallows-on-the-Walls, a discharged rectory; rated at £5 4s. 9½d.; gross income £19. Patrons, the dean and chapter. The service was transferred in 1825 to St. Mary-steps: the church was pulled down to make a road from Fore-street to the bridge.—3d. St. David's, a perpetual curacy; gross income £130; in the patronage of the vicar of Heavitree.—4th. St. George's, a discharged rectory; rated at £9 13s. 8d.; gross income £102. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter.—5th. St. John's, a discharged rectory of the certified value of £18; gross income £111. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—6th. St. Lawrence, a discharged rectory; rated at £100; gross income £90. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—7th. St. Martin's and St. Pancras, a rectory; rated at £8 14s. 6d.; gross income £120. Patrons, the dean and chapter.—8th. St. Mary-arches, a discharged rectory; rated at £10; gross income £187. Patron, the bishop of Exeter.—9th. St. Kirrian's, a discharged rectory, with that of St. Petrock; rated at £5 18s. 6½d.; gross income £142. Patrons, the dean and chapter.—10th. St. Mary-major, a discharged rectory; rated at £15 14s. 9½d.; gross income £140. Patrons, the dean and chapter.—11th. St. Mary-steps, a discharged rectory; rated at £8 6s. 8d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Carwithen.—12th. St. Olave's, a discharged rectory; rated at £7 13s. 4d.; gross income £92. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—13th. St. Edmund's-on-the-Bridge, a discharged rectory; rated at £10 6s. 8d.; gross income £196. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Exeter. The old church was demolished in 1832, and a new edifice built.—14th. St. Paul's, a discharged rectory; rated at £8 2s. 6d.; gross income £174. Patrons, the dean and chapter.—15th.

* Among the extraordinary instances of singular tastes and partialities, may be adduced that of choosing enormously large bells. Several are still preserved in England as curiosities; but all of these are surpassed by some on the continent. The great bell at Moscow weighs 432,000 lbs.; that at St. Peter's in Rome, recast in 1795, is 18,667 lbs. Another of 17,000 lbs. weight is placed in the tower of the Palazzo Vecchio at Florence; and is 275 feet from the ground. The Great Tom of Oxford weighs 17,000 lbs. The great bell of St. Paul's, London, is only 8,400 lbs., and the Great Tom of Lincoln, weighs 9,894 lbs.

* "The stones with which the walls of this noble edifice were principally built," observes Bishop Lyttleton, "came from Bere, near Culliton in Devon; the vaulting stone of which the roof is composed, from Silvertown, in the same county: the pavement of the choir from Kam, by sea, to Topesham, Quere, if not Caen in Normandy? The vestry belonging to St. Mary's chapel, rebuilt in Henry the Sixth's time, of Wouneford stone: all which appears by the fabric rolls. The thin fine pillars which are seen in every part of the church, and idly supposed to be an artificial composition, came from the Isle of Purbeck, near Corfe, in Dorset."

Redford chapel, a curacy; gross income £136. Patrons, trustees.—16th. St. Stephen's, a discharged rectory; rated at £7 17s. 3d.; gross income £85. Patron, the bishop of Exeter.—17th. The Holy Trinity, a discharged rectory; rated at £11 6s. 4d.; gross income £177. Patrons, the dean and chapter. The church was rebuilt in 1819-20. It is not at all an elegant structure.—18th. St. Sidwell's, a perpetual curacy; gross income £252. Patron, the vicar of Heavitree. These parishes are all—with the exception of St. David's and St. Sidwell's, which are in the jurisdiction of the dean and chapter—in the archd. and dio. of Exeter. The churches are small, and none of them require further notice, except St. Sidwell's, which is a handsome modern Gothic structure, capable of accommodating 1,000 persons. The foundation of a public cemetery was laid in June, 1835. Here are two independent churches, formed in 1770, and 1797; two Baptist, in 1600, and 1817; a Presbyterian, in 1719; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1812; besides places of worship for other Methodists and Unitarians; a Friends' meeting house; a Roman Catholic chapel built in 1792, and a Jews' synagogue.

Schools.—There are 56 daily schools, several of which are endowed, and 13 seminaries devoted to infant training. The Devon and Exeter National central school, founded in 1811, contains 726 pupils, and has a small lending library attached. The Exeter British school is attended by about 260 pupils. St. John's hospital, including the free grammar school and Blue coat school, was originally founded in the 23^d Henry III. "Gilbert, and John Long, merchants of Exeter," says Tanner, "were accounted founders of the priory, or rather hospital of St. John the Baptist, within the east gate of this city, about A. D. 1239. It was of the order of St. Austin; consisted of 5 priests, 9 choristers, and 12 poor; and was valued, 26^o Hen. VIII., at £102 12s. 9d. per annum. The site, with the Ankeresse house in the churchyard, was granted, 32^o Hen. VIII., to Thomas Carew." By indenture dated 14th January, 21^o James I., "the house site, circuit and precinct of the late dissolved hospital or house of St. John—and the site of the church and churchyard of the said hospital, and other messuages, lands," &c., were granted to the corporation, or chamber of the city, by Joan Crossing, widow, and Francis Crossing, son of Hugh Crossing, alderman of Exeter, in accomplishment of his charitable purpose to found an hospital in the city, "to be employed for an hospital in setting the poor to work." Several new benefactions were added, and a part of the premises devoted to the education of poor children, under the establishment of the grammar-school. In 1637, the hospital was incorporated by letters patent of King Charles I.; whereby it was intended that a part of the building should be allotted for the habitation of aged or impotent poor persons of the city and county of Exeter; but that intention was never carried into effect. Numerous gifts have since been bestowed on this charity, on the foundation of one of which, Hele's gift, in 1632, rather more than half the number of the boys Blue school was constituted, at the time of the inquiry, in 1821. The boys in the Blue school, from 20 to 25 in number, are appointed by the governors, from the city and county of Exeter, with the exception of those for whom a specific mode of nomination is pointed out by the donors. They are admitted from 7 to 10 years of age, and are educated, clothed, and maintained, till they are 14, and each of them is entitled to a premium of £6 on being bound apprentice. The Blue school seems to have been the principal object of most of the benefactors to the hospital. The grammar-school was instituted for the gratuitous instruction of the sons of freemen; the number of free scholars on this foundation, at the time of the inquiry, was only 2: there were 60 day scholars instructed at a limited charge; and the income of the charity was upwards of £830, besides funds in the hands of the corporation to the amount of £3,300, and other claims against that body. Out of the income the sum of £10 per annum was payable to Moreton Hampstead, and £42 to lecturers at Exeter college, Oxford. There are 16 exhibitions, chiefly to either of the universities of Cambridge or Oxford, enjoyed by this hospital: 6 of them are for £36 each, of which 2 are for sons of freemen of the city of Exeter; 2 for natives of the county of Devon, and 2 for those of Cornwall, or failing them, also of Exeter, all bred 3 years in the free school, and to continue 7 years: the other exhibitions are mostly for £8 each; 4 of them payable from the Blue maids' hospital, and appointed for 2 scholars from the high school of Exeter, and 2 from the grammar-school of St. John's hospital, to Exeter college, Oxford; but it was observed by the charity commissioners that "the high school, which was an ancient establishment, but which is not known to have had any regular endowment, is supposed to have been united with the free grammar-school, but has certainly not existed distinct from it for many years." Hele's—or as it is usually called, the Blue maid's—hospital is situated in Mary-Arches lane, and was also under the government of the chamber of Exeter. The original endowment whereon the foundation rested, was bestowed by Elize Hele, Esq., in 1656. At the inquiry, 7 poor girls were educated, clothed, boarded, and occasionally bound apprentice, with a fee of £4: income £74 4s. 6d. Of the funds of this charity, £1,636 19s. 6d. were in the hands of the corporation. The hospital is calculated for the reception of a much larger number of girls than had of late years been admitted. The Episcopal schools were established in 1709, under the patronage and advice of Offspring Blackall, then bishop of Exeter, and were originally supported by voluntary subscriptions and collections made at the cathedral and the parish-churches, &c. Various donations were thereafter made; and the permanent income at the time of the inquiry amounted to about £450 per annum, whilst the casual receipts were calculated at £290. The bishop and all the dignitaries of the cathedral, the mayor, and justices of the peace of the city for the time being, and the incumbents of the parishes of Exeter, were considered as trustees ex officio: certain benefactors were also trustees. On the opening of new schools in 1818, the number of boys was increased from 100 to 140, and that of girls from 100 to 110. They are appointed from the city or county, or from the out-parish of St. Thomas, and must be between 7 and 10 years of age when admitted. They are taught on the Madras system, and generally dismissed at the age of 12. Children of parents of all religious persuasions are admitted. All the children are clothed. The average annual expenditure on this charity, was £693 17s. 6d. The Protestant dissenting charity school is principally supported by voluntary contributions.

Charities.—These are very numerous in Exeter. Besides those appropriated to education, there are a number of well-endowed almshouses and hospitals, the principal of which are the following:—Wynard's hospital,—or "God's House," as it was also styled,—founded in 1439, and inhabited by 12 poor people: income in 1836, £119 4s. 8d. "The ten cells," an almshouse for 10 poor women, founded about 1406: income in 1836, £214 3s. 4d. Hurst's almshouses, founded in 1567, for 12 poor people: income in 1836, £292 9s. 3d. Magdalen hospital, founded by Bishop Bartholomew, previous to 1184, for lepers, but afterwards inhabited by the poor, as no lepers could be found: income £64 17s. This is the most ancient hospital now existing at Exeter, and perhaps altogether the most ancient foundation of the kind, if we except the Frates Calendarum, in the Calendarhay, an almshouse for 12 men and 12 women, which Bishop Grandison converted into a college for the vicars choral. There are also Palmer's, Gilbert's, Bonville's, and Lant's almshouses, &c. There are many other miscellaneous and valuable charities, with minor charities belonging more particularly to the several parishes within the city and county boundaries. The income of all the city charities, so far as they came under the cognizance of the charity commissioners, may be valued at about £5,000 per annum. Those under the control of the chamber, were transferred to the management of 31 municipal charity trustees, appointed 4th February, 1837. The income of these in 1837-8, is reported by the new trustees to have amounted to £1,511 5s. 9d.; though they state that the value of the charity property, if in hand, would be about £3,800: much of it at present is leased on lives: the leases were granted by the former trustees. Other trustees were appointed on 27th February, 1837, for the charities in this city belonging to the church, by whose returns for 1837-8, it appears that the income of these amounted to £3,008 14s. 8d.: that of St. John's hospital alone then amounted to £1,276 3s. 7d.: no report of the present state of any of the charities is given by the trustees.

Besides all these, there are other valuable charitable institutions in this city. The principal are the Devon and Exeter hospital, for the sick and indigent, founded by Dr. Alured Clark in 1740, and opened in 1747: it contains above 200 beds, and is supported by subscription, and by a considerable income derived from funded property. There are also a dispensary, founded in 1818; an excellent Lunatic asylum, founded in 1801; a deaf and dumb institution; a penitentiary for destitute females; an eye infirmary, named the West of England Infirmary; a lying-in charity; a humane society for recovery of persons apparently drowned; a strangers' friend society, &c. &c.; and there is a large range of workhouses in the London road, with committee-rooms, a governor's house, and accommodation for several hundred poor people. Poor rates, in 1838, £7,500.

Government, &c.—Exeter has, from time immemorial, been invested with great privileges. At the period of the Norman survey, it was found to be exempt from paying taxes. Since then it has received many charters, and grants of immunities, from different monarchs. Its earliest charter in possession of the corporation, appears to have been granted by Henry II., and enrolled in the Black Book of the Exchequer; but the Lysons and others state, that the earliest on record is that of Henry I. confirming the liberties it had enjoyed in the time of the Saxon kings. In the time of King John, "Isabel, his consort, held Exeter in dower, with a fair thereunto belonging." In the 3d year of this sovereign, the burgesses paid a fine of 110 marks for a confirmation of their charters; and about this period, the city, which had previously been governed by Port-reves and bailiffs, was incorporated, and had a mayor for its chief officer; though the corporation claimed it to be so by prescription. In the reign of Edward I., the burgesses and citizens pleaded that their city was an ancient demesne, and that they held it in fee-farm of the crown, paying £39 15s. 3d. To support this claim, they referred to the charter of Henry III., made to his brother Richard, king of the Romans; whereby they further challenged return of writs, a gallows, pillory, &c., and a fair of 4 days, besides 3 weekly markets; which liberties they certified they enjoyed since the time of the Conquest:

upon which they were allowed."—Notitia Parliamentaria, vol. ii. p. 263.—It has been stated that Henry VIII.—but it appears from the municipal reports that Edward VI.—constituted Exeter a distinct county of itself; thus rendering it independent of Devon,—of which it is nevertheless the capital,—and investing it with corresponding privileges. Originally the limits of the city and county were not the same, but they were afterwards made co-terminous except for certain purposes. The boundaries both of the city and of the county of the city, had been annually perambulated at the time of the municipal inquiry in 1835. The old parliamentary boundaries afforded ample space for the extension of buildings towards the north; but at the time of the parliamentary inquiry, in 1831, the suburbs had largely outgrown the borough in almost every direction, and an alteration in the ancient limits, to include what might be considered the town beyond the borough, was accordingly made. St. Thomas on the west, and St. Leonard and Heavitree on the east, were associated with the city in the exercise of the elective franchise. There are now 27 parishes and precincts sharing in the election. Exeter is said to have been one of the first cities that returned members to parliament: at all events, it has returned members ever since the reign of Edward I. The right of election was vested in the freemen and resident freeholders, of whom there were supposed to have been about 1,200: the greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1832 was 1,058. There were then, and still are, 2 members returned. The number of names on the register for 1836 was 3,488, of whom 460 were freemen, 952 freeholders, and 2,076 occupiers; but names were entered in many different parishes on all the lists, as freemen, freeholders, and occupiers: the actual number of electors on the register was supposed to be about 3,150. The sheriff is the returning officer. Exeter is a polling-place, and the principal place of election for the southern division of the county of Devon.

The governing charter of the corporation, previous to the recent changes, was 3rd Charles I.: a charter 10th George III. was granted, but it related only to the administration of justice in the city. The bodies composing the old corporation were a mayor, 8 aldermen, 24 common council-men,—including the mayor and aldermen,—and an indefinite number of freemen. There were also 4 bailiffs, a receiver, sheriff, recorder, chamberlain, coroner, town-clerk, wharfinger, and inferior officers. The common council, usually called the chamber, was the governing body of the corporation. The mayor, recorder, and 8 aldermen, were justices of the peace for the city and county of the city: they were also justices of gaol delivery for the county of the city; and had an exclusive jurisdiction. By charter of George III., it was only required that the mayor or some one of the 7 first, and by election senior, aldermen, and the recorder, should be the quorum. Jurisdiction was granted to this court by the charter of Charles I., over all offences, except treason and misprision of treason: it was appointed to be held 4 times a-year. By this charter the quarter-sessions for the city and county of the city were directed to be held before the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, or any 3 or more of them, of whom any 2 of the mayor, recorder, or 2 senior aldermen were to be two. By the charter of George III. some of the mayor, recorder, and 7 first, and by election senior, aldermen were to be two. By the 1st William IV., c. 70, s. 35, the quarter-sessions were appointed to be held at the same periods as the court of gaol delivery. The heaviest sentence of imprisonment ever passed in this court has been 2 years; the term however, seldom exceeding 1 year. The provost's court, the mayor's court, the sheriff's court, and the court of requests, were the four civil courts held by members of the old corporation. The bailiffs, otherwise called the provosts or stewards, held the provost's court, having cognizance in all real and personal actions to any amount; the jurisdiction extending to the limits of the ancient glais without the walls. The mayor and provosts or bailiffs, held the mayor's court, having a jurisdiction concurrent with the provost's court in personal actions. In this court the masters and wardens of the 13 trading-companies of the city were sworn in, freemen admitted and sworn or disfranchised, and presentments made of fires and chimneys. Within the 8 years previous to 1835, there had only been one cause tried before the under sheriff in the county court, held first Tuesday in every month for all personal actions under 40s. The statute 13^o Geo. III., c. 27. established the court of requests in Exeter, to be held every fortnight before commissioners, for the recovery of debts under 40s., due from persons inhabiting within the city and county. The qualification of 40 of the commissioners in this court, "is paying not less than 3d. per week to the relief of the poor:" they are elected by the votes of the inhabitants of each ward, paying 2d. a week or more for the same purpose. The mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, are also commissioners. Under the new municipal act, Exeter is divided into 6 wards, and is governed by 12 aldermen and 36 councillors. The style of the corporate body is the mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty of the city of Exeter. It is comprehended, in schedule A, of the act amongst the boroughs to have a commission of the peace,—which has accordingly been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed;—and under section II., amongst those the municipal boundaries of which were to be taken until altered by parliament. The limits proposed in the municipal boundary report coincide with those of the new and extended parliamentary borough. The municipal reform act allowed all attorneys of the superior courts to practise in the city and borough court of record for pleas of debt to any amount, and the practice of the court has increased. The nett income of the borough, for 1839, was £12,882 8s. 6d.; expenditure £12,828 15s. 5d.; of which £7,392 13s. 9d. consisted of "principal paid off, and interest," &c.; £1,569 10s. 10d. expenditure on public works, repairs, &c.; £1,215 19s. on police and constables; £533 13s. 10d. on administration of justice, prosecutions, &c.; and £513 11s. 2d. on gaol, maintenance, &c., of prisoners. The judges on the western circuit hold the assizes for the county of the city twice a-year at the guildhall, and twice a-year for the county of Devon at the session-house, where petty-sessions are also held every Friday before the county magistrates. The sessions-house is a handsome building, faced with Portland stone, within the area of Rougemont castle-yard, on the north-west side. It contains two commodious court-rooms, a grand jury room, magistrates' room, &c. County and election meetings, &c., are held in the open area in front of the building. Below the castlehill is the county-gaol, a large and well built brick edifice of modern construction: the situation of this prison is healthy and pleasant, and the interior is well arranged and convenient. Near it are the cavalry barracks. The city gaol and bridewell comprises 36 cells, 7 wards, 8 day rooms, and 6 airing yards. The tread-wheel in operation is unproductive, as there is no machinery connected with it. Some judicious alterations have recently been made in this prison. The cells are not so crowded as formerly, and more attention is paid to ventilation. The number of prisoners, in 1835, was 252. The guildhall is a spacious and convenient structure in the High-street, in the centre of the town. It was built in 1593, and repaired in 1720. It is remarkable for the massiveness and variety of its architecture. The upper story, which projects beyond the line of houses in the street, is supported by an arcade of heavy moorstone columns. Beyond the vestibule is a lofty and spacious common hall, and at the upper end is the court of hustings. Amongst the portraits preserved here are those of Henrietta, daughter of Charles I., and duchess of Orleans, General Monk, the Duke of Albemarle, and other distinguished personages. In the rear of the hall is the Back-grate where culprits were confined previously to their examination. On the upper floor are large rooms, one of which is used as a council chamber, and the other as a grand jury room and for private meetings.

Port, Canal, and Railways.—The port of Exeter extends from the easternmost point of Devon, on the east side of Axmouth, to the Ness Point at Shalden, on the southern bank of the Teign. The river Exe is navigable for vessels of large burthen throughout the length of its estuary to Topsham, a distance of nearly 8 miles: the width of this estuary, in some places, is $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile. The distance between Topsham and Exeter is $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles. Anciently vessels of good size had been accustomed to pass up the river to Exeter bridge, and the tides flowed beyond the city; but in the reign of Henry VIII., the citizens joined in the general complaint to parliament, that the harbours of Devon had been utterly ruined by the stream works of the tanners—see article DEVONSHIRE—Canals:—it was stated that the river from Topsham to Exeter had been thus choked up; or rather, as the citizens, in their petition, stated, by "dryings of sands and gravell, by course of the water, the high spring tides, and the floods of fresh water coming into the said river." There appeared, however, to have been other causes of obstruction, the most grievous of which had originated with the powerful family of the Courtenays. In 1284, Isabella, countess of Devon, had erected a lofty wear across the bed of the river at Topsham, which prevented the taking of salmon and other fish above the wear to the great damage of the city and neighbourhood; and whereas barges or boats—"batelli,"—were accustomed to come up to Exeter bridge with wines and merchandise, to the singular advantage of the city and surrounding country, no boats could then reach the city by reason of the said wear. It was satisfactorily shown, by an inquisition taken at Exeter, 29th August, 1290, in a complaint preferred by the citizens, that the course of the river Exe from Cheakstone, as far up the stream as Exeter bridge, was originally the property of the crown; that the city of Exeter was also an appurtenance to the crown; that King Henry III. had granted the same to his brother, Richard, Earl of Cornwall; that the citizens held the fee-farm of the said city of Richard aforesaid, as they had holden it formerly of the crown, by the yearly payment of £13 9s.: that in virtue of such grant, and of ancient custom, the Exe water belongs to the said city, as far down as the port of Exmouth; that the right of fishing and of using the water was common to all. A verdict was recorded in favour of the city. "Notwithstanding this triumph of reason and justice," however, as observed by the Rev. George Oliver, an eminent scholar and antiquary, in a publication dated in 1826, "the navigation of the river was further impeded, and the trade of the city greatly diminished by Isabella's heir, Hugh, Lord Courtenay, the first of that powerful family who was earl of Devonshire. He built a quay at Topsham, the general receiving place of the city's customs, and his bailiffs obstructed the city's serjeants in the execution of their right of searching and stopping vessels. The citizens very frequently preferred complaints against the illegal encroachments; and though they successfully maintained their right to tolls, as part and appurtenance to the fee-farm of their city, on all imports, and though, as their court rolls demonstrate, they frequently seized and condemned vessels that presumed, without the license, and against the liberty of the city, to discharge their cargoes at Prattysheide alias Exmouth, at Le Torffe or Turf, at Lymptstone, at Powderham, and at Colepole; yet partly owing to the confusion of the times, and partly to the overwhelming influence of the Courtenay interest, the removal of the wear could not be accomplished. Nay, Holingshead asserts that Edward Courtenay, earl of Devon, who died in 1419, succeeded in spite of all opposition to erect two other wears, viz. St. James's Wear, extending across the river, (but which continued to be a stake wear only until the year 1811,) and another at Lampreford. All such wears had been expressly forbidden by magna charta as public nuisances." The disputes with Hugh Courtenay, are recorded by Izaeke to have been occasioned by 3 pots of fish in the market of Exeter, of which the "caters" of the earl and of the bishop of Exeter had been simultaneously determined to obtain possession. The mayor, to whom the difference was referred, adjudged one pot to the bishop, another to the earl, and a third to the use of the market. This decision, and a subsequent determination of the mayor and council, that no freeman of Exeter should wear any "foreigner's livery, badge, or cognizance, without the mayor's license," offended the earl, who immediately impeded the navigation of the river, "stopping, filling, and quirting the same," says Hooker, "with great trees, timber, and stones, in such sort that no vessel or vessels could passe or repasse." The tides thereafter only reached Topsham, the advantage which was probably the chief object of the earl's measures, as that place was part of his estate, and became exceedingly flourishing in consequence.

To provide a remedy for all these ancient grievances, an act of parliament was obtained in the reign of Henry VIII., to cut, from Topsham to Exeter, a canal or water course, called "the haven or new work," to which Leland thus alludes—folio 64. vol. I. Itinerary:—"Men of Excestre contend to make the haven to cum up to Excestre self. At this tyme shippes cum not farther up but to Apsham." Partial but ineffectual attempts were made to accomplish this work; but it was not till after the year 1563, that the canal, one of the most ancient in the empire, permitted lighters of 16 tons burthen, by the aid of sluices, to ascend with their cargoes to Watergate. This "new work or haven," imperfect and inefficient as it was, still ranks its designer, John Trewe, an engineer of Glamorganshire, amongst the very first as well as ablest projectors of inland navigation. The expense of the undertaking amounted to £5,000. After the restoration it was found that the works of the quay, wharf, and haven, had been shamefully neglected. The king had issued his commission to constitute Exeter a royal port, a circumstance which gave new energy to commercial interests; and authority was obtained from parliament to widen and improve the canal. The work was begun about 1675; and, according to Prince, the chamber had expended nearly £20,000 on the business, up to the year 1699: but though the canal was actually passable, new improvements were still suggested and adopted, till at last, in the early part of 1725, "the port was opened;" and for many years the canal brought such an influx of trade and wealth to the merchants of Exeter, that we are assured by Andrew Brice, in his Topographical Dictionary, that, in the year 1750, the amount of woollen goods, corn, and hides, shipped from this port, rose to the immense sum of one million sterling; and the act of George II. c. 8. for opening the port of Exeter, for the importation of wool and woollen yarn from Ireland, contributed so greatly to increase this prosperity, that one of the Lysons was assured the annual exports of woollen cloth alone, in 1768, exceeded a million in value. This port, however, suffered considerably from the subsequent wars with America and France, which inflicted deep injury on all commercial enterprise.

The canal being even still found only capable, in general, of admitting vessels of comparatively small burthen, and subject to the ebb and flow of the river, which, at the entrance rises 13 feet in spring-tides, operations were recommenced in 1825, by Mr. James Green, the able county surveyor, sanctioned by the favourable opinion of Mr. Telford, the eminent engineer; and the cut was further extended to Turf, a deeper part of the tideway. The canal is now 5 miles in length, and 15 feet in depth. There is a sea-lock at Turf, 120 feet long and 30 feet wide. The entrance is deep enough to admit vessels drawing 10 feet water even at neap-tides, when there is not water enough for them to proceed to Topsham: in short, any vessels which can pass the bar at Exmouth,—that is, any drawing from 12 to 14 feet water,—are enabled to proceed at once to Exeter, discharge their cargoes and clear out, without taking the ground. Two of the larger vessels are also now enabled to pass easily abreast along the course of the canal. Vessels which draw too much water, either to cross the bar or to navigate the canal, still lie in the bight at Exmouth, and discharge their cargoes into lighters, as before, for Topsham, or Turf and Exeter. The excellent basin, or floating-dock, opposite the quay at Exeter, is considered the chef d'œuvre of this work; and completes the whole, preventing vessels losing time, in consequence of the canal being so frequently closed, on account of the floods of the river from inundations, to which this city has always been subject. The extreme length of this basin is 917 feet, and its width 110 feet 6 inches over two-thirds of the length, and at the lower end or entrance 90 feet. Its uniform depth is 18 feet; and it has commodious sites on its margin for the erection of suitable wharfs, &c. The custom-house and other buildings are situated on the old quay. There are bonded warehouses for all goods except tobacco, unless by removal coast-wise for home use and ship stores. Near the new basin of the canal, is the terminus of the Bristol and Exeter railway, for an account of which, and of other projected railways,—see DEVONSHIRE.

The municipal commissioners state, that a debt of £100,000 has been incurred and expended on the canal alone: that this enormous expenditure has been a subject of much complaint on the part of some of the merchants of the city, themselves; and that the advantages attending it were never likely to be at all equal to the outlay; though they admit that the canal has doubtless materially increased the facility of vessels reaching the city, and enabled those of a greater draught to enter the port at dead neap-tides. In consequence of the alteration, the tolls were materially increased upon many articles, the charges bearing a large proportion to the freight; sometimes as much as $\frac{1}{4}$ part of the freight on a coasting voyage: it has been also alleged, that the improvements, as was perhaps to be expected, have materially injured the interests of Topsham, where there appears to be still a considerable trade, and at the quays and wharfs of which, the steam-vessels, plying regularly between London and Exeter, land their passengers and traffic: the injury complained of arose both from toils leviable without a correspondent benefit; and from a decrease in depth of water, by the filling up of the channel, in the sides as well as in the centre, since the embankment of the canal. The engineer who constructed the canal, however, denied that the embankment had any thing to do with the obstructions in the navigation at Topsham.

Trade and manufactures.—Enough has been already said, both here and under article DEVONSHIRE,—which see,—to show the former extent and value of the trade connected with this port. The Exe, in a commercial point of view, has been of great importance to Devonshire, but the trade of Exeter is not at present nearly so great as it formerly was. It was calculated, say the Lysons, by an eminent mercantile man, resident near Exeter, “that for nearly two centuries previous to the Spanish war of 1796, the average annual amount of the exports had been £300,000, besides the sales to London and the East India Company, of serges and other articles, which were probably about the same amount.” The exports then—in 1822—did not exceed £60,000 per annum, exclusive of the East India trade, which was calculated at £200,000. For making these woollens, about 4,000 bags of wool were imported at Exeter from Kent: the rest made use of was the product of Devonshire and the neighbouring counties. In allusion to the late expensive improvements of the port, it has been said, that “from the completion of this useful work, we may date a new era to the commercial greatness of Exeter;” but although the trade of the port has to a certain extent increased, the advantages of these improvements have not yet been materially felt. This has been attributed to the burden of the town’s dues, and of the heavy charge for pilotage, together with the buoyage, rates of the harbour—payable to the Trinity-house,—causes which have operated most unfavourably on the trade of Exeter. The principal exports are serges and other woollen goods, paper, and manganese: the imports are general merchandise,—including groceries from London,—timber, coals, chiefly from Newcastle, and limestone. The gross receipt of customs-duty at Exeter port, for 1838, was £34,496 3s. 2d.; for 1839, £90,081. The gross amount of excise duty in the Exeter district for 1838, was £70,710 0s. 4d.; for 1839, £80,460 14s. 4½d.

The markets at Exeter, are of great antiquity, and are held by prescription: the principal market-day now is Friday, on which is a great corn market, and it has been esteemed the greatest market in the west of England for all kinds of provisions: there are markets also on Wednesday and Saturday. The market for wool was transferred from Crediton to Exeter in 1538. The weavers and fullers of Exeter held their meetings in a hall called Tucker’s hall: they were subsequently united to the merchant adventurers who were incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, in 1559, under a governor and four consuls. Izaeke, under the year 1485, mentions 7 fairs at Exeter: Ash-Wednesday, Shere-Thursday, Whit-Monday, St. Mary Magdalene, Lammas, St. Nicholas, and St. Thomas. The corporation having the power of altering the fair days, they are now held on Ash-Wednesday, Whit-Monday, August 1st, (if the first of August falls on a Sunday or Monday, the fair is held on the Tuesday,) and December 6th, for horned cattle, horses, and almost every commodity. The cloth halls used during the fair for the sale of woollen cloth occupy the cloister under the school and library at St. John’s hospital; and new markets, as already noticed, have been built, and recently opened

Two mints, it is said, were established at Exeter by King Athelstan, and these appear to have existed in the reign of King John. Exeter was one of the six towns in which mints were established by King William III., in 1696: the silver then coined at this place being distinguished by the letter E under the king’s bust. The mint is said to have been at this time in Hele’s hospital. The Devon and Cornwall banking company, the National provincial bank of England, the West of England, and South Wales District banking company, the Western District bank, and the Bank of England, have establishments here. A savings’ bank was instituted in 1815.

The manufactures of this city were also formerly of much greater extent than they now are, though it has always been more celebrated for trade than manufactures. The merchants purchased the woollen goods manufactured throughout the county of Devon as they came from the loom, and procured them to be milled, dyed, and finished before they were exported. Fulling-mills at Exeter are mentioned in deeds of the time of Edward I.; but the woollen manufacture itself was at one time carried on to a considerable extent in this city. The manufacture of white serges was very flourishing in the eighteenth century: great quantities of these were dyed and finished at home, but a still greater proportion was sent white to London, to be there dyed and finished for the foreign markets. In 1822, the manufactures of the city and its immediate vicinity had much diminished, and were of small extent, consisting chiefly of coarse cloths, and employing from 300 to 400 hands. There had been till recently, a considerable manufactory of cassimeres and shawls at Exwick; but that, together with a large cotton factory in the Wearfield, had been discontinued. In 1838, there were only 2 woollen mills, employing 122 hands; and about 300 hand looms were employed by the manufacturers in the city. See DEVONSHIRE.

History.—Exeter is of antiquity so remote that its origin cannot be distinctly ascertained; but there can be no doubt that it was a settlement of the Britons long previous to the Roman invasion. Its ancient British name was Caerwise, also the ancient British name of Usk in Monmouthshire: by the Romans they were both called Isca; and, to distinguish them, the latter had the additional appellation of Silurum, whilst Exeter was called Isca Damnoniorum; under which name it is mentioned by Antoninus in his Itinerary; and by Ptolemy, the geographer, in the second century. From the number of coins, small bronze statues,—evidently household gods or Penates,—tesselated pavements, and other Roman antiquities, discovered near the walls, and in the vicinity of the city, it must have been an important station. The Romans, it is said, at one time honoured it also with the name of Augusta. It is uncertain how long it retained the appellation of Isca Damnoniorum; but, in the reign of Alfred, it had acquired that of Exan Cestre, the castle on the Exe, whence Excestre and Exeter. The river Exe is the foundation both of its Roman and English name; and the river itself, as well as the rivers Usk and Eske, are all derived from an ancient British word signifying water. One of our old historians, Roger Hovedon, who tells us that Caerwise was the British name for Exeter, explains it to mean Civitas aquæ. From the number of religious establishments it contained, the Saxons called it Monkton. “This city,”—say the editors of the old ‘Magna Britannia,’ published in 1738,—“abounded with religious houses, before the dissolution, and other lesser suppressions. Within the circuit of the cathedral were three; one for the monks, supposed to be founded by King Ethelred; another for nuns, which is now called the Kalendar Hay; and a third for the monks of St. Benedict, founded by King Athelstan. and is that part of the cathedral that is now called Our Lady's Chapel. Within the east-gate stood the priory of St. John for regular canons, built (as is said) by Gilbert and Robert Long, brothers; St. James's abbey, replenished by Dominicans; and St. Nicholas, a monastery of black canons of St. Benedict, founded by William the Conqueror. The abbot of Battel built a priory here, which he dedicated to St. Nicholas, and made it a cell to his abbey; and without the south-gate was a priory of grey friars Franciscans: so that it is no wonder that this city bore the name of Monkton, when so many monasteries were in it."

The earliest event relating to Exeter, mentioned by any of our historians, is its having been besieged by Vespasian. It has been its fate to sustain several severe sieges; but the greatest calamities it ever experienced, were inflicted by the Danes, who, in the reign of Alfred, in 876, in violation of a solemn treaty, surprised and routed the king's horsemen, and mounting their steeds, rode to Exeter, where they remained in possession for the winter. Alfred afterwards invested the city by sea and land, and having defeated the Danish fleet which was coming to the assistance of their countrymen in Exeter, the latter were compelled to evacuate the city. At the Norman conquest, it withstood the authority of William I., who besieged and took the city; and it was subsequently exposed to hostilities in the reigns of Stephen and Edward IV. In the time of Henry VII. Perkin Warbeck, the real or pretended son of Edward IV., landed in Cornwall; assembled an army of 8,000 men; and with this force laid siege to Exeter; but the citizens, headed by the earl of Devonshire and his son, and other noblemen and gentlemen, gallantly defended the city, and obliged him to retreat. The conduct of the citizens during this siege so conciliated the favour of King Henry, that on his visit to the city shortly after, he bestowed on them great commendations, and gave them a cup of maintenance and his own sword, which he then wore, to be borne in state before the mayor on all public occasions. The last siege sustained by this city was in the reign of Edward VI., when the proposed changes in religious worship occasioned an alarming insurrection of the inhabitants of Cornwall and Devonshire. The insurgents encompassed the city for five and thirty days, and the inhabitants were reduced to great extremity, being obliged to feed on horse flesh, and other loathsome viands. Their loyalty and bravery on this occasion, caused the king to make a grant to the city of the entire manor of Exe-island. During the parliamentary war, Exeter adhered at first to the royal cause; but the opposite principles of the lord-lieutenant gave the advantage to the other party, and the city soon fell into their hands. It was subsequently taken for the king by Prince Maurice and Sir John Berkeley, the latter of whom was appointed governor, and it became the head-quarters of the royalists in the west of England. The queen made it her residence, and her daughter, the duchess of Orleans, was born here. In 1646, it surrendered to General Fairfax, after a blockade of two months, and since that time its history records no very important events. Among the distinguished natives of this city, were Josephus Iscanus, a Latin poet of the 13th century, and cotemporary with him, Baldwin, archbishop of Canterbury; Sir Thomas Bodley, founder of the Bodleian library; Dr. Buchan, eminent for his works on heraldry; Mr. Locke, composer of music; and Hooker the historian of his native city. The Cecil family derive the titles of earl and marquess from Exeter.

EXFORD, a parish in the hund. of Carhampton, union of Dulverton, county of Somerset; $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west by north of Dulverton, on the Exe river, on the borders of Exmoor. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £18 2s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £318. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £200 8s. Patrons, the master and fellows of Peter-house, Cambridge. Here are two daily schools. Charities, in 1825, £25 7s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £172 12s. About a mile-and-a-half eastward of the church are the vestiges of some ancient iron works. Many of the old pits from which the ore was dug still remain; and great quantities of the scoria are found about them. The environs of the village are intersected by deep winding valleys, and romantic hollows, on which are many tumuli, called here castles. Acres 6,310. Houses 82. A. P. £1,569. Pop., in 1801, 375; in 1831, 447.

EXHALL, a parish in the Stratford division of Barlichway, union of Alcester, county of Warwick; 2 miles south-east of Alcester. Living, a rectory annexed to the curacy of Wigglesford, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 17s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £423. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1825, £1 11s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 1s. Acres 780. Houses 44. A. P. £362. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 241.

EXHALL, a parish in the liberties of Coventry, union of Foleshill, county of Warwick; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Coventry, and near the Coventry canal. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; valued at £197; gross income £143. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Knightly. Improprate and vicarial tithes, the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1761. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1833, £19 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £313 15s. The hand-loom weaving is carried on in this as well as all the other parishes in the liberties of Coventry: in 1818 there were 16 looms, and 31 weavers employed in the ribbon trade. In 1838 the report of the state of the hand-loom weaving in this parish, is mixed up with that in the parish of FOLESHILL—which see—and COVENTRY. Houses 192. Acres 1,750. A. P. £3,071. Pop., in 1801, 694; in 1831, 840.

EXMINSTER HUNDRED, in the south-east of Devonshire. Area 43,740 acres. Houses 3,187. Pop., in 1831, 18,232.

EXMINSTER, a parish in the above hund., union of St. Thomas; 4 miles south-east by south of Exeter, on the western bank of the river Exe. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £12; gross income £253. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £725 1s. 4d. Patrons, the governors of the church of Crediton. Here is a daily school, partly supported by a yearly sum paid by the corporation of Crediton, and partly by payments from the parents of the children: other charities, in 1823, £27 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £895 10s. A fair is held here on the 1st Thursday in May. Acres 4,040. Houses 181. A. P. £9,724. Pop., in 1801, 795; in 1831, 1,113.

EXMOOR, an extra-parochial liberty in the west of the county of Somerset. Acres 19,270. Houses 10. Pop., in 1821, 113; in 1831, 52. "Exmoor, with that part of the adjoining country which forms a portion of the same mass of elevated land, extends from the valley of Stogumber and Crowcombe, separating it from the Quantock hills on the east, to the Hangman hills, on the British channel, near Combe Martin on the west. Near the latter place, this high land forms a point, whence it sweeps to the south-east by a curved line passing by Paracombe, Chapman Barrows, Span Head, and North Molton Ridge. Its southern boundary ranges from thence, by Mollond Down, Dulverton Common, and Haddon Down, to Heydon Down, and Main Down, near Wiveliscombe, whence the high land trends away to the Stogumber and Crowcombe valley above noticed, part of which so rises between the Exmoor mass of high land and the Quantock hills as to throw the drainage waters in opposite directions. The highest portion of this elevated land is Dunkery Beacon, on the south of Porlock, which rises to the height of 1,668 feet above the level of the sea. On the west, Chapman Barrows attain an approximative height of 1,540 feet,* and Span Head, east-north-east from High Bray, a height of 1,610 feet (a) above the same level. Along the southern boundary, the southern end of North Molton Ridge rises to an elevation of 1,413 feet (a) above the sea, and Haddon Hill, on the east of Dulverton, to 1,140 feet (a). The hills and cliffs bordering the Bristol channel, and constituting a portion of the general Exmoor high land from Minehead to Combe Martin, attain somewhat corresponding heights, forming a coast remarkable for its general elevation and the sub-alpine character of some of its valleys, as, for example, those near Linton. North hill, on the coast near Minehead, attains a height of 1,059 feet, according to the admiralty charts, by Captain Denham, R.N., and, following the same authority, Culborne hill, near Porlock, is 1,211 feet; Hall hill, Countisbury, near Linton, 1,145 feet; the hill on the west of Trentishoe Barrow, 1,187 feet; and the Great Hangman hill, near Combe Martin, 1,083 feet above the level of the sea.—[Geological Report by De la Beche.] Some of these hills are cultivated, and others marsh or waste lands covered with fern or wild thyme; and, on the whole, Exmoor is a dreary, wild, and sterile range of country. It was originally a forest, the wood of which is said to have been consumed at the ancient iron works of Exford, on its borders; but a thorn bush, or a few straggling willows on the margin of a brook, are all that it now affords in the shape of trees. Many curious plants are found here, however, and in the neighbourhood around it. A solitary red-deer may sometimes be seen browsing on such herbage as it can obtain. This forest was, in the time of the Druids, dedicated to religious rites. Here the attentive observer can perceive many traces of ancient sepulchres; but to whose memory they were erected, it is now impossible to discover: whether kings, statesmen, or warriors, their names and actions are for ever consigned to oblivion. The very urns in which they were buried are mouldered into dust. A few simple stones, half-wasted away by the influence of time, serve only to mark the spot which covers their ashes. On the skirts of this forest are a number of circular intrenchments, called, in the maps, castles; but the inconsiderable size of many of them, and the position of others, have induced the idea that they have been thrown up for the celebration of Druidical ceremonies, rather than for warlike purposes. Cowes castle, situated on the river Barle, north-west from Withypool, appears to be an exception to this opinion. At the western extremity of Exmoor is Sadler's stone, near the source of the rivers Exe and Barle.

EXMOUTH, a chapelry in the parish of Littleham,

in the east division of the hund. of Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 10 miles south-east of Exeter, situated at the mouth of the Exe, between the cliffs. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Littleham. Here are two Independent churches, formed in 1778 and 1807; and a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. There are 4 daily schools. The town was originally but a small fishing hamlet, but is now a well frequented watering place. Many good houses have been built for the accommodation of visitors: there are hot and cold baths, and a good assembly room, with every convenience and attraction. It is well protected from the north-east and south-east winds by the hills behind it. On a plain, at the summit of these, rise several springs which supply the place with water. The surrounding scenery is very picturesque, the walks very pleasant, and the air highly salubrious. From Chapel-hill some very fine views may be obtained, the beauty of which is greatly heightened by the plantations of the Manshead and Powderham castle estates. The sea view is also very fine, from the interspersions of barren rocks and woody summits of various and unequal heights and shapes seen along the shore. Vessels take in pilots at this town for Turf and Topsham. There is no trade but that occasioned by an influx of visitors; but lace-making has been the means of earning a livelihood among women of the lower classes. In the reign of Edward III., this port furnished 10 vessels and 193 men to aid the king in his war with France. Exmouth gives the title of Viscount to the Pellew family. Acres 2,260. Houses 670. A. P. £8,647. Pop., in 1801, 1,909; in 1831, 3,189. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,278 10s.

EXNING, a parish in the hund. of Lackford, union of Newmarket, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north-west of Newmarket. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 7s. 6d.; gross income £315. Great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1807. There are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 daily and 5 infant schools, in this parish. Charities, in 1829, £70 5s. per annum, besides the value of 10 combs of rye paid annually out of the rectory. Poor rates, in 1838, £695 15s. Acres 5,710. Houses 172. A. P. £6,293. Pop., in 1801, 565; in 1831, 917.

EXTON, a parish in the hund. of Alstoe, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 5 miles east-north-east of Oakham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 7s. 8d.; gross income £336. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. N. Noel, Bart. Great and small tithes, the property of lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1799–1800. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1820, £17 per annum, besides an interest in charities belonging to Burley and Cottesmore. Poor rates, in 1838, £382 13s. Acreage, including that of Horn, 4,860. Houses 150. A. P. £5,141. Pop., in 1801, 787; in 1831, 751.

EXTON, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Dulverton, county of Somerset; 4 miles north-north-east of Dulverton, on the eastern bank of the river Exe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £14 12s. 11d.; gross income £291. Patron, in 1835, J. Evered, Esq. There is a day and Sunday school here. Charities, in 1825, £1 3s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 10s. Acres 3,870. Houses 64. A. P. £1,579. Pop., in 1801, 251; in 1831, 847.

EXTON, a parish in the hund. of Fawley, union of Droxford, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 5 miles north-east of Bishop's-Waltham.

* By approximative heights, those are to be understood which have not been taken with large instruments, but with ordinary sized theodolites, or having been taken with large instruments there was something uncertain in the observations, arising either from the state of the atmosphere, or other disturbing cause, which prevented great accuracy. The approximative heights will be marked (a) in the text, and may generally be considered as approaching to the truth within a few feet, more particularly for the smaller heights.

Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 6s. 0½d.; gross income £358. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £453 2s. 11d. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. There are 2 daily schools here. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the cheyney-court held at Winchester. Acres 2,210. Houses 41. A. P. £2,146. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 283. Poor rates, in 1838, £302 3s.

EXTWISTLE. See BRIERCLIFFE WITH EXTWISTLE.

EYAM, a parish in the hund. of High-Peak, union of Bakewell, county of Derby; 5 miles east by north of Tideswell. It comprises the townships of Eyam and Woodland-Eyam, and the hamlet of Foolow. Acres 5,030. Houses 303. A. P. £3,827. Pop., in 1801, 1,281; in 1831, 1,372. Houses of the township 205. Pop., in 1801, 817; in 1831, 911. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £13 15s. 5d.; gross income £235. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £184 5s. 7½d. Patrons, in 1835, the dukes of Devonshire and Buckingham, and the Earl of Thanet. There is a very beautiful ancient cross in the churchyard. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1827, £13 2s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £371 7s. In 1665, when the plague was raging in London, the infection was conveyed, as is supposed, from thence to this place in a package of goods: the dreadful distemper spread rapidly and carried off 259 of the inhabitants. It is stated by Rhodes, on the authority of Miss Seward, the celebrated authoress, who was born here during the incumbency of her father, that nearly a century afterwards, "five of the villagers, employed, in the summer of 1757, in digging near Riley Grave Stones, found some linen or woollen cloth not entirely consumed; and that even at this distant period of time 'the subtle, unextinguished, though much abated power of the most dreadful of all diseases, awakened from the dust, in which it so long had slumbered.' She adds, 'the men all sickened of a putrid fever, and three of the five died; the disorder was contagious, and proved mortal to numbers of the inhabitants of Eyam.' From this account it appears that the very ghost of this terrible pest, rising from the tomb, gave awful proof of its former malignancy, after the lapse of a century." Mr. Rhodes expresses some very judicious doubts as to the accuracy of the information given to Miss Seward. It must be admitted, he observes, however, that the place called Riley Grave Stones appears to have been more generally resorted to than any other on this mournful occasion, a fact attested by many stones yet to be found, with the dreadful year 1666 engraven on them. A number of these stones, with which the fields about Eyam were strown, have been used for building: one man has floored his house, and another his barn, with them.

EYAM-DALE is highly romantic and picturesque: it abounds with elevated rocks and interesting caverns. "Cucklet church," says Rhodes, "is a rock projecting from a steep hill, and excavated through in different directions to the arches, in the midst of a romantic dell, and surrounded with the rocks and the mountains of the Peak. Here Mompesson administered the consolations of religion to his mourning people, during a period of sorrow and suffering almost unparalleled in village history. Cucklet church consists of a flinty combination of what the miners denominate Chert Balls, and of consequence it is almost impenetrably hard. The dell in which it is placed is rich with verdure, wood, and rock. Its steep and rugged sides are embellished with the hazel, the wild-rose, the dog-berry, and the yew; beautifully chequered with the light and silvery branches of the birch, and the more ample foliage and deeper colouring of the oak and the elm. The tall aspiring ash, which from its prevalence in this part of Derbyshire may be called the Tree of the Peak, is likewise profusely scattered throughout the dell. The ash, indeed, is peculiarly entitled to the appellation here bestowed upon it. Wherever a cottage rears its head, there flourishes the ash: wherever the side of a hill or the base of a rock is adorned with trees, there wave the graceful branches of the ash; and the rivers that circulate through the dales of Derbyshire, have their banks decorated, and their various windings marked, by this graceful tree, which universally characterizes the woodland scenery of the Peak. This dell opens into Middleton dale, the wildness of which it softens and improves by its milder features. Here its extreme width prevails. nearer Eyam the two sides rapidly approximate, and a little above Cucklet church they form the entrance into a narrow chasm, called by the villagers the Salt Pan. The name is sufficiently undignified, but the picture it presents is exquisite of its kind. Two perpendicular rocks terminate the dell, and on their nearest approach, where they meet within a few paces only, the lofty trees and thick underwood with which they are crested, cast an almost midnight darkness into the deep space that separates them; while the elm and the ash, which flourish at their base, throw their boughs athwart the gloomy cleft, and intermingle their topmost foliage with the descending branches from above. The trees in this lovely dell have a majestic character, and during the summer months the tufts of brushwood, which are scattered along its steep sides, are fancifully festooned with honeysuckles and roses. The wild roses in Derbyshire, wherever the limestone soil prevails, are peculiarly beautiful; and exhibit not only a luxuriance of growth but a richness of colour unsurpassed in any part of the kingdom."

It has been noticed, as a curious and interesting fact, that the great earthquake which nearly destroyed Lisbon, in 1755, was very sensibly felt in many parts of Derbyshire, and particularly in the lead mines near Eyam. Haycliff mine, now no longer worked, was once the grand depository of that extraordinary phenomenon in the mineral world, provincially called Slickensides. The external appearance of this curious species of Galena is well known wherever mineralogy has been studied. At the present time good specimens of it are extremely rare, and can only be met with in cabinets that have been long established. In those mines where it has most prevailed, it exhibits but little variety either in form or character. An upright pillar of limestone-rock, intermixed with calcareous spar, contains this exploding ore: the surface is thinly coated over with lead, which resembles a covering of plumbago, and it is extremely smooth, bright, and even. The effects of this extraordinary mineral are not less singular than terrific. A blow with a hammer, a stroke or a scratch with a miner's pick, are sufficient to rend the rocks asunder with which it is united. The stroke is immediately succeeded by a crackling noise, accompanied with a sound not unlike the mingled hum of a swarm of bees: shortly afterwards, an explosion follows, so loud and appalling, that even the miners, though a hardy and rather daring race of men, turn pale and tremble at the shock.

EYDON, a parish in the hund. of Chipping-Warden, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 9 miles south-south-west of Daventry. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £16 16s. 3d.; gross income £450. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Rectorial, pre-dial, &c., tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1761. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,620. Houses 139. A. P. £2,611. Pop., in 1801, 484; in 1831, 630. Poor rates, in 1838, £274 5s.

EYE (THE). See LEICESTERSHIRE.

EYE, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hund. of Hartismere, union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 20 miles north of Ipswich, and 89½ miles north-east by north of London, on a branch of the river Waveney, and near the Eastern Counties railway from London to Norwich. Acres 4,320. Houses 397. A. P. £6,474. Pop., in 1801, 1,734; in 1831, 2,313. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 14s. 7d.; gross income £333. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. Kerrison, Bart. The church is a large handsome building. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists: a Baptist church was formed in 1810. A priory of Benedictine monks was founded here in the time of the Conqueror. Its yearly revenues were rated at £161 2s. 3d. q. Dugd. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, the grammar-school, is endowed. There are almshouses, namely, the Magdalene almshouse, Bidingfield's almshouses, and the town's houses, occupied by poor people. Charities, in 1829, £495 15s. 8d.; of which £328 consisted of income of town lands partly applied to corporation purposes; £40 income of grammar-school; and £33 for exhibitions, or, in default of applicants, to the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,412 7s.

The small town of Eye, which takes its name from being nearly surrounded by a rivulet, is situated nearly in the centre of this extensive parish. It is irregularly built, and has neither trade nor manufactures, though it is of some importance to the neighbourhood as a market-town. The market is on Monday. A fair is held on Whit-Monday, for cattle and toys. There is a branch of the East of England bank in the town. The streets are narrow, and were neither paved, lighted, nor watched, at the time of the municipal inquiry, though a comparatively considerable sum is now expended on police and constables, lighting and other improvements. The white-washed houses, thatched roofs, and unpaved streets, give it the appearance of a large, handsome, agricultural village. It is a very ancient borough, and received a charter from King John; but it is a corporation by prescription. The charter of the 9th William III., was the governing charter, though there are 8 other charters. Till the passing of the new municipal act, the borough was under the government of 2 bailiffs, 10 principal burgesses, 24 common council-men, a recorder, town-clerk, and inferior officers. The freedom was acquired by birth, apprenticeship, or election: the number of freemen was about 132, 63 of whom were resident, and 69 non-resident. The corporation had the power of holding a court of record every Saturday, under 9th William III., for the recovery of debts to any amount, but the privilege had not been made use of since 1816. The bailiffs held courts-leet annually within a month after Ladyday and Michaelmas, and, as justices of the peace, held petty-sessions every Saturday, and committed offenders to the county-gaol, to be there detained till the assizes or sessions for the county were held. The old borough is co-extensive with the parish. Eye regularly sent two members to parliament since the 13th of Elizabeth, until deprived of one by the reform bill. By the parliamentary boundary bill, the parishes of Hoxne, Denham, Redlingfield, Occold, Thorndon, Baisworth, Yaxley, Thrandiston, Broome, and Oakley, are added, to form the new parliamentary borough. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1832, was 129, at a contested election. The number registered for 1837, was 328, of whom 278 were occupiers, and 50 freemen. The bailiff is the returning officer. Under the municipal act the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors: the style of the corporate body is the bailiff, burgesses, and commonalty of the town and burgh of Eye. The boundaries of the municipal borough, traced on the map of the boundaries report, are confined to the extent of the town, and are as much restricted on the one hand, as the parliamentary boundaries were extended on the other, in relation to the old borough and parish boundaries. The income of the borough in 1839, was £333 5s. 7½d., of which £36 7s. 3d. were expended in lighting and cleansing; £42 18s. 8½d. on public works, repairs, &c.; £94 12s. 3d. on law expenses; and £62 11s. 6d. on police and constables: total expenditure £376 3s. 10½d. A commission of the peace has been granted on petition. The gaol of this borough was formerly a part of the town-hall, but the corporation, not deeming it secure, entered into an agreement with the parish in 1817, and together they erected the present building, which adjoins the poor-house, and stands on ground belonging to it,—the gift of a former Lord Cornwallis. The expense amounted to about £300; of which £50 were paid by the corporation, and the remainder by the parish. It comprises an airing-yard, with a boundary wall 13 feet high; a day-room, two cells, and two rooms for females. The cells are occasionally made use of by the master of the workhouse, in confining refractory paupers. The number of commitments, in 1835, was 8.

EYE, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Leominster, county of Hereford; 3 miles north-north-east of Leominster; comprising the townships of Ashton-Eye-Moreton, Berrington, and Luston, and close on the Leominster canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 19s. 2d.; gross income £319. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £17 16s. per annum: besides a close at Moreton, part of which was taken for the purpose of cutting the Leominster canal through it. the canal company had not paid any thing for the part they took, their affairs not allowing them to do so. Poor rates, in 1838, £275 10s. Acres 4,530. Houses 150. A. P. £5,339. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 720.

EYE, a parish in the liberty and union of Peterborough, county of Northampton; 3½ miles north-east of Peterborough. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £16; gross income £161. Patron, the Bishop of Peterborough. Great and small tithes, the property of the Bishop of Peterborough, were commuted in 1820. There are 5 daily schools here. Acres 2,670. Houses 240. A. P. £3,545. Pop., in 1801, 501; in 1831, 1,122. Poor rates, in 1838, £339 11s.

EYE AND DUNSDEN, a liberty in the parish of Sonning, county of Oxford; 5 miles south by west of Henley-upon-Thames. There are 2 day and Sunday schools here. Acres 2,550. Houses 170. A. P. £3,296. Pop., in 1801, 705; in 1831, 887. Poor rates, in 1838, £476 18s.

EYFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Slaughter, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Gloucester; 2½ miles west by south of Stow-on-the-Wold. It is said that Milton wrote part of 'Paradise Lost' here. Acres 1,380. Houses 13. A. P. £1,199. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 55. Poor rates, in 1838, £60.

EYHORNE HUNDRED, in the lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent. Area 52,990 acres. Houses 2,088. Pop., in 1831, 13,565.

EYKE, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Woodbridge, and east of the river Deben. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15; gross income £414. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Stradbroke. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities, in 1829, £44 19s. per annum, £28 of which were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £271 15s. Acres 2,970. Houses 92. A. P. £2,283. Pop., in 1801, 308; in 1831, 485.

EYNESBURY, a parish in the hund. of Toseland, union of St. Neot's, county of Huntingdon; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of St. Neot's, and east of the river Ouse. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £32 3s. 9d.; gross income £460. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Sandwich. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1797. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,750. Houses 197. A. P. £4,807. Pop., in 1801, 575; in 1831, 957. Poor rates, in 1838, £307 11s.

EYNESFORD HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk. On the south and south-west it is bounded by the river Wensum, on the north by the river Thyrn. Area 49,990 acres. Houses 1,841. Pop., in 1831, 10,957.

EYNESFORD, a parish in the hund. of Axton Dartford and Wilmington, union of Dartford, county of Kent; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Foot's-cray, and east of the river Darent. Living, a sinecure rectory and vicarage, both peculiars, in the dio. of Canterbury; the former rated at £12 6s. 8d.; gross income £150; the latter at £12; gross income £504. Patrons, the archbishop of Canterbury and the rector of Eynesford. The church contains several ancient monuments, and some fine specimens of Norman architecture. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1796; and an endowed National daily school. Charities, partly for educational purposes, about £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £529 9s. On the eastern banks of the Darent are the ruins of Eynesford castle, supposed to have been founded in the Norman era, by the family of Eynesford or Ainsford. The outer walls, including about $\frac{3}{4}$ of an acre, appear to have been built of squared flint, and are nearly 4 feet thick. In the centre is a strong keep or dungeon: the surrounding moat, formerly supplied with water from the Darent, has been filled up, and converted into garden ground. Acres 3,640. Houses 216. A. P. £4,095. Pop., in 1801, 841; in 1831, 1,277.

EYNESHAM. See ENSHAM, Oxfordshire.

EYTHORNE, a parish in the hund. and union of Eastray, county of Kent; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Dover. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £12 12s. 6d., gross income £400. Patrons, in 1835, the earl of Guilford and T. Papillon, Esq., alternately. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1600; and 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, about £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £191 14s. Eythorne is pleasantly situated commanding a fine view of the surrounding country and the sea. Acres 1,430. Houses 72. A. P. £1,692. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 422.

EYTON, a township in the parish of Bangor-Iscoed, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 6 miles south-east of Wrexham, and south of the river Dee. Houses 57. A. P. £2,908. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 303. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 5s.

EYTON, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Leominster, county of Hereford; 2 miles north-west by north of Leominster, and north of the river Lug. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £40; gross income £80. Patrons, the governors of Lucton school, in the free benefit of which children of this parish have a share. Acres 850. Houses 31. A. P. £1,760. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 15s.

EYTON, a township in the parish of Abberbury, county of Salop; 8 miles west by north of Shrewsbury, and south of the Severn. Pop., in 1811, 72; in 1821, 65. Other returns with the parish.

EYTON-UPON-SEVERN, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Wroxeter, county of Salop; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Much-Wenlock. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Wroxeter. Returns with the parish.

EYTON-UPON-THE-WILD-MOORS, a parish in the Wellington division of the hund. of South Bradford, union of Wellington, county of Salop; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Wellington, intersected by the Shrewsbury canal. Living, a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Wellington. Here is a daily school. The celebrated free-thinker, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, was born here in 1581. Acres 1,420. Houses 71. A. P. £1,764. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 350. Poor rates, in 1838, £164 19s.

EYWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; 4 miles east by north of Biggleswade. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford, and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £129. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £95 vicarial. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ongley. Charities, in 1820, £16 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 11s. Acres 1,370. Houses 21. A. P. £1,457. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 129.

F

FACCOMBE, a parish in the lower half-hund. of Pastrow, union of Andover, Kingsclere division, county of Southampton; 10 miles north-north-east of Andover. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Fangley, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £26 2s. 3½d.; gross income £695. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. E. Lance. Here are a Sunday and daily and a Sunday National school. Acres 3,170. Houses 35. A. P. £2,116. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 290. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 15s.

FACEBY, a chapelry in the parish of Whorlton, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-south-west of Stokesley. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; gross income £52. Patron, in 1835, G. W. Sutton, Esq. Acres 1,370. Houses 33. A. P. £1,731. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 11s.

FADDILEY, a township in the parish of Acton, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles west-north-west of Nantwich. Here are two daily schools. Acres 1,100. Houses 64. A. P. £1,592. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 316. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 11s.

FADMOOR, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Moorside, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-east of Helmesley. Acres 2,010. Houses 26. A. P. £1,019. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 19s.

FAGAN (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Dinas-Powis, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 5 miles west of Cardiff, on the northern bank of the river Elwy. Living, a rectory with the chapel of Llan-illtern, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; returned at £400; gross income £420. Patron, the Earl of Plymouth. Charities, in 1836, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £247 18s. St. Fagan is a very retired village, containing a castle built in a much more modern style than those of Glamorganshire in general. The descent by the castle wall is pleasing, and the bridge affords a fine view of the Elwy. The rich and extensive vale of the Elwy is also called the vale of St. Fagan. Houses 97. A. P. £2,235. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 446.

FAILSWORTH, a township in the parish of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles north-east by east of Manchester, intersected by the Rochdale canal. Here are a Presbyterian church, formed in 1698; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1799. Acres 1,060. Houses 628. A. P. £4,644. Pop., in 1801, 2,622; in 1831, 3,667. Poor rates, in 1838, £418 16s.

FAIRBURN, a township in the parish of Ledsham, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles north-north-west of Ferrybridge, intersected by the York and North Midland railway, which is carried across the river Air here by a bridge. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £118 vicarial. Acres 1,440. Houses 96. A. P. £1,292. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 465. Poor rates, in 1838, £114 5s.

FAIRCROSS HUNDRED, in the county of Berks. It lies to the north of Newbury, nearly in the centre of the county. Area 46,130 acres. Houses 2,391. Pop., in 1831, 11,957.

FAIRFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of Hope, county of Derby, 1 mile east-north-east of Buxton. Living, a donative curacy, a peculiar, of the certified value of £10 10s.; gross income £79. In the patronage of trustees. Here is a school endowed with landed property to the amount of £30 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 101. A. P. £3,868. Pop., in 1801, 356; in 1831, 482. Poor rates, in 1838, £145 9s.

FAIRFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Aloes-bridge, union of Romney Marsh, county of Kent; 6½ miles west-north-west of New Romney. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; returned at £50; gross income £57. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Canterbury. Acres 1,290. Houses 9. A. P. £2,138. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 89. Poor rates, in 1838, £88.

FAIRFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3½ miles east-south-east of Manchester. This village is a principal seat of the cotton manufacture,—see MANCHESTER. It contains an establishment of the Moravians, forming a village, in which they have a handsome chapel, provided with an excellent organ. Returns included in those from township of Droylsden.

FAIRFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Stogursey, county of Somerset; 8¾ miles west-north-west of Bridgewater, near the coast of the Bristol channel. It is celebrated for the fine scenery in its neighbourhood. Returns with the parish.

FAIRFIELD-HEAD, a township in the parish of Allstonfield, county of Stafford; 7½ miles north-east by north of Leek. Here are 3 small daily schools. Acres 4,380. Houses 199. A. P. £1,927. Pop., in 1801, 788; in 1831, 1,017. Poor rates, in 1838, £454.

FAIRFORD, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Brightwell's Barrow, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 24 miles east-south-east of Gloucester, on the post-road from Cirencester to Farringdon, at the foot of the Coteswold hills; about 3 miles distance from the grand canal which unites the Severn with the Thames, and on the eastern bank of the river Colne, over which there are here two neat stone bridges. Acres 4,220. Houses 317. A. P. £6,301. Pop., in 1801, 1,326; in 1831, 1,574. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £13 11s. 5d.; gross income £482. The church is a beautiful Gothic structure erected in the reign of Henry VII., by John Tame, a merchant in London, who acquired possession of a captured vessel bound for Rome, and in which there was a great quantity of curiously painted glass. In order to exhibit this glass to advantage, he and his son Sir Edmund Tame, Knight, built Fairford church with 28 large windows, in which are represented the most striking passages in the Old and New Testament. Albert Durer, to whom the greatest improvements in the art of painting on glass are attributed, designed these beautiful paintings. Some of the figures are so finely finished, that Vandyke said the pencil could not exceed them. Several of the pieces were afterwards mutilated, but they are still unrivalled, excepting by the windows in the chapel at King's college Cambridge: to prevent further injury, a lattice of wire was fitted to each window in 1725. Here are chapels for Independents and Baptists. The Independent church was formed in 1744. There are in this parish two Sunday and daily National schools, and a handsome free-school, at which 60 boys and 60 girls receive instruction, and which was first endowed by the Hon. Mrs. Farmor, in 1704. It has since been further endowed by others. In 1817 the school-buildings were greatly enlarged; and others, besides those gratuitously taught, are admitted upon paying one penny each per week. The annual income of the school is about £140. A sum of money, now producing £98 10s. a-year, was given by Lady Jane Mico, in 1676, to be laid out in land, for apprenticing poor boys of the town. Other charities amount to about £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £611. The town consists of 2 streets neatly and regularly built. The market-day is Thursday, and two annual fairs are held May 14th and November 12th, for sheep and cattle. Many medals and urns have been dug up here, and several barrows, in the fields, probably commemorate warlike actions which are not recorded in history.

FAIRHAUGH, a township in the parish of Allenton, west division of Coquetdale ward, Northumberland; 13 miles north-west of Rothbury, on the Useway burn. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 4. Other returns with the parish.

FAIRLIGHT, a parish in the hund. of Guestling, union of Hastings, county of Sussex; $\frac{2}{3}$ miles east-north-east of Hastings. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 9s. 2d.; gross income £502. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £644, vicarial. Patron, in 1835, B. Pearce, Esq. This parish receives the benefit of a charity, left by the Rev. Robert Bradshaw, and amounting to one-third of the interest of £1,000, three per cent. consols, increased from an original gift of £600, for procuring medical attendance for the poor of these parishes. Acres 2,230. Houses 77. A. P. £2,035. Pop., in 1801, 414; in 1831, 533. Poor rates, in 1838, £470 13s.

FAIRLOP. See EPPING, and HAINAULT

FAIRMILE, a hamlet in the county of Devon; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east by north of Ottery-St.-Mary; of which Polwhele says: "The inn called Fairmile in the village of Fairmile is partly in Ottery and partly in Tallaton. A beam running through the kitchen has a mark in the middle of it to show that one side of the kitchen lies in Ottery and the other in Tallaton. The greater part of this house, as also of the village, lies in the parish of Ottery." Devon. vol. ii. 240.

FAIRSTED, a parish in the hund. and union of Witham, county of Essex; 4 miles west-north-west of Witham, and north of the river Chelmer. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £435. Patron, the bishop of London. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,590. Houses 55. A. P. £2,143. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 253. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 3s.

FAITH (St.), a parish in the soke of Winchester, union of New Winchester, county of Southampton; 1 mile south of Winchester. Living, a rectory annexed to the hospital of St. Cross and a peculiar in the dio. of Winchester, not in charge; no return. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. For an account of that hospital, See article WINCHESTER. Acreage with Winchester. Houses 84. A. P. £1,468. Pop., in 1801, including West Sparkford, and the extra-parochial liberty of St. Cross, 310; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 10s.

FAKENHAM (Great), a parish in the hund. of Blackbourn, union of Thetford, county of Suffolk; 5 miles south-south-east of Thetford, on the western bank of the little Ouse or Brandon river. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 10s. 5d. Patron, the Duke of Grafton. There are here 2 day and 2 Sunday schools. Acres

1,660. Houses 37. A. P. £1,137. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 204. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 5s.

FAKENHAM-LANCASTER, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Gallow, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 25 miles north-west of Norwich, and 9 south of Wells, on a bold acclivity on the northern bank of the river Wensum, across which a handsome white brick bridge of 3 arches, with stone parapets and iron palisades, was here built, in 1833, on the site of the old one. The river has been supposed capable of being made navigable to Fakenham. Acres 2,640. Houses 384. A. P. £5,677. Pop., in 1801, including the small hamlet of Alethorpe, 1,236; in 1831, 2,085. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £35 6s. 8d.; gross income £905; nett income £862. The church is a remarkably fine building: the porch was used, in 1602, as a powder magazine. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1806; and a Primitive Methodist, in 1821. There are 12 daily and 4 Sunday schools; of the former of which, two were endowed by the late Miss Ann Harrison, with £10 per annum each. There is also a National school supported by subscription, for the education of about 60 girls. Charities, about £50 yearly. Poor rates, in 1838, £452. This town suffered considerably from fire in 1789; but it has been greatly enlarged and improved of late years by the erection of new houses, some of which are large and handsome. The market place is tolerably spacious. Salt was at one time made here from celebrated salt-pits. The market is on Thursday, and is well-attended. Fairs are held annually on Whit-Tuesday, and 22d November, the latter of which is remarkable for its extensive shows of cattle. The East of England bank has a branch here. On a neighbouring hill was formerly held the sheriffs court for the whole county.

FAL (The), or FALA. See CORNWALL.

FALD. See FAULDE.

FALDINGWORTH, a parish in the wapentake of Lawres, union and county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-west of Market-Raisin. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 8s. 1½d.; gross income £336. Tithes commuted in 1794. Patron, Earl Brownlow. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is a free school, and a second is partly supported by endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 18s. Acres 1,820. Houses 53. A. P. £2,397. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 296.

FALFIELD-AND-MOORTON, a chapelry in the parish of Thornbury, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north-east by east of Thornbury. Pop., in 1801, 486; in 1821, 844. Other returns with the parish.

FALKENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Colneis, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 9½ miles south-east by east of Ipswich, and west of the river Deben. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 11s. 3d.; gross income £300. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,550. Houses 37. A. P. £2,697. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 297. Poor rates, in 1838, £394 6s. There is an Independent chapel here.

FALKINGHAM, or FOLKINGHAM, a market-town and parish in the wapentake of Aveland, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 26 miles south-south-east of Lincoln, situated on the post-road from Lincoln to Peterborough, on the side and summit of a hill, commanding extensive prospects over the fens. Living, a rectory with the vicarage of Laughton annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £21 12s. 3½d.; gross income £513. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Heathcote. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £35 per annium, arising from poor land. The market is held on Thursday; and there are fairs on Ash-Wednesday, Palm-Monday, and May 13th, for horses and sheep; June 13th for horses and horned cattle; July 3d and 4th for hemp, hardware, &c.; and the Thursday after old Michaelmas, and November 10th and 22d, for horses, cattle, &c. On the site of the ancient castle of Falkingham, at a little distance from the town, a gaol, or house of correction, has been erected for the parts of Kesteven, and in which also are held the quarter-sessions. It is a modern elevation of two stories, and surrounded with a boundary wall of brick of octagonal form. The entrance is through a gate of open iron-work faced with stone. The prison originally consisted only of the present frontage, now occupied by the keeper and the female prisoners, but was afterwards enlarged by the addition of a range of buildings in the rear, in the form of an extended horse-shoe connected at the ends, and leaving an open area between the two, divided into airing-yards and a passage to the chapel. It embraces 34 cells, 8 wards, 10 day and work-rooms, and 8 airing-yards. The number of prisoners, in 1837, was 194. To the south-east of the town is a large encampment, with a deep fosse and lofty vallum. Within the area is a square keep of raised earth defended also by a fosse, capable of being filled with water from the adjoining brook. Acres 1,700. Houses 126. A. P. £3,632. Pop., in 1801, 531; in 1831, 744. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 16s.

FALLOWDON, a township in the parish of Embleton, Northumberland; 7 miles north-north-east of Alnwick, near a small stream which flows into the North sea. Here is a daily school, partly supported by endowment. Acreage with the parish. Houses 22. A. P. £726. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 105. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 4s.

FALLOWFIELD, a township in the parish of St. John-Lee, Northumberland; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Hexham, and east of the river Reed. There is a rich vein of lead ore in this vicinity. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 70. Poor rates, in 1838, £10 5s.

FALLOWLEES, a township in the parish of Rothbury, Northumberland; $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Rothbury. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 8. Other returns with the parish.

FALLYBROOM, a township in the parish of Prestbury, co. palatine of Chester; $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-west of Macclesfield. Acres 180. Houses 6. A. P. £438. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 25. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 4s.

FALMER, a parish in the hund. of Younsmere, union of Newhaven, Sussex; 4 miles west-south-west of Lewes. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 10s. 10d.; gross income £190. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £267 rectorial. Patron, the Earl of Chichester. Here is a day and Sunday school, supported, partly by a small endowment, and partly by subscription. "The manor of Falmer extends into the parishes of Chayley, Lindfield, Patcham, Rottingden, Chilmington, Kingston, Preston, and Stanmer."—Burrell's MSS. Acres 2,840. Houses 79. A. P. £3,188. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 432. Poor rates, in 1838, £129 17s.

FALMOUTH,

A parish, borough, large sea-port, and market-town, and celebrated packet-station, situated in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Falmouth, county of Cornwall; 12 miles south-south-west of Tregony, 98 south-west of Exeter, and 270 west-south-west of London, at the mouth of the river Fal. Acres of the parish

1,210. Houses 1,001. A. P. £21,563. Pop., in 1801, 4,849; in 1831, 7,284, exclusive of that portion in Budock parish. Acres of the township 40. Houses 652. A. P. £11,534. Pop., in 1801, 3,684; in 1831, 4,761.

General description.—The town lies on the western side of the celebrated harbour of Falmouth, at the bottom of an eminence which commands the harbour; and consists principally of one continuous line of streets, extending above a mile along the beach, or rather quay; with suburbs branching inland from the main streets, and adorned with villas. The houses are mostly modern, and, on the whole, Falmouth is a neat and agreeable town, rather imposing in appearance. Little Falmouth and Flushing, on the opposite side of the inner harbour, are united with it in local interest, and also constitute a kind of suburbs to the town; with which they are in constant intercourse by means of a ferry plied from morning to night throughout the year. At the south-eastern end of the town are convenient quays forming a basin, close to which are the custom-house, excise-office, and packet-office, and the warehouses for goods in bond; and near the other end is Greenbank quay projecting out to low-water mark, between which nearly the whole sea front of the town consists of an irregular line of wharfs with warehouses, to which ships may come to discharge or take in cargoes. Measures were taken in 1840 for deepening the harbour still further by means of dredging-barges, so as to facilitate the access of the largest steamers at all times of the tide to the inner harbour. There are here a custom-house for most of the Cornish towns, and bonded warehouses for all goods without limitations; a very creditable gaol; a town-hall, post-office, market-house, and other modern public buildings: there are also baths near the south-east end of the town. A subscription library and a Polytechnic society for the encouragement of scientific improvement in the arts, manufactures, and fisheries of Cornwall, were established in 1833. The Falmouth Subscription rooms were erected in 1826.

Falmouth harbour.—This place has derived its importance and prosperity from having been, for 150 years, the principal station for the steam and other foreign mail-packets to all parts of the world, and the general rendezvous for fleets and convoys bound to the south and west. It is peculiarly well-adapted for this purpose, since Falmouth harbour is not only, in point of safety and accommodation, considered the second—if not the first—in Great Britain; but vessels can at once sail into the open sea; are saved the tedious and uncertain work of beating down channel; and can proceed upon their voyage, with ease and safety, at times when it would be quite impossible to do so from Portsmouth or Plymouth. The harbour is said, by practical men, to present the finest anchorage in England for steam or other vessels. The coast, east and west of the harbour is bold and clear of danger; the current never runs so strong as to impede navigation;—the harbour can be entered with perfect safety at all times of the tide throughout the year; and it is so sheltered and capacious, that the largest as well as smallest ships have rode out safely here gales in which the loss of lives and property at Plymouth has been appalling. The harbour is 4 miles long; above a mile wide; and, on the eastern side, opposite St. Just, 14 fathoms deep: it has so many commodious creeks, and is so well screened by the surrounding high lands, that the whole of the royal navy might be sheltered. The entrance is defended by Pendennis castle, consisting of works a mile in circuit, on the extreme western point, about a mile from Falmouth; and on the east by the castle of St. Mawes, about a mile-and-a-half distant from Pendennis: both of these castles were built by Henry VIII. During the civil war Pendennis castle was long defended against a division of Fairfax's army, whose lines of encampment are yet distinguishable. It now contains spacious barracks, magazines, and storehouses, with accommodation for the lieutenant-governor, &c. Near the middle of the entrance is a large rock, called the Black rock. Many fine navigable creeks branch from the harbour: the principal of which are,—Penryn creek, extending from Falmouth to Penryn; Restrongt creek, on the shores of which are many wharfs which are connected with the Redruth mining district by a railway; Truro creek, which is a branch of the main creek of the Fal; the Fal creek extending nearly to Tregony; another branch of it extends to Tresillian Bridge; St. Mawes creek, near the entrance of which and within St. Mawes castle, on its northern shore, stands the ancient borough which gives name to the castle and creek. This branch of the harbour is much frequented by coasting-vessels, which put in wind-bound, where they find excellent anchorage. The Fal opens into the ocean between Pendennis castle on the western bank, and St. Mawes and Anthony point on the east; its channel being nearly a mile wide. There is a lighthouse at the entrance to the harbour, the foundation-stone of which was laid in June, 1834. Vessels outward or inward bound generally touch at Falmouth for orders, and are at times repaired here. Steamers also readily obtain fuel and other supplies here: their owners are in the habit of ordering fuel from Wales or Scotland to this port. The question as to the relative merits of Falmouth, Plymouth, &c., as ports of arrival and departure of the government mail-packets—especially of the steamers—has been recently agitated, during the existence of uncertainty as to the determination of Government in this important matter. The question, however, more particularly confined itself to the eligibility of this port as a steam-packet station; since it appears at least satisfactorily proved, that, were sailing-vessels alone employed, Falmouth has the decided preference: but as ships of that class must soon be wholly superseded in the packet-service by steamers, the question of change was fairly opened to public consideration. Besides the deepening of the harbour, already alluded to, a railway has been projected from hence to Exeter, in order to facilitate the government-packet intercourse through this port.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter; rated at £3; gross income £854; nett income £688. Patron, in 1835, Lord Wodehouse. Here are several dissenting places of worship. An Independent chapel—originally a Presbyterian place of worship—was built about 1725, and enlarged in 1790; a Sunday school was attached to it in 1792. The present Baptist chapel was built in 1803, and enlarged in 1807; the Sunday school was formed in 1810; the denomination existed in Falmouth in 1769, when they met in a small place of worship in Well lane. The Wesleyan chapel was built about the year 1791, and enlarged in 1814; the Sunday school was formed in 1805; the Methodists had a place of worship several years prior to the erection of the present chapel, in Porhan street. The Jewish synagogue was built in 1808. The Roman Catholic chapel was built in 1820. The Primitive Methodists and Bryanites have also a place of worship; and in 1828 a chapel of ease was built in Stratton-place. Here are some extensive educational charities supported by voluntary contributions, and including 2 Sunday and daily National schools. A school for the education and clothing of 30 boys and 30 girls, was established about the year 1801. A school for 60 girls, on the Lancasterian plan, patronized chiefly by ladies of the Quaker persuasion, but supported by a general subscription, was instituted in 1811; and another of the same description for 200 to 250 boys, about the year 1822, also under the direction of Quakers. An almshouse, containing 10 small rooms, was erected for poor widows in 1810. The Merchants' hospital, for the relief and support of disabled seamen, and the widows and children of such as should perish in the merchants' service, was established about the year 1750, under the authority of an act of 20th George II., for the relief and support of disabled seamen, belonging to the port of London, which gives power to any out-port desirous of reaping the benefit of that act, by establishing an hospital for seamen belonging to such port, to appoint 15 trustees for its management, to be annually elected by the owners and commanders of vessels belonging to the port, and confirmed by the corporation in London, established under the said act. The income of the Merchants' hospital here, is about £300 per annum. A dispensary was established in 1806, which, in 1812, was connected with a Misericordia, or benevolent society for relief of the poor, particularly strangers. There are a few other charitable institutions. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,823 10s.; of the township, £1,005. The Falmouth poor-law union comprehends 10 parishes, embracing an area of 40 square miles, with a population returned in 1831 at 20,816: expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1838, £4,080 11s.; in 1839, £5,547 12s.

Municipal affairs.—The only charter of incorporation possessed by this town, is one of 13th Charles II., 5th October, 1661, whereby the town was appointed to be governed by a mayor and other 6 aldermen, and 12 burgesses, who, together with the recorder—appointed by the Crown, but in practice nominated by the mayor—were the common council. The recorder was constituted a justice-of-peace within the town, with right to sit as a judge in the civil court: the mayor and the last preceding mayor—commonly called the justice—were also by the charter constituted justices-of-the-peace, to hold, with the recorder, a court of quarter-sessions of the peace, and petty-sessions once a-week. The charter gave a civil court, or 'court of pleas of record,' to be held before the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, on Thursday in every second week; but this court was disused after 1783, partly in consequence of the existence of the court of the manor of Penryn-foreign, with a jurisdiction extending over the whole town and borough of Falmouth. The limits of the old borough comprised only the central division of the modern town and the harbour. The municipal boundaries laid down in the boundary reports of 1835, extend over all the parish of Falmouth, Falmouth harbour, parts of those of Mylor, including Little Falmouth and Flushing, and of Budock, including the peninsular site of Pendennis castle in that parish. The new municipal borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being 'the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the town of Falmouth.' A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed. The present gaol of Falmouth was erected on ground belonging to the corporation, in 1831, by a gaol and marshalsea rate, made in pursuance of the stat. 4th George IV. c. 64. The cost was £404 0s. 4d. It is a neat and convenient building, containing, in one floor, apartments for the gaoler, and 2 rooms for prisoners, with glazed windows and fire-places. On the floor below are 3 cells with one yard, and 2 cells with another. The number of prisoners, in 1835, was 99. The income of this borough, in 1839, was £285 15s. 2d., chiefly arising from borough rates; expenditure £279 17s. 8½d.; of which £135 consisted of salaries, &c., to municipal officers; £9 7s. 9d. expenditure on police, &c.; £34 3s. 3½d. on gaol and prisoners; £29 12s. on prosecutions, &c.; and £10 17s. 3d. on public works, repairs, &c. Falmouth was enfranchised by the reform act, and now, in union with Penryn, returns 2 members, as a parliamentary borough. The whole of Falmouth parish is included within the boundaries, which also include that part of Budock parish between Falmouth and Penryn, together with an extension of the old borough boundaries of Penryn. The number of electors registered in 1837 was—

In Penryn district,.....	408
In Budock district,.....	88
In Falmouth parish,.....	185
In Falmouth town,.....	222
	— 495

Total,..... 903

The number who actually polled at the general election in Penryn, in 1837, was 385; in Falmouth, 376:—in all, 761.

Trade.—The town of Falmouth, previous to its being incorporated as before stated, was called Smithick, a name said to have been derived from a smith's shop on the south side of the creek which extended a little way up the valley behind the Market-strand. This appellation seems to be partly English and partly Cornish, as ick in the language of the county signifies 'creek.' It was also called Pennycumquick, which name was probably derived from the ancient Cornish terms pen, coom, and ick, which would mean 'the Head of the narrow valley by the creek.' This, however, having been afterwards considered a good locality for trade, Sir John Killigrew of Arwenack, to whom the site belonged, in 1613 formed a grand plan of building a town here, which he rapidly effected under the authority of James I., and notwithstanding much opposition from the corporations of Penryn, Truro, and Helston. The town soon became a place of great trade. During Cromwell's usurpation, Peter Killigrew is said not only to have procured the establishment of a market, but the removal of the custom-house from Penryn to "Smithike." Soon after the year 1670, Sir Peter Killigrew, Bart., constructed here a new quay, and procured an act of parliament for confirming certain duties to be payable to him and his heirs. The trade soon became so extensive as to exceed that of any other Cornish port; and its prosperity was much advanced, about the year 1688, by the establishment of the post-office packets to Lisbon, the West Indies, &c. This was one of the first ports in the west to which the privileges of the bonding-act were extended, and the only tobacco port in the counties of Cornwall and Devon. A very extensive foreign trade has since this been carried on. The following account of its imports and exports chiefly refers to the more prosperous state of its trade:—From America—tobacco, wood, wheat, flour, Indian corn, staves, rice, &c.: From Spain and Portugal—fruit, wine, brandy, wool, salt, specie, &c.:—From Holland—geneva, cheese, butter, and grain:—From Russia and the north of Europe—hemp, tallow, tar, pitch, iron, linen, sail-cloth, timber, and occasionally grain:—From the Mediterranean—fruit, oil, silk, salt, &c.:—From South America—hides, sugar, cotton, wool, &c.:—From France—grain, flour, fruit, wine, brandy, salt, &c.:—From Ireland—grain, provisions, &c.:—From Wales, Liverpool, &c.—coals, iron, earthenware, salt, &c. The principal exports have been tin and copper, the produce of the mines: pilchards also—a species of fish peculiar to the coasts of Cornwall and Devon, and generally sold at a less price than herrings—have been extensively exported from Falmouth, and although it has been alleged that this branch of trade has latterly declined, there is still a considerable pilchard fishery carried on here. There is also an extensive coasting-trade between London, Plymouth, Bristol, &c., and Falmouth; as well as some foreign trade. The principal imports at present are timber, hemp, tallow, &c., from the north; fruits, wines, and spirits, from the south; rum and sugar from the West Indies; provisions, grain, &c., from Ireland. Large quantities of gold and silver are frequently imported by the packets to Falmouth. Tin, copper, pilchards, &c., are still its chief exports. The gross receipts of customs' duty, in 1838, was £21,054 17s. 10d.; in 1839, £20,860 12s. 4d. Ship-building and rope-making have been carried on at this port, though to no great extent. The market-days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and there are annual fairs for cattle on 7th August, and 10th October. The Falmouth bank was established in 1781; the Cornish Naval bank in 1806; a savings' bank in 1817. There is also a branch of the Western District banking company here.

Origin of Falmouth.—The origin of Falmouth as a town, though so recent, is somewhat involved in obscurity; and instead of indubitable historical fact, we are, in a great measure, compelled to receive traditional fable and anecdote. The town is not mentioned by Campden, even in his edition of 1607; though he particularly notices the harbour, and actually names Penryn, St. Maw's castle, Pendennis castle, and even Arwenack, now at the end of the town. Leland, who visited Cornwall in the reign of Henry VIII., and who scrupulously notices not only every "praty," but every "poor fischar towne," speaks of Falmouth as "a havyn very notable and famose, and in a manner the most principale of al Britayne;" but says nothing of any town there. Sir Walter Raleigh, being homeward bound from the coast of Guiana, is said, in a manuscript history of the Killigrews, to have put in here, and been entertained at Arwenack, while his men were poorly accommodated at a solitary house. It is also stated that this celebrated navigator, being struck with the great utility of providing extensive accommodations at the mouth of Falmouth harbour for the officers and crews of homeward-bound ships, laid before the council a project for erecting four houses for that purpose. In 1613, when Sir John Killigrew began his operations, there were only 10 houses; in 1664, 200; before the close of that century they had increased to nearly 350; about the year 1750, to between 500 and 600; in 1801 and 1811, according to the returns made to parliament, there were 465 inhabited houses in the town, exclusive of 182 in that part of the suburbs which is in Falmouth parish, and 72 at Green Bank or Dunstanville town, in the parish of Budock; making altogether 719. At present there are upwards of 1,000.

The town is first recorded by the name of Falmouth, in the charter of King Charles II., bearing date 1661. The name of the town and harbour is supposed to have been derived from that of the river Fal. But the reverse appears to be the fact: at all events no such river as the Fal seems to have been known, in 1576, when Lambard wrote. Treating of the harbour, he says, "Lel. guessteth that it should be the mouth of some water called Fale, or such like; but others conjecture that it toke the name of the multitude of waters that fall into that place. "In old time," say the editors of the Mag. Brit., 1738, "a town which the ancients called Voluba stood on this river [the Fal]; but that being destroyed long since, another is risen in its room at a little distance, which retains something of the old name, and is called Falmouth or Volemouth, which is a spacious and excellent haven, altogether as noble as Brundisium in Italy, and rival'd by Plymouth only, made by the falling of the river Fale into it." Borlase in his 'Antiquities of the County of Cornwall,' states, too, that a large quantity of Roman coins, nearly all of which were of the coinage of the emperors Gallienus, Carinus, and Numerian, who reigned A. D. 259-284, were found on a branch of the harbour.

FALSGRAVE, a township in the parish of Scarborough, within the jurisdiction of the town of Scarborough, north riding of Yorkshire; 1 mile south-west by west of Scarborough. Tithes commuted in 1773. Here is a daily school, at which a few poor children are supported by an allowance of £8 per annum from the constabulary funds. Acres 1,020. Houses 96. A. P. £2,150. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 10s.

FALSTONE, a parish in the north-west division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, county of Northumberland; 8 miles west-north-west of Bellingham, on the northern bank of the river Tyne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, of the certified value of £10; gross income £219. The church was rebuilt in 1825. Patrons, the governors of Greenwich hospital. There is here a Scots presbyterian chapel, erected in 1807. This extensive parish is one of those into which the parish of Simonburn was divided by act of parliament in 1811. It is a moorish and mountainous district on which great numbers of sheep are pastured: grouse, partridges, and black game, are found in abundance. Coal is everywhere found in the parish; and there are several mineral wells of considerable strength. The North Tyne rises in this parish, and here receives a number of burns or rivulets, on the banks of which the soil is in many places well cultivated. From the source of the North Tyne, to Bellingham, there are numerous traces of the castramentations or strongholds of the ancient Britons. The name of Falstone is said to be a corruption of the Anglo Saxon word Faeston, signifying a stronghold for the purpose of fastening or securing cattle, &c.: the house of the laird of Fausten is still a very complete specimen of one of these ancient peels. Acres 57,700. Houses 82. A. P. with Simonburn. Pop., in 1801, returned under the township of Plushets, and Well-Haugh quarter, 437; in 1831, 521. Poor rates, in 1838, £251 12s.

FAMBRIDGE (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Dengie, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 5 miles north-north-west of Rochford, on the southern bank of the river Crouch. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £333. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a Sunday National, and two daily schools. Acres 2,100. Houses 22. A. P. £1,995. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 148. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 14s.

FAMBRIDGE (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. and union of Rochford, county of Essex; 3½ miles north-north-west of Rochford. The river Crouch divides North from South Fambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £17; gross income £438. Patron, in 1835, E. Stephenson, Esq. Here is a Sunday and daily national school. "An ancient bridge, and the froth or foam of the passing stream, is the supposed origin of the name, which, in Domesday, is written, Phenbrudge."—Wright's Essex. There is a ferry across the river about half-a-mile from the church. Acres 1,670. Houses 10. A. P. £1,595. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 91. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 16s.

FANGFOSS WITH SPITTLE, a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Hart-hill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire;

4 miles north-west of Pocklington. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Barmby-upon-the-Moor, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; returned at £44 15s. 6d.; gross income £46. Patron, the dean of York. Charities, in 1823, £9 3s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 15s. Acres 980. Houses 28. A. P. £1,339. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 155.

FARCETT, a chapelry in the parish of Stan-ground, county of Huntingdon; 2½ miles south-south-east of Peterborough, and west of the old river Nen. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Stan-ground. There are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with a cottage and garden, and with land, producing £15 per annum. Acres 5,360. Houses 111. A. P. £2,786. Pop., in 1801, 363; in 1831, 536. Poor rates, in 1838, £290 14s.

FAREHAM, a market-town, parish, hund., and union, in Portsdown division of Southamptonshire. Acres of the parish 6,670. Houses 781. A. P. £21,088. Pop., in 1801, 3,030; in 1831, 4,402. Living, a vicarage and peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 12s. 6d.; gross income £673. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. The patronage of a chapel recently built and endowed by the Rev. Sir H. Thompson, Bart., has been vested in him and his heirs. Here are chapels for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists; and also 3 Sunday, 4 boarding, and 22 daily schools, one of the last of which is endowed with £39 per annum, together with a school-house and garden; the overplus of the endowment, agreeably to the provisions of the donor, Mr. Price, is distributed to poor widows twice a-year. There is a school in this parish, connected with the British and Foreign School society, attended by 66 scholars; and 7 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, in 1826, including part for education, £264 10s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,611 8s.—A workhouse has been erected here, by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Fareham, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Fareham poor-law union comprehends 9 parishes, with an area of 50 square miles: pop., in 1831, 12,137. Average annual expenditure on poor of this district, during 3 years preceding formation of union, £10,708; expenditure in 1838, £5,180; in 1839, £5,985 11s. The town stands on slightly elevated ground at the north-west extremity of the harbour of Portsmouth; 11½ miles south-east of Southampton, and 73 south-west of London. The Gosport and Southampton railway passes through Fareham common, where there is a tunnel. A hall for the Philosophical Institution has recently been built here. The town is lighted with gas, and guarded by the new police. The government is vested in a bailiff, two constables, and two ale-tasters. Petty-sessions are held here. This is a polling-place for the south division of the county. There is a considerable manufacture of pottery, and a good trade in corn, coals, and timber. Ship-building is carried on. The original market-day was Wednesday; but a market is now held every alternate Monday, at which considerable quantities of corn and cattle are sold. A fair is held on the 29th of June, for horses and cattle, and for cheese and toys. Here is a branch of the Hampshire bank.

FAREWELL WITH CHARLEY, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; 2 miles north-west of Lichfield. Living, a curacy and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lichfield; rated at £45; gross income £50. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lichfield. Here was at one time a religious house, founded about A. D. 1140. Charities, in 1821, £28 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 5s. Acres 470. Houses 38. A. P. included in that of the parish of Pipe. Pop., in 1801, 165; in 1831, 200.

FARFORTH WITH MAIDEN-WELL, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6 miles south of Louth. Living, a discharged rectory united to that of Ruckland. Acres 1,940. Houses 17. A. P. £1,147. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 91. Poor rates, in 1838, £119 6s.

FARINGDON. See FARRINGTON.

FARINGDON, a parish in the hund. of Selborne, union of Alton, Alton north division of the county of Southampton; 2½ miles south of Alton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £18 4s. 0½d.; gross income £675. Patrons, in 1835, the representatives of the late C. Hall, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,430. Houses 98. A. P. £2,281. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 504. Poor rates, in 1838, £344 8s.

FARLAM, a parish in Eskdale ward, union of Brampton, Cumberland; 3 miles east-south-east of Brampton, and near the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; returned at £57; gross income £98. Great and impropriate tithes commuted in 1777. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Carlisle. Acres 5,680. Houses 130. A. P. of East Farlam £7,782; of West Farlam £1,041; total £8,823. Pop., in 1801, returned under the same townships; of the former 430, of the latter 162, total 592; in 1831, of the former 616, of the latter 200; total 816. Poor rates, in 1833, £266 15s.

FARLEE, or FARLETON, a township in the parish of Beetham, county of Westmoreland; 5 miles west-north-west of Kirby-Lonsdale, on the southern bank of the river Beetha, and near the Lancaster canal. Acres 1,340. Houses 15. A. P. £1,553. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 90. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 2s.

FARLEIGH (EAST), a parish in the hund. and union of Maidstone, lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent; 2½ miles south-south-west of Maidstone, on the southern bank of the river Medway. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the archbishop of Canterbury; rated at £6 16s. 8d.; gross income £941. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, in 1836, £9 5s. per annum; besides 6 almshouses with a small endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £457 13s. The returns of East Farleigh include the inmates of a workhouse, for 9 united parishes, situated at Coxheath, within the parish. Here are extensive hop-gardens: on an average of 7 years to 1835, there had annually been 577½ acres devoted to the cultivation of hops, and producing 415,683 lbs., the excise duty on which amounted to £3,464 0s. 6d. Acres 2,050. Houses 258. A. P. £5,223. Pop., in 1801, 642; in 1831, 1,461.

FARLEIGH (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Twyford, union of Maidstone, lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent; 3½ miles south-west of Maidstone, on the southern bank of the Medway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £6 10s. 5d.; gross income £460. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. In the churchyard here are some of the finest yew trees that are to be seen in England. Charities, in 1836, £26 per annum; besides 2 almshouses and gardens. Poor rates, in 1838, £367 5s. Like East Farleigh, this parish is particularly noted for its excellent fruit trees, and its valuable hop plantations. The average number of acres planted with hops for 7 years to 1835, was 183½, producing 134,396 lbs., the duty on which was £1,119 19s. 4d. Acres 1,050. Houses 62. A. P. £2,366. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 392.

FARLEIGH, in the parish of Luton, hund. of Flitt, county of Bedford; 1 mile south-west of Luton. Henry II. gave this place to the great foreign hospital of Santingfield, near Wyttsand in Picardy.

FARLEIGH-HUNGERFORD, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Frome, county of Somerset; 6¼ miles south-south-east of Bath; situated at the river Frome, in a well-wooded and very delightful country. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 11s. 8d.; gross income £195. Patron, in 1835, John Houlton, Esq. The church stands on the summit of an acclivity, up the side of which the village is built. From this station there are romantic and diversified prospects. The church appears to be above 200 years old; but over the porch of the south door is placed a large semicircular stone of much higher antiquity, as far as may be inferred from an inscription on it, in letters having a considerable mixture of the Saxon alphabet, which continued to be used till the close of the 14th century. The stone must have occupied a place over the entrance of some prior church, probably on the same spot, and having the privilege of sanctuary. Over the inscription is engraven a very large conspicuous sign of the cross; and the letters having been restored are legibly read as follows:—

Muniat hoc templum, cruce + Glorificans microcosum, quæ genuit Christum. miseris pace fiat.

On the northern declivity, near the bottom, embowered with trees, are still to be seen the remains of Farleigh castle, erected by one of the Hungerfords about the year 1170, and now consisting of a strong arched entrance; some fragments of thick walls; and 2 ivy mantled towers. The chapel of the castle is nearly perfect, and contains some curious monuments. The village of Farleigh claims a very remote antiquity. Acres 840. Houses 32. A. P. £1,236. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 168. Poor rates, in 1838, £99 2s.

FARLEIGH-WALLOP, a parish in the hund. of Bermondspit, union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; 3¼ miles south-south-west of Basingstoke. Living, a rectory united to that of Cliddesden. Acres 1,820. Houses 14. A. P. £1,232. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 7s.

FARLETON, a township in the parish of Melling, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 8½ miles north-east of Lancaster. Acres 690. Houses 14. A. P. £1,719. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 90. Poor rates, in 1838, £27.

FARLETON. See FARLEE.

FARLEY, a township in the parish of Alveton, county of Stafford; 4¼ miles east-north-east of Cheadle, east of the river Churnet, and near the Uttoxeter canal. Acreage with the parish. Houses 76. A. P. £2,328. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 450. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 15s.

FARLEY, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Tandridge, union of Godstone, county of Surrey; 5½ miles south-east by south of Croydon, Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £4 16s. 5½d.; in the parliamentary returns at £129 19s. 2d.; gross income £200. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Merton college, Oxford. Acres 960. Houses 12. A. P. £847. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 9s.

FARLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 5 miles east of Salisbury. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Alderbury. Here is a daily school, endowed with £10 per annum, and a house and garden. Acres 700. Houses 57. A. P. with Pitton, £1,813. Pop., in 1821, 229; in 1831, 254.

FARLEY-CHAMBERLAYNE, a parish in the hund. of King's Sombourn, union of Hursley, An-claver division of the county of Southampton; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Winchester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 12s. 1d.; gross income £388. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. St. John Mildmay, Bart. Here are 5 daily, a Sunday and daily National, and 3 Sunday schools. Acres 1,930. Houses 27. A. P. £850. Pop., in 1801, including Flackstead, 148; in 1831, 165. Poor rates, in 1838, £99.

FARLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Portsdown, union of Havant, Portsdown division of the county of Southampton; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Havant. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 13s. 4d.; gross income £632. Tithes commuted in 1831; rent charge £615. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. T. Richards. Acres 2,070. Houses 147. A. P. £3,979. Pop., in 1801, including the extra-parochial land, part of the late forest of Bere, 302; in 1831, 778. Poor rates, in 1838, £413 9s.

FARLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Sheriff-Hutton, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Easingwold. Living, a perpetual curacy, with that of Marton annexed, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; valued at £27 16s. 1d., rated at £133 12s.; gross income £130. All tithes, &c., commuted in 1813. Patron, the archbishop of York. Acres 1,490. Houses 30. A. P. £2,130. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 5s.

FARLOW. See KINGSTON-LISLE AND FARLOW.

FARLOW, a chapelry comprising that part of the parish of Stottesden, hund. of Stottesden, county of Salop, which lies in the hund. of Wolphy, county of Hereford; 10 miles north-east by east of Ludlow. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Stottesden. Here are two daily schools. Acres 1,620. Houses 72. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 345. Poor rates, in 1838, £82 9s.

FARLSTHORP, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 2 miles south-east of Alford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £69 2s.; gross income £64. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. J. Kipling. Acres 1,140. Houses 19. A. P. £693. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 94. Poor rates, in 1838, £78.

FARMANBY, a township, partly in the parish of Ellerburn, and partly in the parish of Thornton-Dale, north riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles east-south-east of Pickering. There are here 5 daily schools. Acres 2,530. Houses 92. A. P. £2,618. Pop., in 1801, 310; in 1831, 431. Poor rates, in 1838, £108.

FARMBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Keynsham, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; 7 miles west-south-west of Bath. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 2s. 11d.; gross income £488. Patron, in 1835, J. F. Gunning, Esq. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. Acres 1,310. Houses 160. A. P. £3,281. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 924. Poor rates, in 1838, £322 3s.

FARMCOTE or FRAMCOTE. See GUYTING-POWER.

FARMINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Bradley, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Northleach. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £16 5s. 5d., returned at £120; gross income £311. Patron, in 1835, H. E. Waller, Esq. Acres 2,470. Houses 54. A. P. £2,059. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 311. Poor rates, in 1838, £166 12s.

FARNBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Compton, union of Wantage, county of Berkshire; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by north of East Ilsley. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 8s. 4d.; gross income £310. Patron, in 1835, George Price, Esq. Acres 2,720. Houses 46. A. P. £2,680. Pop., in 1821, 210; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £50 7s.

FARNBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Bromley, on the post-road from London to Tunbridge. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Chelsfield. Charities, in 1836, 18s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £258 19s. A few acres of hops have been cultivated here since 1834. A fair is held on the 12th of September. Acres 1,420. Houses 112. A. P. £1,995. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 638.

FARNBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Crondall, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles north-north-east of Farnham, intersected by the Southampton and London railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £7 12s. 11d., returned at £120; gross income £159. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £143 10s. rectorial. Patron, in 1835, G. H. Sumner, Esq. Accommodation in the church has been recently increased. Here is a Sunday National school. Charities, in 1825, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 8s. Acres 2,370. Houses 75. A. P. £1,213. Pop., in 1801, 399; in 1831, 334.

FARNBOROUGH, a parish in the Burton-Dasett division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Banbury, county of Warwick; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Kingston, close on the post-road from Warwick to Banbury. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 12s.; gross income £304. Patron, in 1835, W. Holbech, Esq. Charities, in 1826, £99 15s. per annum: of which £41 18s. 10d. constituted endowment of Freckleton's school, at which 65 to 70 children are taught on the National system. Poor rates, in 1838, £176 13s. Acres 2,430. Houses 69. A. P. £3,904. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 365.

FARNDAL (EAST-SIDE), a township in the parish of Lasingham, north riding of Yorkshire; 11 miles north-north-west of Pickering. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 4,850. Houses 64. A. P. £3,689. Pop., in 1801, including the township of Brensdale, East-Side, in the parish of Kirkby-Moorside, 381; in 1831, 405. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 18s.

FARNDAL (HIGH QUARTER), a township in the parish of Lasingham, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north of Kirkby-Moorside. Acres 6,220. Houses 42. Pop., in 1811, 268; in 1831, 289. Poor rates, in 1838, £37 9s.

FARNDAL (LOW QUARTER), a township in the parish of Kirkby-Moorside, wapentake of Ryedale, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north of Kirkby-Moorside. Acres 3,560. Houses 40. Pop., in 1801, 356; in 1831, 185. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 3s.

FARNDISH, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union of Wellingborough, county of Bedford; 4 miles south-south-west of Higham-Ferrers. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10; gross income £160. Tithes commuted in 1799-1800. Patron, in 1835, C. Chester, Esq. Acres 810, about 300 of which are in Northamptonshire.

Houses 15. A. P. £865. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 81. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 7s.

FARNDON, a parish in the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Boughton, co.-palatine of Chester; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Chester, on the eastern bank of the Dee. It includes the townships of Barton, Churton by Farnndon, Clutton, Crowe, and Farnndon. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £33; rated at £104; gross income £115. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Westminster. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £9 per annum. Charities, £23 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £288 14s.; of the township £154 4s. John Speed, topographer, antiquary, and historian, was born here in 1552, and died in 1629. Acres 3,050. Houses 163. A. P. £4,859. Pop., in 1801, 738; in 1831, 864. Acres of the township 120. Houses 77. A. P. £1,866. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 423.

FARNDON (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Market-Harborough, county of Northampton; 2 miles south-south-west of Market-Harborough in Leicestershire. Living, a rectory, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 1s. 0d.; gross income £400. Tithes commuted in 1780. Patrons, the president and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. Charities, £35 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 1s. Here is a mineral well, called Caldwell spring. Acres 1,070. Houses 61. A. P. £2,426. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 250.

FARNDON, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west by west of Newark, on the eastern bank of the Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Balderton annexed, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £244. Tithes commuted in 1769. In the patronage of the prebendary in Lincoln cathedral. Here are two daily schools. Charities, £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £109 17s. Acres 1,710. Houses 119. A. P. £3,929. Pop., in 1801, 387; in 1831, 570.

FARNE ISLANDS, two groupes of little islands and rocks, 17 in number, in the parish of Holy Island, co.-palatine of Durham, to the south-east of Holy Island, or Lindisfarne. That which lies nearest to the shore—House Island—is, according to Pennant, 1 mile and 68 chains from the coast, and the most distant about 7 miles. In his time they were rented for £16 per annum, the produce being kelp, sea fowls, sea fowl eggs, feathers, seals, &c. "Some of them," he adds, "yield a little grass, and serve to feed a cow or two, which the people are desperate enough to transport over in their little boats. The last isle I visited was the House Island, the sequestered spot where St. Cuthbert passed the two last years of his life. Here was afterwards established a priory of Benedictines for six or eight monks, subordinate to Durham. A square tower, the remains of a church, and some other buildings, are to be seen there still, and a stone coffin which it is pretended was that of St. Cuthbert.* At the north end of the isle is a deep chasm from top to bottom of the rock, communicating with the sea, through which, in tempestuous weather, the water is forced with vast violence and noise, and forms a fine jet d'eau of 60 feet high. It is called by the inhabitants of the opposite coast, the churn."—Pennant's Scotland, vol. i. p. 46. A lighthouse has been erected on this island, and another in Staples Island, about 3 miles to the east of it.† The passage between is open for vessels of any burden, but is dangerous from a cluster of rocks, called Oxscar rocks, that lie in the middle of it, on which account the passage is called the Scar road. There is generally from 5 to 8 fathoms of water in this road; and in Budle Bay from 3 to 7 fathoms on a bed of fine sand. The Meg rock, a small islet, opposite Budle Bay is constantly whitened with the fæces of Cormorants. The Pinnacles, an island in the farthest group, is so called from the vast columnar rocks at its southern extremity, over which the fowls pass by means of narrow boards laid across their tops. Amongst the variety of birds which breed on the Farne islands and rocks, we may enumerate cormorants, eider-ducks, puffins, hawks, guillemots, shags, gulls of every description, kittiwakes, great terns, sea pies, sea larks, rock larks, rock pigeons, and jackdaws, the last of which breed in rabbit holes.

On 5th September 1838, the "Forfarshire" steamer from Hull to Dundee, with 56 persons on board, was wrecked, in attempting to pass, in a disabled condition, and during a heavy gale, between the Farne islands: 38 persons perished: 18 were saved;—9 of them by the courageous conduct of the Outer Farne lighthouse keeper, J. Darling, and his daughter, who ventured out in a cable, in a tremendous sea, at the imminent risk of their own lives. "By a daring effort, the former was landed on the rock on which the vessel was wrecked; and the frail cable, to preserve it from being dashed to pieces, was rapidly rowed back among the wild abyss of waters, by the skill and dexterity of this young woman, alone, and there kept afloat, preparatory to the rescue of those in peril." This certainly remarkable and praiseworthy act of humanity was considered so romantic and ultra-chivalrous at the time of its occurrence, that it excited even perhaps more than adequate interest in the public mind, and was rewarded, not only with enthusiastic and unanimous applause, but with more substantial marks of admiration and favour. All ranks—up even to her majesty, Queen Victoria—united in doing this simple maiden honour: gifts of value were conferred on her: appropriate medals of gold were presented to her: limners visited the Farne isles to take her portrait: locks of hair were prayed of her, till it was feared the whole stock would be exhausted: new and handsome vessels sailed from various seaports, with the 'auspicious' name of "Grace Horsley Darling:" and though part of the periodical press, with much prudence, refrained from too free an indulgence in praise, "lest the young woman's head should be turned," in general it had no such scruples.

FARNHAM, a parish in the hund. of Cranborne, union of Wimbourne and Cranborne, Shaston division, county of Dorset; 7 miles west-north-west of Cranborne. It includes the tything of Farnham-Tollard. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in

* During the wandering of the monks at the period of the Danish invasion—see DURHAM, county and city—the holy corpse of St. Cuthbert is said to have floated in its stone coffin down the Tweed from Melrose to Tillmouth:—

"In his stone coffin forth he rides—
A ponderous bark for river tides!—
Yet light as gossamer it glides
Down to Tillmouth cell."
MARMION, Canto II.

The coffin alluded to by Pennant is said to be that in which the body was first interred: the wonderful bark of the dead alluded to in Marmion, however, though broken in pieces, also still exists near the ruined chapel of Tillmouth: it is finely shaped; 10 feet in length, $3\frac{1}{2}$ in diameter, and only 4 inches thick, and it is a curious and instructive fact, that it has been proved by experiment to be capable of floating with a weight equal to that of the human body.—Surtees' Hist. of Durham.

† There are now three lighthouses on these islands. The charges of their maintenance, in 1838, amounted to £577 10s. 4d.; the gross amount of light-dues to £3,471 1s. 4d.

the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 10s.; gross income £149. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a Sunday National and two daily schools. A fair is held for the sale of cheese, August 21st. Acres 2,200. Houses 64. A. P. £804. Pop., in 1811, 167; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 13s.

FARNHAM, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Bishop Stortford, county of Essex; 2½ miles north of Bishop Stortford, and west of the river Stort. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £23 8s. 9d.; gross income £518. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £607 3s. 11½d. rectorial. Patrons, the president and fellows of Trinity college, Oxford. Here are a day and Sunday National and 2 daily schools. Charities, £55 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £568 9s. Acres 1,360. Houses 106. A. P. £2,734. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 524.

FARNHAM, a township in the parish of Allenton, Northumberland; 6 miles west of Rothbury, bounded on the west by the Cocket river. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 7. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 47. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 10s.

FARNHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles south-west of Saxmundham, on the post-road from Ipswich to Yarmouth. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £15, returned at £48; gross income £79. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Long. Acres 740. Houses 35. A. P. £960. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 216. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 11s.

FARNHAM HUNDRED, in the western division of Surrey, bordering on Hampshire. Area 26,680 acres. Houses 1,472. Pop., in 1836, 8,228.

FARNHAM, a market-town and parish in the above hund.; 10 miles west-south-west of Guildford, and 38 south-west by west of London, situated at the western extremity of the county, and north of the river Wye. It includes the tythings of Badshot and Runfold, Culverlands and Tilford, Runwick, and Wrecklesham and Bourn. Acres 10,510. Houses 1,086. A. P. £20,991. Pop., in 1801, 4,321; in 1831, 5,858. Houses of the township 575. Pop., in 1801, 2,508; in 1831, 3,142. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £29 9s. 5d.; gross income £448. Patron, the archdeacon of Surrey. There is also an Independent church here, formed in 1793; and a congregation of Bible Christians, in 1830. Here are 12 daily schools, one of which, "the grammar-school," is endowed: there are also 6 Sunday and 7 day and boarding-schools, 2 schools connected with the British and Foreign School society, attended by 160 scholars; and 3 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, in 1824, about £245 10s. 2d. per annum; besides upwards of £2,000 expectant on death of annuitants, and constituting part of the endowment of Windsor's almshouses, the income of which, included in the amount of charities, was £79 13s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,188 12s. The town of Farnham consists principally of one street running east and west, and containing many excellent houses: other smaller streets branch from the main street. The town is governed by 12 burgesses, from whom are annually chosen 2 bailiffs, who act as magistrates under the Bishop of Winchester, to whom they pay an annual acknowledgment of 12 pence, and receive all profits arising from the fairs and markets: they hold a court every 3 weeks, with power to try all actions under 40s. The petty-sessions for the division are held here. Farnham returned members to parliament in the 4th and 5th years of Edward II., but never since.

Cloth manufacture was at one time carried on here to a great extent, but was entirely superseded by the culture of hops. A manufactory, however, was established about 16 years ago, wherein hop bags, painted canvass, or floor cloth, sheeting, huckabacks, sailcloth, and tarpawlings are made. Some of the looms—12 in number—for weaving floor-cloth are for webs 18 feet in breadth, others for webs 24, and some for webs 30 feet in breadth. The length of a piece is about 324 feet. Two weavers are required, one on each side of the loom, and a boy in the middle. Nine of the looms were employed in July 1838. There were 24 narrow looms, of which 10 were unemployed. The trade at Farnham labours under much disadvantage. The yarn has to be brought from Dundee, and there is an overland carriage by waggon of 40 miles from London. There is a decided advantage, however, in the manufacture of hop bagging, as the town is the very centre of a rich hop district. Sacking also is chiefly sold amongst the neighbouring farmers. There is a checked fabric made resembling, and a substitute for, carpeting. It is from jute, or Indian hemp, and is spun at Rumsey of threads, if we may so call them, half the thickness of the little finger. The material is brought from Dundee, having there undergone the process of dyeing with very vivid colours.

The soil in this vicinity is peculiarly adapted to the cultivation of hops. At what time they were introduced here is uncertain; but it is stated in the old Magna Britannia, printed in 1738, that "they were brought hither first out of Suffolk, and being once planted, threw so much in a few years, that the inhabitants have been encouraged to plant larger quantities yearly; insomuch, that now about this town are no less than 300 acres of hop-gardening," hops being reared "in as plentiful a manner as in any parts of England, if not more." On an average of 7 years ending in 1835, no less than 902½ acres were annually appropriated to the cultivation of hops in this parish; being greatly above the quantity thus appropriated in any one parish in England during the same period, and immensely above the average of all the parishes. The average number of pounds of hops charged with excise duty was 512,011, and the duty £4,266 15s. 2d., including the produce charged on ¼ of an acre, the average in Farnborough. The Farnham hops are highly celebrated, and preferred for the paleness of colour, and delicate flavour which they give to malt liquor; and on this account they are commonly sold at a price one-third greater than that paid for the hops of other districts. They are all put into packets, with a particular device, which is changed every year; and the hop-growers bind themselves under a heavy penalty, not to put any other hops into these packets, than those for which they are intended. Wyehill fair is the great Farnham hop mart. The Farnham market was once the largest for wheat in England, 400 loads having been sold in one day; and the tolls on that article alone having been calculated at £200 a-year: but its importance has of late years much diminished; the produce of Hampshire, Sussex, &c., being now sent by water-carriage to London. Farnham, however, may also take advantage of the Basingstoke canal, which passes about 4 miles north of the town. The market "was anciently kept upon Sundays, but in the reign of King John it was removed to Thursday, as it is now kept weekly, and made over by that king's grant to the Bishops of Winchester, who being zealous for the sacred use of the Lord's day procured the change." There are fairs for horses, cattle, and sheep, on Holy Thursday, June 24th, and November 13th.

The parish of Farnham—so named, say the editors of the old Magna Britannia, from the plant fern, which grew about it in large quantities—was given by Ethelbald, king of the West Saxons, to the bishop and congregation of the church of Winchester. Here Alfred, in 893, with a handful of men, gained a signal victory over the Danes; and here Henry de Blois, bishop of Winchester, and brother to King Stephen, built on the hill overlooking the town, a castle of great strength, which, on account of its having been a retreat for his rebellious barons, was demolished by Henry III. Being still the property of the bishops of Winchester, it was, after a time, rebuilt by them with more than its original magnificence, and possessed as the episcopal palace. During the troubles in the reign of Charles I. it was garrisoned for the king, besieged and taken by the parliamentarians under Sir William Waller, who dismantled and laid it in ruins. After the restoration, it was partly rebuilt and partly repaired by Dr. Morley, bishop of Winchester, at an expense of £8,000, and continues to this day the principal palace belonging to that see. It contains an extensive and valuable library. Adjoining it is Jay's tower, on the summit of which was made a kitchen and fruit-garden, containing 1 rood, 18 perches of land, with about 4 feet depth of soil. To this palace formerly belonged 2 parks, one called the great park, containing about 1,000 acres, disparked after the Restoration. The little park is that which still adjoins the eastern side of the palace, and contains about 300 acres watered by the small river Loddon, which rises in the vicinity and joins the Wey below the town. An avenue of ancient elms, nearly a mile in length, leads into the palace on the east, forming a most delightful promenade, to the use of which the inhabitants of Farnham have right by prescription. About 2 miles to the south of the town stood the abbey of Waverley, founded in 1128 by Gifford, bishop of Winchester, for monks of the Cistercian order. This is supposed to have been their first public establishment in England, and the abbot, in consequence, was accounted the superior of the order throughout the country. At the dissolution the revenues were estimated at £174 8s. 3d. per annum. The remains of this splendid pile, consisting of the refectory, dormitory, and cloisters, extend, in detached portions, over an area of 3 or 4 acres, and are overgrown with venerable ivy. Farnham was the birth-place of the celebrated William Cobbet, in 1762. He died at Normandy farm, near this town, in 1835.

FARNHAM, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north of Knaresborough, on a branch of the river Ure. It includes the townships of Farnham, Ferensby, and Scotton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 12s. 1d., returned at £32; gross income £130. Patrons, in 1835, the incumbent and representatives of R. Harvey, deceased. Here is a day and Sunday National school, supported partly by an endowment of £15 per annum, and partly by payment of about 2s. per quarter from each of the children. Acres 2,780. Houses 120. A. P. £3,119. Pop., in 1801, 431; in 1831, 614. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 18s. Acres of the township, 1,350. Houses 27. A. P. £1,360. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1838, £83 14s.

FARNHAM-ROYAL, a parish in the hund. of Burnham, union of Eton, county of Buckingham; 4 miles north of Windsor, near the Western railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 16s. 0½d.; gross income £591. Tithes commuted in 1821. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. Here are three daily and two Sunday and daily National schools, one of which is endowed with £14 8s.

per annum; but principally supported by voluntary contributions. Other charities, in 1832, £90 7s. 4d., of which £84 10s. consisted of church estate income. Poor rates, in 1838, £684 10s. "Farnham-Royal, the barons Furnival, heretofore held by this service, that on the coronation-day they should be obliged to find a glove for the king's right hand, and to support his left arm so long as he held the royal sceptre. From the Furnivals it descended to the Talbots, earls of Shrewsbury, who, though, by way of exchange, they surrendered up this manor to Henry VIII. yet reserved that honourable office to themselves and their heirs for ever."—Camden's Britannia, 279. Acres 2,910. Houses 236. A. P. £4,778. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlets of Hedgerley-Dean, and Seer-Green, with a part of the parish of Salt Hill, 851; in 1831, 1,193.

FARNHAM-TOLLARD, a tything in the parish of Farnham, county of Dorset; 8 miles west-north-west of Cranborne. Houses 45. Pop., in 1811, 191; in 1831, 220. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 12s.

FARNHILL WITH CONONLEY, a township in the parish of Kildwick, west riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles south-south-east of Skipton, intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Acres 1,910. Houses 287. A. P. £3,050. Pop., in 1801, 876; in 1831, 1,567. Poor rates, in 1838, £729 16s. A lead mine, which promises to be exceedingly productive, has recently been cut on Glusburn Moor, in the vicinity of the village. The presence of lead has long been known to exist in this neighbourhood, and various individuals have at different times dug here in search of hidden treasure, but either from want of capital or want of perseverance—neither of which can be dispensed with in mining speculations—these projects have successively failed. His Grace the Duke of Devonshire, however, with a spirit equal to that manifested on Grassington Moor and other parts of Yorkshire, and assisted by engineering talent of the first-rate order, is prosecuting the works; and the erection of a smelt mill in the vicinity of the mine, for converting the ore into the pig, is the best proof of advantage expected to result from the undertaking.

FARNHURST, a parish in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; 4½ miles north of Midhurst. Living, a perpetual curacy to the rectory of Lynch in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; returned at £50; gross income £116. Patron, in 1835, W. S. Poyntz, Esq. Here are four daily schools. Acres 4,680. Houses 96. A. P. £1,855. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 769. Poor rates, in 1838, £354.

FARNINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, union of Dartford, county of Kent; 6 miles east-south-east of Foot's-Cray. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 5s. 10d.; gross income £274. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Here are a Sunday National and 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, about £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £401 9s. Farningham, of old Fremingham, i. e. the village by the brook, is situated on the Darent, over which it has a bridge of four arches, and on its banks several paper-mills. The weekly market, which was on Tuesday, has been long discontinued; but there is still a fair for horses, cattle, &c. on the 15th of October. Acres 2,880. Houses 121. A. P. £3,599. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 701.

FARNLAWS, or FAVINLEY, a township in the parish of Hartburn, Northumberland; 13 miles west-north-west of Morpeth. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 15. Other returns with the parish.

FARNLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Otley, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-east of Otley, on the northern bank of the river Warfe. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £4 18s. 4d., returned at £33; gross income £40. Patron, in 1835, F. H. Fawkes. Esq. Acres 1,810. Houses 35. A. P. £2,327. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 196. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 8s.

FARNLEY, a chapelry in the parish of St. Peter, within the parliamentary boundary of the borough of Leeds, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-west by west of Leeds. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £5 10s.; gross income £204. Patron, the vicar of Leeds. Farnley is a clothing village connected with LEEDS,—which see.—In 1839 there were 135 hand-loom in the village. Acres 2,070. Houses 303. A. P. £3,657. Pop., in 1801, 943; in 1831, 1 591. Poor rates, in 1838, £396 17s.

FARNLEY-TYAS, a township in the parish of Almondbury, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-south-east of Huddersfield. Here are a Sunday and daily and a Sunday National school. Acres 1,740. Houses 146. A. P. £2,171. Pop., in 1801, 730; in 1831, 849. Poor rates, in 1838, £161 11s.

FARNFIELD, a parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, though locally in the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 4 miles north-west by west of Southwell. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of Southwell, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4, returned at £140; gross income £165. Tithes commuted in 1777. Patron, Southwell college church. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with house, school-room, and paddock, for the master, rent free: other charities, £12 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 8s. Acres 3,920. Houses 218. A. P. £3,376. Pop., in 1801, 564; in 1831, 1,010.

FARNWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of Dean, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles south-east of Great Bolton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge; gross income £100. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. A chapel for this township has been erected, on Halshaw-moor, by the commissioners for erecting additional churches, at an expense of £8,000. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1809. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £9 2s. per annum. Other returns with the parish. Acres 1,450. Houses 511. A. P. £2,758. Pop., in 1801, 1,439; in 1831, 2,928. Poor rates, in 1838, £677 15s.

FARNWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of Prescott, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5½ miles west of Warrington, north of the river Mersey, and near the Liverpool and Manchester railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £16 16s., returned at £100; gross income £172. Patron, the vicar of Prescott. Here is a free grammar-school. At Peel-house, in this chapelry, was born William Smith, the founder of Brazenose college, Oxford. He died lord-bishop of Lincoln, in 1514.

FARRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of East Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 3½ miles north-east of Topsham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 8s. 1½d.; gross income £360. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Acres 4,000. Houses 65. A. P. £2,077. Pop., in 1801, including a part of the tything of Clist-Sackville, 293; in 1831, 377. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 5s.

FARRINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Iwerne-Courtney, county of Dorset; 5½ miles south-south-west of Shaftesbury. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Iwerne-Courtney. Returns with the parish.

FARRINGTON HUNDRED, in the county of Berks. Area 9,880 acres. Houses 742. Pop., in 1831, 4,207.

FARRINGTON (GREAT), a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Farrington, county of Berks; 36 miles west-north-west of Reading, 69 west-north-west of London, and about 2 south of the Thames, on the post-road from Lechlade to Abingdon. Acres 6,910. Houses 520. A. P. £10,268. Pop., in 1801, comprising the township of Coxwell Little, with the tythings of Hospital, Wadley, or Littleworth and Thrupp, 2,153; in 1831, 3,033. Living, a vicarage, with Little Coxwell, a peculiar, formerly in the dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £14 1s. 3d.; gross income £266. Inappropriate and vicarial tithes commuted in 1772. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. The church is a large handsome building in the earliest style of Gothic architecture. At Little Coxwell there is a chapel-of-ease to the church. There are also in the parish a Primitive Methodist church, formed in 1835, and a place of worship belonging to the Baptists. There are a Sunday and daily National school, supported by subscription, and 6 daily, 2 Sunday, and 8 day and boarding schools. Charities, in 1836, £174 19s. 10d.; of which £45 4s. 6d. was principally applied in lighting and paving the town, and keeping the footpaths in repair; and £13 11s. chiefly connected with the township of Little Coxwell. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,408 2s.—The Farrington poor-law union comprehends 31 parishes, embracing an area of 101 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 14,236. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,124. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,134; in 1839, £8,154 19s.

Farrington is an ancient cleanly town. In the immediate vicinity is Farrington hill, a beautiful eminence, rising gradually from the vale of Whitehorse, and terminated by a small grove, forming a kind of landmark for the surrounding counties. This charming place commands a rich and extensive view over parts of Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire, in addition to the whole of the beautiful vale beneath. The town is governed by a bailiff and constables, and the county magistrates hold petty-sessions for the division, in the town hall, according to circumstances. This town is one of the polling-places for the members for Berkshire. There are here few manufactures: the chief trade of the town is in hogs and bacon: as many as 4,000 hogs have been slain here in the course of a year. Between 9 and 10 acres of hops are annually cultivated in this vicinity. A Reading paper gravely states that a most formidable invasion of the insect called the ladybird was experienced here in the autumn of 1838; and that "it was found necessary to employ the parish engine, charged with tobacco-fumigated water, to disperse and destroy them"! The navigation of the Thames, or Isis, which approaches within 2 miles north of the town, has hitherto afforded a ready conveyance for commodities connected with the trade of this place, both in the way of import and export; and the Great Western railway, which passes 3 or 4 miles to the south of Farrington, was opened from London to the Farrington road station, on 20th July, 1840. The market, which has been a chief support of the town, as a large and numerous attended corn market, is held weekly on Tuesday; and there are fairs February 13th, Whit-Tuesday, Tuesday before and Tuesday after old Michaelmas, and the 29th of October, for horses, fat cattle, and pigs. The County of Gloucester bank has a branch in Farrington.

Lambard considers Farrington to be Feardune, "where Edward thelder, and son of Alfrede, dyed in the year 924; for the kinges in auneynt tyme had a house there. In it also a church dedicated to Laurence, which succeeded Augustine, in tharche-bishoprike of Canterbury, which was terrible to women, for none mighte approche it, much lyke the temple of Venus Olympia in Greece, wherein no woman might enter without some villanye." Lambard's principal reason for considering Farrington to be the ancient Feardune is—"because a booke which I have of Glascow Librarye sayeth that Edward thelder, the son of Alfrede, died at Farrington, which thauctors above-mentioned suppose to have dyed at Feardune." "Some Cistercian monks"—says Tanner—"happening to fix here, King John, 2d Nov. A. D. 1,203, gave the whole manor to the head house of St. Mary at Cisterium, or Citeaux, in France, upon condition that an abbey should be forthwith built within the same. But the same king having founded, in the next year, a large monastery of that order at Beaulieu, in Hampshire, it was agreed by all parties that this donation should be transferred thither, so that here were settled only some few monks, subordinate to the convent of Beaulieu, and as parcel of the possessions of that abbey, this manor, the fairs, and other liberties, were granted to Sir F. Englefield, 2^o Mary."—Not. Mon.

FARRINGTON (LITTLE), a tything in the parish of Langford, county of Berks; 2 miles north-east of Lechlade. Living, a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Langford. Vicarial tithes commuted in 1788. Acres 1,010. Houses 31. A. P. £1,869. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 5s.

FARRINGTON, a township in the parish of Penwortham, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles south of Preston, intersected by the Wigan and Preston railway. Tithes commuted in 1819. Here is a free school. Acres 1,940. Houses 107. A. P. £2,963. Pop., in 1801, 382; in 1831, 672. Poor rates, in 1838, £345 10s.

FARRINGTON WITH CWMGILLA, a lordship in the parish of Knighton, county of Radnor, South Wales; 1½ mile south-west of Knighton. Houses 28. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 183. Other returns with the parish.

FARRINGTON-GURNEY, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; 8½ miles north-north-east of Wells. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Chewton-Mendip. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 890. Houses 106. A. P. £2,225. Pop., in 1801, 344; in 1831, 568. Poor rates, in 1838, £166 18s.

FARSLEY. See CALVERLEY-CUM-FARSLEY.

FARTHINGHOE, a parish in the hund. of King's-Sutton, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 4 miles north-west by west of Brackley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £16; no return. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Wilton. Acres 3,320. Houses 82. A. P. £2,709. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 456. Poor rates, in 1838, £125 10s.

FARTHINGSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 7 miles north-west of Towcester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 18s. 11½d.; gross income £285. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here are 2 daily schools, and a Sunday one endowed with £7 per annum. Acres 1,820. Houses 53. A. P. £2,214. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 293. Poor rates, in 1838, £212 17s.

FARWAY, a parish in the hund. of Colyton union of Honiton, county of Devon; 3 miles south-east of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £265. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Putt. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, the former of which is endowed with £7 10s. per annum. Colyton and South Leigh meet Farway in a point within a dwelling-house belonging to the Marwood family. The house consequently stands in three parishes. Acres 3,420. Houses 68. A. P. £2,573. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 360. Poor rates, in 1838, £142.

FAUGH AND FENTON, a township in the parish of Hayton, county of Cumberland; 7½ miles east, south-east of Carlisle, on a branch of the river Eden, and intersected by the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. Acreage with the parish. Houses 76. A. P. £1,429. Pop., in 1801, 290; in 1831, 393.

FAULD, a township in the parish of Hanbury, county of Stafford; 7¼ miles south-east by east of Uttoxeter, on the southern bank of the Dove. This was the birth-place of Robert Burton, author of the 'Anatomy of Melancholy.' Acres 860. Houses 10. Pop., in 1811, 72; in 1831, 56. Other returns with the parish.

FAULKBOURN, a parish in the hund. and union of Witham, county of Essex; 2 miles north-west of Witham, and west of the river Brain. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £280. Patron, in 1835, J. Bullock, Esq. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, in 1836, £7 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £82. Acres 750. Houses 25. A. P. £1,653. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 161.

FAVERSHAM HUNDRED, in the lathe of Scray, county of Kent. It lies nearly in the centre of the county. Area 25,710 acres. Houses 1,639. Pop., in 1831, 9,663.

FAVERSHAM, a seaport, market-town, and parish, in the above hund., union of Faversham. It is a member of the Cinque-port of Dover. Acres 2,270. Houses 807. A. P. £9,493. Pop., in 1801, of Faversham-in-Liberty, 3,364; of Faversham-out-Liberty, 124; in whole, 3,488: in 1831, of the former, 3,982; of the latter, 447; in whole 4,429. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £26 17s. 6d.; gross income £349. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Canterbury. The church is a very handsome cruciform edifice. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1790; a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1809; a congregation of Bible Christians, formed in 1815; and a neat chapel for Baptists. There are 4 Sunday, 2 boarding, and 23 daily schools, one of which, a free grammar-school, is endowed with about 100 acres of land, and one of the National schools is partly supported by legacies, amounting to £55 16s. per annum. Here are also almshouses, for 6 poor old men, and 6 poor widows. In 1651, 29 acres of land were bequeathed by John Castlock, for apprenticing poor children. Other small charities amount to upwards of £110. Mr. H. Wreight, who died in 1839, has left the bulk of his property, amounting, it is said, to about £75,000, to the poor of Faversham. Almshouses have already been built from this charity; 6 for aged dredgemen, and 6 for aged women.—Poor rates, in 1838, £2,070 10s. A workhouse has been erected here, by the poor-law commissioners, for 500 persons. The Faversham union comprehends 25 parishes, with a population, in 1831, of 14,923. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,645. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,262; in 1839, £6,797 4s.

The town of Faversham stands about half-a-mile north of the London and Canterbury road, which here passes through Ospringe-street. It is 9 miles west by north of Canterbury, and 47 east by south of London, on a navigable arm of the Swale, opposite the south corner of the isle of Sheppey. A beautiful rivulet rises in Ospringe parish, and runs into Faversham creek, affording a necessary back-water to the haven. It consists principally of four streets, in the form of an irregular cross, and of considerable length, spacious and well-paved, in the centre of which stands the guildhall, which is supported upon pillars; the market is held in the open space beneath and around it. There is a set of assembly-rooms. The town was considerably improved, in 1773, when a bridge was built over the water at the bottom of West-street. On the opposite bank of the creek is Brent's town, consisting of a number of houses, most of them recently built, and chiefly inhabited by persons occupied at the port. Ospringe-street is separated from the houses in Faversham only about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a-mile, the ground adjoining the road between them being partly used for building, and apparently about to become a continuous line of streets. Preston-street is situated on the southern side of the town, to which it is united by a line of houses: immediately adjoining is the village of Preston. "Faversham," says Leland, "is included in one paroch, but that is very large. Ther cummeth a creke to the town that bareth vessels of xx tunes; and a myle fro theus north-east, is a great key, called Thorn, to discharge bygge vessels. The creke is fedd with bakke-water that cummeth from Ospringe." The quay alluded to by Leland, called the Thorn, has been many years out of use; but 3 quays or wharfs have been made close to the town, where all the shipping belonging to the port take in and discharge their cargoes. The navigation of the creek also has been greatly improved; and vessels of 100 tons burthen can now come up to the town at common tides; whilst, at spring tides, the channel is deep enough for ships drawing 8 feet of water. The management and preservation of the navigation are vested in the corporation, the expenses being paid out of certain port-dues.

Previous to the passing of the municipal act, the government of Faversham was vested in 12 jurats, one of whom was annually elected mayor; and 24 common-councilmen, assisted by a town-clerk, two chamberlains, two sergeants at mace, &c. The borough comprehended nearly all the town. It had received numerous charters, the governing one of which was granted by Edward VI., and by virtue of which the mayor was appointed to be a justice of the peace, and to preside at the general sessions of the peace, &c.: he held courts of session twice a-year, a court of record for recovery of debts, &c. Other courts were also appointed to be held: the jurats were ordained justices of the peace for the borough. A court of requests, for debts above 2s. and under 40s., was established by act 25 Geo. III. c. 7., the operation of the act extending over an area of about 6 miles radius round the town. Under the new municipal act, Faversham was included in schedule B., amongst boroughs not to have a commission of peace unless on petition and grant: a commission of the peace has now been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed. The borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being 'the mayor, aldermen, and council of the town of Faversham.' The municipal boundaries, laid down in the boundary reports, include Ospringe, Davington, Brent-town, and Preston. The income of the borough, for 1839, was £1,054 16s. 6½d.: expenditure £964 16s. 6½d.; of which £248 12s. 9½d. consisted of expenditure on police and constables; £161 0s. 7d. on prosecutions, &c.; £154 11s. 2d. on salaries, &c., to municipal officers; and £116 0s. 11½d. on repairs, &c. The jail is small, consisting of 2 rooms and an airing-yard. The prison inspectors recommended that it be used merely as a lock-up house. It seems that anciently the freemen of Faversham had the privilege of voting for members of parliament for Dover. The corporation relinquished this privilege to be released from contributing to the support of the member.

Faversham has long been celebrated for its manufacture of gunpowder, under the superintendence of a branch of the ordnance established here. The various mills, store-houses, &c., are chiefly situated on the stream that flows from Ospringe, and forms small islands in its course to the Faversham creek. This manufacture is supposed to have been established here previous to the reign of Elizabeth. It was carried on by private individuals till 1760, when government, to insure greater security, erected buildings and carried on the manufacture by its own agents. In less than 7 years after, a store, containing 25 barrels of powder, blew up; and, in 1781, a still more serious explosion took place, which shivered the works to atoms and nearly unroofed the town, with the neighbouring hamlets. The stores were now removed into the Marsh, a considerable distance below the town. During the late war upwards of 400 persons were employed in these works, which annually produced from 12,000 to 13,000 barrels. Government has for the last few years relinquished the powder-works here, but still holds the property, which is tenanted at present by Messrs. Hall, who carry on the works. Besides Roman cement, Faversham appears to have now no other manufactures; but its traffic is very considerable in corn, hops, fruits, wool, &c., which are shipped here for the London market. Upwards of 40,000 quarters of corn have been annually shipped. Its imports are coals from Sunderland, and timber, iron, pitch, tar, &c., from Sweden and Norway. The oyster-fishery, originally an appurtenance to the manor of Milton, and by King John conferred on Faversham abbey, is very considerable, and constitutes a prominent article of trade. It is prosecuted by "the company of free fishermen, and free dredger men of the hundred of Faversham," acting as tenants under the jurisdiction and protection of the lord of the manor, whose steward holds annually two courts, called admiralty or water courts, where every necessary regulation for the benefit of the fishery is made. As at Milton and Rochester, the native broods have been found insufficient for the consumption; and vast quantities of spat have been annually collected from the different parts of the surrounding seas, even as far as the Land's-End in Cornwall, and the coasts of Scotland and France, and placed in the beds belonging to this fishery, there to increase and multiply. Faversham oysters have been exported to Holland, to the yearly value, it is said, of £4,000. Several fishing smacks, and a considerable number of coasting-vessels belong to this port. A branch of the customs is established here. There is also a bonded warehouse limited to wines and spirits; and permission has been obtained to have bonded yards for timber. The gross receipts of customs' duty, in 1838, were £2,753 8s. 2d.; in 1839, £4,070 5s. 6d. Faversham is said to have been notorious for running wine, brandy, tea, coffee, pepper, &c., from France and Holland, by the help of Dutch oyster boats, and for clandestinely exporting wool. Wednesday and Saturday are the market-days. Fairs were formerly held on the 25th of February and 12th of August, for linen, woollen, toys, &c., but have been discontinued.

Faversham lays claim to high antiquity, having been occupied by the Britons previous to the descent of the Romans. It was 'the kings little town of Febresham' in 811; and in 903 it was honoured with a meeting of the great council of the nation under Athelstan. It is returned in Domesday-book as in possession of William the Conqueror, who bestowed the advowson on the abbey of St. Augustine in Canterbury, and the manor on one of his favourite Normans. "In the year 1147, King Stephen, and Maud his queen, built an abbey here for monks of Cluni, who, being afterwards released from all subjection to the foreign monastery, became Benedictines. It was dedicated to our Holy Saviour, and was found, 26° Hen. VIII., to be worth £286 12s. 6d. ob. q. per ann. Dugd. Speed. The site was granted, 31° Hen. VIII., to Sir Thomas Cheiney."—Tanner's Not. Mon.—In this monastery were interred King Stephen himself, his wife Maud, his son Eustace, with many other noble personages. Its abbots, during the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II., sat in thirteen several parliaments. The Roman saints, Crispin and Crispianus, are said to have founded an asylum here where they were apprenticed to a shoemaker. "In the tyme of Kinge Jhon," says Lambard, "there arose a controversie betwene him and the abbot of St. Augustynes in Canterbury, touching the advowson of the parishe-churche of Feversham; the kinge put in his presentee, and thabbot plucked him out, and caused certain of his monkes to kepe the churche. The kinge understandinge that, first sent his writ comaundering them to remove, which, when they obeyed not, he comaunded the shyryf of the cuntry to leavy the power of his Baylywicke, and to cast them out violently, which he attempted, but er he could bringe to passe, the monkes weare many hurte, and al drawn out by the heles." King James II. is said to have been stopped here as he was escaping in a smack to France. The family of Duncombe take the title of baron from this town.

FAVINLEY. See FARNLAWS or FAVINLEY.

FAWCET-FOREST, a township, partly in the parish of Kirkby-Kendal, partly in that of Shap, and partly in that of Orton, Westmoreland; 7 miles north-north-east of Kendal, and west of the river Linn. This is an extensive township, wild, mountainous, and barren, 5,000 acres having been let for less than £500 per annum. Houses 10. A. P. £807. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 61. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 8s.

FAWDINGTON, a township in the parish of Cundall, north riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-east of Borough-Bridge, and close on the Great North of England railway. Acres 330. Houses 7. Pop., in 1821, 39; in 1831, 48. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 5s.

FAWDON, a township in the parish of Gosforth, county of Northumberland; 3 miles north-north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 127. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 707; an increase attributable to the establishment of extensive coal-works. In sinking one of the coal-pits a fossilized tree was found. Poor rates, in 1838, £61.

FAWDON, CLINCH and HARTSIDE, townships in the parish of Ingram, county of Northumberland. Fawdon is 9¾ miles south of Wooler, and south of the river Breamish. Tithes of Clinch commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of impropriate £12 10s.; of rectorial £18 6s. 6d.; of those due to parish-clerk 1s. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 2s.

FAWKHAM, a parish in the hund. of Axton-Dartford and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Dartford, county of Kent; 5½ miles south-east of Dartford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £6 9s. 4½d.; gross income £287. Patrons, in 1835, P. Pusey, Esq., and ——— Randall, Esq. Here are one Sunday National and two daily schools. Acres 1,060. Houses 23. A. P. £1,071. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 204. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 1s.

FAWLER, a hamlet in the parish of Charlbury, county of Oxford; 4¼ miles north-north-east of Witnee; on the northern bank of the river Evenlode. Acres 980. Houses 25. A. P. £1,676. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 134. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 15s.

FAWLEY WITH WHATCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 5½ miles south of Wantage. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,035 7s., rectorial. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; no return; in the patronage, in 1835, of Mr. and Mrs. Wroughton. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 2,870. Houses 37. A. P. £2,137. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 194. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 2s.

FAWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Desborough, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; 3 miles north-north-west of Henley-upon-Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10 10s. 10d.; gross income £397. Patron, in 1835, W. Freeman. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Fawley court was garrisoned in 1642 for Charles by the cavaliers, who greatly injured the old mansion. It was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren in 1684. It is a handsome and spacious structure, surrounded by an extensive and beautiful lawn. Acres 2,010. Houses 48. A. P. £1,707. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 254. Poor rates, in 1838, £320.

FAWLEY HUNDRED, in Fawley division, county of Southampton. It lies to the east of Winchester near the centre of the county. Area 48,410 acres. Houses 1,381. Pop., in 1831, 8,416.

FAWLEY, a parish, partly in the hund. of Bishop's-Waltham, and partly in the hund. of Redbridge, union of New Forest, county of Southampton; 6 miles south-south-east of Southampton, and west of Southampton water. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Exbury, a peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £34 13s. 6½d.; gross income £1,226; nett income £1,179. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. There is also a place of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Here are eight daily, four Sunday, and five day and Sunday schools. Acres 6,590. Houses 363. A. P. £1,539. Pop., in 1801, including the tythings of Stone and Brightminstone, 518; in 1831, 1,839. Poor rates, in 1838, £980 5s.

FAWNS, a township in the parish of Kirkwhelpington, Northumberland; 13¼ miles west of Morpeth. It consists of one single farm. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount 6s. 8d. impropriated, and £2 17s. vicarial. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 5; in 1831, 7. Other returns with the parish.

FAWSLEY HUNDRED, in the new southern division of the county of Northampton. It lies on the west side of the county bordering on Warwickshire. Area 49,190 acres. Houses 2,944. Pop., in 1831, 14,157.

FAWSLEY, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 4½ miles south of Daventry. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 9s. 7d.; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. Knightley, Bart. The church contains many fine monuments to the memory of the Knightley family, who have been lords of the manor since the time of Henry III. Fawsley hall—belonging to the same family—is situated on a gently elevated lawn, stocked with deer, and commanding a rich expanse of wood and fertile pasturage, enlivened by two fine sheets of water. Its hall is a curious and interesting structure of various dates. Its chief ornament is a magnificent hall, 43 feet high, and 54 feet in length by 24, with an open timber roof. Dr. John Wilkins, celebrated as a divine, but more especially as a mathematician, was born here in 1614. Acres 1,550. Houses 4. A. P. £2,276. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 22.

FAXFLEET, a township in that part of the parish of South Cave which is within the liberty of St. Peter of York, east riding of Yorkshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of South Cave, on the northern bank of the Humber, at its confluence with the Trent. All tithes of this township are commuted. Acres 1,630. Houses 36. A. P. £1,683. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 13s.

FAXTON, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 5 miles south-south-west of Rothwell. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Lamport. Acres 2,120. Houses 22. A. P. £3,903. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 5s.

FAZAKERLEY, a township in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Liverpool. Acres 1,860. Houses 47. A. P. £4,166. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 407. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 15s.

FAZELEY, a township and chapelry in the parish of Tamworth, county of Stafford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Tamworth; west of the river Tame, at a terminus of the Fazeley and Warwick canal, near the junction of the Coventry and Birmingham canals, and close upon the Birmingham and Derby railway. The Birmingham canal company propose to cut another canal from Salford bridge to Camp-hill, to join the Fazeley and Warwick canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £235. Patron, in 1835, Sir Robert Peel, Bart. Here are two Sunday, two boarding, two Sunday and daily National, and two daily schools, to one of which a lending library is attached. Fazeley is celebrated for the cotton manufacture of the late Sir Robert Peel. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill here, employing 106 hands. Fairs are held March 21st, the second Mondays of January, February, and December, for cattle; the last Monday in June for wool, &c.; the Monday after October 10th for cattle and sheep, and November 18th. There is here a bridge over the Tame, through which the Watling street enters into Staffordshire. Acreage, with the township of Bonehill and Bangley, 2,150. Houses 222. A. P. £3,187. Pop., in 1801, 611; in 1831, 1,139. Poor rates, in 1838, £802 8s.

FEARBY, a township in the parish of Masham, north riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles west of Masham. Acres 600. Houses 62. A. P. £998. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 249. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 5s.

FEARNHEAD. See POULTON-WITH-FEARNHEAD.

FEATHERSTON, a township in the parish of Haltwhistle, Northumberland; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-west of Haltwhistle. Here, most picturesquely situated, near the South Tyne, opposite the confluence of the Hartley-burn, stands Featherstone castle, for many ages the seat of the Featherstones of Featherstonehaugh. There is here a daily school, with a small endowment. Acreage and A. P. with the parish.

Houses 49. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 274. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 11s.

FEATHERSTONE, a township in the parish of Wolverhampton, county of Stafford; 6 miles south of Wolverhampton, intersected by the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Acreage included in that of the parish of Shavesill. Houses 6. A. P. £611. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 34. Poor rates, in 1838, £11 19s.

FEATHERSTONE, a parish, partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west by north of Pontefract. It includes the townships of Acton, Featherstone, Peerston-Jaglin, and Whitwood. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £5 8s. $6\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £256. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Here are a Sunday and daily National and 3 daily schools. Acres 4,050. Houses 197. A. P. £8,774. Pop., in 1801, 801; in 1831, 945. Poor rates, in 1838, £394. Acres of the township 1,190. Houses 70. A. P. £1,789. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 328. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 2s.

FECKENHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Alcester, county of Worcester; 7 miles east by south of Droitwich. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £9, returned at £120; gross income £118. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,228 18s. $1\frac{3}{4}$ d., impropriated. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Neale. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here. Here are 4 Sunday and 6 daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment. Charities £32 per annum. Feckenham has long been famous for the manufacture of needles, &c. Two annual fairs are held here on March 26th and September 30th, for cattle. In this parish was formerly a very extensive forest: the timber was cut down for consumption at the salt works of Droitwich before the introduction of coals. This forest was the birth-place of John de Feckenham, last abbot of Westminster, an opponent of the Reformation. Acres 6,740. Houses 558. A. P. £8,006. Pop., in 1801, 1,830; in 1831, 2,762. Poor rates, in 1838, £830 8s.

FEELSTEAD, or FELSTED, a parish in the hund. of Hincford, union of Dunmow, county of Essex. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; valued at £18 6s. 8d.; gross income £402. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. W. T. L. P. Wellesley. Here are 7 daily schools, and a free-school for 80 boys, with an hospital for 6 paupers, founded and endowed by Richard Lord Rich, in 1554-64; joint income, in 1834, £407 9s. Acres 7,170. Houses 338. A. P. £8,249. Pop., in 1801, 1,486; in 1831, 1,788. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,098.

FEERING, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Witham, county of Essex; 2 miles south-east of Coggeshall, east of the Blackwater river, and intersected by the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £11; gross income £227. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are a Sunday and daily National and 2 daily schools. An acre or two of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 2,430. Houses 139. A. P. £4,644. Pop., in 1801, 593; in 1831, 735. Poor rates, in 1838, £401.

FEIZER, a hamlet in the west division of the wapentake of Staincliff and Eweross, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-west of Settle, and west of the river Ribbles. "One circumstance with respect to the village of Feizer deserves to be mentioned.—Of ten houses in this place, seven are always in the township of Lawkland and parish of Clapham, one is always in the parish of Giggleswick, and the remaining two, one year within Clapham and the next within Giggleswick. The inhabitants have seats in both churches, and resort to them alternately, and pay corn tythe to the rectors, and Easter dues to the vicars of the two churches, alternately also, but all pay their assessed taxes to Stainforth."—Whitaker's History of Craven, p. 126.

FELBOROUGH HUNDRED, in the lathe of Scray, county of Kent. Area 17,500 acres. Houses 531. Pop., in 1831, 3,223.

FELBRIGG, a parish in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-west of Cromer. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Metton, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 18s. 4d.; gross income £310. Patron, in 1835, Admiral Windham. The church, a handsome edifice, is approached by a fine avenue of oak and beech: it stands embowered in the park plantations of Felbrigg hall, the seat of the Windham family, which is a large and handsome mansion, standing on a commanding eminence, with a beautiful and richly wooded park of 200 acres. Acres 1,440. Houses 16. A. P. £1,097. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 2s.

FELIX-KIRK, a parish and township, partly in the liberty of Ripon, west riding, and partly in the wapentake of Birdforth, union of Thirsk, north riding of Yorkshire. The township of Felix-kirk is 4 miles north-east of Thirsk. It includes the townships of Boltby, Felix-kirk, Sutton-under-Whitestone-Cliffe, and Thirby. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Boltby, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £10; gross income £480; Patron, the archbishop of York. Here are 6 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Here, at Mount St. John, was formerly a preceptory belonging to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Acres 6,990. Houses 185. A. P. £9,870. Pop., in 1801, 906; in 1831, 911. Poor rates, in 1838, £249 7s. Acres of the township 1,010. Houses 22. A. P. £1,974. Pop., in 1801, 113; in 1831, 110.

FELIXSTOW, a parish in the hund. of Colneis, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 11½ miles south-east of Ipswich, at the mouth of the river Deben. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Walton. Here was formerly a priory dedicated to St. Felix. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities, about £15 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £176 4s. Acres 1,170. Houses 71. A. P. £1,670. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 363.

FELKINGTON, or FILKINGTON, a township in the parish of Norham, co.-palatine of Durham; 12 miles north-north-west of Wooller, in Northumberland. Acres 1,400. Houses 23. A. P. £890. Pop., in 1801, including Grievestead, 194; in 1831, 141. Poor rates, in 1838, £167 19s.

FELKIRK, a parish in the wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-north-east of Barnesley, intersected by the York and Derby railway. There is no village, and only a single farmhouse from which this parish derives its name. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £7 1s. 10½d., returned at £140; gross income £837. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here are 9 daily and 5 Sunday schools, 2 of the former of which are endowed, the one with £16, and the other with £12 yearly. Acres 6,360. Houses 232. A. P. £6,903. Pop., in 1801, 1,064; in 1831, 1,156; returned under the townships of Brierley, Havercroft with Cold Hindley, Hindley South, and Shafton. Poor rates, in 1838, £568 9s.

FELLISCLIFFE, a township in the parish of Hampsthwaite, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles west of Knaresborough. Here is a daily school, endowed with £14 per annum, and free to male children belonging to the townships of Felliscliffe and Birstwith. Acres 2,320. Houses 83. A. P. £1,783. Pop., in 1801, 424; in 1831, 351. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 4s.

FELLY, a hamlet in the parish of Annesley, county of Nottingham; 8 miles south-south-west of Mansfield. There was a small priory of Black canons here in ancient times. Acres and houses with the parish. A. P. £356. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 16s.

FELMERSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union and county of Bedford; 3 miles east-north-east of Harold, on the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Pavenham, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 13s. 4d.; gross income £169. Tithes commuted in 1765. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Charities, about £12 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 18s. Acres 2,400. Houses 100. A. P. £2,023. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlet of Radwell, 329; in 1831, 448.

FELMINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Tunstead, union of Tunstead and Happing, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west-south-west of North-Walsingham, and east of the river Bure. Living, a discharged vicarage, the fourth portion of which is a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated each at £6; gross income of the former £169; of the latter £147. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount, £352 2s., due to the bishop of Norwich, £167 2s. 6d. rectorial, and £148 17s. 5d. vicarial. Patrons, in 1835, of the former, the bishop of Norwich; of the latter, John Seaman, Esq. Here are a Sunday National and 2 daily schools. Felmingham is a straggling but pleasant village. Acres 2,010. Houses 82. A. P. £2,252. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £208 16s.

FELSIDE, a township in the parish of Whickham, co.-palatine of Durham; 5 miles south-west of Newcastle. Houses 95. Pop., in 1811, 501; in 1831, 419. Other returns with the parish.

FELPHAM NEAR BOGNOR, a parish in the hund. of Avisford, rape of Arundel, union of West-hampnett, county of Sussex; 6 miles south-west of Arundel. Living, a rectory and a discharged vicarage, the former a sinecure, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated, the former at £19 15s. 10d.; gross income £22; the latter at £9 10s. 10d.; gross income £166; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Chichester. Here are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 4 daily schools. Lying along the English channel, the low lands of this parish are liable to be inundated by the sea, sometimes to the great loss of the inhabitants. From the vicinity of Bognor, a fashionable watering-place, the population of this parish had considerably increased of late years; but under the arrangement for emigration afforded by the poor-law commissioners, 42 persons have recently emigrated from this place to Canada. Acres 1,800. Houses 105. A. P. £3,807. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 588. Poor rates, in 1838, £389 18s.

FELSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 7 miles west by south of Stow-market. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £81 4s. 7d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Joseph Gould. Here are a daily, a Sunday, and a Sunday National, school. Charities, £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £309 6s. On August 16th there is held here annually a fair, chiefly for sheep and lambs. Acres 1,440. Houses 72. A. P. £1,930. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 401.

FELSTEAD. See FEELSTEAD.

FELTHAM, a parish in the hund. of Spelthorne, union of Staines, county of Middlesex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Hounslow. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £302. Tithes commuted in 1799-1800. Patron, in 1835, Joseph Morris. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Acres 2,620. Houses 157. A. P. £4,672. Pop., in 1801, 620; in 1831, 924. Poor rates, in 1838, £415 5s.

FELTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith's, county of Norfolk; 7 miles north-west by north of Norwich, and east of the Wensum. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4; gross income £190. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. Charities, £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 15s. Acres 2,250. Houses 101. A. P. £1,021. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 502.

FELTON, a parish in the hund. of Broxhale, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 12s. 2d.; gross income £212. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Hill, Esq. About 70 acres of hops are annually cultivated in this parish. Acres 990. Houses 17. A. P. £1,459. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £105.

FELTON, a parish, partly in the east division of Coquetdale ward, and partly in the east and west divisions of Morpeth ward, union of Alnwick, Northumberland; 9 miles south of Alnwick, on the Coquet river, over which there is here a good stone bridge of 3 arches, founded on a freestone rock. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Framlington, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £3 13s. 4d.; gross income £282. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church is beautifully situated on an eminence on the north side of the Coquet, which passes through the parish, wit many delightful windings, with a richly cultivated district on every side. The scenery in this vicinity is beautifully romantic. Here are 5 daily schools. Charities, £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £319 13s. It was at the township of Old Felton that the Northumbrian barons, in 1216, did homage for their estates to Alexander, king of Scotland, which so enraged King John, that he burnt the village to ashes. Acres of the parish 14,750. Houses 298. A. P. £17,157. Pop., in 1801, 1,426; in 1831, 1,619; returned under the remaining townships of Acton and Old Felton, Brinkburn, Southside, Bockenfield, Elyhaugh, Eshott, Felton Greens and Glantlees, Swarland, Thirston, East and West, with Shot-haugh. Houses of the township 107. Pop., in 1801, 506; in 1831, 610. Poor rates, in 1838, £214 4s.

FELTON. See WHITCHURCH, Somerset.

FELTON (OLD). See ACTON, Northumberland.

FELTON (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Oswestry, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Oswestry, intersected by the Llanymynich canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £20 12s. 6d.; gross income £1,112. Patron, in 1835, Earl Craven. The Independents have a place of worship here, and there are 2 Sunday and daily, and a Sunday, National, and two daily, schools. Charities, £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £211 9s. The well of St. Winifred in the township of Woolston in this parish, was formerly in high repute. Acres 6,160. Houses

166. A. P. £7,472. Pop., in 1801, 926; in 1831, 1,093.

FELTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Grimshoe, union of Thetford, county of Norfolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Stoken-Ferry, and north of the river Brandon. Living, a double rectory to that or St. Mary and that of St. Nicholas, two parishes consolidated into that of Feltwell, the former rated at £14 17s. 2½d., the latter at £19; gross income £1,314; nett income £1,207. In the patronage of the Crown, and the Bishop of Ely alternately. Here are two parish churches. St. Mary's, the largest, has a nave, aisles, chancel, and a massive square tower with 3 bells and a clock. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 2 Sunday and 2 daily schools. Here is an annual fair held November 20th. Besides the annual income, arising from a fuel allotment of 360 acres, the charities connected with the parish produce £14 a-year. Poor rates, in 1838, £799 2s. Nearly half of this extensive parish is fen, and 1,100 acres form an open common, on which all the tenants have right of pasturage and fuel. Another common was enclosed in 1813. The village of Feltwell is large and neatly built. About 30 looms have been employed in it weaving bombasin, crapes, &c. Acres 14,810. Houses 274. A. P. £7,155. Pop., in 1801, 948; in 1831, 1,231.

FENBY. See ASHBY WITH FENBY.

FENCOT and MURCOT, a hamlet in the parish of Charlton-upon-Otmoor, county of Oxford; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Biicester, and east of the river Kay. There are here 2 daily schools. Acres 750. Houses 60. A. P. £1,456. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 300. Poor rates, in 1838, £118.

FEN-DITTON. See DITTON-FEN.

FEN-DRAYTON. See DRAYTON-FEN.

FENHAM, a township in the parish of St. Andrew, west division of Castle ward, Northumberland; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. This manor was the property of the Knights Templars, and was in the reign of Edward II. transferred to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. Fenham-hall is most delightfully situated amidst rich gardens and extensive pleasure-grounds, and commands some particularly interesting views of the fine vale of Tyne. Acres 420. Houses 23. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 11s.

FENITON, a parish in the hund. of Hayridge, union of Honiton, county of Devon; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16 18s. 6½d.; gross income £372. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £264 17s. 8d. rectorial. Patrons, in 1835, C. Flood, G. B. Northcote, and — Woolley, Esqs. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,340. Houses 61. A. P. £2,190. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 343. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 3s.

FENROTHER, a township in the parish of Hebburn, Northumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Morpeth. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 90. Poor rates, in 1838, £37 1s.

FENSTANTON, a parish in the hund. of Toesland, union of St. Ives, county of Huntingdon; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of St. Ives, and south of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Hilton, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 11s. 5½d.; gross income £275. Tithes commuted in 1802. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Here are 3 Sunday and 5 daily schools, one of which is a free-school, with a considerable endowment. Charities, upwards of £100 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £380 16s. Acres 2,400. Houses 197. A. P. £5,687. Pop., in 1801, 704; in 1831, 968.

FENTON. See FAUGH AND FENTON.

FENTON, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 5 miles east-south-east of Newark. Living, a curacy subordinate to the rectory of Beckingham, to which parish Fenton was formerly a chapelry. Acres 1,220. Houses 24. A. P. £1,682. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 102. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 10s.

FENTON, a hamlet in the parish of Kettlethorpe, county of Lincoln; 9 miles north-west by west of Lincoln, and east of the Trent. Tithes commuted in 1765. Acreage with the parish. Houses 43. A. P. £1,805. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 226. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 9s.

FENTON (KIRK), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Barkston-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-south-east of Tadcaster; 10 miles, 56 chains, by railway south-south-west of York, and close upon the York and North Midland railway. It includes the townships of Biggin, Kirk-Fenton, and Little-Fenton. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £120; gross income £125. Patron, the prebendary of Fenton in York cathedral. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 4,410. Houses 106. A. P. £4,117. Pop., in 1801, 514; in 1831, 649. Poor rates, in 1838, £281 18s. Acres of the township 2,160. Houses 63. A. P. £2,390. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 406. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 18s.

FENTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Kirk-Fenton, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south-south-east of Tadcaster. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Houses 17. A. P. with the township of Biggin £1,727. Pop., in 1811, 119; in 1831, 102.

FENTON (GREAT), or FENTON-CALVERT, a township in the parish, and now included with the borough, of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne, intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway. Houses 535. Pop., in 1811, 1,650; in 1831, 2,708. Other returns with the parish.

FENTON (LITTLE), or FENTON-VIVIAN, a township in the parish, and now included in the borough, of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1770. Houses 189. Pop., in 1811, 856; in 1831, 1,002. Other returns with the parish.

FENWICK, a township in the parish of Stamfordham, county of Northumberland; 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Newcastle-on-Tyne, on a branch of the river Pont. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £96 18s. 1d. vicarial, and due to the Bishop of Durham. Fenwick Tower, for ages the seat of the Fenwicks, has long been in ruins. About 60 years ago 226 gold nobles were found in pulling down a part of the old wall. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 14. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 80. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 5s.

FENWICK, a township in the parish of Campsall, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Snaith, and south of the river Went. Tithes commuted in 1769. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. Acres 2,060. Houses 53. A. P. £2,781. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 286. Poor rates, in 1838, £176 14s.

FEOCK, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of Truro, county of Cornwall; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Truro, bounded on the east by the river Truro, and on the south by Falmouth harbour. The Redruth and Chasewater railway terminates at Point quay in this parish. The act incorporating the company, in 1824, empowered them to restore, improve, and maintain the navigation of Restrouguet creek in Falmouth harbour. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11; gross income £204. Patron, the Bishop of Exeter. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. There are also 2 Sunday and 6 daily schools, 2 of which are National schools. Trellisick house, in this vicinity, is an elegant and classical mansion in the Ionic style, with a portico similar to those of the temple of Erecthus at Athens, while other parts are derived from the temple of Minerva Polias. It is surrounded by some of the most romantic and picturesque scenery in the county: being placed on the acclivity of a hill, at some distance from the shore of the river Fall, it commands amongst the most prominent and interesting features, extensive and varied views, comprising the shores of the estuary, the black rock, the entrance to Falmouth harbour, Pendennis castle, with the expansive ocean beyond, and the wooded grounds of Trefusis. Acres 2,530. Houses 228. A. P. £2,871. Pop., in 1801, 696; in 1831, 1,210. Poor rates, in 1838, £416 9s.

FERENSBY, a township in the parish of Farnham, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Knaresborough. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £20 due to the prebendary of Beechill and Knaresborough. Acres 400. Houses 27. A. P. £663. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 133. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 1s.

FERN. See FARNE ISLANDS.

FERNHAM, a hamlet in the parish of Shrivensham, county of Berks; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Great Farringdon, and near the Great Western railway, which was opened to the Farringdon road on 20th July, 1840. Acreage with the parish. Houses 45. A. P. £1,596. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 239. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 15s.

FERNILEE, a township in the parish of Hope, county of Derby; 6 miles north-north-east of Tideswell. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 82. A. P. £2,308. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 418. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 11s.

FERRIBY (NORTH), a parish in the county of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, union of Sculcoates, east riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles west by south of Hull, on the northern bank of the Humber, and intersected by the Selby and Hull railway, which has a station here, 7 miles from Hull. It includes the townships of North Ferriby and Swanland. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £8 13s. 4d.; gross income £163. All tithes, &c., commuted in 1824. Patron, in 1835, W. W. Wilkinson. Here are 2 Sunday, a Sunday and daily National, and five daily schools, two of which are supported by endowments. Here was in ancient times a priory of Knights Templars. It was founded about the year 1200 by Lord Eustace Broomfleet; and the revenues at the dissolution were valued at £95 11s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., or clear £60 1s. 2d. "The site of this priory," says Hadley, "has been in the possession of 100 different persons between its dissolution and 1696, all those being commonly ruined or reduced to beggary that had anything to do with it." No vestige of it now remains. Acres 3,760. Houses 168. A. P. £6,590. Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 823. Poor rates, in 1838, £463.

FERRIBY (SOUTH), a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Glanford-Brigg, county of Lincoln; 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Barton, pleasantly situated on the Humber, on the side of a range of hills which intersects the county. Here the Humber is an estuary from 3 to 6 miles in breadth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 17s. 6d.; gross income £197. Tithes commuted in 1801. Patron, the Bishop of Lincoln. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and 2 daily schools. Acres 1,750. Houses 103. A. P. £2,600. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 500. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 6s.

FERRING, a parish in the hund. of Poling, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Worthing. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of East Preston and Kingston, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 8s. 4d., returned at £150; gross income £200. Patron, the prebendary of Ferring in the cathedral of Chichester. Acres 1,070. Houses 56. A. P. £1,424. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 258. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 6s.

FERRIS-NORTON HUNDRED, in the county of Somerset. It lies around Wincanton on the east side of the county bordering with Dorsetshire. Area 18,730 acres. Houses 937. Pop., in 1801, 5,092.

FERRY-FRYSTONE. See FRYSTONE-FERRY.

FERRYBRIDGE, a township in the parish of Frystone-Ferry, west riding of Yorkshire; 20 miles south-south-west of York, on the river Aire, and near the junction of the Manchester and Leeds, the North Midland, and the York and North Midland railways, and south of the Leeds, Selby, and Hull railway. It is a neat little town, well-built, with a number of excellent inns, and has hitherto derived its importance almost solely from its being a stage for travellers passing and re-passing on the high road from and to the metropolis. It is now comprised in the parliamentary boundary of Pontefract.

FERRYHILL, a township in the parish of Merlington, co.-palatine of Durham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Bishop Auckland, close upon the Great North of England railway, and the Durham branch of the Clarence railway, at a terminus of the Byer's Green branch of the Clarence railway. Here are 4 daily schools. This is a large and well-built village; it was anciently called Feery, and gave name to a resident family. There are coal works in the vicinity. Acres 2,480. Houses 124. A. P. £2,648. Pop., in 1801, 507; in 1831, 591. Poor rates, in 1838, £231 6s.

FERSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Guiltcross, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Diss, near the source of the Waveney and Little Ouse river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £325. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £360 rectorial. Patron, in 1835, Frederick Nassau, Esq. The church is a large ancient fabric, with a tower and two bells. Fersfield is a small scattered village. The lands in the parish partly belong to the Duke of Norfolk, lord of the manor—fines arbitrary—and were nearly all covered with wood in the reign of Edward III. The common was enclosed in 1799. Acres 1,390. Houses 63. A. P. £1,880. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 292. Poor rates, in 1838, £300 8s.

FESTINIOG, a parish in the hund. of Ardudwy, union of Festiniog, county of Merioneth, North Wales; 5 miles north of Trawsfynydd. Living, a discharged rectory with Maentwrog, in the archd. and dio. of Bangor; rated at £10 4s. 2d.; gross income £284. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. Here are extensive slate quarries. Houses 290. A. P. £2,349. Pop., in 1801, 732; in 1831, 1,648. Poor rates, in 1838, £572 7s.—The Festiniog poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes; with a population returned, in 1831, at 7,434.

FESTINIOG, a hamlet in the above parish; 3 miles north-east of Tan-y-Bwlch. Here are a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1812, a daily and a Sunday school. This hamlet is situated in a small but enchanting vale near the confluence of the rivers Cynfael and Dwyryhyd, the falls of the former of which have been compared to those of Tivoli in Italy. One of them is about 300 yards above, and the other 300 yards below, a rustic stone bridge. The upper consists of 3 steep rocks, over which the water foams into a deep black basin overshadowed by the adjoining rocks: the other is formed by a broad sheet of water precipitated down a slightly shelving rock about 40 feet high. After the water has reached the bottom of the deep concavity, it rushes along a narrow rocky chasm, where, rolling amid the shaggy rocks, it glistens among the scattered fragments, and, falling from slope to slope, gains a smoother bed, and steals away among the mazes of the vale. Between the lower cataract and the bridge is a tall columnar rock, in the bed of the river, called Pulpit Hugh Llwyd Cynfael, or Hugh Lloyd's pulpit. Near Festiniog ran the ancient military way paved with stones even along the steep and almost inaccessible mountains called Tford, or Sarn Helen, or Helen's Way, the work of Helen, wife of the emperor Maximus. A similar Roman road is discoverable at Craig Ferwyn in Merioneth; at Y Gym Wynes in Carnarvon; and Llanbeder in Cardigan: the road from Neath to Brecon also is distinguished by the name of Sarn Helen. There are two tolerably good inns in Festiniog besides boarding-houses, and it has seven annual fairs, viz. May 24th, Friday after the feast of the Trinity, July 2d, August 22d, September 26th, October 19th, and November 13th. The name, Festiniog, denotes the place of hastening.

FETCHAM, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Cophorne, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west by south of Leatherhead, and west of the river Mole. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £21 10s. 5d.; gross income £386. Tithes commuted in 1801. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. G. Bolland. Here is a National school. Charities £66 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 2s. Acres 1,750. Houses 60. A. P. £2,808. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 384.

FEVERSHAM. See FAVERSHAM.

FEWCOT, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke-Lyne, county of Oxford; 5 miles north-north-west of Bicester. Tithes commuted in 1793. Houses 45. Pop., in 1821, 148; in 1831, 198. Other returns with the parish.

FEWSTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north of Otley, on the eastern bank of the river Washburn. It includes the townships of Blubberhouses, Clifton with Norwood, Fewston, Thurcross, Great Timble. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Thurcross, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £5, returned at £113; gross income £146. The church is a tolerable structure in the pointed style. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. In 1838, 2 flax mills here employed 224 hands. Acres 16,660. Houses 382. A. P. £6,569. Pop., in 1801, 1,688; in 1831, 2,035. Poor rates, in 1838, £840 10s. Acres of the township 1,760. Houses 120. A. P. £1,558. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 683. Poor rates, in 1838, £266 5s.

FIDDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Cannington, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 6 miles west-north-west of Bridgewater. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 10s. 2½d., returned at £94 8s.; gross income £215. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. W. Rawlins. Acres 1,070. Houses 34. A. P. £1,824. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 9s.

FIDDINGTON WITH NATTON, a tything in the parish of Ashchurch, county of Gloucester; 3 miles east-south-east of Tewkesbury, intersected by the Worcester and Gloucester railway. Tithes commuted in 1811. Acreage with the parish. Houses 35. A. P. £2,027. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 172.

FIELD, a township in the parish of Leigh, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Uttoxeter, on the river Blythe, a large branch of the Trent. In 1695, this was the manor of Sir John Bagot. His descendant, Sir Harvey, had a witch elm felled in his ground here, in 1680, so large that two able workmen were 5 days in cutting it down. The subsequent particulars regarding this remarkable natural phenomenon appeared so incredible that a formal account of them was drawn up at the time and attested by Sir Harvey Bagot and his steward, bailiff, surveyor, sawyers, &c. It was 40 yards in length, and at the base 17 yards in circumference: it was $25\frac{1}{2}$ feet in the middle by girth measure: 14 loads of fire wood, as much as 6 oxen could draw, were broken off in the fall, and 47 similar loads were afterwards cut off from the top. Two saws were joined together, and 3 men put to each end to saw it asunder. There were 80 pair of nathes for wheels cut out of it first; and, out of the remainder, 8,000 feet of sawn timber in boards and planks at 6 score a hundred, which cost £12 for sawing alone. Acres 540. Houses 10. A. P. £1,434. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 10s.

FIELD-DALLING, a parish in the hund. of North Greenhoe, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 5 miles east-north-east of New Walsingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 8s. $1\frac{1}{4}$ d., returned at £95; gross income £137. Tithes commuted in 1839; £347 rent charge improper, and £156 vicarial. Patron, in 1835, J. W. Thomlinson. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Here was an alien priory or cell, the site of which now belongs to the dean and chapter of Norwich, and is a small manor. At the enclosure of the common, in 1808, 24 acres were allotted to the poor: there is also 3 a. 15 p. of poor's land left by Christopher Ringland. Poor rates, in 1838, £337. Acres 1,620. Houses 89. A. P. £2,000. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 400.

FIFEHEAD-MAGDALEN, a parish in the hund. of Red-Lane, union of Sturminster, Sturminster division of the county of Dorset; 6 miles west by south of Shaftsbury. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7; gross income £262. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £229 11s. Patron, the bishop of Salisbury. Here are two daily schools. Acres 1,070. Houses 30. A. P., £3,161. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 241. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 6s.

FIFEHEAD-NEVILLE, a parish in the hund. of Pimperne, union of Sturminster, Blandford (North) division of the county of Dorset; 9 miles north-west by west of Blandford Forum. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to the curacy of Bellchalwell. Here are a daily and a Sunday National school. Acres 2,310. Houses 19. A. P. £1,949. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 101. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 6s.

FIFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping Norton, county of Oxford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Burford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Oxford, a peculiar of the chancellor of the cathedral church of Salisbury; returned at £45; gross income £56. Charities about £15 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £62 18s. Acres 810. Houses 40. A. P. £808. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 163.

FIFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Bensington, county of Oxford; 3 miles north-east of Wallingford. Acres 130. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 11; in 1831, 13. Other returns with the parish.

FIFIELD BAVANT, a parish in the hund. of Chalk, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Wilton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 10s.; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Bath. Acres 860. Houses 7. A. P. £671. Pop., in 1801, 42; in 1831, 49. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 8s.

FIGHELDEAN, a parish in the hund. and union of Amesbury, county of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north of Amesbury, on the river Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Salisbury, and a peculiar of the treasurer of Salisbury; valued at £14, returned at £140 4s. 2d.; gross income £160. Patron, the treasurer of Salisbury. Here are two daily schools. Acres 5,150. Houses 91. A. P. £3,487. Pop., in 1801, 367; in 1831, 531. Poor rates, in 1838, £422 11s.

FILBY, a parish in the hund. of East Flegg, union of East and West Flegg, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west-north-west of Caistor. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £520. Patron, in 1835, Charles Lucas, Esq. Here are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Unitarians. Here are 3 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 1,450, of which 100 are in plantation, and 160 in a fine lake called Filby-broad, and abounding with fish and wild ducks. Houses 105. A. P. £2,502. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 464. Poor rates, in 1838, £218.

FILEY, a parish, partly in Pickering-Lythe, north riding, partly in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Scarborough, east riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-east of Scarborough, on the coast. It includes the townships of Gristhorpe and Libberston. Acres 3,090. Houses 234. A. P. £3,507. Pop., in 1801, 760; in 1831, 1,192. Poor rates, in 1838, £240. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £16, returned at £120; gross income £91. Tithes commuted in 1788. Patron, in 1835, H. Osbaldeston, Esq. Here are two daily, and two Sunday and daily National schools. The village of Filey, situated in the wapentake of Dickering, east riding, is famous for its fish, especially lobsters. From its fine sands, it is also a favourite resort for sea-bathing. Filey bridge is a long ridge of rocks extending nearly half-a-mile into the sea. A beautiful and interesting view of Scarborough and Flamborough is obtained from the outer extremity, which can be reached from the land at low water. "As the shore," says Camden, "winds itself back from hence, a thin slip of land—like a small tongue thrust out—shoots into the sea, such as the old English called File, from which the little village of Filey takes its name." On opening a tumulus at Gristhorpe, in this vicinity, in 1834, a log of wood was found hollowed out, and containing a skeleton, supposed to be of an ancient Briton, preserved in a very singular manner by tanning, and changed to an intensely black colour, an effect which is supposed to have been produced by the tanning and gallic acid contained in the green oak trunk of which the coffin was formed, and in its very thick bark, which was also quite entire when found. The skeleton was surrounded by a white substance, which proved to be a singular variety of adipocire, the flesh of the body having been converted into this substance by the ready admission of water into the coffin. Dr. Buckland remarks, that this is the most important and authentic case of the British mode of sepulture which has been discovered. The coffin contained also some ancient warlike instruments and other articles.

FILGROVE. See TYRRINGHAM with FILGROVE.
FILKINGTON. See FELKINGTON.

FILKINS, a hamlet in the parish of Broadwell, county of Oxford; 5 miles south-south-west of Burford. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 3,430. Houses 113. A. P. £2,244. Pop., in 1801, 454; in 1831, 473. Poor rates, in 1838, £336.

FILLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Braunton, union of South Molton, county of Devon; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles west-north-west of South Molton. Living, a rectory annexed to that of East Buckland. Here is a free school. Acres 2,260. Houses 64. A. P. £1,429. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 11s.

FILLINGHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 10 miles north-north-west of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £22; gross income £450. Tithes commuted in 1759. Patrons, the master and fellows of Baliol college, Oxford. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Summer castle, in this parish, was built of stone dug on the estate, in 1760, by Sir Cecil Wray, Bart., a descendant of Lord-chief-justice Wray. It is in the Gothic castellated form, and stands on an eminence, whence are extensive views, bounded on the west by the Derbyshire hills; on the south by the high lands of Leicestershire; on the north by those of Yorkshire; and on the east by the Lincolnshire wolds. The park is wooded and enlivened with water. Here are vestiges of a Roman camp, and spears, coins, &c., have been found. Fairs are held on Thursday after Easter, and November 22d, for pigs. Acres 3,980. Houses 55. A. P. £2,965. Pop., in 1801, 242; in 1831, 308. Poor rates, in 1838, £144 8s.

FILLONGLEY, a parish in Atherstone division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden, county of Warwick; 6 miles north-north-west of Coventry. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 9s. 9d., returned at £140; gross income £249. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Aylife Green's school here was founded in 1690 for teaching 10 poor boys of this parish: they are also clothed in green; income, in 1836, about £50 per annum. Other 10 boys are educated in this school, and clothed in blue, from Avery's charity, the income of which, in 1836, was £230 15s. per annum, expended in educating and apprenticing poor children, in relieving the sick and needy, &c. There are other educational charities, the principal of which are a girls' school, attended by about 30 scholars, and another foundation for the education of all poor boys of this parish at Green's school: other charities, about £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £440 8s. "Here," says Dugdale, "were two castles, the one north-east of the church, about one-fourth of a mile, to this day called by the name of Castle-hills; and the other southward from the church scarce half the distance, bearing still the name of Castle-yard, and unto which a park of very large extent was attached." In the Conqueror's time, one-half hide belonged to the monks of Coventry, and was designated Old Fillongley: the other half devolved to Marmion, from Robert Dispensator, to whom it was originally granted. The Hastings family afterwards became possessors, and, Dugdale supposes, had their residence here. Acres 4,310. Houses 182. A. P. £5,581. Pop., in 1801, 897; in 1831, 981.

FILSHAM, in the hund. of Ninefield, rape of Hastings, county of Sussex. This manor lies in several parishes.

FILTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Clifton, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north-north-east of Bristol, on the post-road from Bristol to Gloucester. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, formerly in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Bristol; rated at £7; gross income £242. Patron, in 1835, R. Poulton, Esq. Here are three daily and two Sunday schools. Acres 1,040. Houses 36. A. P. £2,391. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 217. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 14s.

FILTON, or FELTON. See WHITCHURCH.

FIMBER, a chapelry in the parish of Wetwang, east riding of Yorkshire; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Great Driffield. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Wetwang. Tithes commuted in 1803. Here is a Primitive Methodist chapel. Acres 1,840. Houses 25. A. P. £1,940. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 12s.

FIMBOROUGH (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 3 miles west by south of Stow Market. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £5 1s. 3d.; gross income £130. Patron, the bishop of Ely. In the church are a number of monuments to the memory of the family of the Woollastons, formerly lords of the manor. Here are two daily schools. Charities upwards of £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £217 18s. Between 6 and 7 acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 1,960. Houses 73. A. P. £1,721. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 421.

FIMBOROUGH (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Stow Market. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £1 13s. 4d.; gross income £12. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Charities £12 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £22 14s. Acres 220. Houses 13. A. P. £453. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 73.

FINCHAM, a parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; 5 miles east-north-east of Downham Market. The living comprises the deanery of Fincham, rated at 13s. 4d., consolidated with the discharged vicarage of St. Martin and the discharged rectory of St. Michael; rated, the former at £10, the latter at £7 6s. 8d.; gross income £695. Patrons, in 1835, the Lord-chancellor and the Blyth family alternately. The church of St. Martin's is large and well-built of flint, boulders, &c., with a lofty square tower. St. Michael's church was appropriated to Shouldham priory in 1350; and no traces of it now remain. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists; and there are two daily and two Sunday schools. Charities, about £36 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 7s. The neat village of Fincham consists of a long street, with several good houses on the Saffham road. Fairs are held on March 3d for horses and toys, and on August 9th for horses. Acres 2,930. Houses 151. A. P. £3,964. Pop., in 1801, 501; in 1831, 736.

FINCHAMSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Charlton, union of Wokingham, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Wokingham. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 9s. 4½d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. E. St. John. This parish is one of those entitled in turn to the presentation of an inmate to Lucas's hospital at Wokingham. Here are almshouses, consisting of two cottages and a small garden, occupied by poor persons. The parish is in possession of various premises, and there are fuel allotments consisting of about 57 acres of barren heath. A fair is held annually on the first Wednesday in April, for cattle. Lambard seriously assures us that here, "by consent of most wryters, there was a well-spring that was sene to cast up bloude by the space of many dayes together, in the reign of William Rufus"! Acres 4,130. Houses 96. A. P. £2,372. Pop., in 1801, 463; in 1831, 575. Poor rates, in 1838, £561 13s.

FINCH-DEAN HUNDRED, in the southern division of the county of Southampton. Area 21,330 acres. Houses 815. Pop., in 1831, 4,575.

FINCHINGFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Braintree, county of Essex; 5 miles east-north-east of Thaxted, on a branch of the river Blackwater, Pant, or Freshwell. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £18; gross income £528. Patron, in 1835, J. Stock, Esq. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1779. There are a Sunday and day and Sunday National, and 6 daily, schools, one of which is partly supported by an endowment of £12 per annum. A Sunday school is supported by a fund left for charitable purposes, at the discretion of the parish minister. Other charities produce £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,359 13s. About 10 acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. The manor of Finchingfield was held, in the reign of Edward III., by John de Compes, for the service of turning the spit at his coronation. Acres 9,410. Houses 446. A. P. £8,472. Pop., in 1801, 1,606; in 1831, 2,101.

FINCHLEY, a parish in the Finsbury division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Barnet, county of Middlesex; 7 miles north-north-west of London. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £20; gross income £417. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £108 2s. 6d., rectorial. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists. There are 5 daily, 6 boarding, and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities upwards of £100 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,876 1s. Finchley common, which contains upwards of 1,000 acres, is great part in this parish. It is now for the most part enclosed and cultivated. On this common, Monk, afterwards earl of Albemarle, drew up his forces when he approached the metropolis for the purpose of restoring Charles, in the memorable year 1660. Acres 3,350. Houses 540. A. P., in 1815, £14,138; in 1828, 23,235. Pop., in 1801, 1,503; in 1831, 3,210.

FINDERN, or FINDERON, a chapelry in the parish of Mickle-Over, county of Derby; 5 miles south-west of Derby, intersected by the Grand Trunk, or Trent and Mersey, canal, and the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Mickle-Over. Tithes commuted in 1780. There are here a place of worship for the Unitarians; 3 daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment; and a Sunday school, to which a lending library is attached. Acreage with the parish. Houses 87. A. P. £2,167. Pop., in 1801, 318; in 1831, 410. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 13s.

FINDON, a parish in the hund. of Brightford, rape of Bramber, union of Thakeham, county of Sussex; 4 miles west-south-west of Steyning. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £13 3s. 9d.; gross income £700; nett income £500. Patrons, the master and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. On Holy Thursday an annual fair is held for the sale of pedlery, and on the 14th of September for the sale of sheep. Acres 4,250.

Houses 92. A. P. £3,274. Pop., in 1801, 381; in 1831, 544. Poor rates, in 1838, £189 11s.

FINEDON, or TINGDON, a parish in the hund. of Huxloe, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; 3½ miles north-north-east of Wellingborough. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 17s. 1d.; gross income £902; nett income £843. Tithes commuted in 1805. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. W. Paul. There is here a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1817; and there are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed, and free to all the children of the parish; and 6 infant and 3 Sunday schools. Charities £26 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £625 15s. Acres 3,650. Houses 263. A. P. £5,892. Pop., in 1801, 886; in 1831, 1,292.

FINESHADE, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Uppingham, county of Northampton; 8 miles north-north-west of Oundle, and south of the river Welland. Here, on the site of an ancient fortress called Castle-Hymel, a priory of black canons was founded by Richard Engain, the elder lord of Blatherwike, in the reign of King John. Acres 840. Houses 13. A. P. £880. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 68. Poor rates, in 1838, £8 7s.

FINGHALL, a parish in the wapentake of Hang West, union of Leyburn, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles east-north-east of Middleham. It includes the townships of Akebar, Burton-Constable, Finghall, and Hutton-Hang. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £18 18s. 4d.; gross income £358. Patron, in 1835, Marmaduke Wyville, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 4,460. Houses 74. A. P. £4,890. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 460. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 10s. Acres of the township 650. Houses 22. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 14s.

FINGEST, a parish in the hund. of Desborough, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; 5½ miles north-west by west of Great Marlow. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 7s. 11d.; gross income £180. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £186, rectorial. Patron, the prebendary of Dultingcourt in Wells cathedral. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 1,100. Houses 75. A. P. £900. Pop., in 1801, 316; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £160.

FINGLAND, a township in the parish of Bowness, county of Cumberland; 6 miles north of Wigton, and east of the river Wampool. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 34. A. P. £1,565. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 194.

FINGRINGHOE, a parish in the hund. of Winstree, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; 4 miles south-south-east of Colchester, and west of the river Colne. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £13 7s., returned at £100; gross income £140. Patrons, in 1835, Mrs. Firman and J. Hunt, Esq., alternately. Here are a Sunday National and a daily school. Charities £15 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £185. A pleasure fair is held on Easter-Monday. Acres 2,490. Houses 70. A. P. £4,145. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 542.

FININGHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 6¼ miles south-west of Eye. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10 10s. 5d.; gross income £350. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £492 13s. 4d., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, J. H. Frere, Esq. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday National schools. There is a fair held here annually on the 4th of September for cattle, toys, &c. Acres 1,560. Houses 94. A. P. £1,918. Pop., in 1801, 373; in 1831, 497. Poor rates, in 1838, £165 16s.

FINMERE, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Brackley, county of Oxford; 8 miles north-north-east of Bicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £8 9s. 4½d., returned at £126 6s. 4d.; gross income £346. Patron, the Duke of Buckingham. Here are a daily and a Sunday National school. Charities £11 7s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £331. Acres 1,650. Houses 73. A. P. £1,513. Pop., in 1801, 308; in 1831, 373.

FINNINGLEY, a parish partly in Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of Nottingham, and partly in the soke of Doncaster, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-north-east of Bawtry. It includes the townships of Aukley and Blaxton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 4s. 9½d.; gross income £600. Tithes commuted in 1774. Patron, in 1835, J. Harvey, Esq. Here are 5 daily schools. Charities £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £279 7s. Acres 5,970. Houses 181. A. P. £3,958. Pop., in 1801, 698; in 1831, 962.

INSTHWAITE, or FINTHWAITE, a parochial chapelry in the parish of Coulton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 8 miles north-north-east of Ulverstone. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £85; gross income £80. Patrons, the land-owners and perpetual curate of Coulton. There is a school here. Returns with the parish.

FINSTOCK, a hamlet in the parish of Charlbury, county of Oxford; 4½ miles north of Witney. Here are 2 daily and 3 Sunday schools. Acres 1,220. Houses 110. A. P. £1,596. Pop., in 1801, 326; in 1831, 519. Poor rates, in 1838, £348 7s.

FIRBANK, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Lonsdale, Westmoreland; 10 miles north of Kirkby-Lonsdale, bounded on the west by the river Lune. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of Kirkby-Lonsdale; returned at £92 12s.; gross income £68. Patron, the vicar of Kirkby-Lonsdale. Acres 2,080. Houses 36. A. P. £1,604. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 190. Poor rates, in 1838, £114 8s.

FIRBECK, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Worksop, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-south-west of Tickhill. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of York, a peculiar; returned at £41; gross income £62. Patron, the chancellor of York. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,330. Houses 37. A. P. £1,315. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 178. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 16s.

FIRBY. See EDDLETHORPE.

FIRBY. See BEDALE.

FIRLE (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Totmore, rape of Pevensey, union of West Firle, county of Sussex; 4½ miles south-east by east of Lewes. Living, a vicarage united with that of Beddingham. Acres 4,410. Houses 101. A. P. £4,115. Pop., in 1801, 494; in 1831, 618. Poor rates, in 1838, £514 10s.—The West Firle poor-law union comprehends 8 parishes, embracing an area of 21 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 2,364. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,957. Expenditure, in 1838, £1,882; in 1839, £1,940.

FIRSBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles south-east by east of Spilsby, on the Steeping river. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Great Steeping in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £120s. 2½d.; gross income £255. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £179 10s. 10d. impropriated. Patron, in 1835, Joseph Walls, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 910. Houses 22. A. P. £916. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 142.

FIRSBY (EAST), a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Alscoe, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 5 miles west of Market-Raisen. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to the vicarage of Saxby. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £2 16s. 8d. vicarial. Acres 690. Houses 5. A. P. £650. Pop., in 1801, 23; in 1831, 29. Poor rates, in 1838, £11 6s.

FIRSBY (WEST), a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Alscoe, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 7 miles west-south-west of Market-Raisen. Acres 600. Houses 5. A. P. £800. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 30.

FISHBOURN (NEW), a parish in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, union of Westhampnett, county of Sussex; 1¼ mile west of Chichester. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester; rated at £5 10s.; gross income £210. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a Sunday National school. Charities, in 1836, £1 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 19s. Acres 610. Houses 65. A. P. £2,587. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 291.

FISHBURN, a township in the parish of Sedgefield, co.-palatine of Durham; 9¼ miles south-south-east of Durham. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a school. Acres 2,010. Houses 51. A. P. £1,560. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 212. Poor rates, in 1838, £82 1s.

FISHERGATE HUNDRED, in the rape of Bramber, county of Sussex. Area 2,416 acres. Houses 1,332. Pop., in 1831, 7,401.

FISHERGATE HUNDRED, in the rape of Lewes, county of Sussex. Area 3,780 acres. Houses 91. Pop., in 1831, 679.

FISHERTON-ANGER, a parish in the hund. of Branch and Dole, union of Alderbury, county of Wilts; ¾ mile west of Salisbury, from which it is separated by the Avon. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13; gross income £169. Patron, in 1835, W. H. F. Talbot, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, the former of which is endowed with £15 per annum: there are also six endowed almshouses. Charities £39 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £410. This village communicates with Salisbury by a stone bridge, near which stands the Salisbury infirmary. Part of this parish is within the boundaries of the parliamentary borough of Salisbury. It is the seat of the petty-sessions for the Salisbury division of the hundred. The new county jail stands in this parish. It consists of 102 cells, 15 rooms, and 10 airing-yards. It is appropriated to the confinement of prisoners sentenced to hard labour by the magistrates' bench, both of the county and of the city of Salisbury. The number of prisoners, in 1835, was 232. An acre or two of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 660. Houses 282. A. P. £2,547. Pop., in 1801, 865; in 1831, 1,496.

FISHERTON-DE-LA-MERE, a parish in the hund. of Warminster, though locally situated in the hund. of Branch and Dole, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 10 miles west by south of Amesbury, on the river Wiley. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 17s., returned at £135; gross income £135. Patron, in 1835, John Davis, Esq. Acres 3,300. Houses 61

A. P. £2,432. Pop., in 1801, including the tything of Bapton, 270; in 1831, 309. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 7s.

FISHERWICK, a township in the parish of St. Michael, Lichfield, county of Stafford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Lichfield, on the river Tame. Acres 1,130. Houses 16. A. P., including the hamlet of Freeford, £2,093. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 96. Poor rates, in 1838, £129 15s.

FISHLAKE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Thorne, west riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Thorne, on the northern bank of the river Dearne. It includes the townships of Fishlake and Skyehouse. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £13 3s. 9d., returned at £67; gross income £172. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1811. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. There are six daily schools, one of which is endowed with about £80 per annum, and a second partly supported by endowment. Charities £115 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £991 5s. Acres 6,170. Houses 272. A. P. £9,780. Pop., in 1801, 1,188; in 1831, 1,334.

FISHGUARD, or ABERGWAIN, a parish and seaport town in the hund. of Kemess, union of Haverfordwest, Pembroke, South Wales; 4 miles north of Haverfordwest. Houses 463. A. P. £2,977. Pop., in 1801, 1,503; in 1831, 1,990. Poor rates, in 1838, £508 12s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £61 1s.; gross income £111. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £274. Patron, the Crown. The Independents, Baptists, and Calvinistic Methodists, have places of worship here. There are six daily and three Sunday schools. The town is situated on a cliff, at the mouth of the river Gwayne. It is irregularly built, and the streets are very steep. It is divided into upper and lower: the upper division contains the church—a mean edifice—the market-place, principal inns, and many tolerable shops. The lower division is adjacent to the quay, and is the busiest part of the town. The port—formed by a bar or sandbank—is capable of containing 100 sail of ships, about which number belong to the port. An act of parliament for the improvement of the harbour and port received the royal assent on 15th July, 1837.—These improvements consist of a breakwater near the rocks called the Cow and Calf, a pier to extend from the fort point, and an inner basin or basins, with harbour-lights and light-houses; the expense of which has been estimated at £250,000. They are expected to constitute the harbour and port of Fishguard a perfectly safe port of commerce, an asylum harbour for vessels of all descriptions, and of any burden, navigating St. George's channel, the anchorage being good, the ground holding well, and the bay having depth of water for the largest vessels at all times of tide. It will also afford the best outlet to the southward, northward, and westward, thereby giving the quickest, safest, and most certain communication between England and Ireland. There is excellent herring and other fishing ground near the bay, frequented by a number of small craft from Liverpool. Turbot and john-dory are taken in great quantities. Salmon also are caught. Butter, oats, and slates, are exported. The imports are culm from Milford-haven, coals from various quarters, and general merchandise. A detachment of 800 French troops made a descent here in 1797, and were made prisoners by the inhabitants, headed by Lord Cawdor, without firing a single shot. Fishguard is contributory to the borough of HAVERFORD-WEST—which see, and a polling place for the county elections.

FISHTOFT, a parish in the wapentake of Skirbeck, parts of Holland, union of Boston, county of Lincoln; 3 miles south-east of Boston, and east of the river Witham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £19 6s. 8d.; gross income £712. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1810. Patron, in 1835, Francis Thirkell, Esq. Here are two daily and two Sunday schools. A creek of considerable magnitude once ran up near the outfall of the present Hob-hole sluice towards the church, which would afford great facilities for the inhabitants to follow the occupation of fishing; and hence probably the village took the first part of its name. Leland notices Fishtoft thus:—"The Lord Monteville had a goodly, great, and ancient manor-place at Fischetoft, a mile from Boston. It is now all in ruine." Acres 4,580. Houses 89. A. P. £8,871. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 463. Poor rates, in 1838, £219.

FISHWICK, a township in the parish of Preston, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Preston. Acres 600. Houses 115. A. P. £1,730. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 759. Poor rates, in 1838, £171.

FISKERTON, a parish in the wapentake of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 5 miles east of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 1s. 8d.; gross income £450. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Peterborough. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 2,040. Houses 69. A. P. £2,880. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 330.

FISKERTON, a parish in the south division of Thurgarton wapentake, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 3 miles south-east of Southwell, on the river Trent. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Fardon. Here is a place of worship belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Acres 570. Houses 71. A. P. £1,444. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 15s.

FITLING, a township in the parish of Humbleton, east riding of Yorkshire; $10\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Kingston-upon-Hull. Acres 1,420. Houses 21. A. P. £1,449. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 12s.

FITTLETON, a parish in the hund. of Elstub and Everley, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; 8 miles west-south-west of Ludger's-hall, on the river Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £23; gross income £467; nett income £444. Tithes commuted in 1794. Patrons, the president and fellows of Magdalen college, Oxford. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, the former of which is partly supported by endowment. Charities, about £15 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 12s. Acres 3,050. Houses 72. A. P. £2,315. Pop., in 1801, including the tything of Hacklestone, 251; in 1831, 331.

FITLEWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Bury, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Petworth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £385. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £424 6s. 7d. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1834, upwards of £74 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £397 19s. Acres 2,390. Houses 141. A. P. £1,784. Pop., in 1801, 564; in 1831, 668.

FITZ, a parish in the hund. of Pimhill, union of Atcham, county of Salop; 4 miles north-north-west of Shrewsbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5 5s. 10d.; gross income £306. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,670. Houses 37. A. P. £1,833. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 211. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 13s.

FITZHEAD, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Kingsbury, union of Wellington, county of Somerset; 3 miles east-north-east of Wiveliscombe. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Wiveliscombe, a peculiar in the dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £9 11s. 5d., returned at £120; gross income £76. Patron, the vicar of Wiveliscombe, Wells cathedral. Here are two daily schools. Acres 1,190. Houses 69. A. P. £2,316. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 311. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 2s.

FIVEHEAD, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Langport, county of Somerset; 5 miles south-west of Langport. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Swell, in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 2s. 8d.; gross income £234; formerly in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Bristol. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,740. Houses 69. A. P. £1,458. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 387. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 8s.

FIXBY, a township in the parish of Halifax, west riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north-north-west of Huddersfield, intersected by the York and Manchester railway. Acres 890. Houses 72. A. P. £1,834. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 348. Poor rates, in 1838, £295 2s.

FLACKWELL-HEATH, in the parish of High Wycombe, second division of the hund. of Desborough, county of Buckingham; 3 miles south-east of High Wycombe.

FLADBURY, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 3½ miles east of Pershore, on the river Avon, across which it is proposed here to carry a projected railway between London and the western coast, alluded to under article DUDCOTE—which see. It includes the township of Hill and Moor, the hamlet of Hob Linch, or Abbots Linch, and the chapels of Stock and Bradley, Throckmorton, and Wyre-Piddle. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of Wyre-Piddle, Throckmorton, and Bradley, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £81 10s.; gross income £721. Tithes commuted in 1788. Patron, the bishop of Worcester. Here are two daily, and 2 Sunday National, schools. Charities, £16 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £319 9s. Acres 7,830. Houses 278. A. P. £8,979. Pop., in 1801, 1,223; in 1831, 1,407.

FLAGG, a township in the parish of Bakewell, county of Derby; 5½ miles west of Bakewell. Improper and vicarial tithes commuted in 1805. Here are 2 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 41. A. P. £1,496. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 232. Poor rates, in 1838, £98 16s.

FLAMBOROUGH, a parish in the wapentake of Dicker, union of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east-north-east of Bridlington. Living, a curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £16, returned at £85; gross income £81. Tithes commuted in 1765. Patron, in 1835, Sir William Strickland, Bart. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. There are 4 daily and 2 Sunday schools. The town is situated in the centre of a promontory on the North sea. It is very ancient, and at one time was a place of some consequence, but it has dwindled into little more than a fishing village. Acres 2,980. Houses 209. A. P. £4,113. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 975. Poor rates, in 1838, £285 2s.

FLAMBOROUGH-HEAD, the promontory above alluded to, is a magnificent range of limestone rocks, extending along the shore for several miles, and in some places rising perpendicularly to the height of 150 yards. During the summer season, these cliffs are the resort of immense numbers of birds, chiefly sea-fowl, which breed in the high and inaccessible crevices of the rocks. "At the report of a gun myriads of these feathered inhabitants of the rocks are in commotion, and the eye is dazzled with the waving of innumerable wings of various and brilliant plumage, while the ear is stunned by the clamour of ten thousand discordant notes." At the foot of the cliffs are some extensive caverns probably excavated by the waves; three of which exceed the rest in extent and interest; of these the principal is Robin Lyth's hole, which has two openings, one communicating with the land, and the other with the sea. The former is low and narrow, and affords but a gloomy solemn entrance to the cavern; but the darkness gradually dispersing discloses a floor of solid rock, formed into broad steps of an easy descent, and stones curiously variegated at the sides. The roof is finely arched, and nearly 50 feet high in the centre, with many projecting ledges and suspended fragments of rock, which, with the great altitude, renders the aspect of the cavern awful and alarming. The noble vista, formed by its seaward opening, rises to its highest grandeur on emerging from the gloom of the entrance; and a solemn and peculiar effect is produced in returning, as the steps resemble the ascent to an altar. The landing-place for fishing-boats at Flamborough-head is inconvenient and dangerous in stormy weather.

The name of this town and promontory is of uncertain derivation. Camden says, "some think that it took its name from a watch tower, in which were lights for the direction of ships; for the Britons still retain the provincial word 'Flam,' and the mariners paint this creek with a flaming head in their charts." That anciently a light was exhibited on this promontory is highly probable; and an old tower of an octagonal form and undoubted antiquity still exists 6 or 700 yards to the westward of the present lighthouse. It is a prominent sea-mark. Near it is the preventive station, a neat row of small houses.

For many years the want of a lighthouse here was severely felt by mariners and merchants; and "from June 1770 to the end of 1806 [6th December, when the present light was first exhibited] not fewer than 174 ships were wrecked or lost on Flamborough-head and its environs; but since the erection of the lights, to March 1813, not one vessel had been lost on that station when the lights could be seen."—Coates. The site of the lighthouse is on the cliff nearly 1½ mile eastward of the town, about 400 yards within the extreme point of the promontory, close to the landing on the south side of Silex bay, and at an elevation of 250 feet—lat. 54° 7' north; long. 0° 6' west from Greenwich. The building, which is of brick, is very elegant: the light revolves by machinery, the weights and apparatus being suspended in the centre of the lighthouse. Three faces of 7 reflectors each were erected; and, in order to distinguish it from the revolving lights of Tinmouth and Cromar, showing a face every minute, this light was made to exhibit a face every two minutes, one of them coloured red; the light from that face being thereby diminished; thus preventing it from being visible so far or so strongly as the other two faces, especially in hazy weather: when thus—or at a great distance in clear weather—only two faces are seen, the interval of time between them is 2 minutes and 4 minutes alternately, sufficiently distinguishing this light from any other on the British coasts. From this light those at Cromer, Spurn Point, and the Dudgeon, bear, by the compass, S. 10½, E. dist. 29½ leagues, S. by W. 11 leagues, and about S. 13° E. 21½, respectively, the variation being 25° west of the true meridian. The gross amount of light duties, or tolls levied for this lighthouse, in 1838, was £4,656 3s.; the charges of maintenance being £550 10s. 9d.

FLAMSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Dacorum, union of Hemel Hempstead, county of Hertford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Redbourne, on the post-road from Dunstable to St. Alban's, and north of the Grand Junction canal as it crosses the Chiltern hills to Tring. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £41 6s. 8d., returned at £60; gross income £117. Patrons, the master and fellows of University college, Oxford. "Wulfgius, the third abbot of St. Albons," saith old Lambard, "beinge, by the confessione of their owne chron., a wanton fellowe, had builded, for his comoditie, a cell of nonnes, harde by the church of St. Albons; but Wlnothe, his successor, at the least more close, if not more chaste, than he, espyinge that this neighbourhoode hyndered their name, removed them further of to a wood by Flamsted, and therof it toke the name of St. Giles in the wood by Flamstede. Aboute the tyme of the Conquest, Leofstane thabbot of St. Albons made plaine a great part of the wood of Chilturme, [see CHILTERN-HILLS.] bycause it harboured suche as fled the furey of William the Conquerour, and for their owne releif spoiled al other that they might reache, and bycause he would have it bothe defended from theves in peace, and roavers in time of intestine warre, he gave this manor of Flamstede to Waltheof and Thurman for the same purpose. Richard, the 15th abbot of St. Albons, lost thadvowson of this church, but I thinke it was recovered againe in tyme of Henry III., for Paris hathe mention of a suite renewed about it. In the yeare 1265, and in the tyme of the Barons warre against Henry III., fifty soldiers entered this nonrye, and spoiled it of all that ever theare was; but before they came to Dunstaple, the cry of the countrey men overtook them, and they weare al taken or slaine. It was valewed at 30 poundes yearly." Acres 5,660. Houses 270. A. P. £6,965. Pop., in 1801, 1,018; in 1831, 1,462. Poor rates, in 1838, £586 10s.

FLASBY WITH WINTERBURN, a township in the parish of Gargrave, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Skipton. Acres 2,940. Houses 24. A. P. £3,090. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £160.

FLASHBROOK, a township in the parish of Abdston, county of Stafford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Newport. Houses 19. Pop., in 1811, including Batchacre, 117; in 1831, 99. Other returns with the parish.

FLAT-HOLM, an island belonging to the parish of Uphill, hund. of Winterstoke, county of Somerset; 8 miles west-north-west of Uphill, and about 3 miles to the northward of the Steep Holm. "This island is about a mile-and-a-half in circumference, with a good farm-house and inn, nearly in the centre, surrounded by a dairy farm of 60 acres, the land bearing good crops, and abounding with burnet, wild thyme, and other aromatic plants. The Flat-Holm is a favourite place of resort in summer, being in itself pleasing, and commanding a delightful prospect of the Bristol channel, and of the coast on each side, for more than 60 miles in length. The inn affords good accommodation, and is occasionally honoured by a visit from the corporation of Bristol, who combine an agreeable aquatic excursion from the city with the exercise of their judicial rights, which extend as far into the channel as this island. There is good bathing upon the pebbly beach, which at low water extends round the island, strewed with fragments of rock that have fallen from the cliffs, covered with whelks and limpets, and the common kelp-weed, which is in great abundance in the little pools of water; great numbers of sea anemonies, of different kinds, are left by the falling of the tide on the beach, and on the south side are found large tubulated ones, which, when open, are six inches in diameter. In some places also the green and brown confervæ are met with; also many species of fuci, and some of the coralline or serpularia. On the highest point of this island is a lighthouse, 80 feet in height, standing within 50 yards of the south-east edge of the cliffs; and having been, within these few years, fitted up as a revolving light, it presents a pleasing object in the evening from Weston, twinkling like a star, at the interval of a few seconds."—Rutter's Delin.—Gross amount of light duties, in 1838, £1,798 1s. 7½d.; charges of maintenance £830 15s. 1d.

FLAUNDEN, a chapelry in the parish of Hemel Hempstead, county of Hertford; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of King's Langby. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Hemel Hempstead. The chapel has been recently rebuilt and enlarged. Acres 970. Houses 58. A. P. £811. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 316. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 10s.

FLAVEL-FLYFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 8 miles east of Worcester Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 4s. 9½d., returned at £108 14s.; gross income £84. In the patronage, in 1835, of the Sheldon family. Acres 730. Houses 36. A. P. £770. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 154. Poor rates, in 1838, £20.

FLAWBOROUGH, a chapelry, partly in the parish of Orston, and partly in the parish of Staunton, county of Nottingham; 7 miles south-south-west of Newark. Acres, including that part which is in Orston, 920. Houses 12. A. P. £1,370. Pop. of that part which is in the parish of Staunton, in 1801, 71; in 1831, 80. Poor rates, in 1838, £30. Other returns included with Orston.

FLAWITH, a township in the parish of Alne; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Easingwold, and near the Great North of England railway, north riding of Yorkshire. Tithes commuted in 1799–1800. Acres 680. Houses 19. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 94. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 4s.

FLAXBOURTON, a parish in the hund. of Portbury, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Bristol, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Wraxall. Strangers passing through this place are sometimes amused by a story, that the minister occasionally preaches upon a pinnacle of the tower, because one that was blown down some years since was cut into supports for the pulpit. Acres 540. Houses 40. A. P. £1,365. Pop., in 1811, 197; in 1831, 219. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 7s.

FLAXBY, a township in the parish of Goldsborough, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Knaresborough. There is here a free school, with an endowment of £15 per annum. Acres 580. Houses 18. A. P. £5,666. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 96. Poor rates, in 1838, £33.

FLAXLEY, a parish in the hund. of St. Briavell's, union of Westbury-upon-Severn, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Newnham. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Hereford and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £8; gross income £108. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Bovey, Bart. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, £50 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 12s. Roger Fitz-Milo, the second Earl of Hereford, after the Conquest, built an abbey here. Acres 1,989.

Houses 30. A. P. £2,243. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 186.

FLAXTON-ON-THE-MOOR, a township, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, east riding, and partly in the parish of Bossall, north riding of Yorkshire: 9 miles north-north-east of York. There are here 3 daily schools. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. Acres 1,460. Houses 68. A. P. £1,913. Pop., in 1801, of that part which is in the parish of Bossall, 227; in 1831, 355. Poor rates, in 1838, £121.

FLAXWELL WAPENTAKE, in the parts of Kesteven, county of Lincoln. Area 37,420 acres. Houses 1,137. Pop., in 1831, 6,015.

FLECKNEY, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market-Harborough, county of Leicester; 7 miles north-west of Market-Harborough, intersected by the Union canal. Living, a donative curacy, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £44 14s. 10½d.; gross income £144. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Noel Byron. The Baptists have a place of worship here. Acres 1,630. Houses 95. A. P. £1,782. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 514. Poor rates, in 1838, £294 15s.

FLEDBOROUGH, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 5½ miles east-north-east of Tuxford, on the northern bank of the Trent. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 7s. 6d.; gross income £296. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £340 1s. 4d. rectorial. Patron, in 1835, Earl Manvers. About 20 acres of hops are cultivated here. Acres 1,300. Houses 15. A. P. £2,384. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 5s.

FLEET, a parish in the hund. of Uggescombe, union of Weymouth, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles west-north-west of Weymouth. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £70; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Gould. Acres 1,400. Houses 30. A. P. £938. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 15s.

FLEET, a parish in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, union of Holbeach, county of Lincoln; 2 miles east-south-east of Holbeach. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15; gross income £1,097. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,148 13s. 9d., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Dodds. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1709. There are 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £47 10s. per annum; and 2 Sunday schools, to one of which a lending library is attached. Acres 6,710. Houses 149. A. P. £7,193. Pop., in 1801, 551; in 1831, 794. Poor rates, in 1838, £776 6s.

FLEET (THE). See MIDDLESEX.

FLEET (THE). See NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

FLEETHAM, a township in the parish of Bambrough, county of Northumberland; 6 miles south-south-east of Belford. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 93. Poor rates, in 1838, £12 15s.

FLEETWOOD-ON-WYRE, a sea-port, commercial town, and watering place, in course of formation, at the entrance to Morecombe bay, on the river Wyre, Lancashire; 18 miles north-west of Preston, with which it is already connected—through Poulton and Kirkham—by the Preston and Wyre railway, opened on 15th July, 1840. This is said to be capable of being made a commercial port of the first order, at a very moderate expense. Steamers now ply between this port and the Isle of Man, Whitehaven, Dublin, Belfast, Ardrossan in Scotland, and Ulverstone; and arrangements are in progress for regular steamers to Dundalk and Newry. The import tonnage alone, in 1840, was 57,051 tons. Its fine harbour, and extensive dock; its easy and safe approach to the sea; the cheapness of its port-dues and dock-charges; and its connexion by railways with the great manufacturing districts; cannot, it is thought, fail to attract a very large proportion of the American cotton, and of the timber, and other foreign, trade.—There is already a customs establishment here, with bonded warehouses for all goods except East India goods and tobacco, unless removed coastwise for home use and ships' stores; and at the end of 1839, after the receipt of customs' duty had commenced, a gross amount of £620 1s. had been collected. Between December, 1839, and January, 1840, commissioners from the courts of exchequer surveyed the coasts and creeks between Lancaster and Preston, and determined the limits of the port as follow:—"To commence at a run of water called the Hundred-end, about 2 miles to the west of Hesketh-bank, continuing up to Preston; thence along the coast, on the north side of the river, to Lytham; round the coast to Black-pool, and on to Fleetwood; thence to the river Broadfleet, 4 miles from Sea Dyke, including both sides of the Wyre, and the river Broadfleet." In pursuance of the comprehensive schemes of Sir Hesketh Fleetwood, the proprietor of the port, numerous buildings are springing up in all quarters, including a handsome church, and a large and beautiful hotel, the central part of which has 70 feet of frontage; besides two spacious wings, each of 90 feet. Gas-works have been completed; and a market has been erected. At the entrance, seaward, a very elegant and finely contrived screw-pile lighthouse has been reared; besides two shore-light-houses. The landing-wharf presents a frontage of 600 feet with a depth of about 300; and a line of rails to the main railway. The railway-station is a very spacious building. The commissioners appointed by Government to report on the most eligible routes by railway, to facilitate the communication between London, Ireland, and Scotland, observe, that the harbour now forming at Fleetwood, appears likely to form a good point of departure for the north of Ireland and west of Scotland. In connexion with prospective improvements in this quarter of the country, see also articles DUDDON and MORECOMBE-BAY. The population of Fleetwood, in 1841, was supposed to exceed 3,000.

FLEGG (EAST) HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk, on the east side of the county, between Wintertonness and Yarmouth. Area 13,390 acres. Houses 625. Pop., in 1831, 2,998.

FLEGG (WEST) HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk, contiguous to Flegg (East). Area 18,370 acres. Houses 685. Pop., in 1831, 4,212.

FLEMINGSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Cowbridge, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 3¼ miles south-south-east of Cowbridge, and 2½ north of the Bristol channel. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £4 18s. 9d., returned at £150; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, Lord Dunraven. The parish and village of Flemingstone derive their name from John Fleming, one of the twelve knights who accompanied Robert Fitz-Hamon, the Norman, in his conquest of this county, in the reign of William Rufus. Houses 12. A. P. £872. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 8s.

FLEMPTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5 miles north-northwest of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a rectory united with that of Hengrave, in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. S. Dixon. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 720. Houses 34. A. P. £1,049. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 10s.

FLENDISH HUNDRED, in the county of Cambridge. It lies in the centre of the county. Area 11,906 acres. Houses 513. Pop., in 1831, 2,778.

FLETCHING, a parish in the hund. of Rushmonden, rape of Pevensey, union of Uckfield, county of Sussex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Uckfield, and east of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £167. Patron, the Earl of Sheffield. In the church are several monuments to the memory of persons of distinction: among the most notable, is that to the memory of Edward Gibbon the historian, with a Latin inscription from the pen of the late Dr. Parr. Here are a Sunday and daily National, and 5 daily, schools. Charities about £46 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £908 13s. Sheffield-place, the seat of the earl of Sheffield, in this parish, is a much admired Gothic mansion. It has a beautiful Gothic frieze, carried all round the building, with the arms of all its possessors since the Conquest. The Ouse runs through the parish, and it has a number of mineral springs, almost all chalybeates. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 88 acres of hops were annually cultivated: average pounds of hops charged 51,623: amount of duty £430 3s. 10d. Here is an annual fair on the Monday preceding Whit-Sunday, chiefly for pedlery. Acres 5,830. Houses 271. A. P. £4,786. Pop., in 1801, 1,279; in 1831, 1,870.

FLETTON, a parish in the hund. of Normaneross, union of Peterborough, county of Huntingdon; 1 mile south-south-east of Peterborough. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £9 3s. 9d.; gross income £292. Tithes commuted in 1760. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. Here are a daily and Sunday school. Charities, £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 6s. Acres 780. Houses 41. A. P. £1,844. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 189.

FLEXBOROUGH HUNDRED, in the rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex. Area 4,450 acres. Houses 224. Pop., in 1831, 1,359.

FLIMBY, a parish in Allerdale ward below Derwent, union of Cockermouth, county of Cumberland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Maryport. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; certified to value £2 4s., returned at £40; gross income £83. Patrons, landowners. Here are 3 daily schools. Flimby was originally only a chapelry to the parish of Cammerton. It was erected into a separate parish in the reign of Henry VIII. Acres 1,620. Houses 88. A. P. £1,599. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 404. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 14s.

FLINT,

A small maritime county of North Wales, bounded on the north and north-west by the Irish sea; on the north-east and east by the river and estuary of the Dee, and by part of Cheshire; and on the south-south-west and west by Denbighshire. A detached portion forming the hundred of Maylor, extending about 10 miles in length and 8 in breadth, is separated from the body of the county by Denbighshire, from which it is divided by the Dee; and is surrounded by that county, together with the counties of Salop and Chester. The mainland of Flintshire extends from north-west to south-east about 27 or 30 miles, and in a contrary direction, where broadest, about 10 miles. It is 115 miles in circumference; and its contents have been calculated at from 160,000 to 197,760 acres, or 309 square miles, of which about 20,000 acres are supposed to be in tillage, and the remainder in pasture. Houses 11,716. A. P. £153,930. Pop., in 1801, 39,622, of whom 6,989 were employed in trade and manufactures, and 10,332 in agriculture; in 1831, 60,100, consisting of 12,138 families, of whom 4,660 were chiefly employed in agriculture; 3,101 in trade, handicraft, &c.; and 4,377 otherwise occupied.

Civil and Ecclesiastical affairs.—This county is divided into 5 hundreds; namely, Coleshill, Maylor, Mold, Prestatyn, and Rhyddlan. It sends one member to parliament, who is polled for at Flint, Rhyddlan, and, in the detached portion of the county, at Overton; the principal place of election being Flint. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was 2,221: the number who actually polled at the general election, in 1837, was 1,847. In this county there is one parliamentary borough, Flint, returning 1 member, along with 7 contributory boroughs; namely, St. Asaph, Holywell, Mold, Rhyddlan, Caerwys, Caergurley, and Overton: of these, the three first were added by the reform act; the others were previously contributory to Flint in returning 1 member: the county also returned 1 member previous to the reform act. Flint is in the Chester circuit: the assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Mold, though it is not the county town: the county jail and house of correction is at Flint. The total income of county rates, in 1801, was £1,114: expenditure on jails £23; on prisoners with prosecutions £91; on constables and vagrants £220; on bridges £96: total expenditure £961. In 1831, the total income was £2,575: expenditure on jails £7; on prisoners with prosecutions £1,217; on constables and vagrants £99; on bridges £577: total expenditure £2,413. In 1838, the total income was £3,474: expenditure on jails £214; on prisoners with prosecutions £576; on constables and vagrants £27; on bridges £743: total expenditure £4,169.

Flint is principally in the ecclesiastical province of Canterbury and diocese and archdeaconry of St. Asaph,—which see,—but several parishes are in the diocese of Chester and others. A circumstance which throws some light upon remote political and ecclesiastical divisions of countries is the recorded fact, that, when the grand survey was made, there were but 7 churches in the parcel then called the hundred of Flint. At this period, parochial divisions had not been made; and the people, for devotional purposes, attended either cathedrate or conventual churches; the former served by episcopal curates, and the latter by monastic vicars: the numerous places of worship which subsequently arose, and led to the excellent arrangement of parochial cures, were chiefly founded by manorial lords for the accommodation of their tenantry. Hence arose that apparent want of congruity in the extent and adjacency of archidiaconal jurisdiction and episcopal authority, which, among other important changes, the ecclesiastical commissioners are now endeavouring to obviate. The number of parishes in this county has been stated at 28; but without exceptions, and including parochial chapelries, there are about 35. The total amount of church rates, for 1838–9, was £721. The poor rate returns for 3 years to Easter, 1750, show an average expenditure of £873 on the poor of this county; for 1803, an expenditure of £13,442; for 1833, an expenditure of £23,507; and for 1839, an expenditure of £16,800. In 1831, there were 119 daily schools, attended by 5,921 scholars; and 108 Sunday schools, attended by 11,918 scholars: of these, 5 daily schools, with 159 children, and 77 Sunday schools, with 9,931 children, belonged to dissenters.

The chief towns of this county are Mold, wholly engaged in the business of the mines; Flint, a borough; Holywell; Rhyddlan, famous for its castle, supposed to be the most ancient English edifice in Wales; St. Asaph's, a city, the residence of the bishop; and Hawarden, the seat of extensive iron works, and connected by railroad with the Dee.

Rivers.—Except the Dee, to which it has only a partial claim, the rivers of this county are not navigable. The course of the Dee has been already traced:—see CHESHIRE. The artificial new channel of this river is principally situated in this county. The Clwyd, having risen in DENBIGHSHIRE,—which see,—enters this county in the vicinity of Bodfary, and, taking a northerly direction past St. Asaph, is joined by the Elwy, and flows by Rhyddlan into the Irish sea. The Alen, a tributary of the Dee, also rises in Denbighshire: it enters this county south of Pilsken, and takes a singularly circuitous route past Mold, where it passes under ground, or land-dives; and then running southward past Caerbury, re-enters Denbighshire before it joins the Dee. The Elwy also rises in Denbighshire: it enters this county north-north-west of Bodfary, and runs northwards in a very short course till it joins the Clwyd. There are other contributory streams, such as the Terrig, Wheler, &c., which turn many mills in their course, and afford a variety of fish.

Roads.—The principal roads are those through Chester, by Mold, across the county to Ruthin in Denbighshire; and by Hawarden, Holywell, and Rhyddlan, to Anglesey; and those through Wrexham and Caerbury, to Mold, Nannerch, and Denbigh; and from Caerbury to Hawarden. A road also runs from Mold to Flint, Llanasaph, Rhyddlan, &c., and the county is otherwise intersected by roads. The highway returns for 3 years, ending 1814, show an average total expenditure of £4,507 on 139 miles of paved streets and turnpike roads, and 413 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages in this county; the returns of turnpike trusts for 1836, a total expenditure of £20,055 7s. 10d., by 13 turnpike trusts; and the highway returns for 1839, an expenditure of £2,827, on 463 miles of road.

Railways.—Various measures have recently been projected to facilitate, chiefly by railway, the communication between London and Ireland. The principal schemes consist in railways from Holyhead, via Bangor and Chester; from Ormeshead, via Chester; from Portdynllaen, via Carnarvon, Bangor, and Chester; and from Portdynllaen, via Barmouth, and DOLGELLY,—which see,—with DUDCOTE, &c. The lines of railway through Chester were projected with the view of a continuation through the Chester and Crewe, and other railways, to London. For the route by Chester to Holyhead there were two projects, one by Mr. Stephenson, and another by Mr. Giles, engineers; but, with the exception of the Portdynllaen and Dolgelly route, they all pass through this county. The railway committee have examined the lines, and given a preference to Mr. Stephenson's, from Chester to Bangor and Holyhead, through Flint, Denbigh, and Carnarvon shires, to the Menai bridge, across which he proposed to draw the carriages with horses: Mr. Giles proposed to do so by fixed engines. The commissioners state that there would be no danger to the stability of the bridge, even if its whole length was covered with loaded carriages. According to the report, there are 186 miles, 21 chains, formed and forming between London and Chester, leaving 85 to be constructed to Holyhead, and 88 miles 55 chains to Portdynllaen. The time by the former, and sea voyage, would be 17 hours 44 minutes from London to Dublin, and 18 hours 16 minutes, or 32 minutes longer, by the latter. A very favourable opinion was expressed, however, of the line from the Great Western at Dudcote to Oxford and Worcester; and it was stated that a line this way to Worcester would be only 118 miles, or 20 shorter than by the lines now forming. A strong opinion was also given on the Great Western gage. "In cases of emergency," says the report, "a much higher speed is, unquestionably, attainable on lines of this construction, than on those of the more usual gage." It may be here observed, that the necessity of constructing any new line of railway, either through this county, or otherwise, is now proposed to be obviated by the route through Chester to Birkenhead, to be opened throughout, from the Grand Junction line at Crewe, to Birkenhead, in August, 1840, whereby, though 1½ hour would be lost, the immense sum requisite to construct a railway to Holyhead or Portdynllaen would be saved.

Aspect, soil, and produce.—The surface and soil of this county are greatly diversified. All along the coast the surface is level, finely sheltered, and the soil highly fertile. A mountain range running parallel with the Dee, extends the whole length of the county, attaining, in some places, an elevation of about 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. Even here, however, the hills generally fall into gentle slopes descending into well-watered valleys, possessing a rich argillaceous soil yielding grass and corn in the richest abundance. The innumerable streams which descend from these hills add beauty and fertility to the valleys. The south-western parts of the county contain an elevated line, forming a bold frontier to the vale of Clwyd, called the Clwydian hills. No passage opens through this range except at Bodfary, by the road from Denbigh to Holywell. The soil of these hills is a commixture of clay and gravel; the argillaceous is predominant; the substrata are calcareous. The principal grains cultivated in this county are wheat and rye. The breed of cattle is small, but they are excellent milkers; and the sweetness of their beef is generally acknowledged. Butter and cheese form no inconsiderable items in the exports of the county; but it is richer in mineral than in animal or vegetable products.

Strata, minerals, and mines.—The mineralogy of this part of Britain has long been an interesting object. Even the Romans discovered the value of the substrata; but their method of detaching minerals from their various matrices appears to have been very imperfect. They were besides unacquainted, according to Livy, with the means of blasting. They kindled large fires upon the surface or against the rocks, and, by the application of water, or some other liquid, burst them into numerous fissures, into which they introduced pickaxes or wedges. Such instruments, of uncommon sizes, have been discovered upon the floors of several mineral trenches in this county; with buckets and leaden lamps. Pennant, a native of Flintshire, has divided the mineral line of this district into two parts, the highland and lowland tracts. The former commences near Diserth, where Dalar-goch hangs over the Rhyddlan vale. The course runs south through the parishes of Cwm, Tremerchion, and Caerwys. The small valley of Bodfary occasions a break; the line again appears passing through Skeifiog and Nannerch; whence, near Mold, it makes a considerable bend through the parish of Northop; and then exhibits its front to those of Halkin, Holywell, Whiteford, Llanasa, Gwaenseor, and Meliden. The 2d division is separated from the 1st by a deep depression of the previously elevated line of country in the vicinity of Rhos Esmor; and numerous coal and other mines are open in the flat surface, on the west side of the lower portion. With Mold mountain the land rises again, and the mineral tract takes a south course, through the adjacent county of Denbigh. The central and west parts of the former, extending from Dalar-goch to Rhos Esmor, consist of calcareous strata, that produce limestone of excellent quality, in many instances approaching to several kinds of foreign marble. On the east side of this tract the composite matter begins to alter, changing into a mixed sort of silicious substance, or chert, varying in purity. Below this, a dark looking shivery shale, becoming friable when exposed to the atmosphere, commences near Rhos Esmor; and so far as these decomposable strata occur, in connection with limestone, in larger or smaller quantities, lead ore is found. As the shale appears, sandstone is presented, and rich veins of coal lie subjacent at a greater depth. The coal strata extend to the margin of the Dee estuary, and appear again in the hundred of Wiral in Cheshire; and further beyond the Mersey. The sudden changes in the strata are strikingly observable, particularly near Nannerch; limestone rocks forming one side of the vale, and ledges, composed of shivery shale, the other opposing declivity. Both the limestone and chert are of unknown depth. The minerals of those tracts, are lead ores of various degrees of value; lapis calaminaris, and another species of zinc, pseudo-galena, called by the miners black jack, and a fair substitute for calamine. This semi-metal was long imported from India, under the name of Tutenag, and the secret of its being an ingredient in the composition of brass was not known in this country till about the year 1738. The discovery of its being the Cadmia of the ancients, arose from the circumstance of a Portugal vessel laden with calamine being taken by the Dutch, when the Arabic origin of the term was disclosed. At Holywell, there are brass, lead, and iron works, and at Flint, lead works. The richest mine of lead which has been discovered was at a spot called Panty Pwldwr, on the side of Halkin mountain, which yielded in the space of 30 years upwards of a million sterling. The whole of the mines and rakes of lead within the hundreds of Coleshill and Rhyddlan, were alienated from the Crown in the time of Charles I., in favour of Sir Richard Grosvenor. The coal district, commencing at Llanasa, extends, in a south-east direction, through the parishes of Whiteford, Holywell, Flint, and Northop, terminating in Hawarden. The collieries of Bychton and Mostyn were discovered in the time of Edward I., and have been worked for several centuries. Vast quantities of coal are exported, especially to Liverpool and Chester, and to Carnarvonshire, Anglesea, and Ireland. Chert, the Petrosilex of Cronstedt, here accompanies the limestone strata, in immense masses, or rocks, particularly useful in the manufacture of porcelain and Delft-ware. Limestone is very abundant. Among the curiosities of the mineral kingdom in this district, are various kinds of Spars: the curious double reflecting species, the Chrystallum, vel spatium Islandicum, is not unfrequently found. Petroleum, or rock oil, is often met with in the limestone strata, and is called by the Welsh, y menin ty lwith lëg, or fairies' butter. A constant and reciprocal trade has been carried on between Holywell and Liverpool; steam-packets sail regularly from the Mostyn quay and Rhyl; small sailing boats ply daily between Bagillt and Pargate, whence passengers are conveyed to Liverpool; and the trade of FLINT—which see—has recently revived.

History.—Flintshire, though of small dimensions, is an interesting county, not only from its diversified beauty and its rich mineral treasures, but from its numerous remains of antiquity, and its historical importance. This portion of the country, when the Romans invaded Britain, was included in the territory of the Ordovices, in Britannia secunda. Upon its confines the Romans built a small city called Varis, 19 miles from Conovium. It is still called Bodfary, or Bodvari,—the mansion of Varus,—and ruins of the buildings are upon a small hill adjoining, called Moel-y-gaer. The Romans left everywhere vestiges of their invading steps. The fort at Farndon was, if not a station, a strong out-post, communicating with the head-quarters, at Deva,—Chester;—and Varis was a frontier station towards the interior. Caergurley, or Caergwrie, has been conjectured to be another. After the surrender of Chester to the arms of Egbert, the whole of the present county of Flint was brought under the Saxon dynasty. Robbers on a great scale, have endeavoured to disguise their actions by changing the names of the places they seized. Thus the Saxons gave new appellations to towns and villages: yet the Welsh eagerly resumed the denominations of antiquity. Hawarden is still known by Pennard; Mold by Wyddgryg; and Hope by Estyn. In the years 1054-5, this part of the country was laid waste and nearly depopulated by two inroads made by the Saxons. Algar, earl of Chester, had fled from the vengeance of Edward the Confessor, to whom Gruffydd, the reigning prince of Wales, afforded protection. Edward, indignant at the insult, sent Earl Harold with a large army, which carried with it devastation; burning the prince's palace at Rhyddlan, and a fleet of ships which lay upon the coast. When the Domesday survey was made by command of the Norman conqueror, this district appears a part of Cheshire. In the time of Henry III. it was seized by the crown. Henry created his son Edward earl of Chester and Flint; and the succeeding kings, when they created their sons heirs-apparent of the crown and princes of Wales, invested them with the earldom of Chester, including Flintshire. Edward I. ordered Flintshire to be a territory separately considered:—see also article FLINT. The immense rampart, or dyke and ditch, constructed by Offa, the Mercian king, between his own and the Welsh territories, and running across the south-western parts of this county to Mold, together with the other ancient dyke alluded to under article DENBIGHSHIRE,—which see,—though in some places more perfect than in this county, are still traceable here.

FLINT, a borough and parish in the hund. of Coleshill, union of Holywell, county of Flint, North Wales; 200 miles north-west of London. Houses 469. A. P. £1,933. Pop., in 1801, 1,169; in 1831, 2,216. Living, a curacy to the parish of Northop, in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; returned at £145; gross income £225. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph's. Service is performed both in Welsh and English in the church every Sunday. The Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. There are 3 daily schools, besides the National schools. Sunday schools are held in church, in the Calvinistic and Wesleyan chapels. Charities, in 1836, £3 6s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 11s. Flint, the county-town of Flintshire, is pleasantly situated on the estuary of the Dee. Besides its castle and jail there is nothing worthy of notice in its buildings except the guildhall, which is a handsome modern edifice. It is a fashionable bathing-station.

Flint was constituted a free borough by Edward I.; but a charter granted by Edward the Black Prince, was considered the governing charter previous to 1835. By the charter of Edward I., inspected and confirmed by subsequent charter of Edward III., and by the governing charter; the constable of Flint castle, appointed by the crown, was appointed to be mayor of the borough. David Pennant, Esq., of Downing, son of the celebrated author and antiquary, was appointed by letters patent of date 8th June, 499 Geo. III., reviewed by letters patent dated 21st December, 1^o Will. IV., to be "constable of the castle of Flint, keeper of the jail of the said castle, comptroller of all records, pleas, fines, &c., before the king's justices in the counties of Chester and Flint, &c., and comptroller of all pleas, &c., before the justices of North Wales in the county of Carnarvon." The recorder and the 2 bailiffs were appointed by the constable, to whom ultimately no active functions as mayor appertained. The charter, however, ordained the election of the bailiffs, by the burgesses, from among themselves. There were also a sergeant at mace and 4 constables: the freedom resided in all male scot and lot inhabitants of the borough, the boundaries of which comprehend the parish of Flint and the township of Coleshill Fawr, in the parish of Holywell. Under the new municipal act, this borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Flint. The income of the borough, for 1839, was £46 8s. 5d., derived principally from rents; besides a balance of £34 17s. 5½d. in the treasurer's hands: expenditure £79 11s. 3d.; of which £39 18s. 3d. consisted of law expenses, &c., and £30 of salaries, &c. Flint was included in schedule B. of the new municipal act, among boroughs not to have a commission of the peace unless upon petition and grant: a commission of the peace has, however, been granted. The county business is almost all transferred to Mold; but the county-jail and house of correction, a very fine building, is still here. It is secure, dry, and well-ventilated. It contains 16 cells, 6 day-rooms, and 6 airing courts. Breaking stones forms the more severe description of labour for the prisoners, the number of whom, in 1835, was 81. Flint has possessed the franchise ever since the 27th year of Henry VIII. Previous to the reform act it returned one member in conjunction with Rhyddlan, Overton, Caergurley, and Caerwys. The number of electors, previous to 1832, was, for Flint, 445; for Flint and its contributories, 1,217. St. Asaph, Holywell, and Mold, have been added to this compound borough interest by the reform act; but the borough still returns only one member: no alterations have been made in the old borough boundaries of Flint. The mayor is the returning officer. The number of electors registered in the borough and its contributories for 1837, was 1,297, of whom 395 were in Flint: the number of electors who actually polled at the general election, in 1837, was 283 for Flint, and 984 in all. Flint is a polling-place, and the principal place of election, for the county member.

This town was at one time a sea-port of considerable importance. In the old walls are still visible the moorings to which vessels were then usually fastened. The retreat of the sea, and a great influx of sand, which choked up the mouth of the Dee, rendered it a place of very little consequence; and the improvements in the navigation of the Dee—see CHESTER—probably only tended still further to withdraw its remaining trade to that city; but although further improvements, or rather recleanings, of the river have been proposed, the obstructions to the navigation of the higher parts of the estuary, still produced by the shifting sands, do not affect that part of the channel by which the port of Flint is approached; and, in consequence, it has been recently becoming, in a great measure, the port of Chester. Vessels discharge here, especially when laden with timber, which is floated up, or taken in lighters to Chester; and the trade of the port of Flint is represented on all hands as rapidly reviving. The propriety of constructing docks, at no distant period, has been even recently considered; but the salt marshes of the river frontage had been surrendered to the company "for recovering and preserving the navigation of the river Dee." The exports for the year ending 5th January, 1833, consisted of 644 vessels with coals; tonnage 36,701; men 1,917;—besides 117 vessels with sundries; tonnage 7,618, men 357;—coastwise and to Ireland: imports—coastwise, with sundries, including slates, &c., 141 vessels; tonnage 7,557; men 403;—from America with timber 6 vessels;—from Ireland 13 vessels; tonnage 790; men 48. The coal mines in the vicinity furnish active employment to very large bodies of workmen, and the neighbouring lead mines are still, and have been from very remote antiquity, worked to a great extent, at a place still called 'Pentre-Fwrndan'—the 'Furnace-hamlet': in several of the old lead-washes, many Roman coins, fibulæ and antique instruments have been found; and hearths, with vestiges of the ancient mode of smelting, in alternate layers of wood and lead, discovered. Fairs are held here on February 14th, June 24th, August 10th, November 30th, for cattle.

The castle of Flint is the centre of its historical interest: indeed Lambard, in 1577, takes no notice of the town, but describes "Flint" as "a castle in Wales that gyveth name to a shyre, which was aunciently called Teyengle, i. bellus locus, or Angulus, to goe nearer the Welsh."* This castle, which belongs to the Crown, was begun by Henry II., and perfected by Edward I. Richard II. bestowed it upon Percy, Earl of Northumberland, who was base enough to inveigle the unfortunate monarch within its walls, and afterwards to surrender him to his enemy Bolingbroke. It was garrisoned for King Charles I. during the civil wars; but ultimately surrendered to the parliamentary forces. The form of this castle is a parallelogram, with circular towers at the angles; and adjoining it are several detached parts, which show it to have been extensive. Like the other Welsh castles, it was dismantled under a general order of the House of Commons in 1647, and is now a ruin, comprising an area of about $\frac{3}{4}$ of an acre, but devoid of scenic interest or effect, and remarkable only for the strength and thickness of its walls, which are built of a yellowish ochre-coloured stone, interspersed with undulated veins of a harder substance. It must have been originally surrounded by the sea; but it has now the appearance of a lofty rock in the centre of a very disagreeable marsh.

FLINTHAM, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Newark. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York; rated at £6 2s. 6d.; gross income £309. Tithes commuted in 1775. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Here are 3 daily and 2 Sunday schools:

* The origin of the name Flint appears to be involved in obscurity. It has been suggested, however, that it is probably derived from a very predominant feature in the geology of the district—namely, Chert, which the ancients designated both as silex and petrosilex; and the fact has been adverted to, that when Flintshire was made one of the four North Wallian counties in the time of Edward I., the statutes were promulgated in barbarous Latin, and, as it was in some instances called "Comitatus de Flint," this has, rather gratuitously, perhaps, been considered 'dog-latin' for 'the silexian territory.' "Richard the 1st," says Lambard, "understandinge of the comynge of Henry Boieubroke, and after the fourth kinge of that name, came out of Ireland into this castlle, whiche Polydore, alludinge to the name, calleth Fletum, because he wept oytterlye at the contemplation of the troubles which he sawe likely to followe!" Polydore has certainly much merit in drawing even etymological tears from Flint.

one of the former is endowed with £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 14s. Acres 2,450. Houses 110. A. P. £4,157. Pop., in 1801, 459; in 1831, 545.

FLINTON, a township in the parish of Humbleton, east riding of Yorkshire; 9½ miles north-east of Kingston-upon-Hull. Acres 1,440. Houses 24. A. P. £1,739. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1838, £68 5s.

FLITCHAM, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge Lynn, county of Norfolk; 4¼ miles east-north-east of Castle-Rising. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; certified to value £20; returned at £35; gross income £54. Patron, in 1835, Thomas W. Coke, Esq. Acres 3,960. Houses 80. A. P. £3,054. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 323. Poor rates, in 1838, £200 13s.

FLITT HUNDRED forms the south-eastern extremity of the county of Bedford. Area 38,760 acres. Houses 2,239. Pop., in 1831, 12,171.

FLITTON, a parish in the hund. of Flitt, union of Amptill, county of Bedford. It includes the hamlet of Silsoe, and the township of Flitton; 1½ mile west of Silsoe. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Silsoe, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 7s. 8d.; gross income £259. Tithes commuted in 1809. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ Church, Oxford. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, and 2 day and Sunday Lancastrian schools, to which a library is attached. Charities, £18 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £391 11s. Acres 3,185. Houses 233. A. P. £3,139. Pop., in 1801, 739; in 1831, 1,184.

FLITWICK, a parish in the hund. of Redborne-stoke, union of Amptill, county of Bedford; 2¼ miles south-south-west of Amptill. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 17s.; gross income £286. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Bedford. Acres 1,700. Houses 123. A. P. £2,628. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 636.

FLIXBOROUGH, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford Bridge, county of Lincoln; 10 miles north-west of Glandford Bridge, and east of the Trent. Living, a rectory with the vicarage of Burton-upon-Stather annexed, in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 10s.; gross income £767. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Sheffield, Bart. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 2,650. Houses 42. A. P. £1,328. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 9s.

FLIXTON, a parish in the hund. of Salford, co-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles west-south-west of Manchester, situated between the rivers Irwell and Mersey. It includes the townships of Flixton and Urmston. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; certified to value £34, returned at £100; gross income £107. Patron, its own prebendary in the cathedral church of Lichfield. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1779. There are 2 daily and 3 Sunday schools, one of the former of which is partly supported by endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £671 15s. Acres 2,710. Houses 342. A. P. £7,060. Pop., in 1801, 1,625; in 1831, 2,099.

FLIXTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lotheringland, county of Suffolk; 3 miles west-north-west of Lowestoft. Living, a discharged rectory united with that of Blundeston. Acres 820. Houses 7. A. P. £918. Pop., in 1801, 41; in 1831, 39. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 17s.

FLIXTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Wangford, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-west of Bungay, and south of the river Waveney. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6, returned at £125 10s.; gross income £140. Patron, in 1835, A. Adair, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,460. Houses 34. A. P. £1,507. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 206. Poor rates, in 1838, £155 15s.

FLIXTON, a township in the parish of Folkton, east riding of Yorkshire; 6¼ miles south of Scarborough. Tithes commuted in 1802. Acres 2,500. Houses 53. A. P. £1,629. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 251.

FLOCKTON a chapelry in the parish of Thornhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles east by south of Huddersfield. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £31 5s., returned at £110; gross income £98; in the patronage of trustees. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1802. Here are three Sunday and two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £148 4s. Acres 1,050. Houses 193. A. P. £3,696. Pop., in 1801, 800; in 1831, 995.

FLODDEN-FIELD, in the parish of Kirk-Newton, west division of Glendale ward, Northumberland; 8 miles north-north-west of Wooler. Flodden-hill is the last and lowest of those eminences which extend to the north-east of the great mountain of Cheviot, towards the low grounds on the side of the Tweed, from which river Flodden is distant about 4 miles. The ascent to the top of it, from the side of the river Till, where it runs in a northerly direction, just by the foot of the declivity on which the castle and village of Ford stands, is about half-a-mile. On the south of Flodden lies the extensive and very level plain of Millfield, having, on its west side, high hills, the branches of Cheviot; on the north, Flodden and other moderate eminences adjoining to it; on the south and east, a tract of ground, near the foot of which is the slow and winding course of the Till. Flodden-hill was the scene of the celebrated battle of Flodden-field, which was fought on 9th September, 1513, between the English, commanded by Earl Surrey, Lord Dacres, and other noblemen, and the Scotch, under King James IV. This decisive conflict is sometimes called the battle of Branxton, as it was partly fought, and finally decided, by the death of King James, and the total defeat of the Scotch, near that place, which is situated about 1½ mile north-west of Flodden-hill. The loss of the Scotch was variously estimated at 8 to 12,000 men, among whom were a great number of knights and gentlemen, 17 lords, 12 earls, 4 abbots, and the archbishop of St. Andrews, natural son of the king, with two other prelates. The loss of the English was estimated at only 1,500, including scarcely an Englishman of considerable note among the slain. This disproportion is generally attributed to the superiority of the English artillery and bowmen. King James, who had entered Northumberland with a powerful army, and ravaged the Borders, is said to have wasted so much time at Ford, captivated by the fair daughter of Sir William Heron, that the numbers and spirit of his army diminished, while the English had time to bring up all their forces against him, to the summary infliction of that sanguinary retribution for which Floddenfield has been so celebrated.

Near to Branxton is a large upright pillar of whinstone, measuring 6 feet 7 inches in diameter towards the base, erected as a memorial of this victory. On the summit of Flodden-hill is a natural rock called the King's Chair, from whence James had a good view of the English army and his own, which latter was encamped on the hill, till withdrawn by stratagem of Earl Surrey. The top of Flodden-hill is now covered with a large plantation of fir-trees.

FLOOKBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of Cartmill, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Ulverstone. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £9 12s., returned at £93 4s.; gross income £121. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Burlington. The chapel has been recently enlarged. Though only a small village, Flookborough was formerly a market-town.

FLOORE, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Northampton, and near the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17; gross income £482. Tithes commuted in 1778. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. Here are a place of worship for Independents; and a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, £50 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £621 2s. Acres 3,390. Houses 214. A. P. £4,873. Pop., in 1801, 821; in 1831, 955.

FLORDON, a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 6 miles east-south-east of Wymondham, and $7\frac{1}{2}$ south by west of Norwich. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 13s. 4d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Sir W. R. Kemp, Bart., who is lord of the manor, and has an estate in the parish. Flordon is a small village. Here is a Sunday National school. Acres 1,020. Houses 31. A. P. £1,218. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 164. Poor rates, in 1838, £216 5s.

FLOTTERTON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, county of Northumberland; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of Rothbury, and north of the river Cocket. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £92 13s. 8d., rectorial. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 16. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 95. Poor rates, in 1838, £17 10s.

FLOWTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Ipswich. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £3 9s. 9d., returned at £100 12s.; gross income £140. Patron, in 1835, H. S. Thornton, Esq. Acres 800. Houses 31. A. P. £578. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 185. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 15s.

FLYFORD-GRAFTON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 7 miles east-east by north of Worcester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £20 0s. 10d.; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Coventry. Here is a school with a moderate endowment. Charities, £27 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 7s. Acres 1,640. Houses 48. A. P. £2,343. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 242.

FOBBING, a parish in the hund. of Barstaple, union of Orset, county of Essex; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Hordon-on-the-Hill, near a creek or bay opening into the Thames, and named, at the entrance, Holehaven. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £21; gross income £564. Patron, the Crown. Here is a Sunday National school. The village of Fobbing is on a high hill 2 miles from the Thames, yet, owing to the extensive marsh-grounds called the Flatts, ague is very prevalent. The church, being on the eminence with a tower of unusual height, forms a conspicuous object at a great distance, and is clearly visible from the Kentish hills. It has a peal of 5 bells, which enliven the villagers with their harmony; and, in the summer months, the scenery of this vicinity is correctly described in the words of the poet Cowper:—

“Here Thames, slow gliding through a level plain
Of spacious meads, with cattle sprinkled o’er,
Conducts the eye along its sinuous course, Delighted.”

Jack Cade's rebellion began in the “village of Fobbing, where the mob broke into a priory, and drank up 3 tuns of wine, and devoured all the victuals.”—Stow's Annals. Acres 1,830. Houses 76. A. P. £2,933. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1838, £272 7s.

FOCKERBY, a township in the parish of Adlingfleet, west riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles south-east of Howden, and west of the Trent. Tithes commuted in 1767. Here is a free school. Acres 1,410. Houses 22. A. P. £853. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 103.

FOFFANT. See FOVANT.

FOGGATHORPE, a township in the parish of Bubwith, east riding of Yorkshire. Here is a small chapel for the Wesleyan Methodists. Acres 1,530. Houses 21. A. P. £6,491. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 128. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 10s.

FOLESHILL, a parish in the rural part of the county of the city of Coventry, union of Foleshill, county of Warwick; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Coventry, intersected by the Oxford canal. Acres 2,810. Houses 1,475. A. P. £6,491. Pop., in 1801, 3,026; in 1811, 3,480; and in 1831, 6,969. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; gross income £388. Tithes commuted in 1774. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1795; and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. Here are also 2 daily, with 2 Sunday and daily, and 2 Sunday National, schools: both of the daily schools are partly supported by endowment. Charities, in 1836, exclusive of those connected with the county of the city in general, £20 7s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,786 6s.—The Foleshill poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 25 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,965. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was, £5,621. Expenditure, in 1838, £2,922; in 1839, £2,234 1s. Foleshill participates in the silk, ribbon, and other manufacture of COVENTRY—which see. In 1818, there were 1,732 looms in this parish, employing 2,544 hands: in December, 1831, there were, in Foleshill, and Exhall—the population of which parish was only 840, while that of Foleshill was 6,969—1,062 looms employed; 1,629 unemployed; in all 2,691: in November, 1838, there were 2,700 looms employed. Previous to 1831, there were very few engine-looms out of the city; but the number has since greatly increased, especially in the parishes of Foleshill and Bedworth, where that of the single hand-looms has proportionately declined. The number of engine-looms in Foleshill, in 1818, was 110; in Foleshill and Exhall, in 1838, 450, of which 50 were plain engine looms, and 400 jacquard engine looms: the remainder were single-hand looms. The plain engine trade, the fancy engine trade, or jacquard trade, and the single-hand trade, are the three great branches of the Coventry hand-loom weaving manufacture. “The plain trade comprises the manufacture of plain satins, sarcenets, gauzes, and pads of all colours, and also of ‘loves’ which are chiefly gauze and satin in stripes of mourning colours. The fancy trade consists in the manufacture of the same fabrics with figures of various texture, applied, when small, to ribbons of a considerable breadth by a number of treadles in the single-hand loom, but more commonly by means of the jacquard machine attached to the engine looms. One class of fancy ribbons are of homogeneous texture, but various colours, clouded, barred, or plaided: another consists of the chinas and china gauzes."—Reports on Hand-loom Weaving.

FOLKE, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, Sherborne division of the county of Dorset; 3 miles south-south-east of Sherborne. Living, a rectory, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury; rated at £9 12s. 3½d.; gross income £300. Patrons, in 1835, alternately the dean and chapter of Salisbury, and G. T. Jacob. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,260. Houses 52. A. P. £2,702. Pop., in 1801, 182; in 1831, 281. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 17s.

FOLKESTONE, a sea-port, market-town, and parish, in the hund. of Folkestone, union of Elham, lathe of Shepway, county of Kent; 15 miles south-south-east of Canterbury, and 70 east-south-east of London, on the line of the South-eastern or Dover railway. Acres 4,360. Houses 825. A. P. £6,600. Pop., in 1801, 3,706; in 1831, 4,296. Acres of the township 680. Houses 719. A. P. £3,657. Pop., in 1801, 3,259; in 1831, 3,638. Folkestone is a member of the Cinque-port of Dover. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £10 0s. 2½d., returned at £140; gross income £185. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Here are a Huntingdonian Methodist church, formerly a Baptist, formed in 1786; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1831; a Baptist, and a Friends' meeting-house. There are 4 Sunday, 13 infant, and 4 daily schools. One of the last is partly supported by an endowment from Sir Eliab Harvey, in 1674, for schooling 20 children, and providing boats for poor fishermen: yearly income, in 1819, £110 0s. 10d.: other charities, in 1836, £172 0s. 11d. per annum. Nine trustees were appointed on 9th December, 1836, to administer the charities previously under the control of the corporation. The charity income received by the trustees, in 1837, was £93 7s. 6d., besides £45 15s. paid under protest to the town-council, who claimed a right to distribute the same, contending that they were not charities affected by the municipal corporation act. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £2,238 4s.; of the township £1,656 8s. Folkestone lies close upon the shore of the English channel, between Dover and Hythe, and opposite to Boulogne, in a hollow between two precipitous cliffs. It consists chiefly of three streets, rather irregularly built along the acclivities of the western cliff, on the very summit of which stands the church,—the only one remaining out of five that, once belonged to the town; the other four having been swept away by the sea. A nunnery, too, once stood near the coast; but, after being often pillaged by the Danes, it was at last also swallowed up by the sea. The beach is favourable for bathing, and from the salubrity of the air, and its delightful scenery, the town is much resorted to by respectable company, who meet with every accommodation, including hot and cold baths, &c. There is a new road along the bottom of the ridge of cliffs to Sandgate. Another ridge of chalky cliffs runs all the way from hence to Dover; and it has been observed that some of them have visibly sunk in altitude within the memory of man. These cliffs command very fine sea views; and, in clear weather, the French coast is distinctly visible.

The harbour of Folkestone was constructed under an act of parliament, in 1809, by a joint-stock company, to whom the property belongs; but at present it is in the hands of the Exchequer bills loan commissioners. It is entirely artificial, and formed by rubble stone piers, enclosing an area of 14 acres. The western arm extends, in a south-south-western direction, 140 yards across the beach, and unites with the main pier, which is carried in a straight line east and by south about 317 yards. A projecting pier has since been run out from the shore, on the eastern side, towards the south-west, 236 yards, leaving an entrance of 123 feet in width, open to the east and by south. A groin has been constructed near the eastern extremity of the main pier, for the purpose of preventing the shingle from obstructing the harbour's mouth. This, however, has not overcome the evil. The spring tides average about 18 to 20 feet, and neap tides from 12 to 14 feet, but the harbour is left dry at low water; and the greater part of the interior is blocked up by a bank of shingle rising to the height of several feet above high water, and leaving only a channel of inconsiderable width along the side of the main pier. A small stream is pent up at the north-western side of the harbour, for the purpose of scouring at low water; and with the assistance of manual labour, in addition to this very inadequate backwater, the channel is kept open so as to allow vessels of 10 to 12 feet draught to come alongside of the main pier at the top of high water. The position of this harbour enables vessels, with the prevailing south-west winds, to cross to Boulogne, when the communication with Calais from the more eastern English harbours cannot be effected. It is also the most easily accessible of all the harbours on the same coast, which are almost all tidal harbours, dry, or nearly so, at low water; and formed by piers carried out from the mainland. The commissioners appointed by the admiralty, in 1839, to survey the harbours of the south-eastern coast, state, however, that in its present form, it is not capable, by any improvements, of being made available as a harbour of refuge, either for the smaller and more numerous class of merchant vessels, or for armed steamers in the event of war; and they do not consider the situation eligible for the construction of a deep-water harbour, such as would be requisite for these purposes on this part of the coast, and which should be formed in the sea by means of breakwaters detached from the mainland, on the same principle as that in Plymouth sound, or connected with the shore by piers, similar to the harbour at Kingstown near Dublin.

About 10,000 tons of shipping entered this port in 1833, exclusive of vessels under 15 tons burthen. The municipal commissioners observe in their report of the state of this borough, that "it would be of advantage to the town, and the shipping interest in general, that it should be made a station for pilots. On many and pressing occasions a pilot may be put on board from Folkestone, when his reaching the vessel that requires him is difficult or impossible from Dover."

Folkestone, as a member of the town and Cinque-port of Dover, received its constitution from the charters applicable to the Cinque-ports in general. The governing charter, previous to 1835, was the 20th Car. II., wherein the whole of these very numerous charters, commencing in the reign of Edward I., are recited and confirmed. Under it the town was governed by 12 jurats, including the mayor and 24 commoners, with a recorder, chamberlain, town-clerk, &c., the jurats, as such, being all of them justices of the peace within the town, with a jurisdiction exclusive of the county magistrates. The mayor—ex officio coroner—was annually elected, and with the jurats held a court of sessions and jail delivery at least once a-year. They had also authority to hold a court of record for recovery of debts to any amount. A court of requests was appointed under a local act; jurisdiction limited to 40s. Under the new municipal act this town is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being the mayor, jurats, and commonalty of the town of Folkestone. It was included in schedule B. amongst boroughs which were not to have a commission of the peace unless on petition and grant. A commission of the peace, however, has since been granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. The ancient liberties of the town and port comprised only a portion of the parish of Folkestone on the seashore, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east and 2 west of the town, the eastern comprehending 600 acres of agricultural country, and the western merely a narrow strip of the coast from 1 to 200 yards in depth, terminating with a few houses at Sandgate. The limits of the municipal borough laid down in the boundary reports, are confined to all that can be called the town of Folkestone with its suburbs, and the hamlet of Ford $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile north of the town. The income of the borough, for 1839, was £430 16s. 3d. chiefly derived from borough rates: expenditure £433 19s. 1d.; of which £137 7s. consisted of salaries, &c.; £91 6s. 2d. expenses of police and constables; £72 7s. 4d. rents, rates, taxes, &c.; £70 5s. 8d. interest; and £10 expenses on jail and maintenance, &c., of prisoners. The jail of this town is the property of the earl of Radnor, who, as lord of the manor, appoints the keeper. It consists of 4 apartments; but has been considered insecure and only used for custody previous to trial, and for debtors from the court of requests; other debtors being sent to Dover castle, and prisoners under sentence to the county prison. By the reform act Folkestone has been added to Hythe for parliamentary representation.

This was formerly a prosperous fishing town. In 1767 the fishery here employed 49 vessels of 2,650 tons, and about 800 men; but it failed from the scarcity of fish on the neighbouring coasts, which some ascribe to the skill of the French fishermen; others with more reason, to the English practice of catching the fry of fish in great quantities for manure; but above all, the failure has been attributed to a custom-house regulation prohibiting English boats from fishing beyond a certain distance from shore. In 1831 there were only 20 vessels in all, of 500 tons, employing 200 men. Formerly the nets were manufactured here, but latterly to the most part purchased at Bridport. The fish usually caught here are herrings, mackerels, soles, whittings, conger-eels, &c., and have been regarded as superior in kind, and excellent in condition. Fishing and smuggling, the chief occupations of the town in former times, having both declined, it is now far from being in a flourishing state. The custom-house accounts are kept at Dover, to which belong several riding officers or coast guard to prevent smuggling. The market day is Thursday; and there are annual fairs on April 12th and Easter-Tuesday.

That Folkestone is very ancient and was known to the Romans, appears from coins and bricks found here. About a mile-and-a-half from the town, on the summit of an eminence called Castle-hill, is an ancient camp, comprising about 2 acres, on the most accessible sides of which is a triple ditch; on one side is a single, and on another a double one. Within this area it is said there was anciently a castle founded by King Ethelbert. The Saxons called this place Felestone or broken cliff: in Domesday book it is called Falchestan. A fort was built here about 700 years ago by one of the governors of Dover castle, but it does not now exist. On the heights there is now a strong battery; and the coast is additionally defended by 3 martello towers. The celebrated Dr. William Harvey, discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was a native of this place. Folkestone gives the title of Viscount to the earls of Radnor.

FOLKESTONE HUNDRED, in the lathe of Shepway, south-west corner of the county of Kent. Area 20,360 acres. Houses 1,400. Pop., in 1831, 7,865.

FOLKINGHAM. See FALKINGHAM.

FOLKINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Long-bridge, rape of Pevensey, union of Eastbourne, county of Sussex; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Haylsam. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £12 gross income. £190. Patron, in 1835, Earl Delawarr. Acres 2,110. Houses 21. A. P. £1,192. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 168.

FOLKSWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Norman-cross, union of Peterborough, county of Huntingdon; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of Stilton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 6s. 3d.; gross income £135. Tithes commuted in 1760. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Freeman. Acres 770. Houses 47. A. P. £1,413. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 3s.

FOLKTON, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Scarborough, east riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south-south-east of Scarborough. It includes the townships of Flixton and Folkton. Living, a discharged vicarage, with a sinecure rectory, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated, the former at £8 11s. 10d., the latter at £15; gross income £984. Tithes commuted in 1802. Patron, in 1835, H. Osbaldeston, Esq. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 5,040. Houses 77. A. P. £4,135. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 455. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 10s. Acres of the township 2,540. Houses 24. A. P. £2,506. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 204.

FOLLIFOOT, or FOLLYFOOT, a township in the parish of Spofforth, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-west by west of Wetherby, on a branch of the river Nidd. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,990. Houses 66. A. P. £1,973. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 327. Poor rates, in 1838, £164.

FONTHILL-BISHOPS, or BISHOPS-FONTHILL, a parish in the hund. of Downton, though located in the hund. of Mere, union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles east by north of Hindon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £10; gross income £270. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, the former partly supported by endowment. Acres 2,040. Houses 42. A. P. £1,383. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 211. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 6s.

FONTHILL-GIFFORD, a parish in the hund. of Dunworth, union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile south-east of Hindon. Acres 1,530. Houses 96. A. P. £1,535. Pop., in 1801, 493; in 1831, 442. Poor rates, in 1838, £319 15s. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 10s.; gross income £351. Patron, the lord of the manor. Here are a boarding school, a daily, and a Sunday and daily National school. In this parish stood the magnificent mansion built and embellished by William Beckford, Esq., from designs by Wyatt; and named Fonthill abbey. This singular edifice was, in the aggregate, cruciform, with a central octagonal tower, rising 278 feet high, above smaller turrets with pinnacles. Its arrangements comprised a superb Corinthian portico, a hall of entrance, cloister, corridor, drawing rooms, oratory, gallery, &c., &c. Warner describes it as one of the most splendid mansions in the empire, "where expense has reached its utmost limits in furniture and ornaments; where every room is a gold mine, and every apartment a picture gallery."

The building is said to have cost £240,000. Its greatest length, from north to south, was 312 feet; from east to west, 250. The foundations were laid in 1796, and the proprietor first resided in it in 1807. The pleasure-grounds surrounding it were extensive, and afforded great diversity of scenery: a fine sheet of water, called the Bittern lake, nearly a mile in length, and a beautiful terrace, 5 miles in length; delightful walks, with park and lawn, finely laid out; and an American plantation, constituted its principal adornments. The end of all this modern magnificence is remarkable. In 1822 the mansion and estate were sold: in 1823, the statues, paintings, articles of virtue, and other rarities, and precious effects, were disposed of, at an auction which continued 41 days. On 21st December, 1825, the grand central tower fell down, and irretrievably injured the whole edifice. The estate was then sold out in lots; the only remaining wing of the "abbey" was converted into a villa; the pleasure-grounds were desecrated, and a cloth manufactory was erected on the banks of the beautiful lake. "Sic transit gloria mundi!"

FONTMELL-MAGNA, a parish in the hund. of Sixpenny-Handley, union of Shaftesbury, Shaston division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles south of Shaftesbury. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of West Orchard, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 10s.; gross income £550. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Salkeld. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 2,610. Houses 120. A. P. £1,856. Pop., in 1801, including the tything of Hartgrove, 349; in 1831, 743. Poor rates, in 1838, £382 14s.

FOOLOW, a hamlet in the parish of Eyam, county of Derby; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles east by north of Tideswell. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £31 10s. 9d., rectorial. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, a daily and a Sunday school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 52. A. P. £1,027. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 248. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 2s.

FOOTHOG, or TOOTHOG, a township in the parish of Cwmoy, county of Hereford; 10 miles north-north-west of Abergavenny. Acres 2,010. Houses 24. A. P. £401. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £17 11s.

FORCETT, a parish in the wapentake of Gilling-west, union of Richmond, north riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-north-east of Richmond. It includes the townships of Barforth, Carlin, Forcett, and Ovington. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Gilling; gross income £89. Patron, the vicar of Gilling. Acres 4,760. Houses 86. A. P. £5,995. Pop., in 1801, 555; in 1831, 430. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 9s. Acres of the township 1,710. Houses 22. A. P. £2,062. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 92.

FORD. See DINTON, Bucks.

FORD. See BIDSTONE.

FORD (HIGH AND LOW), a township in the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, co.-palatine of Durham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Sunderland, on the southern bank of the Wear, over which there is here a ferry called Hylton ferry. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Bishop-Wearmouth. Here are 4 daily and 2 Sunday schools. At High Ford there are two yards for ship-building, large copperas-works, and a manufactory of earthenware. Acres 810. Houses 112. Pop., in 1801, 602; in 1831, 911. Poor rates, in 1838, £255 13s.

FORD. See ORRELL AND FORD.

FORD, a parish in the west division of Glendale ward, union of Glendale, Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Wooler, on the eastern bank of the river Till, over which here is a stone bridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £24; gross income £628. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Waterford. Here are places of worship for Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, and six daily schools. The lands here are fertile, and contain valuable seams of coal, beds of slate, limestone, whinstone, and freestone. To the west of the village stands the castle of Ford, which was taken by the troops of "that champion of the Dames," James IV. on his march into England, previous to the battle of Flodden. Here James himself was captivated by the daughter of Sir William Heron—then prisoner in Scotland—and detained, not only to the loss of his own life, but to other losses of much greater importance to his country. See FLODDEN-FIELD. Ford castle was afterwards nearly destroyed in a Scottish raid, but was rebuilt by the late Lord Delaval; two of the ancient towers being incorporated with the modern building. Acres 12,220. Houses 417. A. P. £17,701. Pop., in 1801, 1,903; in 1831, 2,110. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,108 6s.

FORD HUNDRED, in the county of Salop, on the west side of the county, bordering on Montgomeryshire. Area 39,000 acres. Houses 1,291. Pop., in 1831, 6,898.

FORD, a parish in the hund. of Ford, union of Atcham, county of Salop; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Shrewsbury, and south of the Severn. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, W. E. Tomline, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 2,140. Houses 41. A. P. £3,229. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 263. Poor rates, in 1838, £78 7s.

FORD, a parish in the hund. of Avisford, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Arundel, and west of the river Arun. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £9 6s. 8d.; gross income £202. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £234 19s. 11d., rectorial. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. Acres 480. Houses 9. A. P. £889. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 81.

FORD, a tything in the parish of Idmiston, county of Wilts; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Salisbury. Houses 12. Pop., in 1821, 20; in 1831, 48. Other returns with the parish.

FORD. See LAVERSTOCK AND FORD.

FORD-ABBEY, in the parish of Thornecomb, county of Devon; 9 miles west-north-west of Beaminster. An ancient Cistercian monastery which once existed here is now a very handsome residence, consisting of the original walls of the abbey, with numerous additions in different styles of architecture.

FORDEN, a parish in the hund. of Cawrse, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 3 miles north of Montgomery, bounded on the west by the river Severn. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; valued at £30, returned at £63; gross income £119. Patrons, the Grocers' company of the city of London. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1826, and a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £4 1s. $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. This parish also partakes of the benefit of Cherbury school. Poor rates, in 1838, £621 7s. At the village of Forden a house of industry was erected in 1705, for the districts of Montgomery and Pool, including 18 townships and parishes, incorporated by act of Parliament 32^o Geo. III. The inmates have been usually employed in fabricating coarse flannels and linen, shoemaking, gardening, and cultivating the lands belonging to the house, which extend to upwards of 170 acres. The expenses are defrayed out of a general fund contributed by the several places included in the charter. Houses 124. A. P. £4,675. Pop., in 1801, 1,070; in 1831, 856.

FORDHALL, or FORTHALL. See ULLENHALL.

FORDHAM, a parish in the hund. of Staploe, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 5 miles north of Newmarket. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £360. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1809. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus' college, Cambridge. Here is a place of worship for Independents; the church was formed in 1818. There are also a Sunday National, and 8 daily schools. Charities, £51 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £658 13s. Acres 4,050. Houses 186. A. P. £3,740. Pop., in 1801, 700; in 1831, 1,325.

FORDHAM, a parish in Colchester division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; 5 miles west-north-west of Colchester, and north of the river Colne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £14 4s. 2d.; gross income £605. Patrons, in 1835, Countess de Grey, and C. S. Onley, alternately. Here is a Huntingdonian church, formed in 1790. There are 4 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Charities, £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £620. Acres 2,460. Houses 109. A. P. £3,762. Pop., in 1801, 539; in 1831, 727.

FORDHAM, a parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles south of Downham-market, and north of the river Wissey. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, returned at £54; gross income £53. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Pratt, Esq. Acres 2,270. Houses 28. A. P. £1,846. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 133. Poor rates, in 1838, £152 10s.

FORDINGBRIDGE HUNDRED, in New Forest, west division, county of Southampton, on the west extremity of the county, bordering on Dorsetshire. Area 14,310 acres. Houses 905. Pop., in 1831, 4,479.

FORDINGBRIDGE, a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Fordingbridge, New Forest, west division, county of Southampton; 19 miles west by north of Southampton. Living, a vicarage, with the rectory of Ibsley, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £30 2s. 3½d.; gross income £715; nett income £601. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Here are an Independent church, formed about the year 1700, a Friends' meeting-house, and a Methodist chapel. There are 1 British, 4 daily, 4 boarding, and 2 day and Sunday National schools: a day and Sunday school is partly supported by endowment. There is also a literary and scientific institution. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,331 5s.—The Fordingbridge poor-law union comprehends 9 parishes, embracing an area of 41 square miles; pop. returned, in 1831, at 5,567. Average annual expenditure on poor of this district, during three years preceding formation of union, £4,697. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,192; in 1839, £3,419 18s. The town is pleasantly situated on the north-west bank of the Upper Avon, over which there is here a stone bridge of 7 arches. It has suffered repeatedly from fires, and has lost much of its former importance. It is governed by a constable, appointed annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. In 1840, a flax-mill here employed 200 hands. The chief manufactures consist in tickings and sail-cloth. The market-day, which is nominal, is on Friday, and there is an annual fair held on the 9th of September. The Wilts and Dorset banking company have a branch here. On an eminence in this vicinity, called Godshill, is an ancient encampment, defended, on one side, by a double trench and ramparts; on the other, by the steepness of the hill, which is overgrown with oaks. Acres 5,720. Houses 587. A. P. £9,452. Pop., in 1801, 2,335; in 1831, including the tything of Godshill, 2,822.

FORDINGTON LIBERTY, in Dorchester division of the county of Dorset, on the south-west side of the county. Area 6,310 acres. Houses 443. Pop., in 1831, 2,588.

FORDINGTON, a parish in the liberty of Fordington, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; ¼ mile south-east of Dorchester, on the southern bank of the river Frome. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury; rated at £15, returned at £145 1s.; gross income £225. Patron, the prebendary of Fordington in the cathedral of Salisbury. The church is a very ancient cruciform structure. Here are 4 daily and 3 Sunday National schools. This parish is included in the parliamentary boundaries of DORCHESTER,—which see. In 1838, a woollen-mill here employed 27 hands. The east end of this parish has, time immemorial, been called Icen town, probably from its proximity to the Ikniel way. Fordington derives its name from a ford here formed in the river Frome. The road leading into the village being often flooded so deeply as to render it not only dangerous, but sometimes fatal to travellers, Mrs. Pitt, of Kingston-house, in 1747, made a raised causeway at an expense of upwards of £1,500; and at the same time carried a bridge of three arches over one of the branches into which the Frome here divides itself. In forming this causeway, a Roman hypocaust was discovered: the bricks, however, were all of them imperfect. Acres 1,910. Houses 321. A. P. £5,320. Pop., in 1801, 888; in 1831, 2,030. Poor rates, in 1838, £724 12s.

FORDLEY, formerly a distinct parish, now united to Middleton, in the hund. of Blything, county of Suffolk; 3¾ miles north-east of Saxmundham, on the river Badingham. Living, a discharged rectory united to the vicarage of Westleton, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5; gross income £570. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Packard. The history of the parish church of Fordley is highly admonitory, and merits notice. It stood in the same yard with that of Middleton, and a complaint was lodged with the bishop, that when the service did not begin and end in both churches at the same time, the bell and the people of the one church disturbed the people of the other. The sagacious bishop, instead of enjoining his suffragans to commence their services together, or ordering the ropes to be taken from one or both of the bells, issued orders for one minister to serve them both, preaching alternately in the churches, by which he succeeded in demolishing a church, and securing a sinecure! Returns with MIDDLETON WITH FORDLEY.

FORDON, or FORDER, a township, returned with the parish of Wold-Newton, east riding of Yorkshire; 12 miles north of Great Driffield. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Hunmanby. Tithes commuted in 1799–1800. Acres 1,460. Pop., in 1821, 48. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 2s.

FORD'S-BRIDGE, an extra-parochial chapelry in the hund. of Wolphy, county of Hereford; 3 miles south-south-east of Leominster. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, Richard Arkwright, Esq. Acres 320. Houses 5. A. P. included with Wharton. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 33. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 15s.

FORDWICH, a parish, and a member of the town and Cinque-port of Sandwich, locally situated in the hund. of Downhamford, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 2 miles east-north-east of Canterbury, on the banks of the Stour, which is navigable for small vessels up to the bridge that crosses it above the village of Fordwich. The large haven at the mouth of the river is celebrated for its fine trout, and is supposed to be the Portus Trutulensis of the Romans. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 15s. 2d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, Earl Cowper. The church consists of two aisles, and a chancel, with a spire-steeple containing 4 bells. It formerly contained a curious Saxon tomb, which has been removed to the precincts of Canterbury cathedral. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, £44 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 10s. Though but a small village, this place has enjoyed all the privileges of a Cinque-port, the government of the town being vested in a mayor, jurats, and commonalty, with a high-steward, treasurer, and town-clerk, the mayor being coroner by virtue of his office, and the jurats, justices within their liberties, exclusive of all others, with authority to hold general sessions of the peace, and gaol delivery, court of record, &c. &c., and a jurisdiction extending over the whole of the parish of Fordwich, and part of that of Sturry. The income of the borough in 1833, was £42 17s. The corporation are entitled to the exclusive fishery of a portion of the river. The more valuable part of the fishery is not let, but is enjoyed by the corporation in the following manner:—a net is put down every night during the season by the town-sergeant, and the fish taken is appropriated by turns. The mayor takes every night till a fish is caught, after which he has three turns to any other person's one. The lord of the manor and all the members of the corporation have their respective turns. The mayor of Sandwich has 3 turns. This privilege is said by the municipal commissioners to have formed the chief inducement to persons to become members of the corporation. A turn in the fishery is valued at £2 2s. the season. The town-hall, sessions-house, and common jail of Fordwich, are all combined in one ruinous and barn-like structure, of very great antiquity and little strength; and afford a specimen of the rude style of architecture previous to the reign of Henry VII. Indeed, the houses of the town are almost all of great antiquity, heavily and irregularly built. Fordwich was of great importance in the time of Bishop Odo, who possessed considerable property in the town. It derives its name from a pass or ford in one of the windings of the river. From 16 to 17 acres of hops are annually cultivated in this parish. Acres 610. Houses 56. A. P. £1,003. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 287.

FOREHOE HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk, near the centre of the county, to the west of the town of Norwich. Area 41,130 acres. Houses 2,504. Pop., in 1831, 13,838.

FOREMARK, a parish in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 6½ miles south-south-west of Derby, and south of the Trent. It includes the township of Ingleby. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield, returned at £24; gross income £31. Patron, in 1835, Sir Francis Burdett. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 2,870. Houses 39. A. P. £2,698. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 221. Poor rates, in 1838, £148 17s.

FOREST, a hamlet in the parish of Talgarth, county of Brecon, South Wales; 7 miles east of Brecknock. Houses 27. A. P. £772. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 134. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 15s.

FORESTHILL, a parish in the hund. of Bullington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; 5 miles east by north of Oxford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; certified to value £25, returned at £33; gross income £85. Patrons, the rector and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. Acres 650. Houses 30. A. P. £1,504. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 142. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 15s.

FOREST, a township with FIRTH, in the parish of Middleton in Teesdale, co.-palatine of Durham. It comprises Eppersgile-part, Middle-Forest-part, and Harwood-part. Here are 2 Sunday and 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. This extensive township commences about 4½ miles north-west of Middleton, and terminates on the borders of Westmoreland, near the source of the Tees. It contains several lead mines, and its scenery is more wild and romantic than any other in the county of Durham; the Tees here forming itself into innumerable cascades—two of which, Caldron-Snout and High-Force, rank amongst the most magnificent and stupendous waterfalls in Britain. Acres 16,670. Houses 114. A. P., with Eggleston, £2,014. Pop., in 1811, 601; in 1831, 760. Poor rates, in 1838, £223.

FOREST-QUARTER, a township in the parish of Stanhope, co.-palatine of Durham; 7 miles north-west of Stanhope. This large township comprises a number of hamlets, with the market-town of St. John's chapel. There are here 2 chapels for Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, a chapel-of-ease at Copt-hill, and 2 National schools at Wear's-head and Lane-head. Acres 20,010. Houses 784. Pop., in 1801, 2,143; in 1831, 4,741. Other returns with the parish.

FOREST-ROW, a hamlet in the parish of East Grinstead, county of Sussex; 2½ miles south of East Grinstead. Here are annual fairs, June 25th for pedlery, and November 8th for cattle.

FORMBY, a chapelry in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7½ miles west of Ormskirk, on the coast of the Irish sea. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; certified to value £23 2s., returned at £111 12s.; gross income £124. Patron, the rector of Walton. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a free school with about 120 scholars: income £40 11s. per annum. There was here at one time a weekly market, but it has gone into desuetude. Acres 2,450. Houses 248. A. P. £4,201. Pop., in 1801, 1,045; in 1831, 1,312. Poor rates, in 1838, £384 7s.

FORNCETT-ST.-MARY, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west-north-west of St.-Mary-Stratton, on the river Wensum. Living, a rectory with that of Forncett-St.-Peter, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated together at £20; gross income £932. Tithes commuted in 1839. Patron, in 1835, Lord Howard, of Effingham. The presentee must be a fellow of St. John's college, Cambridge. Here is a day and Sunday National school, with an endowment of £18 4s. per annum, besides voluntary subscriptions: about 180 poor children of the two Forncett's are now educated at this school. A fair is held on the 11th of September, for toys, &c. Acres 760. Houses 32. A. P. £1,202. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 288. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 11s.

FORNCETT-ST.-PETER, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west by north of St.-Mary-Stratton. Living, a rectory united to that of Forncett-St.-Mary. Tithes commuted in 1839. A fair for pedlery and pleasure is held here on the 3d Thursday in September.

Acres 1,710. Houses 130. A. P. £2,868. Pop., in 1801, 538; in 1831, 727. Poor rates, in 1838, £387 15s.

FORNHAM-ALL-SAINTS, or HORNHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of St.-Edmund's-Bury. Living, a rectory with that of Westley, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £19 10s. 5d.; gross income £770. Patrons, the master and fellows of Clare-Hall college, Cambridge. Here are a Sunday and daily and a Sunday National, and two daily schools. Charities, £35 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £207 13s. Acres 2,200. Houses 51. A. P. £2,119. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 310.

FORNHAM-ST.-GENEVEVE, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Bury-St.-Edmund's. The river Lark, which is here navigable, passes through the parish. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Risby. All tithes, &c., commuted in 1817. Here, in 1173, a bloody battle was fought between the troops of Henry II., commanded by Robert de Lacy, chief-justice of England, and those of Henry's rebellious son, under the Earl of Leicester. The latter were totally defeated. Acres 790. Houses 17. A. P. £731. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £70.

FORNHAM-ST.-MARTIN, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 11s. 3d.; gross income £316. All tithes, &c., commuted in 1817. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Norfolk. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. There are some ancient tumuli in the vicinity. Acres 1,230. Houses 58. A. P. £1,668. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 12s.

FORRABURY, a parish in the hund. of Lesnewth, union of Camelford, county of Cornwall; 5 miles north-north-west of Camelford, on the coast of the Bristol channel. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £4 12s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £80; gross income £70. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £51 6s. rectorial. Patron, in 1835, T. J. Phillips, Esq. Here are two daily schools. Norden,—Hist. Cornwall, p. 78,—calls Forrabury "a mayor town, the meanest that can bear the name of a town, much less of an incorporation, for it consisteth but of two or three houses. It hath been of more importance as appeareth by the ruins, but the fall of Tintagill and Botreaux hath been the overthrow of this and many other places upon this coast."—See BOSCASTLE. Acres 430. Houses 77. A. P. £859. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 358. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 15s.

FORSBROOK, a township in the parish of Dillhorne, county of Stafford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Cheadle. Here are two daily schools, and a day and Sunday one endowed with £22 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 169. A. P. £1,950. Pop., in 1801, 663; in 1831, 754.

FORSTERS-BOOTH, a hamlet in the parishes of Cold-Higham and Pattishall, in the hund. of Towcester, county of Northampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Towcester, and near the London and Birmingham railway. "It was originally the hut or booth of one Forster a poor countryman, but grew by little and little to a fair street of inns. The houses are built on each side the Watling-street which passeth directly through it;—the Earl of Pontefract keeps here his hundred court."—Bridge's Northampton, vol. i. p. 262.

FORSNOTE, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Frome, county of Somerset; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Bath. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £4 19s. 2d., returned at £110; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Smyth, Bart. Acres 580. Houses 12. A. P. £798. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 102. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 10s.

FORTHALL. See ULLENHALL.

FORTHAMPTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Tewkesbury, union of Tewkesbury, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Tewkesbury: the navigable river Severn runs through this parish. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, a peculiar; valued at £13; gross income £138. Patron, in 1835, J. Yorke, Esq. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 2,390. Houses 100. A. P. £3,622. Pop., in 1801, 449; in 1831, 459. Poor rates, in 1838, £182 15s.

FORTHERLY (HIGH), a township in the parish of Bywell-St.-Peter's, county of Northumberland; 7 miles west-south-west of Hexham. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 20. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 105.

FORTHOTH, or FURTHO, a parish in the hund. of Cleley, union of Pottersbury, county of Northampton; 7 miles west-south-west of Towcester, and near the Grand Junction canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7; gross income £150. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Jesus' college, Oxford. "In this lordship there is now only one house with the church, though the remains of a former village are still to be seen. Through this village—before the enclosure which was made by Edward Forthoth, Esq., who lived in the reign of James I.—the great road passed from Northampton to London, and by means of this enclosure the town is supposed to have been depopulated. Four houses in Old Stratford, whereof one is the rectorial house of Forthoth, and three houses in Covegrave, are within the limits of this parish."—Bridge's Northampton, vol. I. p. 296. Acres 480. Houses 3. Pop., in 1801, 9; in 1831, 16. Poor rates, in 1838, £4 9s.

FORTON, a township in the parish of Garstang, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles north of Garstang, intersected by the Lancaster and Preston railway and canal. Here are a place of worship for the Independents; and 5 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 1,280. Houses 137. A. P. £2,148. Pop., in 1801, 402; in 1831, 662. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 11s.

FORTON. See TATWORTH AND FORTON.

FORTON AND MEER, a parish in the hund. of Cuttleston, union of Newport, county of Stafford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-east of Newport, intersected by a branch of the Birmingham and Liverpool canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £20 19s. 2d.; gross income £524. Patron, in 1835, T. F. Bonghey. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Charities, about £36 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £296 5s. Acres 3,760. Houses 149. A. P. £4,062. Pop., in 1801, 566; in 1831, 904.

FOSDYKE, a parish in the wapentake of Kirton, parts of Holland, union of Boston, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-north-west of Holbeach, and west of the river Welland. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Algar-Kirk. Here is a daily school. An embankment and bridge are here carried across an arm of the sea, called Fosdyke wash, a mile in width, whereby two parts of Lincolnshire are connected, which before were at a distance of 16 miles, unless the passenger crossed a dangerous ferry.

The bank is erected across a tract of sand, and made of the same material; but worked in such a manner as to receive the beat of the sea without injury. The expense of this improvement was £16,000, the interest being paid by a toll bringing in 8 per cent. Acres 1,260. Houses 77. A. P. £3,389. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 401. Poor rates, in 1838, £170 18s.

FOSTON, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Grantham, on the post-road from Newark-upon-Trent to Stamford. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Long-Bennington. Tithes commuted in 1794. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 2,180. Houses 99. A. P. £2,827. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 441. Poor rates, in 1838, £163 14s.

FOSTON, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Blaby, county of Leicester; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Leicester, on a branch of the river Soar, and near the Midland Counties railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £14 2s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. M. Lamb. Acres 840. Houses 6. A. P. £2,605. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 32. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 14s.

FOSTON, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Malton, north riding of Yorkshire; $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of York, and west of the Derwent. It includes the townships of Foston and Thornton-upon-Clay. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £14; gross income £601. Tithes of the township of Thornton commuted in 1777. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £62 2s. Acres 2,090. Houses 49. A. P. £2,809. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 283.

FOSTON-UPON-THE-WOLDS, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles east-south-east of Great Driffield. It includes the townships of Brigham, Foston-upon-Wolds, Gembling, and Great Kelk. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £15 8s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £36; gross income £102. Tithes of the township of Foston commuted in 1776, and of Brigham in 1766. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are here places of worship for dissenters, and 3 daily schools. Acres 4,560. Houses 134. A. P. £5,531. Pop., in 1801, 377; in 1831, 715. Poor rates, in 1838, £308 7s. Acres of the township 1,110. Houses 64. A. P. £1,619. Pop., in 1801, 175; in 1831, 308. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 3s.

FOTHERBY, a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-north-west of Louth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3, returned at £114; gross income £122. Tithes commuted in 1764. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church, situated nearly in the centre of the parish, consists of a nave, chancel, and tower. The upper part of the tower was taken down many years ago, and covered with a penthouse roof like the nave. In the chancel, on the south side of the altar, is a piscina. Acres 1,400. Houses 43. A. P. £1,335. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 207. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 3s.

FOTHERINGHAY, a parish in the hund. of Wilbybrook, union of Oundle, county of Northampton; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Oundle, on the river Nen. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; returned at £140 2s.; gross income £160. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Belsey. In the church were interred Edward, duke of York, who died at Agincourt in 1414; and Richard, duke of York, who was slain at the battle of Wakefield, in 1459. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which, founded by Queen Elizabeth, is endowed with £30 per annum. Charities, £27 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £254 2s. The village of Fotheringhay—formerly a market-town of considerable size and importance—is pleasantly situated in a beautiful and fertile country on the northern bank of the Nen. It has an annual fair the third Monday after July 6th for horses. This place was particularly famous for its castle, founded in the reign of William the Conqueror. Richard III. was born, and the unfortunate Mary of Scotland suffered a long imprisonment, was tried, and finally beheaded in this castle. After James I. came to the throne of England, it was razed to the foundations. Here in ancient times there was a nunnery, and also an abbey. Acres 2,110. Houses 53. A. P. £4,922. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 280.

FOULDEN, a parish in the hund. of South Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Stoke-Ferry, and north of the river Wissey. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Oxburgh. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Charities, £28 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £249 11s. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £267 16s., due to the masters of Gonville and Caius college, Cambridge; and £173 16s. vicarial. Acres 3,500. Houses 61. A. P. £2,235. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 500.

FOULESNAPE, or FULSNAPE, in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north of Doncaster. "An hospital, dedicated to St. Michael, was here early in the reign of King Henry III., and is mentioned in the Lincoln taxation, 20th Edward I."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

FOULMIRE, a parish in the hund. of Thriplow, union of Royston, county of Cambridge; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Royston. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £29 14s. 2d; gross income £710. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Hardwicke. Here is an independent church, formed in 1780. Acres 2,302. Houses 94. A. P. £1,615. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 547. Poor rates, in 1838, £231 7s.

FOULNESS, an island and parish in the hund. of and union of Rochford, county of Essex; 9 miles east-north-east of Rochford, east of Wallasea, Potten, and 3 other islands, and bounded on the north and west by the river Crouch, on the east and south by the North sea. Foulness is the largest of the cluster of islands into which the county is here divided. Living, a discharged rectory, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of London; rated at £15, returned at £98 12s.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, G. Finch, Esq. The church, a small edifice, stands in the centre of the island: it was erected at first as a chapel-of-ease, the inhabitants being frequently, by floods, prevented from attending divine service in their respective churches on the mainland. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. "This island is computed to be about 20 miles in circuit, without reckoning the saltings towards the sea, which is not enclosed by a wall as the rest is. It is said to contain 4,500 acres lying in different farms, the houses standing separately for convenience of the occupiers. Two-thirds of the land at least belong to the right honourable the earl of Winchelsea, who is lord of the manor, and holds courts leet and baron pro libitu. The soil is fruitful, producing good corn of all kinds, but the water brackish, being impregnated by the salt in the earth. They have none perfectly fresh but rain water, preserved in cisterns. Eight hours in twelve there is passage for a horse to Wakering." Morant's Essex, Vol. I. p. 324. Some of the best oysters in England are taken here at the mouth of the Crouch. A fair is held on the 10th of July, for toys. Acres 8,060. Houses 78. A. P. £6,363. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 630. Poor rates, in 1838, £311 17s.

FOULNEY, an island belonging to the parish of Dalton-in-Furness, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles south-south-east of Dalton, in Morecombe bay.

FOULRIDGE, a township in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles north of Colne. Here are three daily schools. Acres 2,020. Houses 251. A. P. £3,211. Pop., in 1801, 833; in 1831, 1,418. Poor rates, in 1838, £853 5s.

FOULSHAM, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Eynsford, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 18 miles north-west of Norwich, and 13 south-south-east of Wells. The river Wensum passes west of the parish; and a small rivulet, over which a bridge was built in 1813, crosses the town. Living a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £27 14s. 9d.; gross income £616. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. D. Astley, Bart. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1824. There are also six daily, two Sunday, and two Sunday and daily National, schools. Charities, £88 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £345 6s. In 1770, this town was almost totally destroyed by fire. It has been rebuilt in a very superior style, and, though small, has a handsome and cheerful aspect. Tuesday is the market-day, but it is now obsolete: a fair is held annually on the first Tuesday in May, for the sale of stock, &c. Here is a branch of the East of England bank. Acres 3,100. Houses 143. A. P. £4,026. Pop., in 1801, 605; in 1831, 958.

FOULSTON, a township in the parish of Kirk-Burton, west riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Huddersfield. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,200. Houses 277. A. P. £1,639. Pop., in 1801, 1,128; in 1831, 1,573. Poor rates, in 1838, £360 15s.

FOUNTAINS-EARTH, a township in the parish of Kirby-Malzeard, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Ripon. Here is a daily school, endowed with £20 per annum. Acres 6,840. Houses 87. A. P. £2,025. Pop., in 1801, including the chapelry of Middlesmoor, 329; in 1831, 413. Poor rates, in 1838, £224 1s.

FOUNTAIN'S-ABBEY, in Studley Park,—a beautiful valley, traversed by the rivulet Skell, near Fountains-Earth,—is said to be the most extensive, interesting, and venerable monastic ruin in the empire. This magnificent edifice, when perfect, spread, with its appendages, over 12 acres of ground; 2 only of which are now occupied by the present highly picturesque ruins; yet, notwithstanding every devastation, this splendid wreck of the general dissolution is not only far more extensive, but far more perfect, than any other in this country; rich as it is in these venerable and admired works of antiquity. The architecture is mixed: in some parts are seen the sharp pointed windows, in others the circular arches. The great east window is magnificently grand, and the arch much pointed. There has, it is supposed, been a central tower, long since fallen into decay. The beauty and grandeur of the church is enhanced by a lofty and nearly perfect tower, standing at the end of the north transept. There are numerous buildings connected with the abbey, all in excellent preservation. It was founded, in 1204, by John de Ebor, for monks of the Cistercian order; and, after flourishing 300 years, was surrendered in 1537; when its revenues were valued, according to Dugdale, at £998 6s. 8d. per annum. This monastery, and 553 acres of land, with all the liberties thereto belonging, were granted, in 1540, to Sir Richard Gresham, Knight; since which time they have passed through the families of a succession of owners.

FOURSHIRE-STONE. See BARTON-UPON-HEATH.

FOVANT, or FOFFONT, a parish in the hund. of Cawdon and Cadworth, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 7 miles west-south-west of Wilton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £17; gross income £496. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £533 1s. 3d., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Pembroke. The Independents have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1815. Here are 3 daily, a Sunday National, and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 1,990. Houses 89. A. P. £2,583. Pop., in 1801, 514; in 1831, 553. Poor rates, in 1838, £335 11s.

FOWBERRY, a township in the parish of Chatton, county of Northumberland; 3 miles north-east of Wooler, on the northern bank of the river Till. The beautiful seats of Fowberry Park and Fowberry Tower are both in this township. The latter, especially, on the south bank of the Till, is most pleasantly and romantically situated.

FOWEY, a sea-port, borough, and market-town, in the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austell, county of Cornwall; 28 miles south-south-west of Launceston, 24 west-south-west of Devonport, and 30 west-north-west of Falmouth, on the western bank of the river Fowey, where it falls into the English channel. Acres 1,900. Houses 321. A. P. £4,856. Pop., in 1801, 1,155; in 1831, 1,767.

Fowey is situated in one of the most delightful and romantic parts of the county; but, lying in a valley, it is not visible till the ferry be approached. The walks in the environs are in the highest style of picturesque beauty. The noble range of ocean before the town, the rocky scenery, and the encircling hills afford scenes of the most interesting description. The town itself is not remarkable for beauty. The houses are very irregularly built, mostly of stone. The streets extend above a mile along the bank of the river: they are so narrow, and have so many acute angles, that it is not easy to drive through them with carriages of every description. There is a spacious market-house, over which is the town-hall, erected some years since by Viscount Valletort, and Philip Rashleigh, Esq., then representatives for the borough. Norden speaks of Fowey as a "pretie market-towne, fortified and fenced in some measure, and guarded with some ordnance; and the haven's mouth defended by block-houses on both sides in the time and at the command of Edward IV." The ruins of these block-houses still remain. There was also a strong iron boom or chain which ran across the harbour. The fort of St. Cathrine, built in the reign of Henry VIII., upon a magnificent pile of rocks bounding a creek of the river, with other two forts of more modern erection between it and the town, now defend the entrance to the river. These forts are all so much elevated that no ship could bring her guns to bear upon them. The rocks on both sides of the river are composed of a hard bluish slate, containing broad veins of fat quartz, so called by mineralogists from its greasiness to the touch. Carew tells us that part of the town of Fowey was burned by the French in 1457. Leland speaks of this as the last of several attacks. "The Frenchmen," says he, "divers times assailed this town, and last, most notably, about Henry VI. time, when the wife of Thomas Trewry, the 2, with her men, repelled the French out of her house in her houseband's absence."

Fowey harbour is spacious and well secured from the destructive effect of storms, by the surrounding hills. It is esteemed the best outlet in the west; has excellent anchorage; and vessels drawing 3 fathoms water may enter at the lowest tide, and go into deeper water above. The shores are bold and free from danger: ships in distress may run in with perfect safety without cable or anchor.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £10; gross income £203. Patron, in 1835, J. T. Austin, Esq. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1797, a Wesleyan chapel, and 10 daily with 2 Sunday schools: one of the latter is National, and 2 of the former are partly supported by endowments. The town lands constitute a charity of some importance to Fowey; but they have been the subject of a suit in chancery. It has been alleged by the municipal commissioners, that lands which were worth £250 a-year were let for £8 1s. Here are almshouses for 16 poor women. Certain property was at one time granted to the corporation for the maintenance of a grammar-school; but the principal charities belonging to this town are said to have been grossly mismanaged and in confusion at the time of the inquiry. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 16s. In the reign of Edward III., Fowey was made a member of the Cinque ports. The borough was incorporated by charter in the reign of James II., again under William and Mary, and a third time in 1819. Under these charters, the government consisted of a mayor, recorder, eight aldermen, a town-clerk, &c. &c.; but a writ of ouster having been brought against them for abuse of chartered privileges, and judgment awarded against them in 1826, no corporate act has been since attempted. Fowey was disfranchised by the reform act; previous to which it had regularly returned 2 members since the 13th of Queen Elizabeth.

"The old apophthegm, omnium rerum vicissitudo, was never more strongly exemplified than in the town of Fowey. From a state of high consequence, in times of yore, sweeping the ocean with her ships, and even overawing France herself, this place has gradually sunk into decay and become buried in the shade of obscurity." "The glorie of Fowey," says Leland, "rose by the warres in Kinge Edward the Firste and the Thirde,* and Henry the V. day, partly by feates of warre, partly by pyracie, and so waxing riche, felle al to marchaundize: so that the towne was haunted with shippes of diverse nations, and their shippes went to al nations." To the fleet of Edward III., when he lay before Calais, it contributed 47 ships, being the highest number contributed by any port in England; and its quota of mariners at the same time was 770, exceeded only by the port of Yarmouth. In the time of Edward IV., on the proclamation of a truce between France and England, 'the gallants of Fawey' still thought proper to keep up hostilities, till their fleet was confiscated by order of the king; when, "'tis said, they were so insolent that they cut off the ears of the king's pursuivants, for which some lives and estates were forfeited." The remanent importance of Fowey is by no means what one might expect, for, though, to the ports of Winchelsea and Rye, its pilchard carriers might still, in modern times, perhaps, have 'valed no bonets,' even the pilchards have deserted Fowey, the inhabitants of which were almost all, not many years ago, engaged, in some shape or other, in the pilchard fishery, which was extensive, and employed a great number of vessels. Dr. Maton, indeed, denominated the inhabitants of Fowey 'a colony of fishermen,'—though many of them are highly respectable. Besides pilchards, large quantities of copper ore, and china-clay and stone, for the potteries, were at one time shipped from Fowey; no such shipments are now made, though 'at times' some iron ore is shipped. Here also was a coinage of tin, large quantities of which have been dug in the vicinity; but the coinages are now commuted:—see CORNWALL. The market-day is Saturday; and there are three annual fairs, Shrove-Tuesday, May 1st, and September 10th. for cattle. In the corporation were vested the tolls of the market and fairs, with the quay dues, and the dues of the harbour, subject to a fee farm-rent of £2; but the harbour dues, till about 1834, were received, and afterwards were still claimed, by the corporation of Lostwithiel, while the quay dues and tolls of markets and fairs have been claimed by the lords of the manor, and in fact received by them.

FOWEY (THE). See CORNWALL. FOWNHOPE, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Greytree, union and county of Hereford; 6½ miles south-east of Hereford. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Woolhope. Here are 3 daily and 2 Sunday schools, two of the former of which are supported by endowments. Charities, £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £443 18s. The village is delightfully situated on the eastern bank of the Wye. There are two ancient camps a little to the north of it. One of them on Capler-hill is double trenched, and is called the Camp of Woodbury. The other is not named. Acres 3,870. Houses 218. A. P. £3,797. Pop., in 1801, 783; in 1831, 1,066.

FOXCOE, or FOSCOE, a parish in the hund., union, and county of Buckingham; 2 miles north-east of Buckingham, and near the Buckingham canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 9s. 4½d.; gross income £205. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Buckingham. Acres 740. Houses 12. A. P. £854. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 107. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 4s.

FOXCOTE, a chapelry in the parish, and now included within the parliamentary boundaries, of the borough of Andover, county of Southampton; 2 miles north-west of Andover. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Andover. Acres 620. Houses 19. A. P. £1,147. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 95. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 5s.

FOXEARLE HUNDRED, in the rape of Hastings, county of Sussex. Area 14,030 acres. Houses 432. Pop., in 1831, 3,007.

FOXELAND, a parish in the hund. of Hockford, union of Sudbury, county of Essex; 3½ miles north-west of Sudbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £10 4s. 4½d.; gross income £411. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £68 16s., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. James Pemberton. Here are a Sunday National, and 2 daily schools. Acres 1,960. Houses 97. A. P. £1,844. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 466. Poor rates, in 1838, £370 7s.

FOXHALL, a parish in the hund. of Carlford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles east by south of Ipswich. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Brightwell. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. About 10 acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 1,060. Houses 36. A. P. £1,385. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 190. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 1s.

FOXHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Bremhill, county of Wilts; 5 miles north-east of Chippenham, intersected by the Great Western railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bremhill.

* Leland adds that "the shippes of Fawey, sayling by Rhie and Winchelsey about Edward the III. tyme, wold vaile no bonet, beying requirit, wherupon Rhie and Winchelsey men and they taught, wher Fawey men had victorie, and therupon bare twear armes mixt with the armes of Rhie and Winchelsey; and then rose the name of the gallaunts of Fawey."—Itn. 111. f. 15.

FOXHOLES, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; 10½ miles north of Great Driffield. It includes the chapelry of Butterwick, and the township of Foxholes with Boythrop. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £22; gross income £581. Tithes commuted in 1771. Patron, in 1835, R. Sykes, Esq. Acres 4,150. Houses 49. A. P. £2,777. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 277. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 5s. Acres of the township with Boythrop, 2,610. Houses 32. A. P. £1,375. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 3s.

FOXLEY, a parish in the hund. of Eynsford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 2 miles south-south-east of Foulsham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £358. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £410 13s. 3d., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, E. Lombe, Esq. Acres 1,840. Houses 60. A. P. £1,436. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 274. Poor rates, in 1838, £149 6s.

FOXLEY, in the hund. of Greens-Norton, county of Northampton; 4 miles west-north-west of Towcester. "Upon the confines of this hundred stood formerly a village of this denomination, which gave the name of Foxley to what is now called the hundred of Norton. The manor only remains at present with three houses and a water-mill, lying in three distinct parishes, Lichborow, Brakesley, and Pateshull, within three several hundreds, Fawesley, Norton, and Towcester. The manor-house, one of the three, stands in both the parishes of Pateshull, and Brakesley."—Bridge's Northampton.

FOXLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 3 miles west-south-west of Malmesbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £3 17s. 8½d.; gross income £261. Patron, in 1835, Lord Holland. Acres 850. Houses 11. A. P. £1,043. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 13s.

FOXTON, a parish in the hund. of Thriplow, union of Royston, county of Cambridge; 7 miles south-south-west of Cambridge. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £11 2s. 11d., returned at £75; gross income £80. Patron, the bishop of Ely.—Reformation, 1643.—"March 13. We break down 20 superstitious pictures, and gave orders to break 20 more, to take down 2 crosses, and Mr. John Wildboar to level the steps." Here are a Sunday National and 2 daily schools. Charities, 6 acres, 2 roods, 10 perches of land, allotted, in 1830, by the commissioners under the Inclosure Act, in lieu of the town-meadows, &c. and producing on an average £11 5s. a-year. The allotment is now let in portions of one rood each, at 5s. per annum, to the poor. It is titheable. The income is principally carried to the poor rates which, in 1838, amounted to £166 18s. Acres 1,632. Houses 80. A. P. £1,018. Pop., in 1801, 322; in 1831, 408.

FOXTON and SHOTTON, a township in the parish of Sedgfield, co.-palatine of Durham; 7 miles north-west by west of Stockton-upon-Tees, and near the Clarence railway. This manor originally belonged to the Knights of Jerusalem. Acres 1,720. Houses 8. A. P. £1,244. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 9s.

FOXTON, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market-Harborough, county of Leicester; 3 miles north-west of Market-Harborough, intersected by a branch of the Union canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio of Peterborough; rated at £7 3s. 4d., returned at £70; gross income £132. Tithes commuted in 1770. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £8 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £349 3s. The ground here is well wooded, and hilly, and the soil clay. Acres 2,020. Houses 86. A. P. £3,521. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 346.

FOY, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Ross, county of Hereford; 3 miles north of Ross, on the river Wye. It includes the township of Eaton-Tregoes. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £533. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Jones. Here are a daily and a Sunday school, and an almshouse for 3 poor people, with weekly stipends of 1s. each. Other charities, in 1836, £6 14s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £274 11s. Acres 2,500. Houses 51. A. P. £1,892. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 290.

FRADLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Alrewas, county of Stafford; 4½ miles north-east of Lichfield, intersected by the Grand Trunk canal. Acreage with the parish. Houses 84. A. P. £1,994. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 382. Poor rates, in 1838, £98 18s.

FRADSWELL, a chapelry in the parish of Colwich, county of Stafford; 7½ miles east-south-east of Stone. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Colwich. Here are 2 day and Sunday schools. Acres 1,410. Houses 34. A. P. £1,603. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 199. Poor rates, in 1838, £133 4s.

FRAISTHORPE WITH AUBURN, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 4¾ miles south-south-west of Bridlington. See article AUBURN. Acres 2,040. Houses 14. A. P. £2,661. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £140 11s.

FRAMCOTE. See GUYTING-POWER.

FRAMFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Loxfield-Dorset, rape of Pevensey, union of Uckfield, county of Sussex; 1½ mile south-east of Uckfield, and east of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £485. Patron, in 1835, E. H. Hoare, Esq. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, £66 per annum, including a school endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £825 19s. On an average of 7 years to 1835, there have been 138½ acres of hops cultivated in this parish: hops charged 140,786 lbs.; duty £1,173 4s. 4d. Acres 6,830. Houses 234. A. P. £4,413. Pop., in 1801, 969; in 1831, 1,468.

FRAMINGHAM-EARL. See FRAMLINGHAM.

FRAMLAND HUNDRED, in the county of Leicester. It lies on the north-east corner of the county, bordering on Lincolnshire. Area 87,540 acres. Houses 3,300. Pop., in 1831, 17,197.

FRAMLINGHAM, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plumesset, county of Suffolk; 18 miles north-north-east of Ipswich, and 87 north-east of London. Acres 4,470. House 499. A. P. £8,696. Pop., in 1801, 1,854; in 1831, 2,445. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Saxeat, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £43 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,231. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke-hall college, Cambridge. There is here a fine old church built of black flint, with a tower nearly 100 feet high, and a peal of eight bells: it contains many handsome monuments. Here are a Presbyterian church, formed in 1717; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811; and places of worship for Unitarians and Independents. There are 4 daily and 4 Sunday schools, 2 of each of which are National. One of the former was founded and endowed by Sir Robert Hitcham, in 1636, and another is allowed £17 10s. per annum by the trustees of the late Mr. Thomas Mills. This sum is part of £700 per annum, arising from lands bequeathed by Mr. Mills, for various charitable purposes connected chiefly with this parish, including the sustenance of almshouses with 8 alms-people, and the distribution of bread, &c., to the poor. Sir Robert Hitcham also founded almshouses for 12 poor people, with stipends of 2s. a-week, and 40s. a-year for a gown and fuel: the allowance has been subsequently augmented. Other charities connected with this parish produced, in 1830, £63 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £903 10s. The town of Framlingham stands on an eminence not far from the sources of the Ore, a river which, passing at a short distance from the town, falls into the sea at Oreford. It is large and tolerably well-built, and has a very spacious market-place, in the centre of which formerly stood an ancient cross. The lake called the Mere, which defended the town on the west side, and the waters of which fall into the Ore, if they do not originate the river itself, is reported to have once been navigable; but it became much lessened by earth and sand washed into it by great rains. Some trade and manufactures are carried on here. The market-day is Saturday; and it has two annual fairs, Whit-Monday and October 11th, for cattle, sheep, and cloth. Here is a branch of the East of England bank.

This town lays claim to a very high antiquity. It originally belonged to the Icenii, a British tribe at one time in friendly alliance with the Romans; but having been subject to Romans, Saxons, and Danes, as well as Britons, it was inhabited by a great mixture of divers nations, and from thence the Danes, or later Saxons, gave it the name of Friendlingham, which signifies a house, or habitation of strangers, friendling signifying, in the Saxon language, a stranger, and ham, a dwelling or house. At what time the castle—which is still the chief ornament of the place—was founded, is uncertain; but it was certainly the occasional residence of Redwald, one of the early kings of the East Angles. It was also the principal seat of King Edmund, who, after his defeat at Dunwich by the Danes in 870, was here besieged: not being able to hold out any longer against them, he fled; but was overtaken and beheaded. His head was cast under a bush, and his body left unburied. It was afterwards interred on the spot which thenceforth took the name of Edmund's-bury. This castle was also the retreat of the Princess Mary during the time in which the friends of the Lady Jane Grey attempted to place her upon the throne. The cause of Mary was espoused with great zeal by the inhabitants of this vicinity. The interior of the castle was long ago taken down, and an almshouse and workhouse erected with the materials; but the outer walls are nearly entire, and at a little distance exhibit no traces of the ruin which prevails within. The walls are 44 feet high and 8 feet thick: they have 13 square towers 14 feet above the walls, 2 of which are barbicans or watch-towers.

FRAMLINGHAM, or FRAMINGHAM-EARL, a parish in the hund. and union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-east of Norwich, and south of the river Yare. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Bixley. Tithes commuted in 1799-1800. Charities, £12 per annum. The poor have 13 acres, allotted at the enclosure. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 11s. Acres 560. Houses 17. A. P. £968. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 74.

FRAMLINGHAM, or FRAMINGHAM-PIGOT, a parish in the hund. and union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles south-east of Norwich. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £3 6s. 8d.; gross income £216. Patron, the Bishop of Norwich. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1808; and a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, £19 15s. per annum. The poor have 11 acres, allotted at the enclosure, for fuel. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 13s. Acres 350. Houses 74. A. P. £1,016. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 302.

FRAMLINGTON (LONG), a parish in the east division of Coquetdale ward, union of Rothbury county of Northumberland; 11 miles north-north-west of Morpeth, situated on the north road leading by Coldstream to Edinburgh. It includes the townships of Brinkburn-High-Ward, Brinkburn-Low-Ward, and Long-Framlington. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Felton. Here a Presbyterian congregation has existed since the year 1640. In 1825 the interest of £500 was bequeathed by the late Mrs. Tate, for the education of 20 poor children of Framlington. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £443 10s.; of the township, £349 16s. On its north-western extremity is a long narrow tract containing about 1,000 acres of the wildest and most dreary moorlands in the county. Here are a great number of cairns composed of loose stones. The road called the Devil's causeway passes very near this place, where there are large heaps of scoriae, probably produced by the Romans in smelting iron-stone. Coals, limestone, and freestone, are the principal mineral productions of Long-Framlington. Acres 5,730. Houses 151. A. P. £6,407. Pop., in 1801, 671; in 1831, 735. Houses of the township 110. A. P. £4,011. Pop., in 1801, 471; in 1831, 543.

FRAMPTON, a parish in the liberty of Frampton, union of Dorchester, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 5½ miles north-west by west of Dorchester, situated on the north-eastern bank of the Frame, over which there is here a fine bridge. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 9s. 7d., returned at £109 13s. 4d.; gross income £120. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £451 8s., impropriated, 5s. 6d. due to the perpetual curate of Charminster, and £2 6s. 8d. vicarial. Patron, in 1835, F. J. Browne, Esq. Here is a National and free school. The river here abounds with excellent trout. Fairs are held on March 4th and 7th, August 1st, and September 4th, for all sorts of cattle. Frampton was originally a priory of Black monks, cell to the abbey of St. Stephen at Caen, in Normandy. Acres 2,080. Houses 77. A. P. £3,254. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 376. Poor rates, in 1838, £258 3s.

FRAMPTON, a tything in the parish of Sapper-ton, county of Gloucester; 6¼ miles north-west of Cirencester. Tithes commuted in 1778. Houses 40. Pop., in 1821, 181; in 1831, 178. Other returns with the parish.

FRAMPTON, a parish in the wapentake of Kirton, parts of Holland, union of Boston, county of Lincoln; 3½ miles south of Boston, and west of the river Witham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £18 19s. 4d.; gross income £109. All tithes belonging to the lay-impropriators and vicar commuted in 1784. Patron, in 1835, C. K. Tunnard, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 6,200. Houses 122. A. P. £8,657. Pop., in 1801, 542; in 1831, 706. Poor rates, in 1838, £444 8s.

FRAMPTON-COTTERELL, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Langley and Swinehead, union of Chipping-Sodbury, county of Gloucester; 4 miles west by south of Chipping-Sodbury, on a branch of the Avon. It includes the tything of Wick-Wick. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £11 16s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £680. Patrons, the Duke of Beaufort and another. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1796; and 9 daily and 3 Sunday schools. Acres 1,190. Houses 371. A. P. £4,334. Pop., in 1801, 1,208; in 1831, 1,816. Poor rates, in 1838, £572 15s.

FRAMPTON-UPON-SEVERN, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatenhurst, county of Gloucester; 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Dursley, on the eastern bank of the Severn, and intersected by the Gloucester and Berkeley ship canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £7 11s.; gross income £335. Certain tithes belonging to the lay-impropriator and vicar, commuted in 1813. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Wicks. There are here an Independent church, formed in 1777; and 8 daily and 2 Sunday schools. This parish is frequently inundated by the impetuous tides of the Severn. To remedy this great inconvenience, the Earl of Berkeley erected a bulwark, called the Hock-crib, intended to confine the waters within their proper channel, which, in ordinary tides, it has been generally found to do; but, in high spring-tides, many parts—particularly one part—of the village still continued to be laid under water, occasioning, at certain seasons of the year, a great prevalence of intermittent fever. Acres 2,360. Houses 204. A. P. £4,992. Pop., in 1801, 860; in 1831, 1,055. Poor rates, in 1838, £376 16s.

FRAMSDEN, a parish in the hund. of Thredling, union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-east of Debinham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £280. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Dysart. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1835. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. A fair is held on Holy-Thursdays for cattle. Acres 2,160. Houses 89. A. P. £3,964. Pop., in 1801, 684; in 1831, 642. Poor rates, in 1838, £344.

FRAMWELLGATE, a township in the parish of St. Oswald, city of Durham; on the western bank of the Wear, across which, to the city, there is here a bridge—see DURHAM. Acreage with the city of Durham. Houses 182. A. P. £8,044. Pop., in 1801, 1,072; in 1831, 1,584. Poor rates, in 1838, £555 15s.

FRANKBY, a township in the parish of West Kirby, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles north-north-west of Great Neston, and east of the river Dee. Acres 430. Houses 23. A. P. £708. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 114. Poor rates, in 1838, £22.

FRANKLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Bromsgrove, county of Worcester; 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Hales-Owen, and near the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of Hales-Owen. Acres 2,000. Houses 31. A. P. £1,486. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 176. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 2s.

FRANKTON, a parish in Rugby division, in the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, county of Warwick; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Dunchurch. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; returned at £26 16s.; gross income £112. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Biddulph. Here is a day and Sunday school, partly supported by endowment. Acres 1,660. Houses 54. A. P.

£2,557. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 261. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 17s.

FRANSHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by east of Swaffham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 15s. 10d.; gross income £521. Patron, in 1835, F. R. Reynolds, Esq. Charities, £14 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 16s. Acres 1,500. Houses 66. A. P. £1,803. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 323.

FRANSHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Swaffham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 8s. 4d.; gross income £296. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Swatman. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 10s. Acres 1,490. Houses 41. A. P. £1,068. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 234.

FRANT, or FANT, a parish partly in the hund. of Washlingstone, lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent, and partly in the hund. of Rotherfield, rape of Pevensey, union of Ficehurst, county of Sussex; 3 miles south of Tonbridge-Wells. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8 5s. 5d.; gross income £507. Patron, the rector of Rotherfield. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. The ruins of Beigham abbey, which was founded about the year 1200, still exist here—see BEIGHAM. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 130 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres of hops have been cultivated in this parish: average of hops annually charged 11,132 lbs.; duty £917 15s. 4d. Acres 9,430, 310 of which are in the county of Kent. Houses 268. A. P. £4,738. Pop., in 1801, including a part of the town of Tonbridge-Wells, 1,090; in 1831, 2,071. Poor rates, in 1838, £940 2s.

FRATING, a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 6 miles east-south-east of Colchester. Living, a discharged rectory united to that of Thorington, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £809. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. Here are a Sunday and daily National and two Sunday schools. Acres 1,350. Houses 32. A. P. £1,902. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 269. Poor rates, in 1838, £75.

FRECKENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Lackford, union of Mildenhall, county of Suffolk; 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Mildenhall, on the river Lark. Living, a discharged vicarage with a rectory united, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated, the former at £3 15s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; the latter at £16 11s. 5d.; gross income £600. Tithes commuted in 1815. Patrons, the master and fellows of Peter-house, Cambridge. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, £24 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £278 6s. Acres 2,520. Houses 80. A. P. £1,897. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 427.

FRECKLETON, a township in the parish of Kirkham, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Preston. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £117 6s. 3d. vicarial, and £192 2s. 10d. rectorial, due to the dean and chapter of Christ's church, Oxford. A church was built here in 1838; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Extensive sacking and sailcloth manufactures here have increased the population. Naze, a hamlet of this township, is situated near a tongue of land at the northern limit of the river Ribble. Acres 1,430. Houses 174. A. P. £3,063. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 909. Poor rates, in 1838, £234 10s.

FREEBY, a chapelry in the parish of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Melton-Mowbray. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 920. Houses 26. A. P. £2,145. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 12s.

FREEBRIDGE-LYNN HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk, lies along the shore of Lynn-Wash, on the north-west side of the county, and is bounded on the south by the river Lynn. Area 75,770 acres. Houses 2,105. Pop., in 1831, 12,227. The poor-law union of Freebridge-Lynn, for which a workhouse has been erected, comprehends 32 parishes, embracing an area of 111 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 11,489. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,952. Expenditure in 1838, £5,149; in 1839, £5,369 18s.

FREEBRIDGE-MARSHLAND HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk. It lies at the western extremity of the county, and is nearly surrounded by the Ouse and an arm of the sea. Area 57,280 acres. Houses 2,179. Pop., in 1831, 11,274.

FREEFOLK, a manor and chapelry in the hund. of Evingar, Kingsclere division, county of Southampton; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Whitechurch. Living, a donative in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; gross income £15. In the patronage of the hospital of St. Cross. Here is a paper-mill, where the paper used for the notes of the bank of England has been made ever since the reign of George I. Acres 800. Houses 10. A. P. £1,082. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £68 13s.

FREEFOLK, a tything in the parish of Whitechurch, county of Southampton. Pop., in 1811, 174. Other returns with the parish.

FREEFORD, a hamlet in the parish of St. Michael, county of Stafford; 2 miles south-east of Lichfield. Acres 250. Houses 2. A. P. with Fisherwick, £2,093. Pop., in 1811, 19; in 1831, 17.

FREEHOLDERS-QUARTER, a township in the parish of Long Horseley, Northumberland; 10 miles east-north-east of Hexham. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 29. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £58.

FREETHORPE, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-south-west of Ackle, and north of the river Aire. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Reedham. Acres 1,050. Houses 34. A. P. £1,055. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 289. Poor rates, in 1838, £277 10s.

FREISTON. See FRIESTON.

FREMINGTON HUNDRED, in the new northern division of the county of Devon. It lies at the western extremity of the county, between the Taw and the Torridge, which fall into the bay of Bideford or Barnstaple. Area 33,350 acres. Houses 1,672. Pop., in 1831, 8,844.

FREMINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Fremington, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 3 miles west of Barnstaple, situated at the mouth of the river Taw. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20 0s. 5d.; gross income £430. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. C. Hill. Here are 4 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Charities, £26 per annum. The poor-houses here have been recently sold by order of the poor-law commissioners to Charles Roberts, Esq., who has converted them into residences for 12 poor people of this parish during their lives. Poor rates, in 1838, £529 8s. Acres 6,600. Houses 226. A. P. £3,844. Pop., in 1801, 875; in 1831, 1,180.

FRENCH-MOOR, a tything in the parish of Broughton, county of Southampton; $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Romsey, intersected by the Salisbury and Southampton canal. A. P. £1,660. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1821, 44.

FRENSHAM, a parish partly in the hund. of Alton, Alton north division of the county of Southampton, and partly in the hund. of Farnham, county of Surrey; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Farnham, on a branch of the Wey. It includes the tythings of Dockingfield, Frensham, and Chart and Pittfold. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; returned at £95; gross income £106. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £678 13s. 4d., due to the archdeacon of Surrey. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Colmer. A great copper caldron in the vestry of the church here has puzzled antiquarians and others to determine its use, or how it came to be placed here. There are many legendary tales regarding it. Besides being watered by the Wey, this parish has an extensive sheet of water, about 3 miles in circumference, called Frensham Great Pond, which is the resort of innumerable flocks of wild fowl during the winter months. In 1835, 44 acres of hops were cultivated here. Acres 9,390. Houses 236. A. P. £3,740. Pop., in 1801, 1,175; in 1831, 1,388. Poor rates, in 1838, £591 16s.

FRENZE, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Diss. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £2 13s. 4d., returned at £73; gross income £70. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £86, rectorial. Patron, in 1835, S. Smith, Esq. Acres 500. Houses 8. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 50. Poor rates with Scole.

FREDSON, a tything in the parish of Highworth, county of Wilts. Houses 4. Pop., in 1821, 24; in 1831, 21. Other returns with the parish.

FRESHFORD, a parish in the hund. of Bath-Forum, union of Bradford, county of Somerset; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Bath, on the river Avon, and near the Avon and Kennet canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 7s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £146; gross income £280. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Bythesea. Here are a Sunday National and 3 daily schools. Charities, £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £238 7s. The village of Freshford is finely situated on the southern declivity of a richly wooded hill, and commands some most extensive and interesting views. Sir Joshua Reynolds declared the verdure in this vicinity to be amongst the richest and most vivid in England,—see DEVON—Climate. A fair is held on September 6th, for cheese. Acres 440. Houses 131. A. P. £1,560. Pop., in 1801, 624; in 1831, 666.

FRESHWATER, a parish in the liberty of West Medina, isle of Wight incorporation, isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south-south-west of Yarmouth, on the western bank of the river Yar, which is navigable to this place. Acres 4,760. Houses 172. A. P. £4,552. Pop., in 1801, 605; in 1831, 1,184. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 8s. 4d.; gross income £758. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. Here are a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists; and a daily school, endowed with £25 per annum. Charities, £3 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £388 10s. Freshwater-gate is a small creek in the centre of Freshwater-bay, separated only by a narrow isthmus of pebbles from the course of the river Yar. On the west side is an extensive natural cavern, opening to the sea. The principal entrance forms a rugged segment of a circle, about 20 feet high, and 35 feet wide: its depth is about 120 feet. This can only be approached at low water; and even then the access is very difficult from the jutting crags and lofty fragments of rocks that obstruct the passage. At some distance to the eastward, about 500 yards from the shore, are two insulated rocks, through one of which the waves have formed an opening resembling a picturesque arch. The views of this part of the coast, from the sea, are extremely fine. The cliffs are the resort and breeding-places of innumerable multitudes of marine birds, whose various notes, mixed with the solemn roar of the waves, that rush into the caverns, and break among the rocks beneath, produce a most singular, yet not unpleasant concert. The prospect from the light-house, on the highest point of the Freshwater cliffs, is extremely magnificent, and includes a full view of the Needle rocks. The violence of the sea is continually making devastations on this coast. Freshwater is much visited during summer on account of these remarkable cliffs and caverns. Dr. Robert Hooke, celebrated for his knowledge of mathematics, and as the inventor of the pendulum watch-spring, was a native of Freshwater.

FRESHWELL HUNDRED, in the new north division of the county of Essex, lies in the northern extremity of the county, between the hundreds of Uttlesford and Hinckford, extending to Haverhill in Suffolk, and Linton in Cambridgeshire. Area 27,710 acres. Houses 1,332. Pop., in 1831, 6,807.

FRESSINGFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Hoxne, county of Suffolk; 4 miles south-south-east of Harleston in the county of Norfolk. Living, a vicarage united with that of Wethersdale, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £17 17s. 1d.; gross income £613. Patrons, the master and fellows of Emanuel college, Cambridge. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which was endowed by Archbishop Sancroft with £10 per annum. The archbishop was born here; and, having retired from public life, here he ended his days. Acres 3,780. Houses 158. A. P. £5,788. Pop., in 1801, 1,044; in 1831, 1,352. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,162 3s.

FRESTON, or FRISTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Plumage, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-east of Saxmundham. Living, a discharged vicarage united with that of Snape, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5, returned at £132 13s. 6d.; gross income £194. Patron, in 1835, R. H. W. Vyse, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,790. Houses 100. A. P. £1,233. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 466. Poor rates, in 1838, £358 17s.

FRESTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Samford, county of Suffolk; 3½ miles south of Ipswich, on the beautiful bank of the Orwell. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 7s. 6d.; gross income £379. Patron, in 1835, J. Bond, Esq. Acres 1,680. Houses 22. A. P. £1,763. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 183. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 16s.

FRETHERNE, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatenburst, county of Gloucester; 7½ miles west-north-west of Stroud, intersected by the Gloucester and Berkeley ship canal. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £288. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. F. Forster. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 380. Houses 54. A. P. £931. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 224. Poor rates, in 1838, £148 11s.

FRETENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith's, county of Norfolk; 2 miles west by south of Coltishall. Living, a rectory with that of Stanninghall, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10; gross income £404. Patron, in 1835, Lord Suffield. A fair is held on the first Monday in April, for pedler's ware. Acres 1,420. Houses 49. A. P. £1,819. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 269. Poor rates, in 1838, £211 7s.

FREYSTROP, a parish in the hund. of Roose, union of Haverford-West, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 3 miles south-east of Haverford-West. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of St. David's; rated at £5 13s. 9d.; gross income £178. Patron, the Crown. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1818; and a daily and a Sunday school. Houses 127. A. P. £762. Pop., in 1801, 445; in 1831, 636. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 4s.

FRIARMERE, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 1 mile north of Delph. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £90. Patron, the vicar of Rochdale. Here are 2 Sunday National schools.

FRICKLEY. See CLAYTON WITH FRICKLEY.

FRIDAYTHORPE, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York and partly in the wapentake of Buckrose, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles west by north of Great Driffield. Living, a discharged vicarage, and a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £4 13s. 4d., returned at £100; gross income £112. Patron, the prebendary of Wetwang in York cathedral. There is here a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Here are a Sunday National and 3 daily schools. Acres 2,070. Houses 51. A. P. £1,619. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 283. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 3s.

FRIESDEN. See NETTLEDEN AND FRIESDEN.

FRIESTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 5 miles south-south-west of Market-Raisen. Living, a discharged rectory and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; rated at £4 10s.; gross income £114. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Acres 610. Houses 11. A. P. £599. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 46. Poor rates, in 1838, £10 8s.

FRIESTON, a parish in the wapentake of Skirbeck, parts of Holland, union of Boston, county of Lincoln; 3¼ miles east of Boston. Living, a discharged vicarage united with that of Butterwick, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £16 11s. 10d., returned at £137 17s. 2d.; gross income £380. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Glover. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 3,980. Houses 222. A. P. £8,422. Pop., in 1801, 734; in 1831, 1,089. Poor rates, in 1838, £927 10s.

FRILFORD, a township in the parish of March, county of Berks; 4 miles north of Abingdon and north of the river Ock. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Marcham. Acres 1,180. Houses 32. A. P. £1,090. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £30.

FRILSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Faircross, union of Bradfield, county of Berks; 6 miles south-south-east of East Ilsley, on a branch of the Thames. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £8, returned at £131 15s.; gross income £131. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £136 5s., rectorial. Patron, in 1835, R. Floyd, Esq. Acres 920. Houses 41. A. P. £889. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 9s.

FRIMLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Ash, county of Surrey; 4 miles south-south-west of Bagshot, and on the line of the Southampton railway, by which it is distant 31 miles from London. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; returned at £44; gross income £70. Patron, the rector of Ash. Here are 6 daily and 3 infant schools. The village is situated near the Black-water, over which it has a bridge leading into Hampshire. Acres 7,770. Houses 269. A. P. 4,027. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 1,351. Poor rates, in 1838, £541.

FRINDSBURY, a parish in the hund. of Sharnwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; 2 miles north-west of Rochester, bounded on the south by the river Medway, and intersected by the Thames and Medway canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £10 3s. 11½d.; gross income £549. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. The church is supposed to have been built by Paulinus, the sacrist of Rochester, in the early part of the twelfth century. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1813; a daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, £37 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,139 ls. Acres 3,010. Houses 353. A. P. £5,135. Pop., in 1801, 1,066; in 1831, 1,856.

FRING, a parish in the hund. of Smithdon, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 8 miles south-west of Burnham-Westgate. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; certified to value £35, returned at £67; gross income £77. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Norwich. Fairs are held on May 21st., and December 11th, for horses. Acres 1,690. Houses 29. A. P. £1,666. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 10s.

FRINGFORD, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 5 miles north-north-east of Bicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 16s. 0½d. Tithes commuted in 1761. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 1 Sunday National and 2 daily schools. Acres 1,580. Houses 71. A. P. £1,766. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 358. Poor rates, in 1838, £150.

FRINSTED, a parish in the hund. of Eyborne, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingbourn, county of Kent; 4½ miles south-south-west of Sittingbourne. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 11s. 8d., returned at £110. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Charles Collins. Acres 1,130. Houses 24. A. P. £668. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 193. Poor rates, in 1838, £126 2s.

FRINTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 12½ miles south-east of Manningtree. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £7 6s. 8d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, S. Lushington, Esq. A great part of this parish has been swallowed up by the sea, which is here daily gaining on the land. Acres 710. Houses 5. A. P. £759. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 35.

FRISBY, a chapelry in the parish of Gaulby, county of Leicester; 8 miles east-south-east of Leicester. Acreage with the parish. Houses 5. A. P. £1,419. Pop., in 1801, 23; in 1831, 21. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 10s.

FRISBY ON THE WREAK, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 4½ miles west by south of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 16s. 8d., returned at £130; gross income £180. Great and vicarial tithes commuted in 1760. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel here. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Charities, £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 13s. Acres 1,080. Houses 92. A. P. £2,495. Pop., in 1801, 386; in 1831, 442.

FRISKNEY, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-west of Wainfleet. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £559. Patron, in 1835, J. Booth, Esq. Here are a Sunday and daily National, and 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £52 per annum. Friskney is the most extensive village in the wapentake of Candleshoe. The lands in the vicinity were effectually drained, enclosed, and embanked, under act of parliament obtained in 1809; but these advantages have been counterbalanced by the destruction of the decoys for which this place was once so celebrated. Previous to the enclosure, Friskney used to send upwards of 30,000 head of ducks, widgeon, and teal, to the metropolis, but now scarcely 5,000. Cranberries also were collected to the extent of from 2 to 4,000 pecks in the Mossberry or Cranberry Fen, as a principal part of that portion of the fens which appertains to this parish was denominated; but, since the drainage and enclosure, this source of profit has almost ceased. Acres 6,270. Houses 286. A. P. £8,322. Pop., in 1801, 691; in 1831, 1,457. Poor rates, in 1838, £446 3s.

FRISTON, a parish in the hund. of Willington, rape of Pevensey, union of East Bourne, county of Sussex; 3 miles south-west of East Bourne. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of East-Dean. Acres 2,080. Houses 8. A. P. £770. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 89. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 10s.

FRISTON. See CAYTHORPE.

FRISTON. See FRESTON.

FRITH. See WRENBURY.

FRITH-VILLE, a township in the west division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 5 miles east of Tatlershall. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £83; in the patronage of trustees. This township has been recovered from the fens, and rendered parochial so late as 1812. Acres 2,900. Houses 45. Pop., in 1821, 272; in 1831, 261. Poor rates, in 1838, £190 4s.

FRITHELSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Shebbear, union of Torrington, county of Devon; 2 miles west of Great Torrington, and west of the Torridge river. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; certified to value £14, returned at £54; gross income £116. Patron, in 1835, H. W. Johns, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £327 11s. Acres 2,380. Houses 129. A. P. £2,727. Pop., in 1801, 479; in 1831, 696.

FRITTENDEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Cranbrooke, lathe of Sray, county of Kent; 4½ miles north-north-east of Cranbrooke, and in the vicinity of the South Eastern railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £15 18s. 9d.; gross income £365. Patron, in 1835, T. L. Hodges, Esq. Here are a daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, in 1836, £46 10s. per annum. A fair is held on the 8th of September. On an average, 178 acres of hops are annually cultivated here; the hops charged averaging 110,731 lbs.; duty £922 15s. 2d. Acres 3,640. Houses 133. A. P. £3,023. Pop., in 1801, 551; in 1831, 816.

FRITTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles east-north-east of St.-Mary-Stratton, and near the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9; gross income £267. Patron, in 1835, the Rev.

T. Howes. Here are parish lands let at £25, and poor's lands, at £7 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 17s. Acres 710. Houses 31. A. P. £1,883. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 243.

FRITTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 7 miles north-west by north of Lowestoft, and east of the river Waveney. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £253. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. F. W. Cubitt. Charities, £12 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 15s. Acres 2,100. Houses 38. A. P. £1,441. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 170.

FRITWELL, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 5 miles north-west by north of Bicester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 9s. 4d., returned at £110; gross income £103. Tithes, belonging to the clerical rector, lay-impropriator, and vicar, commuted in 1806-1807. Patron, in 1835, J. Willes, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,230. Houses 111. A. P. £3,080. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 494. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 13s.

FRIZINGTON, a township in the parish of Arlesdon, county of Cumberland; 3 miles east by south of Whitehaven. All tithes commuted in 1805. Here is a Sunday National school. Iron-ore abounds in this township, and there is a fine chalybeate spring.

FROCESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatenhurst, county of Gloucester; 5 miles west by south of Stroud. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10 5s. 10d., returned at £140; gross income £229. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ducie. Acres 1,830. Houses 82. A. P. £3,593. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 414. Poor rates, in 1838, £245.

FRODESLEY, a parish in the hund. of Condo-ver, union of Atcham, county of Salop; 7½ miles west by north of Much-Wenlock. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £4 14s.; gross income £392. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. R. Gleadow. Acres 2,120. Houses 32. A. P. £1,994. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 186. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 1s.

FRODINGHAM, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford-Bridge, county of Lincoln; 7½ miles west-north-west of Glandford-Bridge. It includes the townships of Bromby and Scunthorpe. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 16s. 8d., returned at £124 10s.; gross income £222. Patron, in 1835, C. Winn, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 5,030. Houses 95. A. P. £2,588. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 425. Poor rates, in 1838, £125 6s.

FRODINGHAM (NORTH), a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Holderness, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles south-east by east of Great Driffield, near the river Hull. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £5; gross income £170. Tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, commuted in 1801. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Francis Drake. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1811; and 2 daily schools. The village of Frodingham is situated a little to the east of the river Hull, which is thence navigable to the town of Hull: it had formerly a weekly market. Owing to the superior commercial locality of Great Driffield, "and the decreasing population" here, the ancient privileges of Frodingham were transferred thither about eighty years ago, since which time its market has been discontinued. Fairs are held on July 10th, and October 2d, for toys and pedlery. Acres 2,880. Houses 145. A. P. £3,660. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 711. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 4s.

FRODINGHAM (SOUTH), a township in the parish of Owthorne, east riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles north-north-east of Patrington. Acres 1,410. Houses 9. A. P. £1,756. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 60. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 17s.

FRODSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Eddisbury, union of Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 10 miles north-east by north of Chester, and 191 north-west of London, in the course of the river Weaver. It includes the townships of Frodsham, Helsby, Kingsley, Manley, Newton by Frodsham, and Norley, the chapelry of Alvanley, and the lordship of Frodsham. Acres 14,100. Houses 1,038. A. P. £19,423. Pop., in 1801, 3,542; in 1831, 5,547. Acres of the township 1,950. Houses 337. A. P. £5,780. Pop., in 1801, 1,250; in 1831, 1,746. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £23 13s. 11½d.; gross income £600. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. The church is a fine ancient fabric of red freestone. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Here are 6 Sunday, a Sunday and daily National, and 20 daily schools, two of which are supported by endowment. The free grammar-school was founded in 1633. It was originally endowed with property, now producing £40 per annum, and afterwards with other small bequests. It is free to all male children of 6 years and upwards in this parish. In 1835 there were 92 scholars. There is a free school in the township of Kingsley founded about the year 1786, and possessing a small endowment, on which foundation about 65 children receive instruction. Other charities, in 1835, £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £1,753 15s.; of the township £619 17s. Frodsham is pleasantly situated on an eminence at the foot of the hills forming the northern extremity of De-la-mere Forest, and stretches along the south bank of the Weaver and Mersey, along the road from Chester to Warrington. The town principally consists of two large and well-paved streets intersecting each other at right angles. At the east end of the town there is a stone-bridge over the Weaver, and at the west end stood the castle of Frodsham, supposed to be of Norman origin, and afterwards held by the earls Rivers; but consumed by fire, 1642. On an average, 100,000 bushels of potatoes have been annually cultivated in this vicinity, and chiefly sent to the Lancashire markets, hitherto by the duke of Bridgewater's canal and the Mersey. On the banks of the Mersey are salt-works which have given employment to many of the inhabitants, a considerable number of whom have also been engaged in the cotton manufacture. There is here a graving dock for building and repairing vessels. The market is held on Wednesday; and fairs are held on May 16th, 17th, and 18th, August 21st, 22d, and 23d, for cattle and pedlery, and December 13th, 14th, and 15th. A signal beacon was formerly placed on Beacon-hill, which commands beautiful views of the estuary of the Mersey and parts of Lancashire.

FRODSHAM, a lordship in the parish of Frodsham, co.-palatine of Chester; 11 miles north-north-east of Chester. Acres 3,000. Houses 189. A. P. £3,655. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 1,024. Poor rates, in 1838, £422 4s.

FROGGATT, a township in the parish of Bake-well, county of Derby; 1½ mile north-east by east of Stony-Middleton, on the eastern bank of the Derwent. Vicarial tithes commuted in 1823. Acreage with the parish. Houses 23. A. P. £234. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 5s.

FROME (THE). See DORSETSHIRE.

FROME (THE UPPER). See GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

FROME (THE LOWER). See GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

FROME (THE). See HEREFORDSHIRE.

FROME (THE). See SOMERSETSHIRE.

FROME-BISHOP'S, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Bromyard, on the river Frome. It includes the townships of Bishop's-Frome, Eggleton, Halmond's-Frome, Leadon, and Walton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £8 5s. 10d.; gross income £630. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Hopton. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Acres 3,560. Houses 188. A. P. £4,411. Pop., in 1801, 765; in 1831, 948. Poor rates, in 1838, £387 18s. Houses of the township 61. Pop., in 1831, 326.

FROME-CANON. See CANON-FROME.

FROME-CASTLE. See CASTLE-FROME.

FROME-HALMOND'S. See HALMOND'S-FROME.

FROME HUNDRED, in the eastern division of the county of Somerset, bordering on Wiltshire. Area 32,900 acres. Houses 3,842. Pop., in 1831, 19,884.

FROME, or FROME-SELWOOD, a parish, market-town, and parliamentary borough, in the hund. and union of Frome, county of Somerset; 12 miles south of Bath, on the river Frome. This parish is of great extent; probably between 50 and 60 miles in circumference. Acres 6,960. Houses 2,346. A. P. £16,009. Pop., in 1801, 8,748; in 1831, 12,240. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £22; gross income £900; nett income £720. Patron, the Marquess of Bath. The church is a spacious and elegant structure, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, chancel, and four sepulchral chapels, with a square tower, surmounted by a spire. Warner described it as one of the handsomest parish-churches in England. Christ-church is a perpetual curacy; gross income £150. Patron, the vicar of Frome. A new church has recently been erected. Here are two Independent churches, formed in 1707, and 1780; two Baptist, in 1689 and 1707; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811; a Primitive, in 1828; a place of worship for the Presbyterians; and a Friends' meeting-house. Here are 14 daily schools, including 2 National, besides 2 Sunday National: two of the former of these are supported by endowment. The charity school, founded, together with an almshouse, in the reign of Edward IV., by William Liversedge, Esq. of Vallis, has an endowment of nearly £300. The foundation boys are clothed in blue, but neither lodged nor boarded. The free grammar-school, founded, according to tradition, in the reign of Edward VI., had fallen into decay at the time of the inquiry. There are other valuable charities connected with Frome; the principal of which, besides the almshouse above alluded to, for a number of poor old women, endowed with £205 8s. per annum, is Stevens' asylum for girls, and hospital for men, founded in 1790 by Richard Stevens, and supported by endowments amounting to upwards of £760, of which about £480 constitutes the income of the asylum, wherein 27 girls were maintained and educated at the time of the inquiry. The hospital was occupied by 13 old men. Other charities, about £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,195 19s.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Frome, capable of accommodating 350 persons. The Frome poor-law union comprehends 28 parishes, embracing an area of 77 square miles; with a population, returned, in 1831, at 26,236. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,789. Expenditure, in 1838, £12,492; in 1839, £13,431 16s.

The town of Frome is situated on the acclivity of a hill, on the skirts of Selwood forest, on the south-western side of the Frome, which here takes a winding course, and is crossed by a bridge of 5 arches. The town is large, but irregularly built, and most of its streets, which are upwards of 40 in number, narrow and ill-paved: within the last few years, however, many improvements have been effected: a handsome street has been formed in the principal thoroughfare, and a market-house and various other buildings erected. The town is now lighted with gas. The vicinity is adorned by many seats.

Frome is not incorporated, and its limits have not been distinguished by any of the common known divisions of corporate towns. It was formerly governed by a bailiff; but latterly by 2 constables, annually chosen at the court-leet of the marquis of Bath and the earl of Cork and Orrery, lords of the manor. It was enfranchised by the reform act, and now returns one member to parliament. The boundaries of the borough comprehend all the town and suburbs, and sufficient space for increase. The number of electors registered for 1836 was 291, of whom 244 actually polled at the general election in 1837: the number registered for 1837 was 310.

The trade of Frome has been declining for some years. Broad cloths are the chief manufacture. Narrow woollens, as cassimeres, &c., are also made. In 1838, 4 woollen mills here employed 509 hands. A silk-mill also employed 176 hands. Wool cards are manufactured; and on the banks of the Frome are mills for fulling, rolling iron, &c. About 350 hand-loomers are employed by the manufacturers at Frome, of which 220 are in the parish. The operatives here have been considerably benefited by the letting to them of small portions of land for potato-gardens; but the introduction of powerful machinery has here, as elsewhere, superseded human labour, and occasioned great and general distress which has been partially relieved by emigration, by enormous poor rates, and by remittances of more than £1,000 in a year from charitable societies in London, Bristol, and elsewhere. Frome has long been celebrated for its excellent ale. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the fairs are February 24th,—when on Saturday, held on Monday following,—July 22d, September 14th, and November 25th, for cattle, cheese, &c. There are branches of the Wilts and Dorset, and of Stuckey's, banking companies here. Tanner observes, that a monastery was founded here, before the year 705, by St. Aldhelm.

FROME-ST.-QUINTIN, a parish in the hund. of Tollerford, union of Cerne, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Beaminster. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Evershot, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £15 7s. 1d.; gross income £343. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Caldwell, in this parish, now a farm, was formerly a chapelry. Here are a Sunday National and a daily school. Acres 960. Houses 21. A. P. £859. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 11s.

FROME-VAUCHURCH, a parish in the hund. of Tollerford, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 8 miles north-west by west of Dorchester, on the river Frome. Living, a rectory united with that of Batcombe. The free-school at Toller-Porcorum is open to 10 children of this parish: other charities, in 1835, £1 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 9s. Acres 1,080. Houses 33. A. P. £1,089. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 135.

FROME-WHITFIELD, in the hund. of St. George, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset. "This ancient parish, formerly an independent one, though now included in that of the Holy Trinity in Dorchester, receives its name from the river Frome, on which it stands, and its additional one, from its ancient lords the Whitfields. It is situated about half-a-mile north of Dorchester, in the hund. of St. George. The ancient ville and the church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, lay near Holles-Frome, as appears by several ruins of houses, but has been long depopulated; and the manor, once parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, extinguished. It consists of three farms, viz., Coker's Frome, Holles-Frome, and Whitwet."—Hutchin's Dorset, vol. I. p. 393. That part of Frome-Whitfield which lies between the two branches of the river Frome, with Coliton-row, another small district or tything, and ancient chapelry, of Frome-Whitfield, have been added to the borough of Dorchester for parliamentary purposes.

FROSTENDEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Southwold, near the post-road from Lowestoft to Saxmundham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £348. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Barne, Esq. Acres 1,280. Houses 48. A. P. £1,617. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 373. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 4s.

FROSTERLY, a hamlet in the parish of Stanhope, co.-palatine of Durham; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west of Walsingham, on the northern bank of the river Wear. It is proposed to connect Frosterly with other parts of Durham by railway—see DURHAM, co.-palatine—Railways. There was anciently a chapel here; but it has long since gone to decay, though its site is still called Chapel-close. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here; and there is a free school with a dwelling-house for the schoolmaster, and £27 per annum.

FROWLESWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Lutterworth, east of the river Soar, and near the Midland Counties railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 10s.; gross income £524. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. L. Noble. Here are 22 almshouses for poor widows, who receive £440 per annum, the produce of land, bequeathed, in 1726, by John Smith, chief Baron of his Majesty's exchequer in Scotland. Acres 1,960. Houses 71. A. P. £2,881. Pop., in 1801, 297; in 1831, 278. Poor rates, in 1838, £89 13s.

FROXFIELD, a parish in the hund. of East-Meon, union of Petersfield, Alton south division, county of Southampton; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west by west of Petersfield. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of East-Meon, a peculiar in the dio. of Winchester. There is here a Sunday and daily National and a free school. Acres 6,480. Houses 87. A. P. £4,269. Pop., in 1801, 437; in 1831, 618. Poor rates, in 1838, £287.

FROXFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Hungerford, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west of Hungerford, intersected by the Avon canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 16s. 4d., returned at £39 5s.; gross income £122. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Here is an almshouse, founded and endowed in 1686, by Sarah, duchess-dowager of Somerset, for the maintenance of 30 widows, the number to be augmented to 50 so soon as the revenue amounted to £400 per annum. To this sum the proceeds amounted in 1775, when 20 apartments were added to the original building, which completed the design; the whole structure forming an oblong quadrangle, surrounding a court, with a small chapel in the interior. The objects of this charity are 30 widows of clergymen belonging to any part of England, and 20 widows of laymen, belonging to the county of Wilts, none of them possessing an income of more than £20 per annum. The allowance was originally £6 per annum, which has been gradually augmented till it has reached £21, which enables the inmates to live in a very comfortable manner. The whole is confided to the care of 12 trustees, chosen from the nobility and the principal gentry of the county. The steward, chaplain, apothecary, and porter, are nominated by the trustees. The salary of the chaplain is £70 per annum, with the rectory of the parish of Hewish, worth £150 per annum, on the first vacancy after his appointment. Poor rates, in 1838, £353 9s. There are here about 7 acres of hop-gardening. Acres 1,150. Houses 139. A. P. £1,380. Pop., in 1801, 492; in 1831, 581.

FROYLE, a parish in the hund. and union of Alton, Alton north division, county of Southampton; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-east of Alton, and north-west of the river Wey. It includes the extra-parochial district of Coldrey. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 12s. 3d.; gross income £254. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. C. Miller, Bart. Here are 3 daily and 2 Sunday schools. The parish is entitled to send 3 children to the school of St. Andrews, in the neighbouring parish of Holybourne. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 115 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of hops were cultivated here: hops annually charged 53,332 lbs.; duty £444 8s. 8d. Acres 3,920. Houses 88. A. P. £4,777. Pop., in 1801, 744; in 1831, 777. Poor rates, in 1838, £473 5s.

FRUSTFIELD HUNDRED, on the south-east point of the county of Wilts. Area 8,200 acres. Houses 275. Pop., in 1831, 1,430.

FRYERNING, a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; 1 mile north-west of Ingatstone, in the line of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £9; gross income £292. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Wadham college, Oxford. Here are 3 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Charities, £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £264 11s. Acres 3,830. Houses 131. A. P. £2,810. Pop., in 1801, 646; in 1831, 670.

FRYSTONE (FERRY), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-west of Ferry-Bridge, on the southern bank of the river Aire. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £5 19s. 2d., returned at £113 8s. 10d.; gross income £240. Patrons, the sub-chantor and vicars-choral of the cathedral church of York. Here are 4 daily and 2 Sunday schools: one of the former is supported by endowment. Charities, £26 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £345 5s. Acres 2,850. Houses 174. A. P. £3,952. Pop., in 1801, 705; in 1831, 833.

FRYSTONE (MONK), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Ferrybridge; intersected by the York and Derby railway. It includes the townships of Burton-

Salmon, Hillam, and Monk-Frystone. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; gross income £124. Patron, the prebendary of Winstow in York cathedral. Here is a daily school endowed for the education of a few poor children. Charities, £23 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £228 19s.; of the township, £112. Acres 3,770. Houses 172. A. P. £3,544. Pop., in 1801, 581; in 1831, 863. Acres of the township 1,470. Houses 78. A. P. £1,281. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 430.

FRYTON, a township in the parish of Hovingham, north riding of Yorkshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of New-Malton. Acres 970. Houses 11. A. P. £985. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 60. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 15s.

FUGGLESTONE-ST.-PETER, a parish in the hund. of Branch and Dole, union of Wilton, county of Wilts, and now included within the boundaries of Wilton; 1 mile east of Wilton, on the river Wiley. It includes Bemerton, a joint parish, and Groveley, an extra-parochial district. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Bemerton in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £24; gross income £482. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Pembroke. Here are 2 daily and 2 Sunday National schools; and 2 hospitals for maintaining poor old persons, namely, St. Giles's, endowed with £67 13s. per annum, and St. Mary Magdalen's with £52 5s., besides £90 per annum bestowed by the Earl of Pembroke. Poor rates, in 1838, £364 6s. According to Leland, this was the burial-place of Ethelred, king of the West Saxons, who was slain by the Danes in 827. Acres 2,480. Houses 105. A. P. £757. Pop., in 1801, 590; in 1831, 548.

FULBECK, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 10 miles north-north-east of Grantham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £20 15s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £600. Patron, in 1835, Sir Henry Fane. This parish possesses a Sunday and daily, and a Sunday National and 3 daily schools. Acres 3,900. Houses 126. A. P. £5,324. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 650. Poor rates, in 1838, £224 11s.

FULBOURNE, a village in the hund. of Flendish, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 5 miles east-south-east of Cambridge, and comprehending the parishes of All Saints and St. Vigers. The living of the former is a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £14 17s.; gross income £253. Patron, the Bishop of Ely. The living of the latter is a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £25 15s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £482. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. Both churches stood in one churchyard till 1776, when that of All Saints, being ruinous, was taken down by act of parliament. All the parochial assessments are united for the common benefit, and the names of both are sunk in that of Fulbourne, but each parish appoints its own officers, and the benefices continue distinct. The Independents have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1800. Here are a Sunday National and three daily schools. Elizabeth March, in 1722, bequeathed a farm, now worth upwards of £100 a-year, to be equally divided for the endowment of schools in the parishes of Fulbourne, Haddenham, Binkley, Fen-Ditton, and Histon. The two parishes of Fulbourne having been enclosed under act of parliament, by award dated 20th August, 1814, a parcel of land, containing 58 acres 2 roods 21 perches, was allotted to the poor in lieu of the open field lands and certain old enclosures. This, with an old enclosure called Great Shitts, amounting in all to 67 acres 3 roods 23 perches, tithe free, forms a charity estate chiefly let in portions to the poor, at the rate of 30s. per acre, producing in all £100 12s. per annum, distributed to poor families. Other charities, in 1836, about £150 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £829 12s. Acres 5,221. Houses 164. A. P. £4,531. Pop., in 1801, 702; in 1831, 1,207.

FULBROKE, or FULBROOK, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hund. of Barlichway, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Warwick; 4 miles north-north-east of Stratford-upon-Avon, and west of the river Avon. Acres 650. Houses 15. A. P. with Hampton-Lucy. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 13s. "In the time of Henry VI., John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, third son of Henry IV. held this manor; formed an extensive and picturesque park, contiguous to the Avon; and erected on an eminence within this domain, what Dugdale terms 'a little castle of brick and stone.' In the reign of Henry VIII. the castle, then in a ruinous state, was taken down by Sir William Compton, who had the materials conveyed to Compton-Wyniates, and employed in the erection of the mansion there. Mr. Ireland asserts that Fulbroke park—and not Charlecote—was the scene of Shakspeare's indiscretion. Mr. Brewer observes that Mr. Ireland's is, 'he believes, the only opinion written on this subject; but, as Sir Thomas Lucy possessed two parks in the neighbourhood of Stratford, a liberty is evidently allowed for conjecture, and it is more creditable to the memory of the bard, as Fulbroke had no mansion to impart the notion of domestic property to the noble beast of chase which browsed the herbage. The buck, in these forsaken avenues, would almost appear outlying game, the tempting booty of every adventurous sportsman.'"—West's Warwickshire.—Malone discredits the whole story of Shakspeare's deer-stealing, "because Sir Thomas Lucy had no park at Charlecote." Mr. J. Payne Collier, editor of "the Eger-ton Papers," recently published for the Camden society, directs particular attention to an item in a list of "all the presents that were given to my lord—Sir Thomas Egerton—at Harefiled," on the occasion of Queen Elizabeth's visit to him in 1602. Many of the items in this list are very characteristic. The lord mayor, among other things, sends a pipe of sack and "two firkins of sturgeon;" "Goody Beckington," six chickens; Mr. Thomas Spencer, probably a neighbouring farmer, "four oxen and twenty mutt-tons;" and,—curiously and characteristically enough,— "Sir Thomas Lucy—a bucke."

FULBROOK. See HCGSHAW WITH FULBROOK.

FULBROOK, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Witney, county of Oxford; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-north-east of Burford. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Budford. Acres 1,670. Houses 80. A. P. £2,145. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1838, £291.

FULBROOKE (THE), a small stream in the co.-palatine of Chester, which falls into the Wheelock.

FULFORD, a chapelry in the parish of Stone, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Stone. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £25 17s., returned at £56 14s.; gross income £129. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Allen, Esq. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. The returns have not been separately made.

FULFORD-AMBO, a parish in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent, union of York, east riding of Yorkshire; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of York. Living, a perpetual curacy; certified to value £6 15s. 4d., returned at £115; gross income £96. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Key, Esq. Here are the York barracks, and an asylum of the Society of Friends for lunatics, called the Retreat. There is a message and rent charge of £9 12s. per annum, the bequest of John Key, Esq., for the education of 20 children. Other charities, £22 5s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £301 2s. Acres 1,940. Houses 172. A. P. £5,841. Pop., in 1801, 642; in 1831, 934.

FULFORD. See PITMINSTER.

FULHAM, a parish in the Kensington division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Kensington, county of Middlesex; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of St. Paul's, London, on the Thames. It includes the chapelry of Hammersmith. Acres 3,960. Houses 2,875. A. P. £58,900. Pop., in 1801, 10,028; in 1831, 17,539. The living comprises a sinecure rectory, and a vicarage, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; the former rated at £26; gross income £40; the latter at £10; gross income £1,350; nett income £113 5s. Patron of the rectory, the Bishop of London; of the vicarage, the rector. In addition to the original parish church, and to meet the increased population, there is St. John's chapel at WALHAM-GREEN—which see:—another, St. Mary's, between Hammersmith and Kensington, erected at the expense of Richard Hunt, Esq., has recently been increased in accommodation; and in the Hammersmith division of the parish, are the church of St. Paul and the chapel of St. Peter. This parish, including Hammersmith, possesses 41 daily and 9 Sunday schools, 3 of each of which are National, and 4 of the former supported by endowments. There were for many years 4 charity schools in this place, 2 for boys and 2 for girls, established at different times by subscription: these were combined and formed into 2 schools, in 1811, one for boys and one for girls, on the plan of the National schools. The Latymer, or boys' charity school at Hammersmith, was established in 1624: it is amply endowed: the boys are clothed and educated. The female charity school at Hammersmith has been established nearly two centuries. The girls are clothed and educated. The charities of this parish are very numerous. Amongst others, there are the following almshouses:—Sir William Powell's, founded in 1680, and occupied by 12 poor almswomen: income at the inquiry about £140. The Starch-Green almshouses, founded since 1812, for 7 poor men or women. Dr. Ile's almshouses at Hammersmith, founded about the year 1635, and occupied by 4 poor almswomen. The new almshouses erected in 1834, and occupied by 7 married men and their wives; income £50, being a moiety of a yearly payment made by the Crown for exercising troops on Wormholt Common, on which the inhabitants of Fulham and Hammersmith have rights of common, and £32 from Glover's charity: there are also voluntary donations. The parish has received £700 from the Birmingham, Bristol, and Thames Junction Railway company, for part of Wormholt Common. By a clause in the railway act, this money may be applied to such general or public purposes within the parish, as a vestry thereof shall direct. The vestry have accordingly erected 7 additional almshouses for single persons of either sex, on ground given by Mr. Groves. Other charities, about £481 7s. 8d. per annum; of which £31 consists of the income derived from the Fulham bridge charity to poor watermen of Fulham and Putney, or their widows and children, as compensatory for the injury inflicted on such persons by the substitution, in 1729, of a wooden bridge across the Thames, at the foot-ferry from Fulham to Putney. About £131 15s. 11d. of the residue belongs more particularly to Hammersmith. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,269 16s.

Fulham is situated on the north bank of the Thames, opposite to Putney on the Surrey side, with which it is connected by the wooden-bridge above alluded to. It is rather irregularly built, but the houses are for the most part elegant, and are chiefly inhabited by genteel families connected with the metropolis. The principal manufacture carried on here is the making of brown stone-ware, jars, pots, &c. Most of the ground in the parish is laid out, and cultivated, as market-gardens, nurseries, &c., for the supply of the London market, affording employment for a great number of people. Fishing is also carried on to a considerable extent. The fish taken are barbel, eels, lampreys, roach, dace, flounders, and shad. The dace are caught chiefly for their scales, which are sold to the Jews, by whom they are used in the manufacture of false pearls. The palace of Fulham has been the summer residence of the bishop of London from the reign of Henry VII. It occupies a low spot of ground on the banks of the river, a little to the west of the village of Fulham. The original buildings formed a quadrangle of brick, with little of either elegance or convenience, but they have received numberless additions, and are upon the whole vastly improved. The gardens, which comprise about 37 acres of ground, have long been highly celebrated for the rare plants which they contain: they first became remarkable in the time of Bishop Grindall, one of the earliest promoters of the science of botany, and the first who imported the tamarisk tree about the year 1560. Bishop Compton rendered them still more celebrated by the introduction of many North American plants, shrubs, and trees. There is near the porter's-lodge a very ancient row of limes, planted most probably by the same bishop about the time of the Revolution, when this fashion was introduced from Holland. The house and gardens, with the Warren-field, are surrounded by a moat over which are two bridges.

FULKING, a hamlet in the parish of Edburton, county of Sussex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Hurst-Pierpoint. Acres 1,330. Houses 34. A. P. £1,923. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 166.

FULLAWAY, a tything in the parish of Allcanings, county of Wilts; 4 miles east-north-east of Devizes. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 14; in 1831, 6. Other returns with the parish.

FULLETTY, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Horncastle. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £21 2s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £120; gross income £315. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. H. Rockliffe. Here are a Primitive Methodist chapel, and a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,940. Houses 47. A. P. £2,065. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 250. Poor rates, in 1838, £154 9s.

FULL-SUTTON, a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-west of Pocklington. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £10 12s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £310; gross income £154. Patron, in 1835, Lord Feversham. The church is very old, and is said to have been a chantry to the priory of Walton, near Beverley. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 950. Houses 23. A. P. £889. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 140. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 17s.

FULMER, a parish in the hund. of Stoke, union of Eton, county of Buckingham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Beaconsfield. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; certified to value £61 13s., returned at £122; gross income £235. In the patronage of the dean and chapter of Windsor. The church was built in 1610, at the expense of Sir Marmaduke Darell. Here are a daily and a Sunday National school. Charities, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 3s. Acres 1,780. Houses 58. A. P. £2,712. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 391.

FULMODESTON WITH CROXTON, a parish in the hund. of Gallow, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 5 miles east of Fakenham. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Croxton, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio of Norwich; rated at £10; gross income £481. Patrons, the master and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. Here are a daily and a Sunday school. Charities, £69 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £454 14s. Acres 2,330. Houses 81. A. P. £2,049. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 391.

FULNECK, a hamlet in the parish of Calverley, wapentake of Morley, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south-west of Leeds. It is a settlement belonging to the Moravians, founded about the year 1723, and now a considerable village. It is situated on the slope of a rising ground, and consists of two streets well-paved. The buildings are simple but neat. On one side are the habitations for single men, and on the other those for single women; widows and those who have families have also separate places assigned them. There is a chapel with a burial-ground attached. The men are employed in various branches of the woollen trade, the women in spinning and embroidering. The vocal and instrumental music of this settlement is considered very excellent. The name of this place was originally Lambshill, which was changed to Fulneck, from the native place of the founders, who had immigrated hither from Moravia. The place has been for some time rather on the decline, the rules of Count Zinzendorf not being calculated for the increase either of population or manufactures. A railway has recently been projected between Bradford and Leeds, by Holbeck, Farnley, Fulneck, and Tyersal, and through a tunnel near Bradford of about 1½ mile in length.

FULNETBY, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Wraggöe, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 3 miles west-north-west of Wragby. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Rand. Acres 1,340. Houses 8. A. P. £1,083. Pop., in 1811, 41; in 1831, 53.

FULSHAW, a township in the parish of Wilmslow, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-west of Macclesfield, intersected by the Nantwich and Manchester railway. Acres 540. Houses 49. A. P. £847. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 291. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 3s.

FULSNAPH. See FOULESNAPE.

FULSTOW, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstone, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 7¼ miles north of Louth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 10s. 3d., returned at £80; gross income £159. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,840. Houses 84. A. P. £2,466. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 448. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 18s.

FULWELL, a township in the parish of Monk-Wearmouth, co.-palatine of Durham; 1½ mile north-west of Sunderland. Here are a number of lime-kilns. Some workmen are said to have found in a bank of earth at Fulwell hill, in 1759, the gigantic skeleton of a human body, 9 feet 6 inches in length, with two Roman coins near the right hand. Acres 640. Houses 26. A. P. £1,230. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 1s.

FULWOOD, a township in the parish of Lancaster, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north of Preston. Here is an endowed daily school. This was part of the ancient royal forest of Fulwood, now enclosed. Preston race-ground was also part of it. Acres 1,780. Houses 92. A. P. £2,620. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 500. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 16s.

FUNDENHALL, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 5 miles north-west by west of St. Mary Stratton. Living, a donative in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; returned at £21 12s; gross income, no return. Tithes commuted in 1840. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Berney, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, £8 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £228 5s. Acres 1,270. Houses 46. A. P. £1,836. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 394.

FUNTINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Bosham, rape of Chichester, union of Westbourne, county of Sussex; 5 miles west-north-west of Chichester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chichester valued at £40, returned at £54; gross income £110. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chichester. Here are a Sunday and daily National and 2 daily schools. Charities, £30 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £323 11s. Acres 3,810. Houses 163. A. P. £5,726. Pop., in 1801, 681; in 1831, 969.

FURNESS-ABBEY, in the parish of Dalton-in-Furness, hund. of Lonsdale, north of the sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7½ miles south-west of Ulverston. The recently projected railway by Lancashire into Scotland, alluded to under article CUMBERLAND, and DUDDON,—which see,—passes through Furness, and in the vicinity of the abbey. "The monastery, begun at Talket in Amounderness, A. D. 1124, for the monks of Savigny in France, was, after three years, viz., A. D. 1127, removed to this valley, then called Bekanges-Gill. Stephen, then earl of Morton and Bologno, afterwards king of England, was the founder of this abbey, which was of the Cistercian order, and commended to the patronage of the blessed Virgin Mary. It was endowed at the dissolution with £805 16s. 5d. per annum, Dugd.; £966 7s. 10d., Speed."—Tanner's Not. Mon. "The lordship of Furness, in the north-west of Lancashire, and hundred of Loynesdale, comprehends all that tract of land and islands, included within the following bounds:—that is, beginning where the water descends from Wrinose hills, in Little Langdale, to Elterwater, which divides Lancashire from Westmoreland; so along the said water to Brotley-bridge, and where it runs into Windermere, and so down the said mere to Leven Sands into the sea, thence along the sea to the isle of Foulney, including the said island; so along by the isles of the Pile of Foudrey and Walsey to the river Dudden, which divides Lancashire from Cumberland, and up to the spot where the water of that river comes from Wrinose hills, and from thence to the place where the water descends from Wrinose hills to the Eltwater, where the boundary began. Thus Furness is separated by water from Westmoreland, Cumberland, and the rest of Lancashire, and was for that reason called by the abbot an island. The liberty of the lordship of Furness extends itself over all the said tract of land and islands called Furness, for a similar reason as Amounderness was formerly, by the Saxons, called Agmonderness, because it stretches out into the sea like a Nese, a promontory, or ness of land, between the rivers Ribble and Cöcar; so Furness, lying to the north of Amounderness, stretching itself between the two estuaries of Leven and Dudden, in like manner received from the Saxons a similar name; and all the lands and tenements included therein, as well freehold as copyhold, are held either immediately of the lord of the said liberty, or of the lord of some manor, lying within the same, and who holds such manor of the lord of the said liberty." West's Antiquities of Furness, p. 142. The scenery of this district partakes of the romantic character of the adjoining northern counties. It is a wild and rugged region, stored with iron ore and slate, and covered with a growth of underwood, which is cut down in succession, and made into charcoal for the use of the iron-furnaces. Near the sea, and in the vicinity of Furness abbey, the land is moderately fertile. The estuary which separates this portion from the rest of Lancashire is continually crossed by horses and carriages at low water. The abbey of Furness rose high in rank and power; and the ruins of its architectural splendour are to this day entitled to one of the first places among the relics of antiquity in the county. The abbot of Furness was invested with extraordinary privileges, and exercised jurisdiction over the whole district: even the military were, in some degree, dependent upon him. The situation of the abbey being formidable by nature, gave something of a warlike consequence to the monks: they erected a watch-tower on the summit of a commanding hill, which commences its rise near the walls of the monastery, overlooking all Low Furness, and the arm of the sea immediately beneath it: thus, they were enabled to prevent surprise, by alarming the adjacent coast with signals on the approach of an enemy. The sequestered, deep, and narrow vale in which the ruins of the abbey stand, was termed the vale of Nightshade. The entrance to these romantic ruins is through a light pointed arch, festooned with ivy hanging gracefully down its crumbling sides: hence, the path, spread with fragments of desolation, intermingled with richly-tinted foliage, leads through ruinous aisles and cloisters, while the gurgling sounds of a brook, hard by, contribute to lull the mind into solemn contemplation. The Norman circular arch, and the elegant pointed one, are equally conspicuous throughout the building, forming an interesting combination of strength and beauty: the whole exhibits an impressive picture of venerable decay, and a last sad scene of fallen greatness, with its mouldering ruins dismantled, shattered, and spread abroad by the desolating hand of time. The dimensions of the principal parts of the abbey will give an idea of its importance. The length of the interior of the church, from east to west, was 287 feet 5 in.; width of the interior of the choir, 28 ft., and of the nave 70 ft.; height of the side walls, 54 ft.; interior length of the transept, 130 ft.; width, 18 ft. 6 in. The chapter-house was 60 ft. long, and 45 ft. 6 in. wide. The cloisters were 31 ft. 6 in. wide, forming a quadrangle of 334 ft. 6 in. by 102 ft. 6 in. The church and cloisters were encompassed with a wall, which commenced at the east side of the great door; and a space of ground containing 65 acres was surrounded by another wall which enclosed the abbey mills, together with the kilns, and ovens, and the stews for receiving fish. This abbey had nine other dependents on it. As early as the reign of King Edward I., the rents were, as stated in a manuscript in the Manchester library, £1,599 8s. 2d. The abbey was surrendered by Roger Pyle, the then abbot, 28th Henry VIII., who, for his compliance, received the rectory of Dalton; and the monks, to the number of twenty-nine, had among them a grant equal to £300 per annum. The dissolution of the abbey greatly affected both the civil and domestic state of Low Furness, which for several centuries had been improving in consequence. The large demand for provisions of all kinds, occasioned by abundant hospitality, and the frequent concourse of company resorting to the abbey, dropped at once; the boons and rents were no longer paid in kind, and agriculture became proportionally depressed. The abbey of Furness must, in its pristine perfection, have been one of the most extensive and important monastic establishments in the kingdom; although much of this completeness must be referred to a period subsequent to the foundation of the building, and to the accumulating wealth and power of successive abbots. The interesting ruins of this abbey constitute one of the great attractions of the beautiful district of the lakes; and as Ulverston, near Bardsea, is within an hour's drive of Furness-abbey, and of Windermere and Coniston lakes, they may all now be reached from the south with facility and comfort by the route pointed out under articles BARDSEA and FLEETWOOD—which see.

FURTHO. See FORTHO.

FYFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Ock, union of Abingdon, county of Berks; 5 miles west by north of Abingdon, and south of the river Thames. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; returned at £92; gross income £130. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. Here are a daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, £33 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 13s. Acres 1,620. Houses 81. A. P. £2,637. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 403.

FYFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Ongar, county of Essex; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-east of Chipping-Ongar, on the river Roding. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £25 7s. 6d.; gross income £503. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. W. L. P. Wellesley. Here is a school, endowed with lands by Dr. Walker, in 1692. Acres 2,030. Houses 107. A. P. £4,339. Pop., in 1801, 511; in 1831, 572. Poor rates, in 1838, £393 7s.

FYFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Andover, county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by north of Andover. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 12s. 11d.; gross income £235. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, £30 per annum, for the support of poor persons, in this and a neighbouring parish. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 6s. Acres 2,210. Houses 28. A. P. £1,274. Pop., including the hamlet of Redenham, in 1801, 197; in 1831, 211.

FYFIELD. See ENFORD.

FYFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of Overton, county of Wilts; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of Marlborough. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Overton.

FYLINGDALES, a parish in the liberty of Whitby-Strand, union of Whitby, north-riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Whitby, on the coast of the North sea. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; certified to value £21, returned at £106; gross income £100. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Hubba, the Danish general, having disembarked his troops in Dunsley bay, in 867, planted his standard, bearing the raven, on a hill in this parish, hence called to this day Raven-hill. Acres 13,010. Houses 388. A. P. £5,304. Pop., in 1801, 1,568; in 1831, 1,335. Poor rates, in 1838, £430.

G

GADDESBY, a parish in the hund. of East-Goscote, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicesters; 6 miles south-west of Melton-Mowbray, on a branch of the river Wreak. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Rothley. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1837, £53 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £218 19s. Acres 1,580. Houses 49. A. P. £2,791. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 276.

GADDESSEN (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Dacorum, union of Hemel-Hempstead, county of Hertford; 3½ miles north-west of Hemel-Hempstead. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10 1s. 10d.; gross income £220. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £748 3s. impropriated, and £249 12s. 3d. vicarial. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Halsey. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £35 11s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £438 15s. Acres 4,000. Houses 191. A. P. £3,222. Pop., in 1801, 794; in 1831, 988.

GADDESSEN (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Dacorum, union of Berkhamstead, county of Hertford; 4 miles east-south-east of Ivinghoe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 12s. 8½d.; gross income £304. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £270 13s. 3d. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Bridgewater. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £33 1s. 5d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 16s. This was the birth-place of John de Gaddesden, the famous physician of the early part of the 14th century. Acres 910. Houses 86. A. P. £1,158. Pop., in 1801, 388; in 1831, 492.

GADE (THE). See HERTFORDSHIRE.

GAER, a township in the parish of Castle-Caeraineon, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 5½ miles west-south-west of Welshpool. Pop., in 1811, 355; in 1821, 340. Returns with the parish.

GAFFLOGIAN HUNDRED, county of Carnarvon, North Wales. Houses 880. Pop., in 1831, 4,501.

GAGINGWELL, a hamlet in the parish of Church-Enstone, county of Oxford; 6 miles east by south of Chipping-Norton. Houses 12. Pop., in 1821, 63. Other returns with the parish.

GAINFORD, a parish in the south-west division of Darlington ward, union of Teesdale, co.-palatine of Durham; 7½ miles west-north-west of Darlington, on the river Tees. It includes the townships of Bolam, Cleatham, Gainford, Headlam, Houghton-le-Side, Ingleton, Langton, Marwood, Morton Tyne-mouth, Pierse-bridge, Staunton and Streatham, Summerhouse, and Westwick, and the chapelrys of Barnard-Castle, Denton, and Whorlton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £39 6s. 0½d.; gross income £1,020; nett income £768. Patron, Trinity college, Cambridge. The first church of Gainford was built by Egfrid, Bishop of Lindisfarne, but the present displays no marks of great antiquity. In Grey's notes, alluded to by Hutchinson, it is remarked that a castle was built here by that prelate, but now there are neither remains nor tradition of Gainford castle. Here are 26 daily schools. Charities, besides those of BARNARD-CASTLE—which see—about £8 per annum. The village of Gainford is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Tees. It consists of one spacious street of good buildings, extending along the high road, parallel with the river. This is the site of a Roman station, of which many vestiges still exist. Numerous coins have been found. Barnard-castle contains more than one-half of the whole population of this parish. Acres 24,370. Houses 1,102. A. P. £30,593. Pop., in 1801, 5,359; in 1831, 7,430. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,071 8s. Acres of the township 2,450. Houses 110. A. P. £3,274. Pop., in 1801, 445; in 1831, 524. Poor rates, in 1838, £104.

GAINSBOROUGH, a market-town and parish in the south division of the wapentake of Corringham, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 16 miles north-west of Lincoln, and 148 of London, on the eastern bank of the Trent, which is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of three fine elliptical arches, completed and opened end of year 1790, at an expense of £10,000. The parish includes the hamlets of Morton, East Stockwith, and Walkerith. Acres 7,210. Houses 1,687. A. P. £23,189. Pop., in 1801, 5,112; in 1831, 7,535. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £22 16s. 8d.; gross income £564. The great and small tithes, of the township of Gainsborough, and of the lordship of Thonock, the property of the Bishop of Lincoln and the vicar, were commuted in 1795. Patron, the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, originally founded by the Knights Templars, has been twice rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, which is part of the original edifice. Leland, describing Gainsborough as a good market-town, says, "I saw no things much to be marked in it but the parish church, where lieth richly buried Sir Thomas Boro, Knight of the Garter, and Ana de Botreaux his wife. There is an old chapel of stone in the south part of Gainsborough town, where they of the town say that many Danes be buried; also a chapel of wood on Trent side by south in Gainsborow, now desolated." Here are an Independent church, formed in 1774; a Presbyterian, before 1700; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1800; places of worship for the Baptists and Primitive Methodists; and a Friends' meeting-house. There are 31 daily schools in the parish, one of which is a grammar-school, and another belongs to the National school society. Certain almshouses erected here by Sir Thomas Burgh, were ultimately converted into a poor house. Amongst the charities possessed by this parish are £115 per annum, vested in the trustees of the free-grammar school for various charitable purposes, and £40 per annum to aged and impotent persons. There are other minor charities for behoof of the poor, and the apprenticeship of their children. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,060 10s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Gainsborough, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Gainsborough poor-law union comprehends 49 parishes, embracing an area of 170 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 23,750. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,255. Expenditure in 1838, £5,480; in 1839, £6,621 19s. The town of Gainsborough is built somewhat in the form of a cross, the street from the bridge to the market-place forming the pillar; the transverse being formed by the Beast market and the Lord's-street; and the apex of the cross by the Great church lane. The town extends along the bank of the Trent about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile, and it is about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile in breadth at the broadest part. It is very closely built, and considering the small extent of ground which it covers, contains a very dense population. None of the public buildings are worthy of much remark. The town-hall is of brick with shops beneath it. The theatre, a small edifice, forms part of the old hall, or manor-house, which is a most extensive and ancient pile of building, occupying nearly half an acre of land, and now formed into private dwelling-houses, work-shops, &c., besides the theatre. The town is well-paved, lighted, &c., and the suburbs are in rapid progress of improvement. The vicinity to the Trent, and the low situation of the town, have rendered it peculiarly liable to floods, from great rains, or sudden thaws after heavy falls of snow in the hilly countries of Staffordshire and Derbyshire; as the whole mass of waters descending from thence find a passage to the sea only by this river and the Humber. The tide runs up the Trent with prodigious rapidity. At spring-tides, the water rises on the surface of the river to the height of from 6 to 8 feet, and rolls on in a large mass from the mouth of the Trent considerably above the bridge. Before its arrival at Gainsborough, however, the Eagre or Hygre, as this curious phenomenon has been termed, is somewhat diminished in size.

Gainsborough was made a port in October, 1840. It had previously been of considerable maritime importance; but the immediate effect of this new measure will be, that upwards of 50,000 quarters of the linseed and rapeseed hitherto imported at Hull will now go direct to Gainsborough, as will the bulk of the iron for Sheffield and Birmingham; of bones, probably one-half of those imported into Hull, say 12,000 to 18,000 tons per annum. Linseed and rapeseed cakes, timber, deals, and other foreign goods used in the interior will pass at once 50 miles up the Trent. The Hanoverian, Danish, and other craft of 120 tons will proceed without assistance; vessels of larger draught with steamers. A considerable portion of labourage and the expense of transhipment into river craft will be dispensed with. Government is said to have been induced to take this step, on the petition of the leading merchants and others of Gainsborough, representing its capabilities; its fine run of deep water; and its superior communications with several manufacturing towns. Docks will no doubt now be very soon constructed. This port certainly possesses great advantages from its connexion with the extensive canal navigation established, through the interior, to Manchester, Liverpool, Gloucester, Bristol, London, &c., still further facilitated as its trade may now be by the frequent intersection of the canals by railways. Steamers run between Gainsborough and Hull; along the line of the Trent to Newark and Nottingham, and by the Fosdyke to Lincoln and Boston. The market-day is Tuesday; and fairs for cattle, shows, and toys, are held on Easter-Tuesday, and October 20th: if October 20th fall on Tuesday, it is kept the Tuesday after: both are continued for 10 days. The north marsh in this vicinity has long been noted for horse-races. There are branches of the Lincoln and Lindsey, and of the Hull banking companies here. Gainsborough is one of the polling-places for the members for the parts of Lindsey. Courts baron and leet, closely connected with the good government of the town, are held twice a-year. The leet jury appoint two constables, called the burgess and foreign constable, one burgess bailiff, &c.

"It would appear from an examination of the ground upon which Gainsborough now stands, that, at some former period, the waters of the sea overflowed not only its site, but also the whole of the low lands between the Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire hills:

and extended round the isle of Lindsey,—as Speed, with much propriety, terms it,—from the mouth of the Trent to that of the Witham; for on digging a very little way below the surface, a stratum of sand is discovered, evidently showing the late formation of the incumbent soil. Nor are we left entirely to conjecture in establishing the truth of this extraordinary circumstance. Several ancient canoes have been dug up, not only in the neighbourhood of Gainsborough, but also in the fens below Lincoln; and very lately, one about 2 miles to the east of that city. Other investigators have also discovered the existence of ancient forests in this neighbourhood, which must be supposed to have reference to a period long antecedent to our knowledge, and prove that this part of the country has undergone great changes over its whole surface."—Stork's Hist. of Gainsborough. This town is first mentioned under the Saxon heptarchy; and to that people its foundation has been ascribed. "An excellent salmon fishery in its immediate neighbourhood would collect together a few huts,"—observes the author of an elegant history of Lincolnshire, published in 1836,—"and its situation, near the spot where the Trent is in most seasons fordable, would undoubtedly distinguish it as a military position." Under the heptarchy, it belonged first to the kingdom of Northumberland, but afterward to that of Mercia. It was here that Alfred the Great celebrated his nuptials with Ealswitha, the daughter of a Mercian nobleman, in 868. The Danes who invaded England under Swein, King of Denmark, entered the Humber, sailed up to Gainsborough, and encamped with all their fleet; on which Uhtred, Duke of Northumberland, submitted himself, and not long after, all the inhabitants of Lindsey did Swein fealty. Huntingdon says that he spoiled the town. This sanguinary tyrant was secretly stabbed here when on the eve of departure. Like most places of any consequence, Gainsborough suffered considerably in the civil wars. During the rebellion, in 1745, it is said that a casket of money, designed to be sent to meet the young Pretender at Derby, was stopped at a wharf here, the loss of which caused the retreat of himself and his unfortunate followers. Some historians, however, consider this story to be rather doubtful. Here is an encampment presumed to be Danish. It is conjectured that Swein was interred in one of the neighbouring tumuli. Bishop Patrick, the well-known commentator on the Scriptures, was a native of this parish.

GALBY. See GAULBY.

GALHAMPTON. See NORTH-CADBURY.

GALLOW HUNDRED, in the western division of the county of Northfolk, in the north-west quarter of the county. Area 44,480 acres. Houses 1,755. Pop., in 1831, 9,378.

GALLOW-HILL, a township in the parish of Bolam, Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Morpeth. This was formerly the place of execution for the barony of Bolam; whence its name. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £9 16s. 6d. to the vicar of Bolam, and £62 1s. 4d. to the impropriators. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 33. Poor rates, in 1833, £18 8s.

GALMPTON. See GANTON.

GALTRES-FOREST, in the wapentake of Bulmer, north riding of Yorkshire, formerly a waste of trees, bogs, and moors, reaching from the walls of Isurium, now Aldborough, to the gates of York, nearly 20 miles to the south-east. In ancient days, guides were always in waiting at Bootham-bar, who were paid to conduct strangers and cattle through this forest, and to protect them from robbers and wild beasts. "While King Edward II. besieged Barwike," says Lambard, "the Scottes entered Ingland with an armye: the byshop of Ely, then chancellor, the archebyshop of Yorke, and some other, assembling theielves in haste, met withe theim about Suale, and weare, by reason of their disorder, put to flight; and had not the Forrest of Galtress receyved them, had bene al slaine." It is now cleared and drained, and has many populous villages scattered over it. It abounds in coal.

GAMBLESBY, a township in the parish of Addingham, Cumberland; 10 miles north-east of Penrith. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £175 10s. 5d. Here are 2 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 50. A. P. £1,790. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 301. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 4s.

GAMELSBY. See BIGLANDS and GAMELSBY.

GAMLINGAY, a parish in the hund. of Long-Stow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 2 miles north-north-east of Pottton. Living, a vicarage with a sinecure rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; the former rated at £5; gross income £188; the latter at £15 14s. 2d.; gross income £320. Patron of the vicarage, the bishop of Ely; of the rectory, Merton college, Oxford. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1710; and 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £71 1s., of which £60 constituted the endowment of almshouses for 10 poor widows, founded in 1754 by Elizabeth Lane. Poor rates, in 1838, £740 17s. The village is large and populous. The market, at one time held here, has been transferred to the neighbouring town of Pottton, in Bedfordshire. Acres 4,143. Houses 256. A. P. £2,945. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 1,319.

GAMPSTON, a hamlet in the parish of West Bridgford, Nottingham; 3 miles south-east of Nottingham, south of the Trent, and intersected by the Grantham canal. Acres 530. Houses 17. A. P. £1,623. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 107. Poor rates, in 1838, £21 15s.

GAMSTON, a parish in the South Clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 3½ miles south of East Retford, situated on the post-road from Newark-upon-Trent to Bawtry. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 16s. 5½d.; gross income £269. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1808. Here is a place of worship for the Baptists, the greater portion of the inhabitants being of that body. Here are also 2 daily schools. Acres 2,000. Houses 64. A. P. £2,413. Pop., in 1801, 410; in 1831, 306. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 14s.

GANEREW, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Monmouth, county of Hereford; 3 miles north-north-east of Monmouth, and north of the river Wye. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Whitechurch. Here is a daily school. Acres 950. Houses 32. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 148. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 3s.

GANFIELD HUNDRED, in the county of Berks, at the north-west corner of the county between the hundreds of Farringdon and Ock, and bordering with Oxfordshire. Area 17,020 acres. Houses 653. Pop., in 1831, 3,411.

GANILLY (GREAT AND LITTLE), two of the Scilly islands, south of the Lands-end, Cornwall, containing, the former 20, the latter 6 acres. They lie north of St. Mary's, and are appropriated to pasturage.

GANNICK (GREAT AND LITTLE), two others of the Scilly islands, containing, the former 18, and the latter 5 acres. They are appropriated to pasturage.

GANSTEAD, a township in the parish of Swine, east riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north-east by north of Kingston-upon-Hull. Acres 580. Houses 13. A. P. £1,135. Pop., in 1801, 58; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 6s.

GANTHORPE, a township in the parish of Terlington, north riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles west-south-west of New Malton. Here is a daily school. Acres 700. Houses 21. A. P. £742. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 110. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 19s.

GANTON, or GALMPTON, with POTTER-BROMPTON, a parish in the wapentake of Dicker, union of Scarborough, east riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-south-west of Scarborough. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £5 2s. 6d.; gross income £131. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. D. Legard, Bart. Vicarial tithes, the property of the vicar, were commuted in 1803. The church is a handsome edifice. Here are 2 daily schools. Ganton hall, the seat of the ancient family of Legard, is a neat edifice. Acres 3,650. Houses 51. A. P. £3,623. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 275. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 2s.

GARBOLDISHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Giltcross, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles south-south-east of East Harling. The living consists of two rectories, All Saints, and St. John the Baptist, formerly two distinct parishes united in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £19 16s. 0½; gross income £495. Patron, in 1835, C. M. Montgomery, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £46 4s. 2d., of which about £30 are applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £276 2s. The village stands in the narrow valley of a small rivulet. Acres 3,130. Houses 108. A. P. £4,172. Pop., in 1801, 577; in 1831, 718.

GARENDON, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of West Goscote, county of Leicester; 2 miles west of Loughborough. Here stood in ancient times a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1133 by Robert Bossu earl of Leicester, as a cell to Waverley abbey, Surrey. Acres 1,270. Houses 5. A. P. £3,103. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 51.

GARFORD, a chapelry in the parish of Marcham, county of Berks; 5 miles west by south of Abingdon, on the southern bank of the Ock. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Marcham. Acres 1,170. Houses 41. A. P. £1,977. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 209. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 11s.

GARFORTH (WEST), a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Skyrack, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles east by south of Leeds. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £8 17s. 8½d.; gross income £514. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Whitaker. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists, and a daily school with a small endowment. Acres 1,700. Houses 151. A. P. £2,695. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 782. Poor rates, in 1838, £196 15s.

GARGRAVE, a parish and township in the east division of the wapentake of Staincliff and Eweross, union of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles west-north-west of Skipton, on the southern bank of the Aire. It includes the townships of Bank-Newton, Cold Conston, Eshton, Flasby with Winterburn, and Gargrave. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £12 13s. 11½d.; gross income £750. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. M. Wright. Here is a Wesleyan chapel. There are 8 daily schools, including a free school. Charities, in 1824, £73 0s. 6d. per annum, besides a sum of £210 without interest. There were also two houses occupied, rent free, by poor persons. Poor rates, in 1838, £836 12s. In 1838, a cotton and a worsted mill here employed 86 hands. Fairs for horned cattle, and toys, are held on December 11th and 29th. On a fertile plain, about half-a-mile beneath the small town of Gargrave, were the buried remains of a Roman villa, called Kirk-sink, from a tradition that some great ecclesiastical edifice had here been swallowed up: the frame of a tessellated pavement was discovered here many years ago. Near Eshton is a remarkable petrifying spring. Acres 10,420. Houses 329. A. P. £14,596. Pop., in 1801, 1,342; in 1831, 1,748. Acreage of the township, including Eshton township, 3,490. Houses 218. A. P. £4,996. Pop., in 1801, 728; in 1831, 1,062. Poor rates, in 1838, £389 16s.

GARMONDSWAY-MOOR, a township in the parish of Bishops-Middleham, co.-palatine of Durham; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Durham, intersected by the Hartlepool Junction railway. This township is said to have derived its name from lying in the line of the via Garmundi, or road of Gormond the Dane, by which Canute passed barefooted on a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Cuthbert. Acres 1,040. Houses 6. A. P. £659. Pop., in 1801, 28; in 1831, 43. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 1s.

GARN, a township in the parish of Llanfawr, county of Merioneth, South Wales; 2 miles north of Bala. Pop., in 1821, 478. Other returns with the parish.

GARNER (THE), a small river which falls into the Wye a little above Whitchurch, Herefordshire.

GARRAGILL, a chapelry in the parish of Aldstone, county of Cumberland; 3 miles south-east of Aldston. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Aldstone. Divine service is performed in the chapel here only every third Sabbath, but there are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1780; and places of worship for the Independents, and the Primitive Methodists. Here are extensive lead mines, affording employment to a considerable proportion of the inhabitants. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held the 3d Friday of May and the last Friday of September. Houses 279. Pop., in 1801, 1,120; in 1831, 1,614. Other returns with the parish.

GARRAN (THE), a small river which falls into the Wye at Langarran, Herefordshire.

GARRETT, a hamlet in the parish of Wandsworth, county of Surrey; 7 miles south-west of London, on the river Wandle, and on the line of the Reigate and Wandsworth railroad—See CROYDON. This hamlet is celebrated for having been for many years frequented by the metropolitan rabble at the scene of a mock election on the calling of every new parliament. This circumstance gave rise to Foote's humorous farce of 'The Mayor of Garrett.'

GARRISON-SIDE, an extra-parochial liberty in the county part of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-south-east of Beverley. Acres 80. Houses 40. A. P. with Hessele. Pop., in 1821, 173; in 1831, 366.

GARRISTON, a township in the parish of Hawkswell, north riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Middleham. Acres 480. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 60. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 9s.

GARSDALE, a chapelry in the parish of Sedbergh, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles east by south of Sedbergh. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £80 2s.; gross income £77. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a Friends' meeting-house; and 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £9 per annum. Acres 10,930. Houses 124. A. P. £2,827. Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 657. Poor rates, in 1838, £294 6s.

GARSDON, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts, now included within the boundaries of Malmesbury; 2 miles east-north-east of Malmesbury. Living, a rectory with that of Lea in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £10 9s. 9½d.; gross income £347. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £444 10s. 2d. Patron, in 1835, P. C. Methuen, Esq. Acres 1,140. Houses 39. A. P. £1,850. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £34 19s.

GARSINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Bulington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; 5 miles south-east of Oxford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £14 19s. 9½d.; gross income £511. It is annexed to the headship of Trinity college, Oxford. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1824, £3 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £312. Acres 2,230. Houses 118. A. P. £4,333. Pop., in 1801, 493; in 1831, 597.

GARSTANG, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Amounderness, union of Garstang, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 11 miles south of Lancaster, and 40 north-north-east of Liverpool, on the river Wyre, and intersected by the Lancaster and Preston railway and canal. It includes the townships of Barnacre with Bonds, Billsborough, Cabus, Catterall, Claughton, Cleveley, Forton, Garstang, Kirkland, Nateby, Wimarleigh, and Nether Wyersdale, the hamlet of Holbeth, and the chapelry of Pilling. Acres 26,580. Houses 1,289. A. P. £37,346. Pop., in 1801, 5,789; in 1831, 6,927. Acres of the township 500. Houses 178. A. P. £2,209. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 929. Living, a vicarage and a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; the former, rated at £14 3s. 4d.; gross income £282: the latter not in charge, returned at £97 18s.; gross income £95. The church is situated about a mile-and-a-half from the town, in a part of the parish called Garstang Church-town, in the township of Kirkland. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Pedder. The perpetual curacy, the chapel for which is situated within the town, is in the patronage of the vicar of Garstang. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1784; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are 26 daily schools in the parish, several of which are endowed. Charities, in 1823, upwards of £200 per annum, of which £46 17s. constituted the endowment of Billsborough school; £6 15s. that of Garstang; £36 that of Kirkland; £24 of Pilling; and £8 1s. of Croshill school. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £2,782 18s.; of the township, £235 4s. The Garstang poor-law union comprehends 23 parishes. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £3,646.

The town of Garstang is situated between Preston and Lancaster on the great western north road, and close upon the river Wyre. By the Lancaster canal, which is carried over the Wyre by a handsome aqueduct near the end of its principal street, Garstang communicates with the principal rivers of England; and by the Preston and Lancaster railway the advantages of its locality are now increased; but its manufactures are not very extensive, though they have been recently on the increase. Calico printing is carried on to a considerable extent; and in 1838, 4 cotton and 3 worsted mills here, employed 693 hands. The market-day is Thursday, and from the first Thursday in Lent till Holy Thursday, every alternate Thursday is a cattle-market. Fairs for cattle and pedlery are held on Holy Thursday; for cattle, cloth, wool, and pedlery, on July 9th; and for cattle, horses, cloth, onions, and pedlery, on November 21st. This township was incorporated in 1314. In 1630 the charter was renewed with additional privileges. By this charter the government was vested in a bailiff and 7 capital burgesses, to be annually elected. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here.

GARSTON, a chapelry in the parish of Childwall, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6 miles south-east of Liverpool, on the north-west bank of the river Mersey. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £90; gross income £138. Patron, in 1835, Richard Watt, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. There are extensive salt-works here. Acres 1,680. Houses 181. A. P. £5,270. Pop., in 1801, 458; in 1831, 1,147. Poor rates, in 1838, £329 17s.

GARSTON. See GARVESTONE.

GARSTON (EAST), a parish partly in the hund. of Moreton, partly in the hund. of Wantage, but chiefly in the hund. of Lambourne, union of Hungerford, county of Berks; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Lambourne, on the northern bank of the river Kennet. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £239. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Here are 4 daily schools, 1 of which has an endowment of £6 per annum. Acres 4,520. Houses 138. A. P. £3,222. Pop., in 1801, 609; in 1831, 699. Poor rates, in 1838, £241 5s.

GARTH. See GORWYDD WITH GARTH AND ISTRAD.

GARTH, a hamlet in the parish of Llanfabon, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 5 miles north-north-west of Caerphilly. Houses 116. A. P. with the hamlet of Glynrumney, £1,480. Pop., in 1811, 395; in 1831, 575. Poor rates with the parish.

GARTH, a hamlet in the parish of Guildsfield, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 2 miles north-north-west of Welshpool. Pop., in 1811, 504; in 1821, 767. Other returns with the parish.

GARTHBEIBIO, a parish in the hund. of Mathrafal, union of Llanfyllin, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 9 miles west-north-west of Llanfair, on the northern bank of the river Banw. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; returned at £113 0s. 3d.; gross income £94. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Houses 59. A. P. £865. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 342. Poor rates, in 1838, £125.

GARTHBRENGY, a parish partly in the hund. of Penkelly, and partly in the hund. of Merthyr, union and county of Brecon, South Wales; 3 miles north of Brecknock, rising rather abruptly from the river Honddy. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £34 10s.; gross income £71. In the patronage of the prebendary of the collegiate church of Brecon. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £118. "The nave of the church is barn-roofed, and the pulpit is like the section of a meal tub."—Nicolson's Cam. Guide. Poor old women of this parish have right of admission to Games's hospital in the parish of St. John in this county. Houses 38. A. P. £515. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 3s.

GARTHELY, a township in the parish of Llanddw-brefi, county of Cardigan; 6 miles south of Lampeter. Houses 59. A. P. £370. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 216. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 7s.

GARTH-GYNDY, a hamlet in the parish of Gelli-gaer, county of Glamorgan; 5 miles north-north-west of Caerphilly. Houses 24. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 129. Poor rates with the parish.

GARTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 5s. 2d.; gross income £140. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £169 4s. vicarial; and £230 impropriated. Patron, in 1835, Lord Huntingtower. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1837, about £10 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 11s. Acres 1,090. Houses 23. A. P. £2,318. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 117.

GARTHORPE, a township in the parish of Luddington, county of Lincoln; 13 miles west-south-west of Barton-upon-Humber, on the western bank of the Trent. All tithes, the property of the lay-impropriators and the vicar, were commuted in 1796. Here are 2 daily schools. The soil of this parish is chiefly a cold clay with a little gravel: the ground is nearly flat. Acres 1,380. Houses 95. A. P. £3,965. Pop., in 1801, 388; in 1831, 454. Poor rates, in 1838, £283 19s.

GARTON, a parish in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, union of Skirlaugh, east riding of Yorkshire; 12 miles north-east by east of Kingston-upon-Hull, on the coast of the North sea. It includes the townships of Garton and Owstwick. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £6 1s. 0½d., returned at £114 7s. 2d.; gross income £102. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a neat Methodist chapel, erected in 1826; and a daily school. Grimston-Garth, the seat of the lineal descendants of Sylvester de Grimston, standard-bearer to William the Conqueror, is a very large mansion, of a castellated form, situated near the sea-shore, on one of the most elevated situations in Holderness. It is not only a very conspicuous object, but commands a variety of extensive and magnificent prospects. Acres 3,030. Houses 48. A. P. £4,134. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 297. Poor rates, in 1838, £178 5s.

GARTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a parish in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Dicking, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west-north-west of Great Driffield. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; returned at £110; gross income £125. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and the vicar, were commuted in 1774. Here are a Wesleyan and a Primitive Methodist chapel, the latter erected in 1823; and 2 daily schools, one of which, attached to the Wesleyan chapel, is endowed with £6 per annum, the proceeds of a share in the Driffield canal. Acres 4,380. Houses 78. A. P. £4,697. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 428. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 6s.

GARTREE WAPENTAKE, in the Lindsey division of the county of Lincoln, nearly in the centre of the county, and bounded on the east by the river Witham. Area 54,050 acres. Houses 1,242. Pop., in 1831, 6,963.

GARTREE HUNDRED, in the south-east side of the county of Leicester, bordering on Northamptonshire, from which it is separated by the river Willand. Area 80,740 acres. Houses 3,634. Pop., in 1831, 17,059. Those detached portions of this hundred which are situated east of the hundred of Goscote, are included in the northern division of the county: the remainder belongs to the southern division.

GARVESTONE, or GARSTON, a parish in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-south-east of East Dereham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 16s., gross income £190. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £262. Other tithes commuted in 1840. Patron, in 1835, Sir William Clayton, Bart. Here are 2 daily schools. "The right of lord of this manor was decided, in the time of King Edward, by the tenants in single combat." Charities, in 1834, £43 3s. per annum, besides an interest in Mowting's charity to the poor of the hundred. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 15s. Acres 1,100. Houses 70. A. P. £973. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 333.

GARWAY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Monmouth, county of Hereford; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Monmouth, and east of the river Monnow. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; certified to value £14, returned at £45; gross income £87. Patron, in 1835, W. R. Rankins. The Baptists have here a place of worship. Charities, in 1837, £4 10s. per annum, besides an interest in Frances Seudamore's charity to this and two other parishes, for the apprenticement of poor children, &c.: annual income about £45. Poor rates, in 1838, £264 2s. Acres 3,340. Houses 111. A. P. £2,365. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 513.

GASPER. See BROOK.

GASTHORPE, a parish in the hund. and union of Gaultres, county of Norfolk; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Thetford, in the vale of the Little Ouse. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Riddlesworth. Charities, in 1834, 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 17s. Acres 1,110. Houses 10. A. P. £456. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 112.

GATCOMBE, a parish in the liberty of West Medina, incorporation of the Isle of Wight, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Newport. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £25 18s. 9d.; gross income £650. Patron, the university of Oxford, in trust for St. Edmund's Hall. Here is a day and Sunday school with a small endowment. Acres 1,310. Houses 32. A. P. £2,789. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 263. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 15s.

GATE-BURTON. See BURTON-GATE.

GATEFORTH, a township in the parish of Brayton, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by west of Selby, and north of the river Aire. Great and small tithes, &c., of the township of Gateforth-with-Lund, were commuted in 1799. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,410. Houses 34. A. P. £1,440. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 123. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 3s.

GATELEY, a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5 miles west by north of Fulsham. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Brisley. Acres 1,580. Houses 20. A. P. £1,437. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 11s.

GATENBY, a township in the parish of Burneston, wapentake of Hallikeld, north riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Bedale. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount belonging to the vicar of Burneston, £49 1s. 6d. Acres 1,070. Houses 14. A. P. £1,330. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 69. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 2s.

GATESGILL. See RAUGHTON.

GATESHEAD,

An ancient borough and parish in the eastern division of Chester ward, union of Gateshead, county of Durham; 272 miles north-west of London, and 14 north of Durham. It is situated on the southern bank of the Tyne, opposite Newcastle, with which it communicates by Tyne bridge, a substantial and handsome structure. The town consists of only one good and wide street on the high road to the north. The several narrow streets and lanes which compose the remainder, branch off on each side of the principal or High-street. Bottle-bank is a street descending precipitately from the High-street towards the bridge; but since the formation of Church-street, which passes down the side of the hill in a curved course, carriages avoid this steep descent. Although many of the old houses have been rebuilt or modernized, and several streets formed in course of the present century, there is little appearance of wealth, or of houses belonging to the richer class. The town is densely populated with families of manufacturers and pit men. The master manufacturers, and proprietors of coal-pits within the borough, reside in Newcastle, or in the vicinity of the High and Low Fell, which are hamlets in the southern and rural district of the parish, where they enjoy a better atmosphere than in the town. A singular project has been recently entertained for lighting Newcastle and Gateshead—the Newcastle and Shields railway—the towns of North and South Shields, Sunderland, and Wearmouth—by means of the natural supply of gas at Wallsend! This gas has long been uselessly burned at the pit-mouth. Some time ago, however, a Mr. Douglas obtained a patent for the useful application of these natural supplies of gas; and, more recently, he has leased the copious, if not inexhaustible, supply at Wallsend. His proposal to apply it to public purposes has been under the consideration of many influential and enterprising gentlemen in Newcastle, who seem to be sanguine in their expectations of success and profit in this novel speculation. The gas, except that it is diluted with about 10 per cent. of atmospheric air—an evil which is not without remedy—is remarkably pure—much purer, we are assured, than that now consumed in Newcastle and Gateshead. The facilities afforded by the railways which line the Tyne on both its banks, for the laying down of pipes to convey it to the towns at the termini, are obvious, and the railways themselves may be also readily lighted. Returns, including the parish of Gateshead-fell:—Acres 3,320. Houses 2,317. A. P. £25,205. Pop., in 1801, 8,597; in 1831, 15,177.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a rectory with the curacy of St. Edmund's, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £27 13s. 4d.; gross income £750. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The parish-church, a cruciform structure, from the shape and hewn work of the stones, appears to have been built out of the ruins of some Roman edifice. This edifice has been recently repaired at an expense of £2,000. The ancient Trinity chapel has also been restored at an expense of £1,400. Here are a Presbyterian church, formed in 1783; 4 Wesleyan Methodist, one of which was formed in 1812; and one of the New Connexion, in 1834: here are also 2 places of worship for the Independents; and at Bevonside there is a Roman Catholic chapel. There are 29 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with the interest of £300; two others are National schools, and contain 599 pupils.

The religious institutions which flourished at Monkchester—see NEWCASTLE—no doubt gave rise to those on the south side of the Tyne. Amongst these was the free chapel or hospital of St. Edmund the king and martyr, now called King James's hospital. Tanner informs us that one Utan was abbot of a monastery here prior to 653; but the date of its foundation and the name of its founder are alike unknown. It appears to have been converted into an hospital prior to the dissolution of the religious houses by Henry VIII.; for Leland says, "whereas the hospital of St. Edmund, at Gateshead, in Wyrale, was some tyme a monastery, as I have heard; and be lykelyhod the same that Bede spekythe of." Its annual value is stated, in Dugdale's Monasticon, at £5 9s. 4d.; but, according to Speed, at £109 4s. 4d.: probably the former was the value delivered to the king's commissioners, and the latter the true value. Although the ancient history of St. Edmund's hospital is involved in obscurity; it is certain, that Bishop Farnham, in 1248, annexed it to the chapel and hospital of St. Trinity. Amongst the numerous charters respecting this institution, carefully preserved in Gateshead vestry, is one dated 28th April, 1485, in which it is styled "the chantry of the Holy Trinity in the hospital of St. Edmund the Confessor." The nunnery of St. Bartholomew, in Newcastle, having suffered severely from fire and other causes, the revenues of this hospital were for a time appropriated towards its relief. After the dissolution it remained in the hands of the crown; but masters were regularly appointed to it. The charters having been afterwards lost, and the revenues partly converted to purposes of private emolument, it was refounded by James I. in 1610. The new society was ordered to consist of a master, who should always be the rector of Gateshead for the time being, and of 3 poor brethren. In 1810 the number of brethren was augmented by act of parliament; and there are now 10 younger brethren besides the 3 elder. Each of the elder or ancient brethren has £25 per annum, and occasionally a suit of clothes. The younger brethren must be single men, 56 years of age or upwards, of good character, and not possessing more than £20 a-year. They each receive £12 per annum, and occasionally a suit of clothes. £40 per annum are paid to a chaplain who officiates in a new chapel to the hospital, built in 1808-10 by subscription; and intended to serve also as a National school-house. The master of a Sunday school, held in the chapel, receives £5 per annum. The average annual income of the master for the 6 years previous to 1836, was £140 10s. The whole of the appointments are made by the master, usually from inhabitants of Gateshead. The ancient brethren reside in houses built, about the year 1812, on lands belonging to the hospital: there are small gardens attached to them. The revenues—derived from lands and mines—amounted, in 1836, to £525 17s. The bishop of Durham is patron and visiter of the hospital. The ruins of the old chapel of St. Edmund are situated about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of the bridge on the Sunderland road: they still form a good specimen of early English architecture. An almshouse, erected in this parish about the year 1755, and other buildings thereafter erected with money derived from a bequest by Thomas Powell, in 1728, and from several other benefactions to the poor, were afterwards appropriated to parochial purposes as a poor-house. Other charities, possessed by this parish in 1830, produced an income of about £77 8s. 6d. Poor rates, in 1838, £4,123 8s. The Gateshead poor-law union comprehends 9 parishes, embracing an area of 36 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 31,017. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,011. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,078; in 1839, £7,212 3s.

Government and Franchise.—From the earliest period of its records till 1695, Gateshead was governed by a bailiff nominated by the bishop. Since that year, and previous to the passing of the new municipal act, it was governed by two stewards, chosen by the borougholders and freemen; but they exercised no jurisdiction or municipal authority over the borough, and received no tolls or dues of any kind within it. There is no charter extant; but a belief exists that the borough was once incorporated, and some faint traces remain of corporate titles, offices, and customs, a common seal, and considerable borough property descending in perpetuity. The ancient deeds and papers deposited in a chest kept by the stewards were surreptitiously removed many years ago; but one of the remaining documents of date 1696, contains allusions to "the town and borough of Gateshead," and to a grant by Queen Elizabeth, "of Bensham and Harps-head to the town and borough of Gateshead." Bishops Cosin and Tunstal, and Oliver Cromwell, incorporated a number of trading companies here; but the corporations almost all ultimately became extinct. By the new municipal act, the borough was divided into 3 wards, and incorporated under the style of the borougholders and freemen of the borough of Gateshead: 6 aldermen and 18 councillors were appointed for its government; and it was included in schedule A, amongst boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. The boundaries of the borough coincide with those of the township and parish, with the addition of a tongue of land belonging to the chapelry of Heworth, in the adjoining parish of Jarrow, which runs up into the heart of this parish on the south. The income of the borough, for 1839, was £636 1s. 10d., principally arising from borough rates; but £183 15s. 5d. arose from interest and money borrowed: expenditure;—

Po'ice and constables,	£276 7 9
Markets and fairs, &c.,	226 11 8
Salaries, &c., to officers,	101 11 0
Printing, advertising, stationery, &c.,	46 14 0
Other charges,	63 18 5

Total expenditure, £715 2 10

Gateshead was also enfranchised by the Reform act, and now returns one member to parliament. The number of electors registered, in 1837, was 534; the number who polled at the general election, in 1837, was 372. Previous to the passing of the new municipal act, the returning officer was annually appointed by the sheriff of the county of Durham; but the mayor or chief alderman of Gateshead is now the returning officer. The boundaries of the parliamentary and municipal borough are coincident.

Manufactures and trade.—Gateshead is progressively and rapidly increasing in importance as a manufacturing district. There are extensive manufactories of chain-cables, with numerous iron and brass works and glass-houses, several of which are very extensive: there are also other manufactories of different kinds, including a worsted mill employing, in 1838, 27 hands. About 500 hands are employed in making glass bottles alone. There are extensive collieries within the borough; and in Gateshead-fell are situated the great grindstone quarries, whence Newcastle is said to have derived all its commercial fame for "Newcastle grindstones," which are exported to and used in all quarters of the globe. The municipal commissioners stated, in their report, that "Gateshead is very desirous of obtaining the power of holding a market within the borough, and of building quays and wharfs on the Gateshead side of the river, without the necessity of procuring a license from the corporation of Newcastle, in whom the conservatorship of the river is now vested."

Railways.—The Brandling Junction railway, opened to the public on 5th September, 1839, takes its name from the projector, Robert William Brandling, Esq. of Low Gosforth. It unites the rivers Tyne and Wear, and the towns of Gateshead, South Shields, and Sunderland. A continuation from Gateshead to Redheugh unites it with the Newcastle and Carlisle railway—see articles CARLISLE and NEWCASTLE—thus completing the communication, by railway, between the German Ocean and the Irish sea, through the Carlisle and Maryport railway. The course of the Brandling Junction railway lies from Gateshead to the coast at Hedworth, where it branches off south-east to Monk-Wearmouth, and north-east to South Shields. The objects contemplated in this work were the conveyance of passengers between Newcastle, Sunderland, and South-Shields; the transmission of coals, the rich produce of the Felling, Sheriff-Hall, Washington, and Pelaw districts, to the ports of shipment; the transport and distribution of freestone from the vicinity of Gateshead; and of limestone from the vicinity of Sunderland; and a share of the southern traffic, by its junction with the Clarence, Darlington, and Stockton railways, through that between Sunderland and Durham. The Great North of England railway starts from the Newcastle and Carlisle railway at Redheugh the terminus of the Brandling Junction railway. It proceeds for some distance nearly parallel to the turnpike road, which it crosses by a lofty viaduct near the Hermitage, and runs through the county of DURHAM:—which see.

History.—“When or from whom the borough of Gateshead had its foundation we are ignorant. The first record we find relative to it, is that of Bishop Pudsey, in the year 1164, in which he gives to the burgesses of Gateshead the liberty of his forest there, under certain restrictions. By this charter the bishop grants also to the burgesses, that each shall have, in right of his burgage, similar liberties to those enjoyed by the burgesses of Newcastle in right of their burgages; and that they shall have free passage within the liberties of the palatinate with their goods, clear of all dues and exactions. In Edward the Sixth's time, Gateshead was annexed to Newcastle; but, in the succeeding reign, it was reunited to the bishopric of Durham. Tyne bridge in part appertains to the county of Durham.”—“The most material circumstance in which we find Gateshead noted in ancient history, is touching the catastrophe related of Bishop Walcher; when, on the 14th of May, 1080, the church was reduced to ashes.”—Hutchinson's Durham.—Lambard, alluding to the murder of Walcher by “the countrymen of Northumberland,” says, “But my two monks, Mathew Paris, and Marian Scotus, cannot agree of the circumstances of this historie; for the one chargethe him with manifest extortion, but the other sayethe he was cruelly kylled for suspicion to have consented to the murder of Liuf, a nobleman, wherof he was not gilty at al, but that Leofwyn his chapleine was the only worker of that ungracious webbe. The one sayethe that he boughte the Shryewicke of Northumberland of the kinge, and that he did not only plucke off the dese, but the skyn, and al over the heades of the poore subjects: the other wil be acknowen of no faulte at al.” The manors of Gateshead and Whickham were let to Queen Elizabeth by Bishop Barnes, for a term of 99 years. In the following year, she consigned the lease to the corporation of Newcastle; and they have since passed through the hands of various individuals.

The etymology of the name Gateshead has long been a matter of doubt and dispute with antiquaries. Camden and others supposed that the Gabrocentum of the Notitia was here; and Stukeley, after finding the place called Ad Capræ Caput by Rede, and seeing a goat's head used as a sign, found that Gabrocentum in British signified goat's head. Simeon of Durham, speaking of the murder of Walcher, says it happened at Ad Capræ Caput, which he also terms

Gateshead. Some think that because a branch of Watling street ended here, it was called gates head, or end; gate in ancient as in modern times, signifying a street or road. The celebrated and ingenious Daniel De Foe resided in Gateshead, whilst he wrote his much admired ‘Adventures of Robinson Crusoe;’ the chief incidents of which he obtained from Alexander Selkirk, a native of Anstruther, in Fifeshire, Scotland, who was shipwrecked on the island of Juan Fernandez: and it is reported, with not much honour to the memory of De Foe, that he obtained Selkirk's minutes, under pretence of writing his story; but applied them to his own emolument. The bishop of Durham had a palace here in 1614. At the head of Oakwellgate is a house still called King John's Palace. The loyal Sir John Cole had his gardens and residence here, between the High-street and Oakwellgate.

GATESHEAD-FELL, a parish in the east division of Chester ward, union of Gateshead, co. palatine of Durham; 3 miles south of Newcastle. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; gross income £194. Patron, the Bishop of Durham. The church was not finished till 1825, although an act of parliament was passed in 1808 for its erection, and for making this district a separate parish. It had previously formed part of the parish of Gateshead, under which all the returns are included; but although this act made it a distinct parish and rectory, it is provided “that nothing in this act contained shall alter or affect the manor of Gateshead, or the division of the said parish into townships, or separate districts, for the maintenance of the poor, or for any other civil purpose whatever; but that the said manor and parish of Gateshead shall, as to those purposes, remain in all respects the same as if this act had not passed.” Here are the celebrated “Newcastle Grindstone” quarries alluded to under article Gateshead. There are also collieries in this parish. Here William the Conqueror gained a decisive victory over Malcolm King of Scotland.

GATTON, a parish, and formerly a borough, in the east half-hundred of Reigate, union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 9 miles south-south-west of Croydon, in the line of the Croydon railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 2s. 8½d., returned at £25; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. The old church was a structure of a very humble character. It has recently been altered and fitted up at considerable expense, and in a style resembling the chapel of a college. Here is a daily school. This was a borough by prescription; and its burgesses, from 7 to 12 in number, possessed the privilege of sending two members to parliament, from 29^o Henry VI. until disfranchised by the reform act. Gatton-Park carried with it the entire direction and disposal of the borough, and was valued accordingly. The approach to this mansion has been much admired. The river Mole has its principal sources in this parish. Here is a quarry of most valuable white soft stone, highly prized for ovens, furnaces, &c. From a number of coins and other antiquities found here, this is supposed to have been a Roman station. Acres 1,140. Houses 23. A. P. £2,331. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 145. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 4s.

GAULBY, or GALBY, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Billesdon, county of Leicester; 8 miles east of Leicester. It includes the township of Frisby. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £18 2s. 6d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, G. A. L. Keck, Esq. Acres 1,170. Houses 26. A. P. £2,784. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 13s.

GAUTBY, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-west by north of Horncastle, on a branch of the Witham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 3s. 4d., returned at £83; gross income £77. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,010. Houses 24. A. P. £1,526. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 109. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 1s.

GAWCOTT, a chapelry in the parish of Buckingham, county of Buckingham; 2 miles south-south-west of Buckingham. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £155. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. The ancient chapel was long in a state of ruin, but a new one was opened in 1828. Great and small tithes, the property of the lord of the manor, clerical rector, and vicar, were commuted in 1801. Acres 550. Houses and A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1821, 566.

GAWSWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester; 3½ miles south-west by south of Macclesfield, intersected by the Grand Trunk canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 4s. 4½d.; gross income £805. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Harrington. Here is a day and Sunday National school, partly supported by endowment. Acres 5,480. Houses 137. A. P. £4,825. Pop., in 1801, 697; in 1831, 847.

GAYDON, a parish in the Kingston division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Southam, county of Warwick; 3 miles north-east of Kingston. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bishop's Itchington. Acres 1,140. Houses 50. A. P. £1,867. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 213. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 13s.

GAYHURST, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnel, county of Buckingham; 2½ miles north-west of Newport-Pagnel, and west of the river Ouse. Living, a rectory united with that of Stoke-Goldington, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 0s. 2½d.; gross income £317. Patron, in 1835, T. G. Wyndham. Acres 840. Houses 22. A. P. £1,465. Pop., in 1801, including the extra-parochial district of Gorefields, 89; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 6s.

GAYLES, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Ravensworth, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-west by north of Richmond. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,840. Houses 48. A. P. £1,856. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1838, £36.

GAYTON, a township in the parish of Heswall, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north-west by north of Great-Neston. There is here a ferry into Flintshire over the estuary of the Dee, which is nearly 4 miles broad. Acres 840. Houses 20. A. P. £1,038. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 110. Poor rates, in 1838, £38.

GAYTON, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge-Lynn, county of Norfolk; 7½ miles east by south of King's-Lynn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 4s. 8d.; gross income £292. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £483 18s. 6d. due to the bishop of Ely, and £310 to the vicar. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. Here was a Benedictine priory, founded by William de Scobies in the reign of William the Conqueror. Charities, in 1834, about £59 13s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £319 9s. Acres 2,990. Houses 137. A. P. £3,200. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 711.

GAYTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Towcester, county of Northampton; 4½ miles north of Towcester, intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £15 5s. 2½d.; gross income £578. Patron, Sidney college, Cambridge. Here are 3 daily schools and almshouses, but without endowment. Charities, in 1825, £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 4s. Acres 1,580. Houses 85. A. P. £2,543. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 461.

GAYTON, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Pirehill, union and county of Stafford; 5 miles north-east of Stafford, north-east of the Trent, and near the Grand Trunk canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £11 10s., returned at £36; gross income £46. Patron, in 1835, J. C. Browne, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1825, £4 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 1s. Acres 1,270. Houses 61. A. P. £1,859. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 296.

GAYTON-LE-MARSH, a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles north-north-west of Alford, situated near a small river which flows into the North sea. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 10s. 2½d.; gross income £459. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £419 17s. 7d. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,250. Houses 51. A. P. £3,031. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 306. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 17s.

GAYTON-LE-WOLD, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6 miles west by south of Louth, near the source of the river Bain. It includes the extra-parochial district of Grimblethorpe. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 11s., returned at £102; gross income £156. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,730. Houses 15. A. P. £1,495. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 3s.

GAYTON-THORPE, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge-Lynn, county of Norfolk; 8 miles north-west by north of Swaffham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6, returned at £90; gross income £267. Patron, in 1835, A. Hamond, Esq. Acres 2,110. Houses 26. A. P. £1,518. Pop., in 1801, 113; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 15s.

GAYWOOD, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge-Lynn, county of Norfolk; ¾ mile east of King's-Lynn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 13s. 4d.; gross income £505. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Hutton. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1834, £23 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £349 13s. A fair for horses, &c., is held at Gaywood, on June 22d; and for cheese, on October 17th, held at Lynn custom-house-quay. Acres 2,380. Houses 200. A. P. £3,273. Pop., in 1801, 410; in 1831, 924.

GAZELEY, a parish in the hund. of Risbridge, union of Newmarket, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles east by south of Newmarket. It includes the hamlet of Higham-Green. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectory of Kentford, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely, not in charge; rated at £10 10s. 5d.; gross income £440; in the patronage of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Charities, in 1829, 17s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £709 5s. Acres 5,470. Houses 134. A. P. £2,640. Pop., in 1801, 523; in 1831, 737.

GEDDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Bothwell, on a branch of the Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £5 11s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £100 4s. 6d.; gross income £136. Tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1807. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Buccleugh. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £125 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £362 2s. Here was formerly the castle, or Hall Close, where Henry II. assembled his parliament in 1188, in order to raise money for a crusade. Acres 2,140. Houses 171. A. P. £2,957. Pop., in 1801, 663; in 1831, 795.

GEDGRAVE, a chapelry in the parish of Sudborne, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Orford. Returns with Orford.

GEDLING, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by east of Nottingham, on a branch of the Trent. It includes the hamlet of Carlton, and the township of Stoke-Bardolph. The living includes a rectory and a vicarage in mediety, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated, the former at £14 6s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., the latter at £6 16s. 8d.; gross income £1,150. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Chesterfield. Rectorial and vicarial tithes, of the hamlets of Gelding, Stoke-Bardolph, and Carlton, the property of the lay-impropriator and clerical rector, were commuted in 1792. Here are 9 daily schools. Charities, in 1828, £31 5s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £532 2s. Acres 4,490. Houses 473. A. P. £9,628. Pop., in 1801, 1,530; in 1831, 2,343.

GEDNEY, a parish in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, union of Holbeach, county of Lincoln; 3 miles east by south of Holbeach. It includes the chapelry of Gedney-Hill. Living, a vicarage with a sinecure rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated, the former at £30 11s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £799; the latter at £23 11s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £800. The church is remarkable for the beauty of its architecture. It was built by the abbots of Croyland. Patron for the vicarage, the Crown; and for the sinecure, the Crown two turns, and the family of the Claytons one. Here are 4 Dissenting chapels and 6 daily schools. There are here remains of Roman intrenchments, near which Roman coins have been found. Acres 12,110. Houses 365. A. P. £16,297. Pop., in 1801, 1,307; in 1831, 1,862. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,309 6s.

GEDNEY-HILL, a chapelry in the parish of Gedney, county of Lincoln; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Croyland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; certified to value £38, returned at £70; gross income £102. The patrons are certain feoffees of land bequeathed to charitable uses. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum. Acres 1,670. Houses 64. A. P. £2,440. Pop., in 1801, 265; in 1831, 371. Poor rates, in 1838, £265 13s.

GELDESTONE, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Beccles, and north of the river Waveney. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6, returned at £130; gross income £196. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and Sunday Lancastrian school. Charities, in 1835, £7 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 16s. Acres 940. Houses 60. A. P. £1,292. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 340.

GELLI-GAER, a parish in the hund. of Caerphilly, union of Merthyr Tidvil, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 14 miles north-north-west of Cardiff. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £260. Patron, the Marquess of Bute. There is a chapel-of-ease in the hamlet of Brithdir; and an Independent church, formed in 1750. There are 2 daily schools, containing 102 children: one of these is endowed for clothing, educating, and apprenticing 20 boys, for whose instruction the master is allowed £30 per annum; the funds accrue from a farm bequeathed for that purpose by Mr. E. Lewis. Poor rates, in 1838, £573 12s. This parish is watered by the rivers Rhyummy, Taff, and Clydach; and it abounds in coal and iron, the working of which forms the chief employment of the inhabitants. Houses 344. A. P. £14,652. Pop., in 1801, returned under the five hamlets of Brith-dir, Cefn, Garth-gynydd, Hengoed, and Ysgwyddwyn, 1,051; in 1831, 1,825.

GELLI, one of three hamlets of which the parish of Vainor, county of Brecon, South Wales, is composed. Houses 42. A. P., including that of Dyffryn, £1,153. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 248.

GELT (THE), a small river of Cumberland, rising in Croglin-fell. Its runs through Geltsdale or King's Forest, a wild district on the borders of Northumberland, whence it follows a north-west course, and falls into the Irthing, about 2 miles south-west of Brampton. The viaduct on the Carlisle and Newcastle railway line, at Middle Gelt-Bridge, close to the great cut at Cowran hills, near Brampton, is a remarkable structure. It crosses two public roads, as well as the river Gelt, at a height of 80 feet from the bed of the river; over which it is carried in an oblique direction, so as to prevent any bend in the railway. The arches, 3 in number, are each of 33 feet span, and are built at an angle of 45 degrees.

GEMBLING, a township in the parish of Easton-upon-Wolds, east riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles east-south-east of Great Driffield. Acres 960. Houses 15. A. P. £1,210. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £33.

GENEUR-GLYN HUNDRED, county of Cardigan, South Wales. Houses 2,377. Pop., in 1831, 12,592.

GENEVEVE (ST.). See FORNHAM ST. GENEVEVE.

GENNYS (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Lesnewth, union of Stratton, county of Cornwall; 10 miles north-north-east of Camelford, on the shore of the Bristol channel. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8, returned at £140; gross income £147. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £148 5s. vicarial, and £214 18s. 7d. impropriated. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of St. Germans. Here is a daily school. Acres 5,580. Houses 138. A. P. £2,562. Pop., in 1801, 597; in 1831, 761. Poor rates, in 1838, £206 6s.

GEORGE-NYMPTON, a parish in the hund. and union of South Molton, county of Devon; 2 miles south of South Molton, on the northern bank of the river Mole. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Exeter; rated at £9 19s. 2d.; gross income £335. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. D. Acland. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,240. Houses 53. A. P. £1,830. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 268. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 11s.

GEORGEHAM, a parish in the hund. of Braunton, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 8 miles north-west by west of Barnstaple. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £40 17s. 11d.; gross income £622. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. F. Hole. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1822, £10 0s. 3d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £332 18s. Acres 4,950. Houses 176. A. P. £4,220. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 925.

GEORGE (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Barton-Regis, union of Clifton, county of Gloucester; 2 miles east of Bristol, on the northern bank of the Avon. Living, a vicarage not in charge, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the lio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 5s. 7½d.; nett income £530. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Bristol. Here are 4 daily, and 2 day and Sunday schools. Acres 1,280. Houses 1,337. A. P. £8,739. Pop., in 1801, 4,038; in 1831, 6,285. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,635 13s.

GEORGE (ST.) BLOOMSBURY. See GILES ST. IN THE FIELDS.

GEORGE HUNDRED, in the Dorchester division of the county of Dorset. Area 1,547 acres. Houses 435. Pop., in 1831, 2,349.

GEORGE (ST.) IN-THE-EAST, a parish in the lower division of Ossulston hund., union of St. George in-the-East, county of Middlesex; situated in the Tower hamlets division of London, on the northern bank of the Thames. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £400. Patrons, Brazenose college, Oxford. Here are 44 daily schools, two of which were founded and endowed, in 1719, by Mr. Raine, who bestowed property and funds producing, at the time of inquiry, in 1819, together with subscriptions, &c. an annual income of about £1,025 14s. 6d., nearly all expended on the education and maintenance of children, marriage-portions, and apprentice fees. Poor rates, in 1838, £16,531. The St. George in-the-East poor-law union comprehends 1 parish, embracing an area of 230 statute acres; with a population returned, in 1831, at 38,505. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £17,706. Expenditure, in 1838, £11,683; in 1839, £11,999 12s. This was formerly a hamlet in the parish of Stepney. Acres 230. Houses 5,764. A. P. £131,074. Pop., in 1801, 21,170; in 1831, 38,505.

GEORGE (ST.), an island of Cornwall, opposite to East and West Looe.

GERMANS (ST.), a borough, market-town, and parish, in the south division of the hund. of East, union of St. Germans, county of Cornwall; 10 miles west by north of Plymouth, on the post-road from Plymouth to Liskeard. Besides the borough and vill of St. Germans, this parish, which is one of the largest in the county, being upwards of 20 miles in circumference, contains the hamlets of Bake, Catchfrench, Col-drinnick, Cuddenbeck, Cutcrew, Hendra, Molineck, Polemartin, Treskelly, and part of Tidiford. Acres 10,050. Houses 488. A. P. £15,283. Pop., in 1801, 2,030; in 1831, 2,586. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; gross income £101. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Here are 13 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £13 per annum; and almshouses occupied by 12 widows, who have been hitherto placed there by Lord St. Germans, who keeps the almshouses in repair, and by whom the widows are paid 1s. each, and a peck of wheat, on New-year's-day. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,300 12s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of St. Germans, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The St. Germans poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 65 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 16,069. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,131. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,672; in 1839, £4,731 9s.

St. Germans is situated in a very romantic dell, on the borders of a creek formed by the river Lynher. It consists of one principal street, built on the slope of the dell. Though it has ever been of little importance as a town, it is remarkable as one of the oldest borough and market-towns in the county. Leland calls it "a poor fischar town," and adds that "the glory of it stood by the priory." Carew, treating of it, says, "the Church-towne mustereth many inhabitants and sundry ruines, but little wealth, occasioned eyther through abandoning their fishing trade as some conceive, or by their being abandoned of the religious people, as the greater sort imagine." The borough is governed by a portreeve annually chosen at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The chief magistrate, who has been also called the mayor, was anciently vested with power, as bailiff of the borough, to make any house in it the prison of the individual arrested. Until disfranchised by the reform act, this place sent two members to parliament ever since the year 1562: the right of election was vested in all householders who had resided 12 months within the limits of the borough: there were only 19 houses within the limits. The inhabitants still, for the most part, support themselves by fishing. The market has long been in desuetude; but there are still two fairs for cattle, May 28th and August 1st.

The episcopal see of the bishopric of Cornwall was anciently at St. Germans. Whitaker supposes the see to have been established here so early as the year 614; but, though he has satisfactorily proved it to have been situated here so long as it existed in Cornwall at all, his learned volumes on the Cathedral of Cornwall afford no proof of its existence at that early period; nor is there any allusion in history to a bishop of St. Germans before the year 910, when Athelstan was appointed to the see. King Athelstan made Conan bishop of St. Germans in 936. After the death of Bishop Burwold, and about the year 1040, the bishopric of Cornwall was united to the bishopric of Crediton, at the solicitation of Livingus; as already observed under article EXETER,—which see. Bishop Leofric changed the seculars of a college founded here by King Athelstan into canons of the order of St. Augustine; between whom and the bishop the manor of St. Germans was divided. Leland says that Bartholomew (Iscanus), Bishop of Exeter, who died in 1172, changed the monks of St. Germans into canons regular on account of the laxity of their lives. At the suppression of this monastery in 1535, it was valued, according to Dugdale, at £243 8s. clear yearly income. Henry VIII. leased the site of the priory and other lands to John Champenowne and others, and soon afterwards granted the fee to Katherine, his widow, and others. The cathedral, which is now the parish church, was first built in the reign of Athelstan, when it formed part of the priory founded at the same time for secular canons. In point of architectural beauty it is equal, if not superior, to any in the county. At the west end are two towers, both of which are said formerly to have been octagonal; but the south one is now of a square form, and contains the clock. Between them is a remarkably fine entrance doorway or circular receding arch, 20 feet wide, with four pillars on each side, having plain square bases and capitals. The arch contains seven mouldings, with alternate zigzag ornaments, which are also continued between the pillars. Over the arch is a pediment, with a cross at the top resembling an heraldic cross. Above are three narrow round-headed windows; and as great part of the edifice is richly mantled with ivy, it forms a very interesting and beautiful subject for the pencil. The interior is spacious; and the capitals of the pillars which divide the aisles from the nave, are curiously ornamented with Saxon sculpture. Here are a great variety of memorials, but the most remarkable is that of the learned Walter Moyle, who died at the age of 49, in the year 1721, and the superb monument by Rysbrack, in memory of Edward Elliot, Esq. who died in the following year. Cuddenbeck, the ancient seat of the bishops, has long been occupied as a farm, and now exhibits little of its ancient episcopal grandeur. St. Germans takes its name from St. Germanus, bishop of Auxerre, in France, who is said to have resided here for a time during his visit to England.

GERMAN'S-WEEK, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Oakhampton, county of Devon; 11 miles west by south of Oakhampton. Living, a curacy annexed to the perpetual curacy of Broadwood-wigger. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,570. Houses 65. A. P. £901. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 370. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 2s.

GERMOE, a parish in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Helston, county of Cornwall; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Helston. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Breage. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £124 1s. Acres 1,360. Houses 116. A. P. £1,373. Pop., in 1801, 629; in 1831, 1,175.

GERRANS, a parish in the east division of Powder hundred, union of Truro, county of Cornwall; 7 miles south-south-west of Tregony, at the head of St. Maw's harbour, on the coast of the English channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £15 12s. 6d.; gross income £281. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1822, and 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £9 2s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £337 1s. Acres 2,470. Houses 164. A. P. £3,487. Pop., in 1801, 771; in 1831, 766.

GESTINGTHORPE, or GUESTINGTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Sudbury, county of Essex; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Sudbury. Living, a sinecure rectory and a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated, the former at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £495; the latter at £7; gross income £150; in the patronage, in 1835, of J. P. Elwes, Esq. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, about £16 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £561 19s. Acres 2,630. Houses 108. A. P. £3,051. Pop., in 1801, 544; in 1831, 801.

GIDDING, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Stow, county of Suffolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Stow-Market. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £4 13s. 4d., returned at £98 18s.; gross income £106. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Ipswich. Acres 580. Houses 26. A. P. £570. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 147. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 6s.

GIDDING (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of Oundle, county of Huntingdon; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Stilton. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 5s. 2d., returned at £114; gross income £104. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. Here are a daily school, and almshouses with a small endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 18s. Acres 2,050. Houses 96. A. P. £1,730. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 452.

GIDDING (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of Oundle, county of Huntingdon; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Stilton. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 6s. 4d., returned at £128; gross income £126. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 640. Houses 6. A. P. £879. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 48. Poor rates, in 1838, £11 8s.

GIDDING-STEEPLE, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Stilton. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 17s. $8\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, J. Heathcote, Esq. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,080. Houses 19. A. P. £1,110. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £23.

GIDLEY, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, union of Oakhampton, county of Devon; $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east by east of Oakhampton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £14 19s.; gross income £80. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. — Whipham. Charities, in 1823, £18 per annum, arising from church-lands. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 6s. Acres 2,060. Houses 24. A. P. £557. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 155.

GIGGLESWICK, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Eweross, union of Settle, west riding of Yorkshire; about 1 mile west by north of Settle, on the western bank of the river Ribbles. Acres 15,200. Houses 564. A. P. £17,638. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Giggleswick, Rathmill, Settle, and Stainforth, 2,101; in 1831, 3,017. Acres of the township, 4,280. Houses 143. A. P. £5,592. Pop., in 1801, 556; in 1831, 780. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £21 3s. 4d., returned at £75; gross income £83. The church is a spacious and handsome structure. Patrons, in 1835, J. N. Coulthurst and J. Hartley, Esqs., alternately. Giggleswick has long been celebrated for its grammar-school, founded in 1553 by Edward VI., and endowed with property belonging to the dissolved monastery of Nether Acaster, lying at North Cave, South and North Kelthorp, &c., and formerly producing £23 3s. per annum; but in consequence of drainage, enclosures, and other improvements, now yielding an annual income of more than £1,140. By the charter of foundation it is ordained that the school should consist of a master and usher, and that 8 inhabitants should be a body corporate, and act as governors. It is open for gratuitous instruction to pupils from 'every quarter of the globe,' if their moral characters be good. There are 6 scholarships at Christ's college, Cambridge, for scholars educated at this school. The pupils were taught for nearly half a century by the father of the celebrated Archdeacon Paley, who himself received here the rudiments of learning under his father. This parish also possesses 2 day and Sunday National schools, one of which is endowed, and 5 daily schools. Charities, in 1825, exclusive of those already mentioned, about £91 18s. 10d. per annum, small portions of which belonged more particularly to the townships of Giggleswick, Settle, and Rathmill. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,356 2s.; of the township, £417 1s. In 1838, 6 cotton mills here employed 493 hands. There are a number of excellent quarries of stone, flags, and slate, in this vicinity. About a mile from the township, and about the centre of Giggleswick scar, there is a remarkable well, of very clear water, which, although 30 miles distant from the sea, ebbs and flows sometimes once in five minutes, at others, not more than four or five times a-day. Drunken

Barnaby, in his Northern tour, thus describes this well:—

Veni Giggleswick; parum frugis
 Profert tellus clausa jugis;
 Ibi vena prope viæ
 Fluit, refluît, nocte, die,
 Neque norunt unde vena
 An a sale vel arena.

Near the village is Giggleswick Tarn, a large lake, partly natural and partly artificial.

GILBERDIKE, a township in the parish of Eastington, wapentake of Howdenshire, east riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Howden; intersected by the Selby and Hull railway. All tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, are commuted. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 570. Houses 135. A. P. £1,969. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 632. Poor rates, in 1838, £222 2s.

GILCRUX, a parish in Allerdale ward, below Derwent, union of Cockermouth, Cumberland; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Cockermouth, on the southern bank of the river Ellen, and close upon the Maryport and Carlisle railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £5 14s. 2d., returned at £90; gross income £75. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £24 per annum for teaching 24 poor children. The village of Gilerux is built in a triangular form, and, with few exceptions, opposite to every house there rises a flowing spring of excellent water. Uniting their streams at the end of the village, these springs form a fine clear rivulet. In a field near the village there is also a salt spring. Coal, limestone, and freestone, are abundant in this parish. Acres 1,750. Houses 69. A. P. £1,643. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 382. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 7s.

GILDEN-WELLS, a township in the parish of Laughton-en-le-Morthen, west riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Worsop. Here is a daily school. Acres 540. Houses 16. A. P., with Woodsetts, £1,295. Pop., in 1811, 62; in 1831, 81. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 19s.

GILDERSOME, a chapelry in the parish of Batley, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by west of Leeds. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; gross income £104. Patron, the vicar of Batley. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1717, or earlier; and a Friends' meeting-house. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £6 per annum. Gildersome is connected with the clothing district of Leeds. In 1838 there were about 120 hand-loomers in the woollen manufacture here. Acres 1,120. Houses 360. A. P. £1,347. Pop., in 1801, 1,232; in 1831, 1,652. Poor rates, in 1838, £283 18s.

GILES (St.), a parish in the hund. of Fremington, union of Torrington, county of Devon; 3 miles east by south of Great Torrington. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Great Torrington. Here are 3 daily schools. Rolle's almshouses here have a small endowment. Other charities, in 1823, £10 10s., besides 12 bushels of wheat, per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £412 15s. Acres 3,330. Houses 157. A. P. £2,189. Pop., in 1801, 547; in 1831, 894.

GILES (St.), ON-THE-HEATH, a parish in the hund. of Black-Torrington, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Launceston, east of the river Tamer, and near the Bude canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; certified to value £42 18s. 8d.; gross income £108. Patrons, in 1835, the Marquis of Lothian, Lord Valletort, and Lady Suffield. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1823, £1 2s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 9s.

Acres 3,280. Houses 46. A. P. £1,107. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 357.

GILES (St.) IN-THE-FIELDS, WITH St. GEORGE BLOOMSBURY, a parish in Holborn division, in the hund. of Ossulston, county of Middlesex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-north-west of St. Paul's cathedral. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £1,148; nett income £968. Patron, the Crown. Here are a Swiss church; and 52 daily and 7 infant schools. Charities, in 1819, £237 per annum, for gowns to 20 old men and women of this parish, 10 of St. Martin's-in-the-fields, and 5 of St. Paul, Covent-garden, and for schooling, clothing, and apprenticing children of same parishes: about £167 were expended on education. Poor rates, in 1838, £20,240 7s. Acres 250. Houses 4,713. A. P., in 1815, £260,241; in 1828, £296,672. Pop., in 1801, 36,502; in 1831, 52,907.

GILESTONE, a parish in the hund. of Cowbridge, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4 miles west of Cowbridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £5 13s. 6d., returned at £63 15s. 3d.; gross income £80. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Edwardes. Houses 9. A. P. £558. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 62. Poor rates, in 1838, £10 19s.

GILL. See MOTHERBY AND GILL.

GILLIMOOR, a township in the parish of Kirby-Moorside, north riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-east of Helmsley. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,670. Houses 37. A. P. £887. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 17s.

GILLING-EAST WAPENTAKE, in the north riding of Yorkshire, on the north side of the county. Area 49,910 acres. Houses 1,536. Pop., in 1831, 7,460.

GILLING-WEST WAPENTAKE, in the north riding of Yorkshire, in the north-west extremity of the county. Area 198,640 acres. Houses 3,337. Pop., in 1831, 17,471. A large part of Gilling-West is in the district called Richmondshire.

GILLING, a parish in the wapentakes of Gilling-West, Gilling-East, and Ryedale, union of Richmond, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Richmond, situated on the post-road from Richmond to Brough. It comprises the townships of Cawton, Eppleby, Grimston, and Gilling, with the chapelry of Eryholme. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £23 11s. 5d.; gross income £1,174; nett income £1,029. Patron, in 1835, John Wharton, Esq. Great and small tithes, the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1810. Here are a daily National and 9 daily schools, one of which was founded in 1670 by Sir Thomas Wharton of Edlington, K.B., and endowed with a small estate in Cleveland. Charities, in 1823, £31 18s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £697 16s.; of the township, £162 8s. The township of Gilling is said to have been in early times the scene of a treacherous and cruel murder, committed on the body of Olwy King of Deira, by his host Oswin of Bernicia. As expiatory of the crime, Queen Eanfleda, some time previous to A. D. 659, built here the monastery of Ingethlingum, as Bede terms it, which was destroyed by the Danes. Gilling is also remarkable, as having been the residence of Edwin the Saxon and his forefathers. The seat of the Saxon earls was a castle situated on a hill nearly a mile south of the village: the last vestiges of it were some time ago removed. Gilling castle, the seat of the ancient family of Fairfax, stands on an eminence west of the village. In the great dining-room are armorial trees of all the families of note in this county in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, in perfect preservation. Acres, returned under the townships of Cawton, Eppleby, Gilling, and Grimston, with the chapelry of Eryholme, 14,610. Houses 436. A. P. £17,078. Pop., in 1801, 1,703; in 1831, 2,075. Acres of the township 6,940. Houses 226. A. P. £7,165. Pop., in 1801, 809; in 1831, 1,113.

GILLINGHAM, a parish in the liberty of Gillingham, union of Shaftesbury, Shaston division, county of Dorset, between Somerset and Wilts, on the river Stour. It is the largest parish in the county, and indeed one of the largest in England, being upwards of 40 miles in circumference. It includes the chapelry of Bourton. Acres 7,220. Houses 699. A. P. £11,946. Pop., in 1801, 2,510; in 1831, 3,330. Living, a vicarage, with the curacies of Motcombe, East Stour, and West Stour, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £40 17s. 6d.; gross income £1,722; nett income £1,313. Patron, the Bishop of Salisbury. The church is very ancient. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1790. There are 9 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £60 per annum, paid to two schoolmasters out of an income of £203 8s., being the annual proceeds of the feoffee's lands, bequeathed to this parish long previous to 1593, and appropriated to the support of schools, repairs of bridges, and relief of the second poor. There are 4 carriage, 3 foot, and 3 cattle bridges over the Stour and its branches within this parish, which are kept in repair by the charity trustees at an average cost of about £20 per annum. The second poor received a sum of £75 13s. out of the surplus in 1835. Read's charity for behoof of the poor, founded in 1798, produces an income of £108 9s. per annum, which is distributed, in weekly pensions of 5s., to as many poor people as the fund will permit, after deduction principally of £15 distributed in quartern loaves to poor families. Prince Charles of Wales—afterwards King Charles I.—lord of the manor and forest of Gillingham, by commission dated 25th February, 1624, 22^d James I., authorized Sir James Fullerton and others to compound with and assign allotments to those claiming common of pasturage, &c., in the forest, and to set out highways and otherwise improve it. The commissioners assigned an allotment of about 61 acres to the poor of Gillingham; but it seems never to have been vested in trustees for their use, and they have derived no benefit from it: indeed the locality of the allotment has become a subject of doubt. About 10 acres of the forest were allotted to the poor of the hamlet of Bourton in this parish, the income arising from which, amounting, in 1835, to £14, is distributed amongst the second poor about Lady-day, in sums varying from 5s. to 25s. Other charities possessed by this parish, £5 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,558 11s. The forest of Gillingham was formerly part of Selwood forest in Somersetshire. Leland, in the reign of Henry VIII., says it was in his time 4 miles in length, and a mile in breadth. It is now rich in pasture lands, and its excellent dairy produce is the principal source of opulence to the inhabitants of the parish. There are still traces of the ancient palace of the Saxon and Norman kings who came to hunt in the forest. "Kinge Edmund, before he parted the kingdome of this realme withe Canute, fought against him in sundry battayles, wherof one was in Dorsetshyre hard by this town. The place is at this day (1577) a forest."—Lambard's Top. and Hist. Dic.—In the vicinity of Gillingham there was anciently another forest named Blackmore, or White Hart Forest, from a favourite white hart belonging to Henry I. Being run down and killed by T. de la Linde, a gentleman of the county, with others in his company, the king imposed a fine upon their lands, which is still paid into the exchequer, under the name of 'white hart silver.' This forest now constitutes a vale 19 miles long and 14 broad, containing some fine arable land as well as rich pasturage, and abundance of limestone, clay, &c. In 1838, a flax and a silk mill here employed 115 hands. Fairs for bullocks, horses, and sheep, are held on Trinity Monday and September 12th. The Wilts and Dorset banking company have a branch here.

GILLINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Chatham and Gillingham, lathe of Aylesford, union of Medway, county of Kent; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east-north-east of Chatham, and 30 east by south of London, at the mouth of the Medway. Acres 3,660. Houses 1,153. A. P., including that of Lidsing, £11,765. Pop., in 1801, 5,135; in 1831, 6,734; which return, however, includes persons in the ordnance barracks, and on board ships in the river Medway. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Lidsing, in the dio. of Canterbury, a peculiar; rated at £15 13s. 11d.; gross income £732. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazenose college, Oxford. The church formerly contained what was reputed a miraculous image of the Virgin, called, 'Our Lady of Gillingham'; in consequence of which it was the haunt of numerous pilgrims. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1827. There are 20 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1836, about £25 per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £2,242 19s. Part of Chatham, and the best part of Brompton, are in this parish: these, with a considerable portion of the rural district, are within the bounds of the parliamentary borough of Chatham. Grange or Grenck, is a hamlet of this parish, and a member of the Cinque-port of Hastings. Twedale and Lidsing are also hamlets. The ancient but pleasant village of Gillingham is situated on a slope, round which there are splendid views of the Medway and Thames. Most of the inhabitants are employed at Chatham; the remainder are those who have retired from the service, or who are employed in various trades. A fair is held here on Easter-Monday: it was procured by Pecham, archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Edward I. Previous to the rapid rise of Chatham, Gillingham was a place of great importance, and its harbour a principal naval station. Gillingham fort stands a little to the north-east of the village. It was built for the defence of the Medway, and the Chatham dock-yard and navy, by Charles I.; but found insufficient, in the reign of Charles II., to prevent the Dutch from sailing up the Medway to the very front of Upnor castle, below Brompton, on the opposite side of the river. It was afterwards enlarged, and the whole vicinity well fortified:—see CHATHAM and BROMPTON. Gillingham was at one time the residence of the primate of all England: the foundation of the archiepiscopal palace is still visible. Earl Godwin here barbarously murdered 600 Norman gentlemen who came over in the retinue of the two princes, Alfred and Edward.

GILLINGHAM, a parish, formed by the union of the parishes of All Saints and St. Mary's, hund. of Clavering, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Beccles, and north of the river Waveney. Winston and Windale, two decayed parishes, have long been lost in the bounds of Gillingham, and the boundaries of All Saints and St. Mary's are but little known. The living consists of two discharged rectories, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated, All Saints at £54, and St. Mary's at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £564. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £482 18s. 11d. Other tithes commuted in 1840. The church of All Saints has been taken down, with the exception of the tower, which is a melancholy ruin thickly overgrown with ivy. Its burial-ground is still used. St. Mary's church is a fine specimen of Norman architecture. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, of All Saints £21, of St. Mary's £30, per annum; of which £20 are distributed to the poor, and £7 paid to a Sunday school. Poor rates, in 1838, £276 9s. The village of Gillingham adjoins the marshes of the vale of Waveney. The wharf, warehouses, &c., at the north end of Beccles-bridge, are in this parish. Acres 1,990. Houses 71. A. P. £2,936. Pop., in 1801, 344; in 1831, 369.

GILLMONBY, a township in the parish of Bowes, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by west of Barnard Castle, on the post-road from Richmond to Brough. Acres 2,350. Houses 18. A. P. £1,174. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 98. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 4s.

GILLMORTON, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester; 3 miles north-east by north of Lutterworth. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17 14s. 9½d.; gross income £650. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. D. J. Burdett. Great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1777. Here are 3 daily schools, two of which are endowed by Mr. Edward Chandler. Other charities, in 1836, £30 15s. per annum, of which the sum of £16 6s. 1½d. was carried to the church account, and the residue of £28, arising from churchlands, to the poor rates. Poor rates, in 1838, £241 18s. Acres 2,830. Houses 163. A. P. £3,382. Pop., in 1801, 554; in 1831, 830.

GILROE, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of West Goscote, county of Leicester. Houses 2. Pop., in 1811, 4; in 1831, 11.

GILSLAND, a district or barony in the parish of Denton, Eskdale ward, Cumberland. It is situated in the wild, romantic, and sequestered vale of Irthing; 8 miles north-east of Brampton, and in the line of the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. It was so called, most probably, from the numerous brooks, here called gilles, by which its surface is diversified. The hamlet of Gilsland, which stands about half-a-mile north of the railway, is a watering place, rather fashionable and celebrated on both sides of the Tweed. Houses have been erected for the visitors after the plan of those at Harrogate. The chief of these is a hotel or boarding-house of large size, placed at the head of a sloping bank of the Irthing, with a pleasant southern exposure. The mineral waters of Gilsland are various in quality. One principally contains sulphuretted hydrogen, with a lesser proportion of carbonic acid: in its solid contents, common salt and soda are the chief ingredients. There is a chalybeate spring, which contains sulphate of iron in a strong proportion, carbonate of magnesia, and sulphate of lime. Near Gilsland, a house of humble pretensions is pointed out by the name of 'Mumps's Hall'; being, it is said, the veritable 'house of entertainment for man and horse,' celebrated in Guy Mannering as the scene of the first meeting between Brown, Dandie Dimont, and Meg Merrilees. The circumstances in every respect countenance the supposition; for the house was long kept by 'Meg of Mumps's Hall,' as she was styled, and is placed on the borders of a trackless flat waste, little reclaimed in the present day, and extending northwards to the hills of Liddesdale. The traditional stories related as occurring here, and the wild and reckless characters by which this part of the country was once infested, combined to render Mumps's Hall a place of evil reputation; and as such it must have fallen under the notice of Sir Walter Scott during his visit to Gilsland, where he met and became attached to the lady who afterwards became his wife. Gillislonde or Geltslonde, says Lambard, is "a portion of Cumberland whearinto the Scottis entered in tyme of Ewd. II., and burned 16 myles longe, and 6 myles brode, and toke away all that ever they founde. But sone after Syr Anthony Lucye made an in-rode on their part, and so behaved himself therin, that, upon the fote of thacompt, the Scottes weare found no wyynners." The Roman wall passes to the south of this place, and about two miles distant there is on the Irthing one of the finest waterfalls in the country.

GILSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Braughin, union of Ware, county of Hertford; 3½ miles west by south of Sawbridgeworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £10 3s. 4d., returned at £140; gross income £243. Patron, the bishop of London. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1834, £5 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 4s. Acres 920. Houses 43. A. P. £959. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 233.

GINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 4 miles north-north-east of North Walsham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11 11s. 10½d.; gross income £432. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £414 1s. 1d. Patron, Catherine-hall, Cambridge. Here is a daily school. Charities, the Bell rope acre, and another small piece of land held by the rector. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 9s. Acres 1,240. Houses 43. A. P. £1,623. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 353.

GINGE (WEST). See LOCKINGE.

GIPPING, a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 4 miles north-north-east of Stow-Market, and intersected by a small stream called the Gipping. It includes the hamlet of Stow-Market. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 12s. 8d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, C. Tyrrell, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1828, £15 16s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £129 10s. Acres 900. Houses 11. A. P. £915. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 87.

GIRSBY, a township in the parish of Sockburn, north riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles south-west of Yarm, on the eastern bank of the Tees. Acres 1,410. Houses 15. A. P. £1,617. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 8s.

GIRSBY. See BURGH-WITH-GRISBY.

GIRTFORD. See SANDY-WITH-GRITFORD.

GIRTON, a parish in the hund. of North Stow, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 3½ miles north-west of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £18 4s. 4½d.; gross income £420. Patron, in 1835, Sir St. V. Cotton, Bart. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, the church and town lands, yielding an annual income of £56 15s., a considerable proportion of which was expended in coals to the poor. There were also parish-houses and lands occupied by parish paupers, and a small strip of land occupied by the parish clerk. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 18s. Acres 1,700. Houses 67. A. P. £1,809. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 338.

GIRTON, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; 6½ miles east-south-east of Tuxford. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of South Scarle. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1827, 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 12s. Acres

2,190. Houses 41. A. P. £1,473. Pop., in 1801, including Mering, which claims to be extra-parochial, 125; in 1831, 187.

GISBURN, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, union of Clitheroe, west riding of Yorkshire; 10½ miles west-south-west of Skipton, on the eastern bank of the Ribble, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Acres 18,190. Houses 434. A. P. £18,251. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Gisburn, Gisburn-Forest, Horton, Middop, Nappa, News-holme, Paythorne, Rimmington, and Swinden, 1,959; in 1831, 2,306. Acres of the township 2,010. Houses 118. A. P. £4,260. Pop., in 1801, 485; in 1831, 607. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £11 6s. 8d., returned at £120; gross income £161. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1812; and 6 daily schools, including a free school, the income of which, in 1825, was £11. Other charities, £27 13s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,426 17s.; of the township, £291 3s. There is no trade in the town of Gisburn; but, in 1838, a cotton mill here employed 9 hands. The surrounding country is wholly agricultural; and the land is principally let out in grazing-farms for which it is admirably adapted; and innumerable flocks of cattle are fattened for different markets. The manor of Rimmington, in this parish, has long been remarkable for a rich vein of lead ore, which yields a considerable portion of silver. A person was convicted and executed at York for counterfeiting the silver coin of the realm, in metal supposed to have been procured from the lead of Rimmington; and William Pudsey, Esq., who held the estate from 1577 to 1629, is reported in the traditions of the vicinity nearly to have forfeited his life also, from coining shillings from silver ore obtained here. They were marked with an escalop, and called by the country people Pudsey shillings. Lambard describes "Gysbourne" as "of late yeares a house of chanons in Yorkshire, and yet a market-towne. In the time of Hen. VI., the clergie of this realme found themselves sore charged through continual exactions of money, imposed some tyme by the kinge, but more greuously by the pope, in so much as, when their distinctions that all that they had was the pope's, tuicion, not fuitioun, and defension, not dispersione, would not serve them, then fell they to flatt demalles, and many of thein endured sharpe stormes of his fatherly displeasure. And amongst the rest, (sayeth Mathew Paris,) the monkes of Durham, and theire chanons of Gisburne stode most stoutly to their taelinge in so much, as, if the rest had not forsaken them, feliciter (sayeth he) ecclesia Anglicana de tortoribus suis triumphasset. The house was valeued in the recordes at 628 poundes yearlye." The market, which used to be held here on the Mondays, has been discontinued; but fairs for horned cattle are held on Easter-Monday, Monday fortnight after Easter, Monday month after Easter, with the Saturday following; for pedlery, on Monday five-weeks after Easter; and for horned cattle and pedlery, on September 18th and 19th. Near the confluence of the Stockbeek and the Ribble, lies Gisburn park, which is chiefly remarkable for a herd of wild cattle of the ancient breed that was wont to run wild in the great forest of Lancashire. They are milk white, except the tips of the noses, the ears, and the feet, which are black. They are never thoroughly tamed, though they breed freely with tamed cattle. In the mansion-house is a portrait of Oliver Cromwell, by Sir Peter Leley, which is held to be a very faithful one, taken by his own order, and presented to General Lambert.

It exhibits the Protector with all the warts and protuberances which distinguished his homely countenance. On the canvas is painted the word "Now," which probably refers to his peremptory mandate for the instant execution of the king.

GISBURN-FOREST, a township in the parish of Gisburn, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south of Settle. The chapel is situated at the northern extremity of the township, and it appears to be a question with Dr. Whitaker, whether it is within the forest or not. Here is a daily school supported by endowment. Here is a small but very entire square fort, called Castle-haugh, and near it is a barrow, which, being opened, was found to contain a rude earthen urn. Acres 4,830. Houses 72. A. P. £2,257. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 400. Poor rates, in 1838, £172.

GISLEHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles south-west of Lowestoft. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £342. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,320. Houses 46. A. P. £2,120. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 262. Poor rates, in 1838, £107 14s.

GISLINGHAM, a parish in the hund and union of Hartismere, co. of Suffolk; 5 miles west by south of Eye. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £26 1s. 5½d.; gross income £523. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £624 0s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Collyer. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £17 per annum. The town estate, in 1829, yielded £46 per annum: other charities £40 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £291 5s. There was here a preceptory belonging to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, granted, 7^o Edward VI., to John Greene and Robert Hall. Acres 2,940. Houses 93. A. P. £3,091. Pop., in 1801, 473; in 1831, 660.

GISSING, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-north-east of Diss, and near the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £14 6s. 5½d.; no return. Tithes commuted in 1839. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. R. Kempe, Bart. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £2 19s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £310 8s. A fair for cattle and toys is held on July 25th. Acres 1,950. Houses 71. A. P. £3,219. Pop., in 1801, 444; in 1831, 593.

GITTISHAM, a parish in the hund. of East Budleigh, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 3½ miles south-west by west of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21 8s. 11½d.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Putt. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school, one of which was endowed with £10 per annum by Sir Thomas Putt, Bart. Other charities, in 1820, £143 5s. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 5s. Acres 2,160. Houses 74. A. P. £2,939. Pop., in 1801, 459; in 1831, 370.

GIVENDALE, or GWENDALE, a township in Ripon parish, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south-east of Ripon, and east of the river Ure. Acres 760. Houses 5. A. P. £1,182. Pop., in 1801, 19; in 1831, 35. Poor rates, in 1838, £22 2s.

GIVENDALE, or GWENDALE (GREAT), a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north-north-east of Great Pocklington. It includes the townships of Great Givendale and Grimthorpe. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Millington. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £36 14s. 2d., due the dean of St. Peter's, York; and £14 10s. vicarial. Acres 1,120. Houses 14. A. P. £975. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 11s.

GLADESTRY, a parish in the hund. of Radnor, union of Kington, county of Radnor, South Wales; 3 miles south-west of Kington. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £12 19s. 4d.; gross income £308. Patron, the Crown. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £4 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £208 10s. Houses 71. A. P. £2,403. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 385.

GLAISDALE, a parish in the east division of the liberty of Langbaugh, union of Whitby, north riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles west-south-west of Whitby, and near the Pickering and Whitby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; valued at £9 11s. 8d., returned at £38 16s. 10d.; gross income £77. The church was rebuilt in 1793. Patron, the archbishop of York. Here is a daily school, endowed with £4 per annum. Other charities, in 1821, upwards of £3 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £341 12s. Acres 8,370. Houses 207. A. P. £4,966. Pop., in 1801, 763; in 1831, 1,004.

GLAMORGAN,

A maritime county of South Wales; bounded on the south and south-west by the Bristol channel; on the west by the river Loughor, which divides it from Carmarthenshire; on the north by Carmarthen and Brecknock shires, and on the east by the river Romney, which divides it from Monmouthshire. Its extreme length from Worms-Head-Point in the district of Gower on the west, to Llanedarn, which borders with Monmouth on the east, is 48 miles; and its extreme breadth from north to south 27. Its contents have been estimated at 822 square miles, or 526,680 acres, of which 305,000 are more or less cultivated. A great proportion of the county, however, including the commons, consists of pasture-lands. The county is divided into ten hundreds: namely, Caerphilly, Cowbridge, Dinas-Powis, Kibbor, Llangewelach, Miskin, Neath, Newcastle, Ogmore, and Swansea, and subdivided into 128 parishes. It contains one city, Llandaff; one county town, Cardiff; three principal parliamentary boroughs,—Cardiff, Swansea, and Merthyr-Tydvil; seven contributory boroughs: namely, Cowbridge and Llantrisant, contributory to Cardiff, Loughor, Neath, Aber-aven, and Kentig, to Swansea; and Aberdare to Merthyr-Tydvil. There are eight market-towns: namely, Cardiff, Caerphilly, Merthyr-Tydvil, Cowbridge, Llantrisant, Bridgend, Neath, and Swansea. Houses 23,843. A. P. £334,192. Pop., in 1801, 71,525; in 1831, 126,200, consisting of 26,111 families, of whom 8,929 were chiefly employed in trade, handicraft, &c.; 6,814 in agriculture, and 10,368 otherwise occupied.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Glamorgan is in the province of Canterbury, and principally in the diocese and archdeaconry of LLANDAFF—which see;—but a small part of it is in the archdeaconry of Carmarthen and diocese of St. David's. The ecclesiastical commissioners, however, propose to include the whole of this county in the diocese of Llandaff. The total amount of church rates for 1838-9, was £2,308. The poor rate returns for three years to Easter, 1750, show an average expenditure of £2,224 on the poor of this county; for 1803, an expenditure of £23,136; for 1833, an expenditure of £45,109; and for 1839, an expenditure of £31,600. There are 209 daily schools in this county, attended by 8,137 children; and 171 Sunday schools, attended by 11,680 children.

Franchise and Government.—The county returns two members to parliament, who are polled for at Bridgend, Cardiff, Swansea, Neath, and Merthyr-Tydvil: the principal place of election being Cardiff. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was 4,494. Previous to the passing of the Reform act, one member was returned for the county, and one for Cardiff, with Swansea and all the contributory boroughs already particularized, except Aberdare, which was enfranchised by the reform act. The three parliamentary boroughs now return each one member. The county is in the South Wales circuit. The assizes and Epiphany quarter-sessions are held at Cardiff; the Easter session is held at Cowbridge, the Midsummer at Neath, and the Michaelmas at Swansea. The county jail and house of correction is at CARDIFF: which see: there is also a house of correction at Swansea. The total income of county rates, in 1801, was £4,145; expenditure on jails, £122; on prisoners with prosecutions, £823; on constables and vagrants, £67; on bridges, £154. Total expenditure, £2,242. In 1831, the total income was £10,613; expenditure on jails, £2,829; on prisoners with prosecutions, £4,611; on constables and vagrants, £129; on bridges £245. Total expenditure, £10,383. In 1838, the total income was £7,210; expenditure on jails, £1,908; on prisoners with prosecutions, £2,225; on constables and vagrants, £131; on bridges, £4. Total expenditure, £6,019.

General features.—The north and north-east parts of the county consist for the most part of craggy and almost inaccessible mountains, chiefly extending in ranges or chains which take a southerly course, and are separated by the deep and broken valleys through which the principal rivers wind their course. Others are detached eminences. The soil of these hills is black peat, varied in the drier situations with a brown gravelly earth, and improved in the valleys into a brown fertile loam, adapted to all the purposes of agriculture, and yielding good crops of corn and grass. The hills in general are unclosed, but afford little herbage of any kind, though used for the pasture of cattle and sheep by the tenants of the neighbouring farms. Considerable flocks of sheep, however, are fed and thrive upon the verdant declivities. In some places the sides of the mountains are clothed with woods, luxuriantly waving over narrow valleys and deep glens of the richest and most romantic description; but upon the whole this part of the county is by no means inviting in its appearance, nor in any way to be commended for its vegetable products. The southern portion, on the contrary, is level, uncommonly fertile, and highly improved. Perhaps there is no land in England richer than the fine plain, known by the name of the Vale of Glamorgan. Certainly there is nothing in the principality that can at all be compared with it. It expands from the foot of the mountains on the north, to the Bristol channel on the south and south-west, and extends the whole length of the county. Here the soil is rich and deep loam, improved in its fertility by a substratum of limestone; and the salubrious temperature of the climate is such, that the families of myrtles, magnolias, and other delicate plants, not only live but thrive in the open air. Here agriculture is practised upon the most approved principles, and the abundant produce of every description, whether of corn or green crops, has justly procured for it the appellation of 'the Garden of Wales.' This valley is in many places from 8 to 18 miles in breadth, and possesses some of the most extensive, rich, and picturesque scenes that are to be met with in the whole island, often leaving one at a loss which most to admire,—the luxuriance of the vale itself, with its multitudinous and busy population, the graceful windings of its shore, or the blue hills of Somerset and Devon, sublimely rising in the distance. If in any thing this vale be reckoned deficient, perhaps it is in the want of wood. This defect is amply supplied, however, in other parts of the county.

Rivers.—The rivers have all a southerly course, and several of them have their sources among the mountains of Brecon. Besides the LOUGHOR—which is navigable to the town of Loughor—and the ROMNEY—both of which see,—as they only bound this county; the principal is the Taff, which rises among the Brecon mountains, south of St. David's, near the Brecon Beacon, by two branches, uniting near Merthyr-Tydvil. It then flows south-east between Llantrisant and Caerphilly to the estuary of the Severn; falling into it at the point of Penarth, a little to the south-west of Cardiff. The Taff is about 40 miles in length. It is an extremely rapid stream, and over it, near Caerphilly, on the road from Brecon to Cowbridge, is the Pont-y-Prydd, or New Bridge, which has been much and justly admired. See EGLWYS-ILAN. The Cynon, a tributary of the Taff, also rises in Brecon; its roots forming the bounding line of this county. It flows through Aberdare into the Taff, about 7 miles below Merthyr. The Rhondda and Rhondafechan rise in the northern parts of this county: flowing south-east they unite, and afterwards fall into the Taff, a few miles below the Cynon. The Elwy rises in the centre of the county, and flows in a tortuous course to the estuary of the Taff, into which it falls near Penarth. The Ogmore also rises in the centre of the county, and is joined by the Ogwrfach, the Garw, and the Llinfi, after which it flows past Bridgend, and unites with the Ewenny near Ogmore castle, in a small estuary, opening into the Bristol channel. The Avon rises in the northern part of the county, and falls into the same channel at Aberavon. The Neath and the Taw have their sources in Brecon, and both fall into the bay of Swansea, to the town of which the mouth of the latter forms the harbour.—See SWANSEA.—The coast has a fine semicircular sweep nearly the whole length of the county, the western point of which is formed into the peninsula of Gower by an arm of the sea running up towards Carmarthen, forming an estuary called the Bury, from a streamlet flowing into it from the peninsula. Over a fine sandy beach the limestone rocks in many places swell into perpendicular cliffs of great boldness, exhibiting vast quantities of organic remains, and worn in many places into deep and lofty caverns. For such a length of coast, however, the sinuosities are few, and these few of no great depth; but they have been carefully improved and assisted by a judiciously planned inland communication by canals with railroads, which have proved of incalculable benefit to the county, by facilitating the transport of its immense mineral wealth to ready markets, and to ports of shipment.

Canals.—The Glamorganshire or Cardiff canal extends along Taff vale, following the course of the river: Taff to the junction of the Cynon with the Taff, where it is joined by the Aberdare canal, and is afterwards carried across the river by an aqueduct bridge. It then proceeds by Cardiff, on the east side of the Taff to Penarth harbour, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile below Cardiff, where it terminates in a sea-lock, constructed about 40 years ago, the inadequacy of which, however, to the great demand for accommodation produced by the vast increase of trade since the opening of the canal, has led to the formation of the Bute ship canal. See CARDIFF.—The upper part of the Bute docks has recently been deepened, and other works effected, for the improvement of this important undertaking. The Aberdare canal runs along the valley of the Cynon from New bridge, at the junction of the Taff and Cynon, to near Aberdare; and from its terminus a railroad runs towards others connected with the Neath canal, which commences at the terminus of a short railroad from Abernant, and runs down the valley of the Neath, nearly in the line of the river's course, crossing it about the middle of its length to Neath, whence it runs to its terminus in the river near the Briton canal, which continues the inland navigation to Swansea harbour. There are two short branches in the course of this canal below Neath. The Swansea canal commences in Brecknockshire, and runs down the valley of the Taw on the west side of the river to Swansea harbour. There is a short canal running also into Swansea harbour from near Llansamlet. The Penclawdd is a short canal running from Penclawdd to the Burry estuary or river. The most of these canals have been open since the end of last century.

Railways.—The Oystermouth railway commences in the town of Swansea at the terminus of the Swansea canal, and is carried in a south-westerly direction to Oystermouth, a distance of about 6 miles: a branch is carried northward from Swansea on the west side of the canal to Morriston. The Duffrin-Llinvi and Porth Cawl railway begins at the bay or harbour of Porth Cawl, and runs north and east to the valley of the Llinvi, a tributary to the Ogmore: it follows the course of this valley to Duffrin-Llinvi, near which it terminates. Its length is $16\frac{1}{2}$ miles: it is a continued ascent, first of 28 feet per mile, afterwards of 15 feet, and ultimately of more than 50 feet. The Bridgend railway runs from Bridgend to the former near Cefn Gribbwr, at the termination of its first northern stretch from the coast. It is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and rises 190 feet. The Dulais railway begins at Aber-Dulais, in the line of the Neath canal, and runs parallel with the river Dulais—a tributary to the Neath—to Ynis-y-bout, when it crosses the river to its eastern bank, and follows its course to the lime-works at Cwm-Dulais. Its length is about $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles. There are other railroads connecting the various canals with the mines in their vicinity, particularly those connected with the Cardiff canal, the principal of which are the line running along the valley of the Ronthavawr to Dinas Ucha, and that running up the valley of the Taff from the junction of the Aberdare canal to Merthyr, whence there is a continuation to the Romney railroad, which communicates with various others in BRECON and MONMOUTH: which see.—A short railroad runs from Swansea to Mumbles, and others connect Aberavon harbour with the mines and collieries in its vicinity. The Taff vale railway is an important line, running through a most picturesque region along the valley of the Taff, from the coast near Cardiff by the Bute docks, Cardiff, Llandaff, Pentrych, the Maes-Mawr collieries, Newbridge, Plymouth, and Merthyr-Tydvil, with branches. In October 1840, this railway was opened from Cardiff to Navigation house, within 9 miles of Merthyr.

Roads.—The principal carriage-road enters this county from Newport by Romney bridge, and passes by Cardiff, Cowbridge, Bridgend, and Neath, to Swansea, whence it runs north-west to the Loughor, where it quits the county at Pontardulais. There is a road from Cardiff through Taff vale by Merthyr to Brecon, whence another road enters this county at the head of the Neath valley, down which it passes towards Neath, where it branches off to Swansea, and by various routes to Carmarthenshire. From Swansea roads proceed through and across the peninsula of Gower to Loughor, Burry, Rosilly, and Oxwich, and there are various other roads intersecting the county. The roads over the mountains are excessively steep, and strewn with stones of various sizes detached from the rocks by the river rains; but the lower road from Cardiff through the county, and many others are good. The highway returns for three years ending 1814, show an average annual expenditure of £5,753 on 292 miles of paved streets and turnpike roads, and 1,174 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages in this county; the returns of turnpike trusts for 1836, a total expenditure of £11,858 5s. 6d. by 12 turnpike trusts; and the highway returns for 1839, an expenditure of £5,715 on 1,277 miles of road.

Minerals and manufactures.—The mineral treasures of this county are very various, and of the first importance. Lying frequently at small depths from the surface, and even jutting out from the sides of the hills, these minerals are raised here with less expense than in most other counties in the empire. The whole of this valuable mineral tract rests on a great stratal basin of limestone, especially the southern part of it, from the promontory of Gower on the west to Caerphilly on the east, which is only one immense rock of that material. The most plentiful kind of this lime is not supposed to be the best for the purpose of building, though, in Gower, it is sufficiently hard to bear a bright polish; and has been manufactured at Swansea into handsome chimney-pieces: being, however, admirably adapted, from its extreme whiteness, for white-washing; and, from its other qualities, for manure; vast quantities are exported across the channel into Somerset; besides what is sent round the coast to other places in Wales.* One kind of lime here possesses the property of hardening under water, which renders it highly valuable as a submarine cement. Beneath the limestone,—especially the cliffs of Pinarthance-Llavernac,—are found beds of red earth resembling tripoli, and in this earth are found beds of gypsum, the finest yet discovered in Britain. In the white limestone of Sully, lead-ore, calamine, manganese, and copper have also been discovered, though in small quantities. Coal, which is still more important than lime, seems equally universal in diffusion. That in the southern parts of the county is termed coking-coal, and resembles the Newcastle: it contains more bitumen than that in the northern parts, which is termed stone-coal from its appearance while burning. When ignited it emits a very intense heat, but burns slowly without swelling, and the combustion is remarkably complete with scarcely any smoke. The small is denominated Culm, and is chiefly used for burning lime. With iron-stone, which is also abundant, coal forms the great staple of the county. Of the latter, much is exported, and a vast quantity is more profitably employed in the immense smelting establishments of Merthyr-Tydvil, Neath, Swansea, Aberdare, and Abernant. The works at Merthyr-Tydvil, which are among the most extensive in Europe, are all iron-works, of which the material is dug up in the vicinity. The celebrated geologist De la Beche, in his report on Cornwall and Devon, cites Merthyr-Tydvil as “an excellent example of the economic value of geological conditions; the proximity of the carboniferous limestone, the coal, and iron-stone, to each other, in that part of the country, producing a cheap combination of flux, fuel, and ore, scarcely to be surpassed.” From the advantages possessed by South Wales, more especially by this county, and most of all by Merthyr-Tydvil, in the command of iron, coal, and limestone, “a large population has grown up as it were by enchantment. In fact, the growth of Merthyr-Tydvil is more rapid than that of any town in the United States.” An account of the iron-works in this part of the county will be found under article MERTHYR-TYDVIL. There are also extensive iron-works at Aberdare, and in various other parts of the county; iron being its chief manufacture; but the prosperity of the works at Aberdare is represented to have been partially checked between the years 1828 and 1831. In different places, particularly at Neath and Swansea, there are large establishments for the smelting of copper. “Perhaps,”—again says De la Beche,—“there are few localities in which the advantages of geological situation, combined with cheap fuel, arising from geological position, are better exemplified than at Swansea, where not only the copper ores of Cornwall and Ireland, but those also of Cuba and Chili are brought to be smelted; these advantages even rendering it profitable to transport ores from the western shores of South America, round Cape Horn, to the fossil vegetation entombed in South Wales.”—Geo. Rep. on Cornwall and Devon, p. 461.—Lead is also brought hither for smelting in large quantities. Tin-plate is manufactured to a great extent in some places, particularly at Merlin-Gruffyd; the tin being imported from Cornwall. Flags and marble form also articles of exportation, and give employment in cutting and polishing to a number of the inhabitants. At Ewenny, and some other places, coarse pottery is made. The woollen manufacture is also carried on to some extent. In 1838, there were 16 woollen mills employing 141 hands: of these there were 3 at Merthyr-Tydvil, 3 at Caerphilly, and 1 each at Llandaff, Llanblethian, Llancarran, Llantrisant, Llantwit-fardre, Llanaon, Aberdare, Gallygare, Llanvabon, and Llantwit-juxta-Neath.

History and Antiquities.—The district at present constituting the county of Glamorgan, anciently formed part of the province of Siluria, which, in the opinion of most antiquaries, also comprehended Monmouth and parts of Hereford and Gloucestershires. “The shyre (sayethe Galf.) toke the name of one Morgan, (descended of Leir, sometyme a king of this land,) who, warringe withe Cunedagus his cosme for the hole kingdom, wherof he quietly enjoyed one halfe, was by him deprived of that he had, and his life also, in this place. In memorye of whose follic, or slaughter, or both, the place beareth his name to this day.”—Lambard's Top. Dic.—Other antiquarians have supposed the name derived from Mor, ‘the sea,’ and geni, ‘to be born,’ which would be “sea-born”—a term compounded, one would think, for the special use of geologists. The early history of this district, though, from want of written records, involved in considerable obscurity, is intimately connected with that of Britain at large; for its sovereigns were held in high respect, and on repeated occasions called to the command of the confederated armies of the island, in their resistance to foreign invasion. Caradoc or Caractacus, one of the Silurian princes, was conquered by the Romans under Julius Frontinus, and this county at length yielded to the

* Its universality, and its excellence for white-washing, doubtless originated an equally excellent and universal custom of white-washing in villages, farms, and cottages, extending even to stables, barns, and walls of yards and gardens, which has prevailed in this county from very remote ages, and is noticed and praised in the most ancient Welsh poems. This practice adds greatly to the respectable appearance of the cottages, and gives a peculiar neatness and gaiety to the villages, though the uniform glare is rather dazzling to the eye.

Roman yoke. Military posts were established by the Romans, and military roads constructed, the principal of which was the Julia strata. Occasional fragments at Romney, and between Neath and Ewenny, yet indicate its probable line, through the county, from east to west. Other remains of Roman fabric may yet point out some of the stations which are named in the Itineraries. The Tibia Amnis of Antoninus was the first station to be looked for in this county: it is supposed to have stood on the bank of the Taff near Cardiff: but the great object of antiquarian research has been the station of Bovium, which, in the 11th Iter of Richard of Cirencester, is placed next after Tibia Amnis, and at the distance of 20 millia passuum. Various places have been regarded as the site of this station: the most probable are Boverton or Bridgend. Nidum has been identified with Neath, and Leucarum with Loughor. There are other Roman antiquities scattered throughout the county. During the Roman domination, native princes or reguli were permitted to hold a kind of nominal authority till about the year 440, when the Romans finally withdrew their forces from this district, and left it to the rule of the native princes. It was afterwards invaded by the Saxons and the Danes; but the British kingdom of Glamorgan did not terminate till the Norman invasion, when it was parcelled out in lordships amongst the companions of the Norman commander Fitzhamon, who was a near relative to William the Conqueror, and first obtained possession of it. Some of the native chieftains who had aided in his conquest also obtained lordships. About this period, the noble Norman castles were erected, whose mouldering turrets still invest their sites with retrospective interest. At Fitzhamon's death in 1107, the district passed, by marriage with Mabel his heiress, into the possession of Robert, Earl of Gloucester, natural son of Henry I., who thus became lord of Glamorgan. The lordship afterwards passed through various hands, among whom were the earl of Warwick, known as the "king maker," and Richard duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. In the reign of Henry VIII. an end was put to the authority of the lords marchers, an office held by these nobles; and the territory of Glamorgan, as well as other districts which had been under their government, was erected into a separate county, and placed under the rule of the English laws. The manors and subordinate lordships were afterwards sold, and the paramount lordship itself was converted into a lord-tenancy. Besides the castellated edifices built during the middle ages over all the county, and the chief of which are the castles of Cardiff, Caerphilly, St. Donatts, Neath, and Swansea, there are many beautiful ecclesiastical remains in Glamorgan, the most celebrated of which are those of Margam abbey, and the Benedictine priory of Ewenny. The former, observes Lambard,—who defines "Glamorgan—Morgan Bryt"—as "the name of a shyre and monasterie,"—"was long since founded by one Ilutus, a learned man lyving under Kinge Arthure, as Bale affirmethe. Sylvester Gyraldus sayethe that they of this house were Cistercian monks, and the recordes vlew the house at 181 poundes yearly." It has been contended, however, that Morgan, to whom Lambard also alludes, and who was cotemporary with Robert, the natural son of Henry I., was the founder. Dugdale and Tanner ascribe its foundation to Robert himself—see MARGAM.

GLANDFORD WITH BAYFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Holt, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-south-west of Clay, on a small river which flows into the North sea. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectories of Blakeney and Cockthorpe. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £94 9s. 5d. The church has long been in ruins, but the tower is nearly entire. Acres 1,180. Houses 11. A. P. £1,036. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 102. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 15s.

GLANFORD-BRIGG, or BRIDGE, commonly called BRIGG, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Wrawby-with-Kettleby, county of Lincoln; 24 miles north of Lincoln, and 155 north-west of London. Acreage with the parish. Houses 363. A. P. £2,624. Pop., in 1801, 1,327; in 1831, 1,780. The town is situated in the midst of the Ancholme level, on the new river Ancholme, over which there is here a stone-bridge, from whence the town derives its name. This town has formed part of the four adjoining parishes of Bigby, Broughton, Scawby, and Wrawby, being situated at a point where they all meet. In 1699, four gentlemen built a small chapel, and endowed it with certain estates which they vested in their own heirs, and the trustees of the grammar-school here. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Wrawby. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is the free grammar-school, founded and endowed in 1669, by Sir John Melthorpe. The trustees have limited the number of boys in this school to 80. Poor rates, in 1838, £544 1s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Glanford-Brigg, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Glanford-Brigg poor-law union comprehends 52 parishes, embracing an area of 243 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 26,207. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,547. Expenditure in 1838, £7,110; in 1839, £8,317 18s. This was originally a fishing hamlet, but it has progressively improved, until it has become a town of some importance possessing a good trade. The river has been made navigable from the Humber to Bishop-bridge, 10 miles above the town, and by its means the inhabitants carry on a considerable trade in corn, coal, and timber: a communication with the port of Hull is thus also afforded, by means of steam-packets. The principal manufacture in the town is that of rabbit-skins, in which more hands were once employed than in any other town in the empire; but owing to the increased value of agricultural produce since the draining of the Ancholme level, and a reduction in the price of skins, the rabbit-warrens, formerly so abundant in this vicinity, have been materially diminished, and the manufacture has consequently much declined. The market-day is Thursday, and there is an annual fair on 5th August. The Lincoln and Lindsey, and the Hull, banking companies have branches here. This is a polling-place for the members from the parts of Lindsey. The petty-sessions are held here. An hospital was founded here by Adam Paynell in the reign of King John. It was subordinate to Selby abbey in Yorkshire. Newstead abbey, on the bank of the Ancholme, above the town, was founded by Henry II. for Gilbertines. It was valued at £55 1s. 8d. per annum. The remains now constitute a farmhouse. The site is extra-parochial.

GLANTLEES. See GREENS WITH GLANTLEES.

GLANTON, a township in the parish of Whittingham, Northumberland; 8 miles west of Alnwick. The presbyterians have a chapel in this township; and there are a daily and a day and boarding school. The village stands pleasantly on the high road, and has been enlarged within the last 20 years by the erection of some handsome houses. The lofty eminence called Glanton-Pike, in this neighbourhood, was anciently a beacon to alarm the country in times of danger. Here is a petrifying well. Near Deer-street, in this township, several stone coffins and urns, with ancient British weapons, were found in the year 1716. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 89. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 534.

GLAPTHORN, a parish in the hund. of Willybrook, union of Oundle, county of Northampton; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north north-west of Oundle, and west of the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Cottesstock. Acres 1,370. Houses 73. A. P. £2,115. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 353. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 3s.

GLAPWELL, a township in the parish of Bolsover, county of Derby; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Mansfield. Here is a daily school. Acres 720. Houses 20. A. P. £505. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 99. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 5s.

GLASBURY, a parish, partly in the hund. of Tolgarth, union of Hay, county of Brecon, and partly in that of Paine's Castle, county of Radnor, South Wales; 4 miles south-west of Hay, on the western bank of the river Wye, and close upon the Brecon and Kingston railway. It includes some of the most fertile land in the county, together with the hamlets of Aber-llunvey and Pipton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £10; gross income £410; formerly in the patronage of the bishop of Gloucester. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1687; and a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £139 1s. per annum, arising from the great tithes of the parish of Gwenddwr, given by Sir David Williams, or Gwenddwr, in 1612; at which time they amounted to only £20. About £24 are applied in repairing highways, and Glasbury bridge; and the residue is chiefly expended for behoof of the poor of this and other parishes. Other charities, about £18 8s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £287 15s. On an eminence in this vicinity there are intrenchments surrounding the site of a British camp, called Gaer. Houses 284. A. P. £5,411. Pop., in 1801, 834; in 1831, 1,577.

GLASCOED, a hamlet in the parish of Usk, county of Monmouth; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of Usk, and west of the river Usk. The Baptists have here a place of worship. Acres 1,470. Houses 42. A. P. £1,254. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 197.

GLASCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Colwyn, union of Kington, county of Radnor, South Wales; 8 miles east of Builth. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Colva and Ruln, in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £62 2s. 5d.; gross income £186. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Charities, in 1836, £6 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £410. Here are the celebrated wells of Blaen-Eddu, used for curing cutaneous diseases. Houses 90. A. P. £2,124. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Drewnne and Vainorglare, 515; in 1831, 514.

GLASCOTE. See BOLEHALL and GLASCOTE.

GLASSENbury, in the parish of Cranbrooke, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles west of Cranbrooke. Here is a chalybeate spring.

GLASS-HOUSE-YARD, a liberty in Finsbury division of the hund. of Ossulstone, county of Middlesex; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-east of St. Paul's. Acres 8. Houses 155. Pop., in 1801, 1,221; in 1831, 1,312. Poor rates included with St. Botolph, Aldersgate.

GLASSONBY, a township in the parish of Ad-dingham, Leath ward, county of Cumberland; 8 miles north-east by north of Penrith, and east of the river Eden. Here is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 32. A. P. £1,420. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 18s.

GLASTON, a parish in the hund. of Wrandike, union of Uppingham, county of Rutland; 2 miles east-north-east of Uppingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 16s. 10d.; gross income £200. It is annexed to the mastership of Peter-house, Cambridge, without institution. Here are three daily schools. Charities, in 1820, £35 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £658 5s. Acres 1,270. Houses 47. A. P. £2,179. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 229.

GLASTON, a township in the parish of Alding-ham, co.-palatine of Lancaster, on the river Lune, near Morecombe bay. There is here a large dock, and a canal uniting it with the Lancaster and Preston canal. Returns with the parish.

GLASTON-TWELVE-HIDES HUNDRED, in the eastern division of the county of Somerset. It lies in the heart of the county, between the Polden and Mendip hills. Area 24,610 acres. Houses 1,149. Pop., in 1831, 6,366.

GLASTONBURY, a borough and market-town, in the hund. of Glaston-Twelve-Hides, union of Wells, county of Somerset; 25 miles south-west of Bath, and 124 west-south-west of London; nearly in the centre of the county. Acres 7,216. Houses 553. A. P. £20,498. Pop., in 1801, 2,035; in 1831, 2,984. It comprises the parishes of St. Benedict and St. John the Baptist. The living of St. Benedict is a donative annexed to the curacy of St. John's, both being peculiars in the dio. of Bath and Wells; gross income £198. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. Great tithes, the property of the bishop of Bath and Wells, commuted in 1778. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1817; a Friends' meeting-house; and places of worship for Independents and Baptists. There are eight daily schools, two of which possess endowments, amounting, in 1823, to £25 per annum, arising out of gifts from James Levinston, Earl Godolphin, Honora Gould, and Rev. William Gould. The royal hospitals are two almshouses, called the Lower and Upper almshouse, supposed to have been originally instituted by the abbots of Glastonbury, and since the dissolution kept in repair, and the inmates partly supported, by the Crown. There are eleven inmates in each almshouse, one of each of which eleven receives no pay, but succeeds to the first vacancy. There are chapels and garden-ground attached to them. Other charities, £32 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,797 9s.

The ancient town of Glastonbury stands on the great north road from Exeter to Wells, on a low peninsular marsh formed by the Brue. "The Britons called it Yniswytrin, which afterwards the Saxons interpreted into Glastenbury, i. e. the Glassy island; in Latin, Glasconia. It is also called the island of Avalonia, from the British name Avalla, which signifies apples." [Mag. Brit. 1738.] It consists of two streets, cruciform, and running to the four cardinal points. Many of the houses have been built with the materials of its once magnificent abbey. The town is well-paved, cleaned, and lighted. The old cross in the centre, or market-place, is one of the most elegant of these ancient and interesting rallying points. The great gate, which formerly led into the abbey, with the great church, and the ancient hospitium for pilgrims visiting the shrine of St. Dunstan, which retains its curiously carved front, and, on the whole, much of its original appearance, were long ago converted into inns. Warner, describing Glastonbury to be a town "which justly boasts itself as one of the oldest in England," says, "here vestiges of ancient magnificence appeared on every side, and prepared me for the ruins of the immense abbey, from which I have just returned. Mouldmgs of portals, capitals of pilasters, and stone-ribs of roofs, the spoil of edifices once august, are stuck in the walls of the ignoble residences of modern times; and scarcely can the traveller take a step without being reminded by some fragment of masonry, or ancient mansion with its arched portal and spandril windows, that Glastonbury has suffered a most lamentable reverse of fortune."

This town anciently returned members to parliament, but was disfranchised, in 1539, on the refusal of its last abbot to surrender his abbey to Henry VIII. It was first incorporated by charter from Queen Anne; the government being vested in a mayor, a recorder, 7 capital and 16 inferior burgesses, assisted by 2 coroners, town-clerk, &c.; the mayor and ex-mayor being appointed to act as justices of the peace within the borough, the limits of which comprised the greater part of the united parishes of St. John and St. Benedict, the parts not included being unenclosed moors at the time the charter was granted, and remaining so till the year 1719. Besides the town, these corporate limits comprised 40 farms, with the hamlets of Edgarley, Wick, Northover, and Norwood-park. In the new municipal boundaries report the limits assigned entirely exclude the eastern side of the borough, with its hamlets and farms, and a portion of the western side. By the new municipal act the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being 'the mayor and burgesses of the town of Glastonbury.' The corporation possess no property except their town-hall and a small piece of ground in the town on which a weigh-bridge now stands. An old market-house, latterly used as a silk factory, had previously stood here for many years in the middle of the street, which it rendered very narrow and inconvenient.

The Glastonbury canal, and the Brue, connect the town with the Bristol channel at the mouth of the river Parret, crossing the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway, and the Bristol and Taunton canal. Timber, slates, tiles, and coal, are the principal articles thus conveyed. The inhabitants of the town are chiefly employed in agriculture; but the silk manufacture has been carried on to some extent. The market days used to be Tuesday and Saturday; but the former has been discontinued, and the latter confined to butcher-meat. Fairs are held on September 19th, for cattle and horses; and on October 11th. The former is called Tor fair. There are here branches of Stuckey's banking company, and of the West of England, and the South Wales, district banks.

Glastonbury is indebted for its origin, and celebrity, to its monastic institutions, which claim the honour of having existed from a period nearly coeval with Christianity. It is unquestionably a place of great antiquity; and its history, though of a legendary character, is not a little curious. The monastery of Glastonbury, according to Camden, "is very ancient; deriving its original from Joseph of Arimathea, the same who buried Christ's body, and whom Philip the apostle of the Gauls sent into Britain to preach the gospel. For this is attested both by the most ancient histories of this monastery, and an epistle of St. Patrick the Irish apostle, who led a monastic life here for 30 years together. From hence this place was by our ancestors called the first ground of God,—the first ground of the Saints in England,—the rise and fountain of all religion in England,—the burying-place of the saints,—the mother of the saints,—built by the very disciples of our Lord. Nor is there any reason why we should call this in question, since I have before shown that the Christian religion, in the very infancy of the church, was preached in this island; and since Tre-culphus Lexoviensis has told us, that this Philip brought barbarous nations, bordering upon darkness, and living upon the sea-coasts, to the light of knowledge, and haven of faith. But to return to the monastery, and inform ourselves out of Malmesbury's little treatise upon that subject: when that small church founded by Joseph was wasted away with age, Devi, bishop of St. David's, built a new one in that place; and when time had worn out that too, twelve men coming from the north of Britain repaired it; but at length King Ina, who founded a school at Rome for the education of the English youth, and to maintain that, as also to distribute alms at Rome, taxed every single house in the kingdom one penny, pulled this down and built that stately church dedicated to Christ, St. Peter, and St. Paul." Ina was king of Wessex. He ascended the throne in the year 689, and is said to have built this monastery about the year 708. The chapel, which he added to it, contained about 2,640 pounds of silver plating. The altar, which Devi of St. David's had previously enriched with a sapphire of inestimable value, he adorned with gold to the amount of 264 pounds weight. "In those early times," continues Camden, "several very devout persons served God here, and especially Irish, who were maintained at the king's charge, and instructed the youth in religion and the liberal sciences. For they made choice of a solitary life that they might prosecute their studies with more retiredness, and inure themselves to a severe course of life, to qualify them for taking up the cross. But at length Dunstan, a man of excellent wit and judgment, after his reputation for sanctity and learning had given him access to the conversation of princes, instead of these, brought in monks of a newer order, namely, Benedictines, and was himself first made abbot over the large body settled there; and those, by the bounty of good and pious princes, got so much wealth, as even exceeded that of kings. After they had for about 600 years together, as it were, reigned in great abundance, for all their neighbours were at their beck, they were driven out by Henry VIII., and the monastery, which by degrees had grown into a little city, [environed with a large wall a mile about, and replenished with stately buildings,] demolished and laid level with the ground;—how large and how stately it has been may be gathered from the ruins." Dunstan, appointed the first abbot, by Edred, in 942, having the command of that monarch's treasury as well as of his conscience, enlarged the conventual buildings in a style of unrivalled magnificence, and completed an establishment which furnished, under him, superiors to all the religious houses in the kingdom; being 'the pride of England and the glory of Christendom.' From the pride and the power of Dunstan, it may well be supposed that he left little for his successors to do in the way of adding either to the wealth or the prerogatives of the abbacy. The abbot was made sole monarch of the Isle of Avalon, which neither king nor bishop could enter without his permission;—he had precedence of all the abbots in England, till the year 1154, when Pope Adrian IV. conferred that honour on the abbots of St. Albans;—he was a lord of parliament, and his revenues were equal or superior to those of royalty itself. At the time of the Conquest, the privileges and the revenues of this establishment were considerably abridged, but they were soon regained. "While Kinge Richard was prisoner, [1193.] Savarie, the byshop of Bathe, by meane of his freindes beyond the sea, obtayned to exchange his towne of Bathe for this abbaye, and translatinge his sea hyther, was, duringe his life, called byshop of Glass-enburye. The monkes could not like this, and, therefore, they hasted to Rome, and solicited by almeanes the kinge also. In the ende, Jocelin his successor, upon condicion and libertie to receive to himselfe four or five good maners [1210] to comend his byshoprike withal, was contented to suffer their restitution." The privileges and revenues of the monkes continued unimpaired till the year 1539, when the last abbot, Richard Whyting, the 61st in succession,—possessing all the spirit, though not the good fortune, of Dunstan the first,—refused to surrender the abbey to the commissioners of Henry VIII., or to acknowledge the ecclesiastical supremacy assumed by that monarch. With two of his monkes, he was arraigned for treason, condemned, drawn upon a hurdle to the Tor, and there hanged and quartered. His head was placed over the gate of the abbey, and his four quarters exposed, one, each, at Bath, Bridgewater, Ilchester, and Wells. The revenue was at this period valued at £3,508 13s. 4d. Of this most magnificent monastery, which, with its dependencies, occupied upwards of 60 acres of ground, a very small portion now remains. The chapel of St. Joseph, and some fragments of the conventual church, are in good preservation; and the Abbot's kitchen,—an octagonal structure, having four fire-places, a finely vaulted roof, with an octagonal pyramid crowned by a double lantern of curious design, rising from the centre; being probably of more recent erection than any other of the buildings,—is nearly entire. The hospitium, already alluded to, is connected with the abbey by a secret passage. "Whether the many female devotees," says the Rev. Richard Warner, "who, under the reign of Romish superstition, travelled to Glastonbury, and reposed themselves at the George inn, came solely for the purpose of visiting the tombs of the saints, or the miraculous tree of Joseph, is rendered rather problematical by a secret passage, discovered many years since, connecting this hospitium with the abbey. It lies immediately under the house, pursues its subterranean course quite to the opposite side of the town, reaches the monastery, and there terminates—not at the chapel of a patron saint, or the mausoleum of a pious founder, but—at a short flight of steps which ascended formerly to the bed-chamber of the lord abbot!!!" In the church of this monastery many illustrious persons have been interred, and, among others, it is supposed, the famous King Arthur, whose bones, according to Camden, were found in a coffin of hollowed oak, at the depth of nine feet below the surface, having over it a leaden cross, with a Latin inscription in rude Gothic characters, translated, "Here lies the famous King Arthur, buried in the isle of Avalon." For religious relics and pious legends, Glastonbury and its vicinity stand pre-eminent. Here, when the devil, in the shape of a lovely and bewitching girl, had, by repeated wanton efforts, tried in vain to awake the carnal man within the earthly tabernacle of the holy St. Dunstan, that victorious saint, without compunction, fear, or hesitation, seized him, by her delicate and beauteous nose, between the red hot fangs of an efficient pair of pincers, wherewith, deaf to all her screams of agony, he in triumph dragged her seven times round the oratory walls, until the devil within her promised, solemnly, for ever to refrain from leading him again into such temptation. Here, on a small eminence, still known by the name of Wearyall, did Joseph of Arimathea and his fellows, weary with their journey, sit and refresh themselves, while the withered staff of the ancient saint, stuck into the ground, took root, and afterwards became a blooming hawthorn, budding regularly for 1500 years, on Christmas-day, until it was cut down by roundheads in the time of pious Charles the martyr. Here, too, in the abbey churchyard, was the miraculous walnut-tree which never budded till 11th June.—St. Barnabas'-day—invariably on that day shooting forth its leaves, while afterwards it blossomed in the usual way. A walnut-tree still grows upon the spot, but shows no partiality to Barnabas. Cuttings from the holy thorn,—which is only a variety of the common hawthorn,—have been preserved, and may be met with in the neighbourhood. Being an early variety, they sometimes do flower in December; but wanting the effectual prayers of the monks, they have miscalculated the days of the month, and are not to be depended on. A still more conspicuous relic is the tower of St. Michael, at a short distance from the town, on the summit of the Tor hill on which the last abbot was executed. This is all that remains of a splendid church and monastery, erected on the site of a former one, originally founded in 430. "Then came Patrick out of Ireland," says Lambard, "and was abbot of this house, and in his tyme caused to be buylded the oratorie of St. Mychael on the topp of the hyll. wheare had bene some buildinge before." The church and monastery were added in later times; but they were all demolished by an earthquake in 1276. The tower or Tor of St. Michael is an object of great admiration. Over the west entrance, however, is a sculptured figure of St. Michael holding a pair of scales, in which he appears, ridiculously, and also somewhat ludicrously, weighing the sacred volume against the devil and one of his imps, who are of course kicking the beam. Henry Fielding, the Homer of romance, was born at Sharpham-park in this vicinity.

GLATTON, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, union of Peterborough, county of Huntingdon; 2 miles south-south-west of Stilton. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Holme, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £21 8s. 11½d.; gross income £622; nett income £546. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Hopkinson. All tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1809. Here are 2 daily schools, both of which are endowed. Charities, in 1830, £40 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 10s. Acres 2,100. Houses 53. A. P. £2,885. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 348.

GLAZELEY, a parish in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; 3½ miles south-south-west of Bridgenorth, and west of the Severn. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Chetton. Acres 700. Houses 7. A. P. £2,657. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 47.

GLEAN (THE). See GLEN, (THE), Lincolnshire

GLEMHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 4 miles west-south-west of Saxmundham. Living, a rectory with the perpetual curacy of Little Glemham, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £20; gross income £329. Patroness, in 1835, the Hon. Mrs. North. Here is a daily school. Charities, church-lands, £25 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £269 10s. Acres 1,340. Houses 41. A. P. £2,378. Pop., in 1801, 384; in 1831, 399.

GLEMHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 6 miles south-west by west of Framlingham, and north of the river Alde. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the rectory of Great Glemham. Here are two daily schools. Acres 1,530. Houses 39. A. P. £1,545. Pop., in 1801, 319; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1838, £184 9s.

GLEMSFORD, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; 4¼ miles east-north-east of Clare, and north of the river Stour. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £30; gross income £582. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here are 4 daily and 2 infant schools. A silk mill here, in 1838, employed 54 hands. A fair for toys is held here on June 24th. In the time of Edward the Confessor there was here established a collegiate society of priests, invested with numerous privileges which were confirmed to them by Stephen, Henry II., and Henry III. What became of the society does not appear to have been recorded. Acres 2,280. Houses 276. A. P. £3,675. Pop., in 1801, 1,215; in 1831, 1,470. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,030 19s.

GLEN-MAGNA, a parish in the hund. of Garret, union of Billesdon, county of Leicester; 6 miles south-east of Leicester, on a branch of the river Soar, and near the Union canal. It includes the chapelry of Stretton-Magna. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Stretton-Magna, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 14s. 2d., returned at £139 6s. 2d.; gross income £219. Patron, in 1835, Sir George Robinson, Bart. Great and small tithes, &c., of the Upper or North end Fields, commuted in 1753; and the great and vicarial tithes of the Nether or South end Fields, in 1759. Here are three infant schools, besides a daily and a boarding school. Charities, in 1836, £33 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £446 15s. Many of the inhabitants are employed in frame-work knitting. Acres 2,510. Houses 166. A. P. £4,739. Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 770.

GLEN-PARVA, a township in the parish of Aylestone, county of Leicester; 4 miles south-south-west of Leicester; intersected by the river Soar and the Union canal. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £190 16s. 8d. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1826; and a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 37. A. P. £1,364. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 160. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 6s.

GLEN (THE), or GLEAN, a river in the county of Lincoln. Its sources lie in the south part of the county, north of Market-Deeping, and traversing the fens in a north-east direction, it falls into Fosdyke-wash, east of Surfleet.

GLEN (THE), a river in the county of Northumberland, giving name to the low tract of land called Glendale. Its principal sources are in the Cheviot hills; but it is also augmented by a branch from the borders of Scotland, west of Mindrum. It flows eastward and by north towards Fenton, where it joins the river Till. "Paulinus, the byshope that converted the Northumbrians under Kinge Edwyne, remayned in the kinge's house at Gebryn (whereof there is mention in Elmeden) by the space of 30 dayes, duringe which tyme he did nothinge but baptize in this ryver Glen suche as resorted to him. He that wrote the continuation of the hystorie of Prosp. Aquitan., sayeth, that one of the twelve victories wherein Arthur triumphed over the Saxons, was neare to this ryver." Lambard's Top. Dic.

GLENDALÉ WARD, a division of the county of Northumberland. It lies in the north-west portion of the county, bordering on the west with Scotland, and on the north with Islandshire and Northamshire, county of Durham. Area 107,200 acres. Houses 2,193. Pop., in 1831, 12,009.

GLENDON-BARFORD, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3 miles north-north-west of Kettering. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8; no return. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Booth. Acres 1,490. Houses 7. A. P. £1,803. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £21 1s.

GLENFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Blaby, county of Leicester; 3½ miles west-north-west of Leicester; intersected by the Leicester and Swannington railway. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Braunstone and Kirby-Muxloe, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 9s. 9½d.; gross income £863. Patron, in 1835, C. Winstanley, Esq. All tithes, &c., commuted in 1809. Here is a day and Sunday school. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in frame-knitting. Acres 6,830. Houses 209. A. P. £7,808. Pop., in 1801, including the chapelries of Braunstone and Kirby-Muxloe, with the liberties of Braunstone-Frith, Kirby-Frith, and Glenfield-Frith, 700; in 1831, 1,166. Poor rates, in 1838, £511 19s.

GLENFIELD-FRITH, a liberty in the parish of Glenfield, county of Leicester; 4 miles west-north-west of Leicester. A. P. £405. Pop., in 1821, 4.

GLENTHAM, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Aslaoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 7 miles west by north of Market-Raisen, and west of the river Ancholme. Living, a discharged vicarage exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8, returned at £112; gross income £90. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Tithes commuted in 1763. Here are a neat chapel for Wesleyan Methodists, 4 daily schools, and a small endowed almshouse. Acres 2,240. Houses 60. A. P. £3,122. Pop., in 1801, 258; in 1831, 399. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 10s.

GLENTWORTH, a parish in the west division of Aslaoe wapentake, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 11 miles north-north-west of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 17s. 6d., returned at £56; gross income £307. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Scarborough. Here is a daily school, and an almshouse for three poor women with an endowment. Acres 2,940. Houses 54. A. P. £3,980. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 298. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 5s.

GLENWHELT, a hamlet in the parish of Haltwhistle, Tindale ward, county of Northumberland; 3½ miles west by north of Haltwhistle, and 2½ east by south of Gilsland, near the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. It consists of a good inn, a farmhouse, and a few cottages, included in the township of Blenkinsop, but formerly the eastern suburb of the village of Greenhead, with which it is connected by a bridge across the Tippal rivulet. This is the highest spot on a line drawn from Carlisle to Newcastle, though it is only 445 feet above sea-level. In the garden-wall belonging to the inn is a Roman altar, and a colossal head which Hutchison saw at Thirwall castle. Caerboran is a Roman station situated on the declivity north-east of this hamlet.

GLIDDEN. See HAMBLEDON.

GLIDEPTH-HILL, in the parish of the Holy Trinity, county of Dorset; a street contiguous to Colliton-Row on the north, which leads into the town of Dorchester. It was formerly part of the parish of Frome-Whitefield.

GLINTON, a parish in the liberty of Peterborough, formerly in the hund. of Nassaburgh, union of Peterborough, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-south-east of Market-Deeping. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Pea-kirk. All tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1809.

Here are three daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1830, £116 6s. 9d. per annum, of which £100 19s. 3d. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £279 6s. Acres 1,380. Houses 81. A. P. £3,365. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 414.

GLODDEATH, a township in the parish of Eglwys-Rhos, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 3 miles north-east of Conwy. The inhabitants are mostly employed in the mines of the neighbouring parish of Llandudno.

GLOOSTON, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market-Harborough, county of Leicester; $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Market-Harborough. A branch of the river Welland runs through the parish. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8; gross income £186. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cardigan. Tithes commuted in 1825. Here are an infant and a Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, 13s. 6d. Poor rates, in 1838, £98. The soil of this parish is chiefly clay, and the surface hilly. Acres 660. Houses 34. A. P. £1,368. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 177.

GLORORUM, originally GLOWER-O'ER-HIM, a township in the parish of Bamfrough, county of Northumberland; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by south of Belford, and 1 south-west of Bamfrough. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 8. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 47. Poor rates, in 1838, £18.

GLOSSOP, a parish in the hund. of High Peak, union of Glossop, county of Derby; 9 miles north-north-west of Chapel-in-le-Frith, and intersected by the Manchester and Sheffield railway, which approaches within $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile of the town of Glossop. Acres 49,960. Houses 3,163. A. P. £20,208. Pop., in 1821, 13,766; in 1831, 18,080. Houses of the township 368. A. P. £6,336. Pop., in 1821, 1,351; in 1831, 2,012. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Charlesworth, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £12 18s. 9d.; gross income £122. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Norfolk. Here are 3 Independent churches, formed, one at a very remote period, the others in 1811, and 1829; a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1813; and a Roman Catholic chapel, built in 1810, previous to which service was performed in the duke of Norfolk's house here. There are 24 daily schools, amongst which are several charity-schools. Charities, in 1826, upwards of £280 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,798 16s. The Glossop poor-law union comprehends 2 parishes, embracing an area of 33 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 9,631. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £1,257 18s. Glossop is one of the polling-places for the members for the northern division of the county. By act of parliament, session 1839, a court of requests is established for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts within the town and manor, and other places in the parish, of Glossop. In this parish there are a number of extensive calico-printing establishments, with fulling, dyeing, bleaching, and paper, mills, and iron-works of every description; but the principal manufacture here is cotton: in 1838, 50 cotton and 3 woollen mills here employed 4,654 hands. This parish is by far the most important seat of the cotton manufacture in the county of DERBY—which see—[section Manufactures.] “In the last quarter of the last century there was but one mill in the whole of this district, and that was employed in grinding the scanty crop of oats into meal for the food of a few agricultural inhabitants. The late Samuel Oldknow, Esq., was one of the earliest manufacturing settlers in this vicinity. He found a powerful stream coursing its way through a deep dell, and instantly perceived the advantages to be derived from it. He established himself near Mellor; and his example and success in business soon procured him many neighbours, until the banks of the Goyte and the Etherow became the busy scenes of industrious, enterprising, and ingenious men. The first mill built by Mr. Oldknow was upon the Arkwright principle, and he improved the fineness of the threads. Having accomplished this object in the spinning, he applied it to the weaving of British muslins, (and constructed mills for that purpose,) which he executed by the power-loom. Mr. Oldknow was ever active in public pursuits, and the Peak-Forest canal originated chiefly with him. Towards the close of his useful existence he occupied himself much in agricultural pursuits, and at his lamented death, which happened in September, 1828, he left the valley of Glossop improved in its agricultural produce, as well as enriched by manufacture; and it may be also said, that what he found a desert, he left, comparatively, a city and a garden. Calico-printing is here carried on extensively: it is performed with cylindrical copper rollers, on which the figures are engraved. The process of this mode of printing is so rapid that pieces of twenty-eight yards are thrown off from each set of rollers in less than two minutes. This art was greatly improved by Mr. John Potts, of the house of Potts, Oliver and Potts. This gentleman was an artist himself, and having studied the different shades of colour produced upon the blue ware in the potteries, he was enabled to bring the art of calico-printing to a perfection of which previously it had not been supposed to be capable.”—Glover's Peak Guide. There is a branch of the Manchester and Liverpool District bank here. The township has an annual fair for cattle and other merchandise, on May 6th.

GLOSTERHILL, a township in the parish of Warkworth, Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Alnwick. It is situated on the southern bank of the Cocklet, near its confluence with the sea. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 28. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 5s.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE,

Colloquially GLO'STERSHIRE, an inland, but partly maritime, county, in the south of England, bounded on the north and north-east by the counties of Worcester and Warwick; on the east by that of Oxford; on the south-east by those of Berks and Wilts; on the south and south-west by the county of Somerset and the Bristol channel; and on the west and north-west by the counties of Monmouth and Hereford, from the former of which it is separated by the river Wye. The boundaries are chiefly, however, artificial. Taking it at its extreme points, from Clifford Chambers, near Stratford-upon-Avon, on the north-east, to Clifton, beyond the city of Bristol, on the south-west, it extends nearly 70 statute miles in length; and from Lechlade on the south-east, to Preston on the north-west, about 40 in breadth. Its general breadth, however, is not more than 26 miles. In circumference it is about 156 miles. Its form is elliptical; but the north-eastern extremity is more acute than the other. There is a small detached portion of the county surrounded by Wiltshire, and other two, by Warwick and Oxford shires. On the other hand, there are detached portions of Wilts and Worcester shires surrounded by this county. By Sir Robert Atkyns, the historian of Gloucestershire, and by the author of its agricultural report, its area is estimated at 800,000 acres: in the parliamentary returns, at 790,470 acres, REFERENCE TO ONE HUNDREDS.

- | | | |
|----|-------------------------|----|
| 1 | Bisley. | 15 |
| 2 | Widstone & King-barton. | 16 |
| 3 | Westbury. | 17 |
| 4 | Duchy of Lancaster. | 18 |
| 5 | St. Briavels. | 19 |
| 6 | Bladestie. | 20 |
| 7 | Herkeley. | 21 |
| 8 | Langtree. | 22 |
| 9 | Grainbalds Ash. | 23 |
| 10 | Therbar. | 24 |
| 11 | Henbury. | 25 |
| 12 | Drigtwells Barrow. | 26 |
| 13 | Langley & Swinehead. | 27 |
| 14 | Haygate. | 28 |

the Figures prefixed to the Towns denote the distance from London

GLoucestershire.

and by others at 805,000 acres, of which, including all the woodlands, 10,000 are considered to be still lying waste. With the exception of about 500 acres, the whole is supposed to be capable of cultivation. About 750,000 acres are arable, meadow, and pasture lands. The county is naturally divided into three districts,—those of the Hill, the Vale, and the Forest. Artificially, it is divided into an eastern and a western section,—the eastern comprising the 17 hundreds, of Kiftsgate, Westminster, consisting of three distinct parts, Tibaldston, of two parts, Tewkesbury, Deerhurst, Cheltenham, Cleve, Dudston and King's Barton, consisting of two parts, Gloucester, city and county, Whitstone, Longtree, Bisley, Rapsgate, Crowthorne and Minety, Brightwell's Barrow, Bradley, and Slaughter; and the western comprising the 12 hundreds of Botloe, Duchy of Lancaster, St. Briavels, Blidesloe, Westbury, consisting of two parts, Berkeley, of five parts, Henbury, of two parts, Thornbury, of two parts, Grumbald's-Ash, Pucklechurch, Langley and Swinehead, and Barton-regis with Bristol: in all, including Gloucester and Bristol, which are counties in themselves, there are 29 hundreds, containing 350 parishes, 1 city, Gloucester, and part of another,—namely, Bristol; 26 market-towns, besides Gloucester and Bristol,—namely, Berkeley, Bisley, Chipping-Campden, Cheltenham, Cirencester, Coleford, Dursley, Fairford, Lechlade, Marshfield, Minchinhampton, Mitcheldean, Moreton-in-the-Marsh, Newent, Newnam, Northleach, Painswick, Sodbury-Chipping, Stanley-St.-Leonard, Stow-on-the-wold, Stroud, Tetbury, Tewkesbury, Thornbury, Wickwar, Winchcombe, and Wotton-under-Edge. Houses 71,254. A. P. £1,463,259. Pop., in 1801, 250,809; in 1831, 386,700, consisting of 83,446 families, of whom 21,185 were chiefly employed in agriculture; 33,179 in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; and 29,082, otherwise occupied.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Till very recently, the whole of this county, with the exception of the parishes of Icomb and Cowhonyborn, was included within the diocese of Gloucester, which comprehended one archdeaconry and ten deaneries: namely, the archdeaconry of Gloucester, with the deaneries of Campden, Cirencester, Dursley, Fairford, Forest, Gloucester, Hawkesbury, Stonehouse, Stow, and Winchcombe; but the see of Gloucester has been united, by the ecclesiastical commissioners, to that of Bristol; and the county, with the exception of the deaneries of Cirencester, Fairford, and Hawkesbury, forms an archdeaconry, containing 8 deaneries,—namely, Blockley jurisdiction, Campden, Dursley, Forest, Gloucester, Stonehouse, Stow, and Winchcombe. See also the articles BRISTOL and GLOUCESTER. The total amount of church rates for 1838-9, was £12,314. The poor rate returns for three years to Easter, 1750, show an average expenditure of £25,687 on the poor of this county; for 1803, an expenditure of £113,415; for 1833, an expenditure of £184,774; and for 1839, an expenditure of £120,300. The total number of depositors in saving banks in this county, on 20th November, 1838, was 19,522: total amount deposited, £661,813 of which £72,261 consisted of deposits not exceeding £20. Average amount invested by each depositor, £34. The number of charitable institutions in the county was 194; income, £11,332; of Friendly societies, 204; income, £24,540. There are 991 daily schools in this county, attended by 29,917 children, and 519 Sunday schools, attended by 40,931 children.

Franchise and government.—Gloucester sends four members to parliament,—two for the eastern division, who are polled for at Campden, Cirencester, Cheltenham, Gloucester, Northleach, Stroud, and Tewkesbury, the principal place of election being at Gloucester; and two for the western division, who are polled for at Coleford, Dursley, Newent, Newnam, Sodbury, Thornbury, and Wotton-under-Edge, the principal place of election being Thornbury. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was, for the eastern division, 7,683; for the western, 7,904. In the eastern division, besides Gloucester, which returns 2 members, there are 3 boroughs returning 2 each,—namely, Tewkesbury, Cirencester, and Stroud; and 1 returning a single member, namely, Cheltenham; in the western there are no boroughs returning members to parliament, except Bristol, which returns 2. Previous to 1832 this county was undivided, and returned only two members, besides two each for Gloucester, Tewkesbury, and Cirencester. It is in the Oxford circuit. The county hall and jail are situated in the city of GLOUCESTER: which see. The total income of county rates, in 1801, was £9,729; expenditure on jails, £2,388; on prisoners with prosecutions, £3,891; on constables and vagrants, £610; on bridges, £116: total expenditure, £7,975. In 1831, the total income was £15,924; expenditure on jails, £791; on prisoners with prosecutions, £12,212; on constables and vagrants, £1,104; on bridges, £1,690: total expenditure, £18,933. In 1838, the total income was £15,972; expenditure on jails, £815; on prisoners with prosecutions, £7,243; on constables and vagrants, £564; on bridges, £158: total expenditure, £15,972. From the criminal tables already quoted under various articles, and wherein the proportion of all the criminals to the total population is taken as unity (1·00), it appears that in a list of four adjoining counties, the average of which is 1·30, Gloucestershire ranks at 1·42, being the same proportion as Warwick; while Worcester ranks only as 1·09, and Monmouth, '85.

General features.—The three longitudinal districts into which this county is naturally divided, differ considerably from each other in climate, soil, and appearance. The first is that called the Coteswold, or Hill district, which takes its name from sheep-cotes, and wolds,—as hills were termed by Englishmen of old. This district comprehends the whole tract of country from Chipping-Campden on the north, to Bath on the south, and occupying the eastern part of the county. It is subdivided into the Upper and the Lower Coteswolds. This is by far the most extensive of the three divisions; but its aspect is in general bleak and bare. It has, however, many winding dales, here called 'Bottoms,' accompanying the course of the streams, which fall from its heights, and flow, with a westerly course, into the Severn; exhibiting scenes of the most delightful seclusion and the most exquisite beauty. Near Wotton-under-Edge, the hills rise to the height of 800 feet, and, after sinking to 250, they again rise, near Cheltenham, to 1,134 feet. They divide the basin of the lower Severn from the waters which flow into the upper Severn of the Avon and into the Thames. The Hill district contains about 200,000 acres; and, though the general elevation is considerable, the climate is by no means severe. The sides of the hills abound with springs, and almost every valley has its little stream. The second division, called the Vale, comprehends the whole of the lowlands from Stratford-upon-Avon to Bristol. It includes the vales of Evesham, Gloucester, and Berkeley; and might perhaps, with more propriety, be denominated the district of the vales of Severn and Avon; the former comprehending all the low country between Tewkesbury and Bristol; the latter all that between the Upper Coteswold and the Avon, from Tewkesbury to Stratford. The beautiful vale of Evesham belongs to the Avon; and, in respect to climate, produce, &c., may be considered as a continuation of the vale of Gloucester, which is about 15 miles in extent from north to south; between 7 and 8 from east to west; and supposed to contain between 50,000 and 60,000 acres. In its outline, the latter is somewhat semicircular, the river Severn being the chord, and the surrounding hills the arch; the towns of Gloucester, Tewkesbury, and Cheltenham, forming a triangle within its area. The vale of Berkeley, from Austcliff to Matson hill, is about 25 miles in extent: its medium width is somewhat less than 4: its area comprehends about 50,000 acres; and, in its outline, like the vale of Gloucester, it describes nearly a segment of a circle; the Severn forming an irregular chord, and the hills to the south and east a curve terminating on the north by the Painswick and Matson hills. The climate of the Vale district is exceedingly mild and salubrious. The Forest district—which is much the smallest of the three, containing little more than 22,000 acres—is separated from the rest of the county by the river Severn. It is varied throughout with hill and dale, and comprehends all the parishes on the west side of the Severn up to Gloucester, and afterwards on the west side of the Leden to the Wye. This division is chiefly occupied by the Forest of Dean, once reckoned the principal support of the English navy.—See DEAN FOREST. Though part of this county is considerably elevated, it has nothing at all approaching to the features of a mountainous country. Its more remarkable eminences are those in the vicinity of Cheltenham, Cleve-Cloud, Lickhampton hill, and Church-Down; Robin Hood's hill, near Gloucester; Longdown and Pike-down, near Dursley; Sponebed, near Painswick; and the rock of St. Vincent, near Clifton.

Rivers.—The principal rivers are the Severn, the Wye, the Fromes, and the Avons, Upper and Lower, and the Isis or Thames. The Severn, issuing from a small lake on the east side of the mountain of Plinlimmon in Wales, rushes eastward with the vehemence of a mountain torrent to Llanidloes: here, divested of its pristine fury, it turns north, through the fine Vale of Montgomery, to Welshpool, where, having received large accessions by the way, it becomes navigable. Turning to the east, it flows with many beautiful curves through Shropshire, south through Worcestershire, and thence by Upton, and Tewkesbury, where it receives the UPPER AVON—which see—into the great Vale of Gloucestershire. Passing through this vale; its banks in some places abundantly wooded, and in others rich in pasturage; it is parted into two streams, and forms the isle of Alney, opposite to the town of Gloucester. Here it receives the Leden, a considerable river from the north-west; and, reuniting its streams, is greatly increased in depth and in breadth, becomes a broad estuary, with bold and picturesque banks; and gliding between a range of fine pastures and villages, grows gradually wider, studded all the way with sails, till it receives the Wye from Monmouthshire, near Chepstow, and the LOWER AVON—which see—from Somersetshire, a little below Bristol, when it is lost in the Bristol channel. Besides the two Avons, the Wye, and the Leden,—the Severn, in passing through this county, receives the Chelt at Wainlade hill: the Upper Frome, or Stroud river, rising at Brimpsfield and flowing by Stroud; famed as it is for its peculiar qualities in dyeing cloth, especially of a scarlet colour, is received by the Severn at Framilode passage, where there is a semicircular bend of 10 miles in the river to Frethren, not above 2 miles from Framilode in a direct line:

it also receives the Ewelme, or Cam, at Frampton-Pill; and the middle Avon a little below Berkeley. The Severn is remarkable for its tide, which rolls in with great noise and an impetuous elevation of three or four feet. Its usual rise at Gloucester is $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet, but it sometimes rises to 9 feet, and from its violence has often done great damage to the surrounding country. This curious phenomenon, like that occurring in the Trent—see GAINSBOROUGH—is called the Hygre or Eagre. To guard against it, and against the sudden inundations to which the low grounds, especially below Gloucester, are liable; drains, sea-walls, &c., have been constructed at great expense, and are placed under the superintendence of a society called the commissioners of sewers. The Severn was formerly famous for salmon, but it has become very scarce of late years. A variety of other fish are caught. The Severn has been a navigable river from time immemorial, and has borne on its surface vessels of different sizes, from the ancient British coracle to those of 150 and 200 tons burthen. Brigs, sloops, barges, and trows have been navigated as high up as Gloucester; but the larger vessels have been rarely brought so high up the channel of the river; as rocks, which appear at low water above the surface, rendered the navigation here difficult; but this has been avoided since 1827, by the Berkeley and Gloucester canal, which also shortens the distance to Gloucester from its communication with the estuary of the Severn at Berkeley-Pill, by upwards of 11 miles. The navigation of the Severn, however, appears to be subject to considerable disadvantages, as we find it stated, May, 1840, that “the river Severn is now in a great degree commercially useless: it has not been so low for a dozen years.”—In 1838, a company was formed for deepening the channel to Worcester, $6\frac{1}{2}$ feet, for barge navigation. The Wye has its sources at no great distance from those of the Severn, on the south side of Plinlimmon; and proceeding south and south-east, divides the county of Radnor from that of Brecon. At the town of Hay it enters the county of Hereford, flowing to the north-east. Turning again towards the south, it flows majestically through that county; washing, in its progress, the town of Hereford.

* In September, 1837, Mr. Ham of Bristol communicated to the British Association, the result of his investigations on the mud of the Severn, into the embouchure of which river, he observes, the tide flows higher, and with greater impetuosity, consequently repels more forcibly the current of fresh water, than in any other river in the known world. “The tidal wave changes the current of the tributary streams at the mouth of the Severn, and it is occasionally forced up the Wye to a height of 60 feet, and with a velocity of nearly nine miles in the hour. A consequent agitation of water takes place in the embouchure; and, in narrow channels, the fresh water is actually driven back by the force of the tide. The mixture, however, is effected where the channel is wide, and the bottom full of inequalities; and, in this case, there is a constant regularity in the specific gravity at the same season of the year. Observations made in the month of August, from 1822 to the present year, (1837,) making it 1020—water in the middle of the ocean being generally 1028.” There is manifestly a great evaporation in summer from so large a surface of water as that which forms this estuary; and Mr. Ham conceives the loss to be greater than is supplied by the tributary streams. He therefore supposes that the same identical water, or nearly so, is kept oscillating to and fro by the force of the tide. On the Welsh coast, the water, being shallow, has a higher temperature (67° in August) than that on the opposite side (65°); and on the Welsh side Mr. Ham found the greatest quantity of mud. He ascertained, that at the mouth of the Avon the water contains 26.3 grains in every imperial gallon—in the deep channel 28.5—at the beginning of the shallows 35.0—on the opposite coast $72\frac{1}{2}$ —at the mouth of the Usk it was found to be 39.5—and the average of these five trials gave 40.3; so that, taking the channel area at 225 miles, the quantity of mud at the depth of one fathom, suspended in the water, would be 709,000 tons! If the quantity of homogeneous mud be the same at equal distances from the bottom, and with equal velocities in the current, it might be possible to prevent the formation of shoals, by so altering the channels that the water may flow with an equal velocity in all their parts.

Cutting through a small corner of the county of Monmouth, it becomes the boundary between that county and the county of Gloucester, till it enters, as we have stated, the estuary of the Severn below Chepstow. The beautifully wooded eminences of the Forest of Dean, constitute many fine features on its meandering banks. This is one of the most noble and beautiful rivers in the island. It is naturally limpid, and in the early part of its course flows with great rapidity through a broken and rugged country. Through the fine plains of Hereford, it rolls slowly and with many beautiful curves, till, on the borders of Monmouth and Gloucester shires, it resumes its pristine rapidity; and, through a wild and thinly peopled district, between high and precipitous banks, rushes toward the sea; forming, as it were, at every leap, scenes of picturesque beauty or overpowering grandeur. Besides those we have enumerated, as falling into the Severn—there is the Lower Frome, a small stream, rising near Wickwar, flowing through Bristol, and falling into the floating-dock of the Avon—see BRISTOL. The Coln, Lech, and Windrush, are small streams, which flow into the Isis or Thames. Within two miles south-west of Cirencester, a clear fountain, in a little rocky dell, is known as the “Thames head.” This is one of the sources of the Thames, or, as it is here also called, the Isig. “The little dell, whence issues the gentle stream,”—observes the author of a very interesting and elegant work,—“The Thames and its Tributaries”—recently published—“is, in hot seasons, perfectly dry; but the drought that stops the supply at the fountain-head, has but slight effect upon the course of the stream. It has so many different feeders from various parts of the country, that at Lechlade and Cricklade it runs on in its usual course, uninfluenced by the scarcity at the head. There is an amusing story told of a simple Cockney, who, on his way from Bristol to London, turned aside to visit the source of the river he was so proud of. It was a warm summer—there had been no rain for 3 weeks; and the spring was dried up:—“Good God!” said he, with an expression of the utmost alarm and sorrow, “what ruin this must cause at London! What ever will the poor people do for water!” and his busy fancy conjured up a direful picture of a thousand ills consequent upon the stoppage of the stream—no more ships arriving at London, laden with the wealth of the world—the bankruptcy of rich merchants—the shutting up of ‘Change—the failure of the Bank of England—the anguish of ruined families—and the death of thousands in the agonies of thirst!”* The streamlet flowing from this fountain runs south into Wiltshire; but afterwards borders on this county; receiving the Churn from the north of Cirencester, and its other tributaries as it proceeds along the borders of Wiltshire and Oxfordshire—see THAMES.

Canals.—The Stroud-water canal branches off from the Severn at Framilode, and runs to Stroud; forming part of the Severn and Thames navigation. Its length is rather more than 8 miles. It is 42 feet in width, and its rise is 102 feet. It was constructed in 1775. The junction of the Thames and the Severn was an object of favourite speculation with the London and Bristol merchants for many generations. In the reign of Charles II. an attempt was made to accomplish this important object, but its completion was only effected between the years 1783, when the act for its formation was obtained, and 1792, when the first vessel passed from the Severn to the Thames. The Thames and Severn canal begins at Wallbridge, near Stroud, where the Stroud navigation ends, and proceeds in a devious course by the Thames head, whence it is partly fed, and where it passes through a tunnel at Sapperton nearly $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, arched over at top, with an inverted arch at the bottom, except where the solid rock is scooped out. The water, in its course thus far to its summit-level, is raised, by means of locks, 241 feet 3 inches. Thence, to Lechlade, where it terminates in the navigable Thames, it falls 130 feet 6 inches. This canal is 30 miles $7\frac{1}{2}$ chains in length: its general breadth is 42 feet at top, and 30 feet at bottom: its depth 5 feet. Boats 12 feet wide and 80 feet long are admitted through the locks: when loaded they draw 4 feet water and carry 70 tons. At Siddington a branch about a mile in length runs to Cirencester, and at Latton it is joined by a branch of the Berks and Wilts canal. The union of the Thames and Severn by means of this canal, and its connection with the metropolis, and the internal parts of the county, by the Oxford and Coventry, and other canals, certainly form lines of communication of great national importance. Besides the great western and eastern rivers, an intercourse was thus opened between many of the great manufacturing towns and the capital. The Hereford and Gloucester canal was begun in 1792, but in 1839 was only completed from Gloucester to Ledbury. About 500 men were then employed in its continuation to Hereford, the works being confined to the first 7 miles, because the supply of water was to be obtained by it, not only for the new part, but also for the 16 miles from Ledbury to Gloucester. There is a fall of water from Ledbury to Gloucester of 183 feet 7 inches. It proceeds from the Severn near Gloucester bridge, across Alney island, and the arm or branch of the Severn on its western border, to Vineyard hill, where it crosses the Leden by an aqueduct. It then proceeds by the base of Lassington hill to Rudford and Oxenhall, where it passes through a tunnel 2,170 yards in length,† and again crosses the Leden near Boyce: soon afterwards it enters Herefordshire. Its length is 35 miles. The Gloucester and Berkeley canal, already alluded to, was begun in 1794 and finished in 1827, at an expense of half-a-million of money. It extends about 18 miles in length, and is from 70 to 90 feet wide, and 18 feet deep. It runs on a dead level the whole way, and allows west Indian and other large vessels to come up to GLOUCESTER—which see. It crosses the Stroud canal by an aqueduct near its termination in the Severn. There is a short canal near the junction of the Chelt with the Severn.

Railways.—From the basin of the Berkeley canal at Gloucester, a railway runs to CHELTENHAM—which see. The Bristol and Gloucestershire railway was intended to form part of the extensive line of railway now in progress from Bristol to Birmingham. The plan was formed in 1825, but in great part abandoned, in consequence of the commercial convulsion of that year. So far as it was constructed, this railway begins at Cuckolds-Pill, near the floating-dock on the east side of Bristol, and is carried in a north-easterly and then a northern course, through various collieries, to Coal-pit-beath in the parish of Westerleigh. The immediate object of this work was the cheaper supply of stone and coal to Bristol. Application was recently made to parliament for leave to bring in a bill to alter, &c., the several acts relating to the Bristol and Gloucestershire railway; to alter and divert a portion of the authorized line, and also to make an extension line of railway, commencing near the turnpike road, leading from Bristol to Gloucester, in the parish of Slimbridge, and terminating by a junction with the Cheltenham and Gloucester railway, near the terminus at Gloucester, with a branch from the new line terminating at the High Orchard, adjoining the Gloucester and Berkeley canal. Under act 3^d Vic. I., cap. 56, the works on this railway were in progress, on 15th August, 1840, both in the vicinity of Berkeley and at Wickwar. This act completes a continuous line of railway from Exeter—see DEVONSHIRE—to Newcastle, by which the manufactures and imports of the north may be diffused in the west, and the imports of Bristol and Gloucester in groceries, &c., be conveyed north. The greater part of this traffic has hitherto been carried on either by sea-borne vessels, or by very expensive and circuitous canal navigation. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway runs from Gloucester by Cheltenham. The Cheltenham and Great Western union not having completed the line between Cheltenham and Gloucester, the Birmingham and Gloucester have proceeded to finish the works, which will be their absolute property on returning the money already expended, unless the former company complete their line from Gloucester to Swindon, by 21st June, 1845. The whole line from the Cheltenham to the London and Birmingham railway (including the Tewkesbury branch) is nearly forty-eight miles in length; and the additional distance from Cheltenham to Gloucester is rather more than 6½ miles, making a total of 54½ miles; and upon this entire distance the total of fencing is 54½ miles; the total of earthwork is 4,620,000 cubic yards; the total number of bridges, culverts, retaining walls and lodges, is 311; the total length of permanent way is 54½ miles. In August, 1840, about ¾ of the whole was completed. The line was opened on 25th June, 1840, from Cheltenham to Bromsgrove, a distance of 31 miles; a further opening within 8 miles of Birmingham was to be made in August, and the remainder before the end of 1840. The traffic has already exceeded all expectations, having nearly doubled the whole estimated traffic proved before parliament. Gas lights are laid down along the line, as the trains run by night as well as by day. The Gloucester and Forest of Dean railway, recently projected, commences at the High Orchard, adjoining the Gloucester and Berkeley canal, Gloucester, and terminates at the Holy-hill enclosure in the Forest of Dean. There are other railways connected with DEAN-FOREST—which see. The Stratford and Moreton railway runs from Moreton-in-the-Marsh to Stratford-upon-Avon, where it meets the Stratford canal. The Bristol and Exeter railway—see BRISTOL—will probably be opened from Bristol to Bridgewater in April, 1841. The Great Western railway—see BRISTOL—was opened from London to Steventon on 1st June, 1840; to the Farringdon road on 20th July, 1840; with an expectation of its being opened to Swindon two months thereafter. Between Swindon and Chippenham a great portion of the works will be completed before the end of same year: and the portion of the line between Bristol and Bath was opened on 31st August, 1840; thus leaving only 30 miles out of 117½ to be traversed by coaches, till its total completion in 1841. An elegant station has been built at Bristol, with a magnificent shed under which the trains arrive and depart. The total number of miles travelled on this railway, during the half-year ending in August, 1840, was 7,883,293: the number of persons carried 378,736; gross receipts £89,937 9s.; “profit £46,188 8s. 7d., which, being added to the former balance of coaching revenue, presents a sum of £116,672 12s. 1d. at the credit of the company.” The amount of passenger duty paid is said to have been at the rate of £20,000 a-year. The Great Western railway on leaving Bristol, only skirts Gloucestershire, running through the counties of SOMERSET, WILTS, BERKS, OXFORD, BUCKINGHAM, and MIDDLESEX—all of which see, with DRAYTON, &c. The Cheltenham and Great Western Union railway runs by Gloucester and Cirencester, to Swindon, where it joins the Great Western.

* The Germans tell a similar story of a traveller who visited the springs of the Danube, and formed the bold resolution of stopping it up! He put his hand across it, and as he fancied the various cities upon its course deprived of their supply of water by his deed, he exclaimed, in the pride of his heart, “What will they say at Vienna?”

† At the commencement of the work, the surveyor estimated the completion of the tunnel at 1,000 yards, and each yard at £7; but when finished it was found to be 2,170 yards, and the real expense more than £18 per yard.—Rudge’s Gloucestershire, vol. i. p. 90.

Roads.—The high road from London, through Wilts, Gloucester, and Hereford shires, to South Wales, enters this county at Latton, and proceeding by Cirencester and Gloucester, quits it in the direction of Ross in Herefordshire. The road from London by Oxford, Gloucester, and Worcester shires, &c., enters at Little-Barrington, and proceeds through North Leach, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury, whence it branches off in various directions. It is also connected with the Tewkesbury, Gloucester, and Bristol, or ‘Worcester and Birmingham’ road. There are numerous roads radiating forth from Gloucester, to Cirencester, Stow-on-the-Wold, Newent, the Forest of Dean, Chepstow, &c. The Birmingham and Coventry road crosses the county from Cirencester to Stow-in-the-Wold. Other roads intersect the county, and unite the towns and villages in every direction. The highway returns for 3 years, ending 1814, show an average total expenditure of £44,009 on 636 miles of paved streets and turnpike roads, and 2,403 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages: the returns of turnpike trusts for 1836, a total expenditure of £81,234 19s. 9d., by 47 turnpike trusts in this county; and the highway returns for 1839, an expenditure of £29,758 on 2,525 miles of road.

Soil and produce.—The soil of this, like that of every other county, is various. On the Coteswold, or Hill district, it is for the most part a calcareous loam on a stratum of rubble: in the hollows and bottoms, and sometimes on the hills, it is a stiff clay. The upper stratum of the soil is everywhere of little depth, averaging not more than 5 inches, and stones of various sorts are almost everywhere found near the surface. Great improvements have been made in this district since the latter part of last century: the Downs, which were formerly quite open, producing little else than furze, and scantily covered with grass, are now, with few exceptions, drained into arable land, enclosed by stone walls: corn, turnips, and herbage, are the principal crops. The Coteswold sheep have long been celebrated, and tradition states, that the Spaniards originally procured their breed of fine-woolled sheep from these hills. The pure native breed, a long-woolled large species, is now scarce; having been cross-bred with South Downs, new Leicesters, &c. The present Coteswold breed, however, is the principal in the county: the stock is estimated at about 550,000, of which 15,000 are annually sent up to London. The wool yields an annual produce of about 15,500 packs. In the Forest district a very small and finely formed sheep was formerly bred in considerable numbers, but the real forest sheep is now nearly extinct. This district is chiefly celebrated for its timber, and for the Styre apple, which is almost peculiar to the western banks of the Severn. The soil is chiefly sand: in some places peat; while on the margin of the forest it is a thin limestone soil. Though not of a very fertile quality, the soil of the Forest, especially on the margin, is considered peculiarly favourable to the growth of the Styre apple, of which there are numerous orchards here as well as in the vale. Though narrowed by cultivation, a great proportion of the remainder of this extensive district still consists of open common; but a rapid improvement is now anticipated—see article DEAN FOREST. In the Vale the soil is an uncommonly rich deep loam; in some places black, in others red, but both of equal fertility. The sub-soil of this district—with a few exceptions, where the compact limestone rocks are found—is a stratum of blue clay. The land is partly under the plough, and partly in pasture. It is intersected with elm, willow, and thorn hedges. Centuries ago, before the richness of the soil had been aided here by judicious culture, the fertility of the Gloucester vales was the theme of the historian's praise, and the subject of the poet's encomium. The honest and sensible William of Malmsbury, describing it as "rich in corn, productive of fruits, in some parts by the sole favour of nature, in others by the art of cultivation, enticing even the lazy to industry, by the prospect of a hundred-fold return," proceeds with his not unmerited encomium thus:—"In this favoured spot you may behold the public highways shaded and adorned with trees loaded with fruit, not placed there by the hand of man, but by the generosity of nature. The earth spontaneously brings forth her gifts, fruits of the richest taste and brightest beauty; which, almost imperishable, may be preserved from the time of their being taken in, till the season of gathering again returns. Grapes, famous for their flavour, are here produced in quantities, and manufactured into wines of the highest relish, equally luscious with those of France. Numerous towns overspread the vale, which is further enriched with populous villages, and costly places of public worship." Of the vineyards mentioned by this venerable chronicler, nothing now remains but the name, which is still borne by two places in the county,—one near Tewkesbury, and the other near Gloucester; but the apple-trees, though not, perhaps, growing spontaneously in "the public highways," are yet certainly numerous and of excellent quality. Drayton, in his Polyolbion, personifying this fertile tract of country, makes it boast an excellence which it may assert with truth and justice:—

"I which am the queene
Of all the British vales, and so have ever been Since Gomer's giant brood inhabited this isle;
And that of all the rest myself may so entitle."

In the vale of Gloucester, or the Upper vale, including the vale of Evesham, a considerable quantity of corn is raised. Excellent butter is also made here, and the cheese named single Gloucester. The most valuable meadows in this county lie along the banks of the Severn below Gloucester. They are defended from inundation, as already observed, by banks or sea-walls; but at certain periods the lands are allowed to be overflowed, and when the water is quickly withdrawn, its influence in increasing the supply of herbage is said to be very great. From 2 to 2½ tons of hay an acre is not an unusual product from these meadows in a season.* The vale of Berkeley, or the Lower vale, is chiefly devoted to dairy farms and to the rearing of cattle. Towards the upper angle there is some arable land, but nearly the whole vale is laid out in grass. It is particularly in the vale of Berkeley that the celebrated and delicious double Gloucester, locally called double Berkeley, cheese is made: the greatest and best part of the single Gloucester is also made here. About ⅔ of this vale are occupied by from 7,000 to 8,000 cows, whose annual produce in cheese runs from 1,000 to 1,200 tons. The annual produce of a cow is estimated at 4 cwt., but many yield no more than 3 cwt. About 3,000 tons are annually sent from Gloucestershire to London; but some of what is called Gloucester cheese is now also made in and sent from Wiltshire. The dairies are not very large in the Berkeley district, the number of cows in each seldom exceeding 30; but in the vale of Evesham they are larger. For dairy purposes all kinds of cattle are kept, if good milkers. In no county is the management of the stall better understood or attended to than here. The cattle fed for market are also various in kind and very numerous. The Gloucestershire breed was once the predominant species; but the Staffordshire and Herefordshire were introduced chiefly for the purpose of fattening for the London markets, to which at present about 10,000 head of cattle are annually sent. Great quantities of oil cake are used in fattening them. Calves and swine are numerously fed. The true Gloucestershire breed of swine is a tall, long, white, kind; but the Berkshire and cross breeds became the prevailing species. The food of the store swine is chiefly whey mixed with butter-milk. The swine market at Gloucester has been considered the largest in the country. At Mr Hewer's ram sale in this county, in 1840, several shear hogs fetched the sum of 82 guineas each! and he still retained possession of one for which he refused £140!! but he declared that money would not purchase this rare model of perfection, which "was considered by many of the company not to possess a fault." Cheese and cider are, upon the whole, the principal products of this county. Almost every farm has an orchard, though the cider is not always made for sale. The styre cider is considered the best; but it requires time to mellow it. The cider made from the apple grown in the Forest is distinguished by its richness, sweetness, and fullness of flavour; while that made from the same species of apple grown upon the strong, deep, and rich soil of the vale of Gloucester is principally distinguished for strength and roughness. Perry, said to be the basis of some of the wine sold for champagne in the metropolis, is made in various parts of the county, but particularly in the Forest.

Strata, minerals, &c.—With the exception of coal and ironstone, the minerals of this county are of no great practical importance. A great stratum of coal, alternating with iron ore, extends throughout the Forest; and nearly 200 coal-pits have been opened. The iron ore is not very rich, and is hence comparatively little worked, though there is no doubt that ever since the Roman era the mines here have been worked.—See DEAN FOREST. The coal-field of the Forest is encircled by an elevated border of carboniferous limestone and old red sandstone. To the north of Bristol is another bed of coal alternating with iron ore; containing also veins of lead. The iron and lead are not worked, but the coal supplies the immense consumption of the Bristol manufactories. The district drained by the Avon, though not extensive, is very interesting, not only from the

* During the season, 1840, thousands of acres in this county were covered with a substance resembling cotton-felt, deposited by the water that was out on the previous season. The country looked like a white carpet, and the farmers were obliged to rake up this matter and burn it to allow the grass to grow. It was considered so very curious a production—nothing of the sort having ever before been observed—that Devereux Rowley, Esq., sent a specimen of it to the Gloucester museum, and —Bennet, Esq., of Farringdon, had some of it manufactured into a kind of cloth. It appears to be formed of vegetable fibres, blanched, by exposure, and the agitation of the water in which it floated, till it became a sort of pulp, deposited by the water; and, by drying, formed into a kind of paper, appearing, on its upper surface, like a sheep-skin dressed with alum.

deep cuts made by the river through the strata in its transverse passage through the high lands, but from containing the most southern coal-field in the island. This field extends about 25 miles, from Tortworth, in the north, to Coleford, in the south, at the foot of the Mendip hills; and 5 west of Frome: but the area is irregular. The breadth of the field, from the Newton collieries, near Bath, to Bedminster, near Bristol, is about 11 miles. The course of the Avon nearly corresponds to this line, and cuts the field into two principal parts. That to the north of the Avon is the more extensive, and lies pretty nearly in the basin of the North Frome. A very superior kind of limestone is obtained in great abundance a few miles to the north of Bristol, and the limestone of the Forest is a good compact sort. Excellent freestone is found on the hills, especially at Painswick; blue claystone for building in the Vale; and paving-stones and grits in the Forest. Tophus, or puff-stone, of which Berkeley castle was built, is found at Dursley. Lead ore exists in every limestone rock, but to no useful extent. Sulphuret of iron, or pyrites, in various forms of combination, is abundant, but unworked. Marble-limestone is found at Clifton, where the celebrated quartz crystals, known as Bristol diamonds, are procured from the rents or crevices in the strata. At Austcliff there is gypsum embedded in a stratum of clay, and furnishing to the plasterers of Bristol, Bath, &c., an abundant supply for stuccoing and other purposes. The hills and vales here abound with fossil remains of various eras. There are most efficacious mineral or medicinal springs in this county. Those of CLIFTON and CHELTENHAM,—which see,—have been long celebrated; but one has been also discovered near Gloucester, surpassing those at Cheltenham, it is said, in strength and efficacy.

Manufactures, trade, &c.—This county is an important woollen district. The city of Gloucester was famous for its cloth manufacture many centuries ago. It was considerable at Cirencester in the reign of Henry IV. It has also flourished at different times in various parts of the country. The streams which flow through the vales of Avening, Rodborough, Chalford, and Painswick, all concentrating near Stroud, appear to have long been rendered available to manufacture, as houses of the Elizabethan, and even of an earlier period, are scattered in every direction near these brooks. The principal woollen districts are Stroud, Wotton, and Dursley; the principal fabrics are felts or broadcloths, such as medleys, ladies' pieces, and stripes, and army clothing, cassimeres or narrowes, ratteens, patent twill, and a new make called doeskins or buckskins. There are some minor manufacturers who pick the refuse, or flight, of the wool; and, by mixing the best portions of it with new wool, produce blankets and coffin-cloths. About 40 years ago, a fancy cloth was made in this district for waistcoat pieces, called lappett-work, in which flowers and various patterns were interwoven; but none has been made of late years. The superiority of the Gloucestershire cloth is in the finest qualities, though coarser descriptions are made, with which the Yorkshire manufacturers compete; but not with the finer, which is the principal fabric in the west of England. About 30 or 40 years ago, the cloth was of thicker make, but by recent improvements it is shorn to the finest face, or pile, by machinery,—after being milled, felted, roughed, and mozed; the two last of which operations, also performed by machinery, produce the pile, by the aid of teazles,—a tender plant of the thistle species, chiefly raised for the purpose in Somersetshire, though also produced in Gloucestershire. The cylinder of the gig-mill, loaded with these, revolves along the stretched web, and brushes its smooth surface into a pile, which is afterwards shorn by a spiral blade, surrounding a horizontal iron cylinder; revolving, with great velocity, also along the stretched surface of the web. In 1836, power-looms were introduced into this district. The total number in factories, in November, 1838, was 100. They were attended by 18 men, 72 women, and 11 children. They have tended to reduce the wages of the hand-loom weavers. The number of hand-looms in factories, or shop-looms, was 1,054, of which, however, 230 were unemployed. The employed looms afforded labour to 694 men, 184 women, and 116 children. Of out-door hand-loom weavers, the commissioners estimated the number employed at 1,755. According to the report on mills and factories, there were 97 woollen-manufactories in this county in 1838, employing 5,515 hands;* besides 29 unemployed. They were distributed as follows:

	Unemployed.	Employed.	Hands.
Stroud,	7	14	1,299
Minchinghampton,	4	12	785
Rodborough,	1	6	533
Eastington,	0	3	447
Stonehouse,	1	5	426
King Stanley,	0	1	375
Painswick,	3	9	219
Charfield,	0	3	200
Wotton-under-Edge,	2	5	182
Horsley,	0	9	135
Woodchester,	1	4	133
Standish,	0	1	126
Cam,	0	2	122
Dursley,	1	4	115
Stratton,	0	1	72
Bisley,	5	3	70
Uley,	2	2	62
Avening,	0	4	58
Leonard Stanley,	0	3	45
North Nibley,	0	3	42
Alderley,	0	2	42
Berkeley,	0	1	27
Miserden,	1	0	0
Cranham,	1	0	0
	29	97	5,515

The hand-loom weavers' commissioner, W. A. Miles, Esq., observes, "that the distress to which so many persons bear such ample testimony is attributed more or less to the decrease of trade;" but he found from the excise returns of the number of yards of woollen cloth woven during each year, from 1823 to 1838, that the "average quantity of yards, from 1828 to 1837, both inclusive, is 1,784,928. Total number of yards, in 1838, 1,593,594. Decrease compared with the average of 10 preceding years, 191,334;" and as he considered that "that return shows no decrease in the trade; but, on the contrary, shows, if the stripe trade has decreased, that there is an actual increase in the felt and cassimere trade;" and as "there is no mistake about the poverty of the weavers," he has emphatically expressed his opinion, that "an increased trade only shows an increase of poverty,"—an inference in which he appears to be borne out by various evidence,—amongst which is the graphic remark of Reuben Hill of Cam. "It appears to me a strange fact that the masters are breaking, and the men are in rags, yet there is as much cloth made as ever."

The principal market for the fine woollen trade is the home consumption, and China for 'stripes,' which is a coarse but thin cloth, with a striped list, chiefly made in the vale of Chalford, but the manufacture of which has of late greatly decreased. Bed-sacking, sacks, wool-bagging, tarpaulins, and horse-hair seatings, are made at Bristol. In 1838 there were two flax-mills at St. Philip and St. Jacob's, Bristol, employing 89 hands; and one at Redcliff, 50 hands: one cotton-mill at St. Philip and St. Jacob's, employed 29 hands. The resources of Uley arose from the woollen trade, which has now, however, failed; but it has been relieved in some measure by migration and emigration, promoted by the benevolent and active exertions of that highly eminent political economist, David Ricardo, Esq. of Gatcombe-park; as well as by the system of land allotments to the operatives, here, as well as at Bisley and elsewhere, practised throughout this county; whereby, as regards Uley, "a parish once full of factory people is now an agricultural district, and happier than ever it was." Hand-Loom Report, P. v. p. 526. There has also been emigration to some extent from Bisley, Minchinhampton, &c. In 1838 there was a silk-mill at Winchcombe, employing 76 hands, and another at Chipping-Campden, employing 47. At Tewkesbury, lace, with cotton and other stockings knit by framework, are manufactured. About 600 stocking-frames are employed, and 150 persons in the manufacture of machine lace. At Frampton and Cotterell, felt hats are made; at Cirencester, carpets; at the now prosperous trading city of GLOUCESTER—which see—currier's knives, bells, and pins; the latter introduced in 1626 by John Tilsley, or Tilsley: the value of the pins, weekly transmitted to London, was at one time estimated at £20,000. Brass and copper, glass, ironwork, &c. &c., are manufactured at BRISTOL: which see. There are several paper-mills in the county; and in the Forest of Dean, and elsewhere, are extensive iron-works. The principal markets in this county are those of Gloucester, Cirencester, and Tewkesbury, which are always abundantly supplied with corn, meat, poultry, and every other necessary of life.

* There are some trifling discrepancies in the report under this head: so far as we could safely do so, these have been corrected.

History and Antiquities.—By the ancient Britons this whole tract of country was designated by the name of Duffin, which is said to signify 'a vale.' At the time of the descent of the Romans, it was inhabited by a people named by the Romans the Dobuni, which Dion by mistake terms Boduni. This tribe was the first among the Britons who submitted to the invaders. The east side of the Severn lay in Britannia Prima, and was governed by the president who resided at London; and the western side was in Britannia Secunda, and was governed by the president resident at Caerleon. The Romans left among them traces of numerous and important establishments. Gloucester and Cirencester were certainly two principal stations of that people. The county was intersected by their roads, the principal of which were the Iknield-street; the Irmin, or Erming-street; the Foss-way, and the Via Julia; the three first of which met at Cirencester, the great metropolis, or resort for amusement and pleasure; while Gloucester, and the hills about the Severn, were the chief military positions; Gloucester having also peculiar commercial advantages on account of the river. The Iknield-street crossed Oxfordshire, and, entering at Eastleach, proceeded through this county to Cirencester, and Oust, the Trajectus Augusti of the Romans. The Irmin-street is supposed to have led from Caerleon in Monmouthshire to Gloucester, Cirencester, Crickdale, and Southampton. The Foss-way entered at Lemington, and proceeded through Morton-hen-March, Stow-on-the-Wold, Northleach, and Foss-bridge, to the Iknield, about $\frac{1}{2}$ a-mile east of Cirencester, and thence to Bath. The Via Julia led from Bath, across the Severn, into Monmouthshire. Pavements belonging to the Romans, equal, if not superior, to any yet found in other parts of the country, have been discovered at Woodchester, Great Witcombe, Cirencester, and other places. On the invasion of South Britain by the Anglo-Saxons, this was one of the principal seats of the warfare they carried on with the ancient inhabitants, whom they defeated with great slaughter at Dirham, towards the end of the 6th century. The Saxons "called the inhabitants, about the Severn, Wiccii, from the Saxon word Wic, which signifies the creeks of a river, because the Severn near the mouth of it is full of nooks and windings; but this name continued not long; for the more inland parts, taking the name of Gloucestershire from the old Latin name Glevum, to which the Saxons, after their usual manner, adding cester, i. e., a castle or fortified town, called the chief city Gloucester, or Gleaucester, and from thence the country adjoining Gleaucesterschyre, or Gloucestershire. But upon this division, as this shire took in part of the country of the Silures, viz. the land between the Severn and Wye, so the parts of the Dobuni at a farther distance were made into another shire, which at this day bears the name of Oxfordshire. During the Saxon Heptarchy, this county was a long time subject to the West Saxons, but afterwards included in the kingdom of Mercia, whose king usually resided at Tamworth in Staffordshire. Under the English monarchs, it was miserably harassed by the Danes, under Gurmon their general, who in our histories is commonly called Gurmundus. Under the Norman government, this county went down with the current, and quietly submitted to the Conqueror, who so ordered or confirmed the ancient settlement of the manors, that when he took his general survey, it was found that Robert earl of Morton had one, Roger de Montgomery one, Hugh earl of Chester four, Waltheof, earl of Northumberland nine, Robert earl of Mallet one, and Roger de Lacy twenty of the chief manors in this county. In the civil wars that have happened in the nation since the Conquest, this county hath not been unconcerned; for in those between Queen Maude and King Stephen for the crown, this people joined with the former, being influenced by their earl, who was natural brother to that princess. In the reign of King Henry II., they were much troubled with the incursions of the Welsh. In the barons' wars, they were engaged in the interest of the barons, by the authority of Gilbert de Clare, then earl of Gloucester; and lastly, in the late civil wars between King Charles I. and the parliament, they sided with the latter, being chiefly induced to it by the zeal of their countryman, General Massey."—Mag. Brit. 1738. The history of this war includes the sieges of Bristol, Gloucester, and Cirencester, in the southern parts of the county. These cities held out for the parliament, but Cambden-house, Beverstone-castle, and Sydney-house were garrisoned for the king. At Cirencester, in 1688, on the landing of William prince of Orange, afterwards William III., Lord Lovelace, with a small body of cavalry on their march to meet him, was attacked by Captain Lorange, who commanded the militia in the city. Lovelace was made a prisoner, and Captain Lorange was killed, though his party proved victorious. This was the only blood shed in the field in South Britain, during that memorable revolution.

Besides the antiquities already noticed, this county abounds with remains, British and Roman, secular and religious. The principal castles were those of Berkeley, Beverstone, Brimpsfield, Bristol, Cirencester, Dursley, Gloucester, Kempsford, Miserden, Newnham, St. Briavel's, Sudeley, and Thornbury. Berkeley castle, begun in 1177 by Roger de Berkeley, was a most perfect specimen of castrametation. It is infamous for the cruel murder of Edward II.,— see BERKELEY. Of the others which remain, notices will also be found in their proper places. There were here four of the great mitred abbeys, Gloucester, Tewkesbury, Winchcombe, and Cirencester, besides priories, nunneries, friaries, &c.: many of the churches exhibit remains of Norman architecture.

GLOUCESTER,

A city and county in itself; and inland port;—the capital of Gloucestershire. It is locally situated in the hundred of Dudstone and King's Barton, union and county of Gloucester; 36 miles north-north-east of Bristol, and 107 west-north-west of London; in the vale of Gloucester, and on the eastern bank of the navigable river Severn. For an account of the Severn, and the canals and railways connected with this city, see article GLOUCESTERSHIRE. Acres 680. Houses 2,069. A. P. £18,512. Pop., in 1801, 7,261; in 1831, 11,933.

General description.—Gloucester—say the editors of the old Mag. Brit.—was called, by the ancient Britons, Caer-glow—the fair city; and was styled a city when London itself was but a borough. In the 8th century, according to Bede, it was “one of the noblest of the kingdom.” It stands upon a gentle eminence rising from the Severn at its division by the celebrated Isle of Alney into two channels; whereby both the grandeur and the utility of the river and the locality are diminished; but the scenery around the city, and the various approaches to it, are in general highly ornamental; elegant villas being here and there intermingled with rich gardens, orchards, fields, and parks. There are also pleasant villages, hamlets, and farms, in the vicinity. The Severn is crossed by several handsome bridges, connected with a raised causeway which runs across the rich pastures of the isle of Alney. The bridge at Maismore, and the Westgate bridge near the city, were rebuilt, and Over's causeway widened, raised, and secured, under acts passed in the reign of George III. The Westgate and Over bridges consist each of a single arch. The approach from Cirencester is along the ancient Roman via, Irmin-street, the skirts of which are planted with houses to a considerable distance out of town. The most striking features in the approach to the city from its more interesting points of view, are the summits of its rich ecclesiastical architecture, striking upwards from the surrounding wood, displaying a beautiful and magnificent group of towers and spires; whilst the hills in the vicinity, cultivated to their tops,—the most conspicuous being “the famous hill of Robin Hood,”—present a scene of unusual splendour and variety.

Gloucester was anciently walled. “The Quadrivium, or centre of the parallelogram which the walls described, where the four principal streets diverge towards the cardinal points, was the highest ground of the inclosed area, from whence all the other parts of the city fell, by a regular and gentle descent; a plan at once calculated to produce salubrity and pleasantness. The form and extent of the Roman Glevum—for thus the station was called—may still be plainly distinguished; for, notwithstanding the large additions of suburbs in after ages, its ancient walls have invariably continued to mark the limits of the city.”—Warner's Tour. They were demolished, however, at the Restoration. At the intersection of the four principal streets, in the centre of the city, there formerly stood an elegant High cross, of an octangular form, 64½ feet in height; with a column supporting a globe. Round the centre were 8 statues of monarchs, disposed in as many canopied niches. This fine old structure was taken down, with some other buildings, during the improvement of the city, subsequent to 1749. The streets alluded to are respectively named—from the old gates of the city, at the sites of which they terminate,—East-gate, West-gate, North-gate, and South-gate streets. None of the gates are standing; and the streets, except Westgate-street, are continued far beyond their original terminations. Laterally, numerous streets and lanes branch off; and, at the southern end of the town, in the vicinity of the Spa, other streets and a handsome square, containing houses of a superior class; with villas; a handsome pump-room; hot, cold, and vapour baths, &c.; have been erected. The extensive grounds in this fashionable quarter of the town have been very tastefully laid out and ornamented since the discovery of the spa in 1814: in 1822-3 the corporation expended upwards of £200 in forming the new road in this vicinity. The Gloucester spa is said to surpass the Cheltenham waters in strength and efficacy. Near the new canal basin, on this side of the town, are also a great many houses and warehouses. The principal public buildings which adorn and dignify the city are the cathedral, the churches, chapels, and various charitable and other institutions, with the jails, halls, &c., some of which shall be afterwards more particularly noticed. There are also various accommodations for public amusement similar to those of most other respectable cities: in particular, Gloucester is celebrated for the musical festivals of the united choirs of Worcester, Hereford, and Gloucester, which are here triennially held in the cathedral. All the available talent in the metropolis is brought to the aid of these choirs, whilst Birmingham and other places of musical repute severally contribute to the same object. The festivities of the week are concluded by a fancy and full dress ball, usually attended by six to eight hundred fashionable; and the profits are applied to the relief of widows and orphans of clergymen. Races, assemblies, &c., are also held here in season; and there is a neat and convenient modern theatre situated in Westgate-street. The city is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water, both from the Severn, and, by pipes, from the foot of Robin-hood hill, about 2 miles distant; but although very large sums had been expended by the old corporation towards the general improvements of the city during 10 or 11 years previous to the time of the municipal inquiry in 1833-4, the streets, from the imperfect provisions of the local act, continued to be exceedingly ill paved. Since that period, however, and under more favourable auspices, great additional expenditure has been made by the new corporation on the public works, repairs, &c., of this flourishing city.

Bishopric, see, &c.—The ecclesiastical state of Gloucester during the Roman, and former part of the Saxon, period of its history is involved in much obscurity, from want of authentic materials respecting the early progress of Christianity. In the Memorial of Gloucester, it is asserted, that the Christian faith was promulgated in this city in the year 189, by a bishop and preachers chosen by Lucius, the first Christian king in this island; who, according to one of various traditional reports, lies buried in the cathedral of Gloucester; and that he afterwards made it the seat of an archbishop. The authorities for this relation do not warrant implicit belief: nevertheless, from general tradition, and from other circumstances, it is probable that Gloucester was one of the earliest bishop's sees in England. Camden mentions an Episcopus Cluriensis in the list of British bishops; and Eldad is said to have been bishop of Gloucester in the year 490. Tanner supposes this first bishopric to have been suppressed when the Saxons overrun the country about the year

570. It is, at all events, certain, that, after the conversion of the Saxons, Edwy, king of Northumberland, who had subdued Mercia, erected Lichfield into a bishop's see, and included Gloucestershire within its diocese. In 679—about 22 years afterwards—this bishopric was divided into the five smaller ones of Lichfield, Dorchester, Leicester, Hereford, and Worcester; to the last of which this district was annexed, and continued subject, till the reign of Henry VIII.; though suffragan bishops of Gloucester occur both in 1223 and 1534. Henry, by letters patent, dated 3d September, 1541,—afterwards confirmed by act of parliament,—erected “the city of Gloucester, the county of that city, and all the county of Gloucester, into a bishopric, with a dean and chapter, by the name of the diocese of Gloucester; and ordained that such part of the then vill and county of Bristol, as formerly was in the diocese of Worcester, should be from thenceforward in the diocese of Gloucester for ever.” Though suppressed by Queen Mary, this bishopric was re-established by Queen Elizabeth, and continued to exist until the year 1836. It comprehended the archdeaconry of Gloucester, with ten deaneries,—see GLOUCESTERSHIRE. The number of benefices in this diocese returned to the commissioners in 1831, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 283; besides 3 not returned. The gross average income of incumbents in the 283 returned benefices was £288. The total number of curates was 142; average stipends, included in the income of incumbents, £80. The archdeaconry of Dorset has now been transferred from the diocese of Bristol to that of Salisbury, and the sees of Gloucester and Bristol have been united,—see BRISTOL. The new diocese of Gloucester and Bristol consists of the archdeaconry of Gloucester, comprehending the deaneries of Campden, Blockley Jurisdiction, Stowe, Winchomb, Stonehouse, Gloucester, Forest, and Dursley; and the archdeaconry of Bristol, comprehending the deaneries of Bristol—including city and suburbs,—Cirencester, Fairford and Hawkesbury; together with those of Malmesbury and Cricklade, formerly part of the archdeaconry of Wilts and diocese of Salisbury. The parish of Bedminster in the diocese of Bath and Wells, archdeaconry of Bath, and deanery of Redcliffe, has been also ordered to be transferred to the archdeaconry and deanery of Bristol, on the first vacancy of the see of Bath and Wells. The bishop of the see of Gloucester and Bristol is elected alternately by the dean and chapter of Bristol and the dean and chapter of Gloucester. James Henry, bishop of Gloucester, was appointed first bishop of Gloucester and Bristol in 1836. The total number of benefices in the new diocese, in 1838, was 393, the incumbents in 196 of which were non-resident.

The total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see of Gloucester and of the ecclesiastical preferments, for 3 years, ending 31st December, 1831, was £2,406: nett yearly income £2,282, afterwards subject to a decrease in consequence of the augmentations of small livings in the patronage of the see made by the bishop. Other ecclesiastical preferments were, a prebend in the collegiate church of St. Peter's, Westminster, and the rectory of Peakirk, county of Northampton, diocese of Peterborough, in commendam. The amount of the average gross yearly income of the dean and chapter, or corporation, of the cathedral of Gloucester, as a corporation aggregate, in 1831, was £5,407. The corporation consisted of the dean and six prebendaries. The dean received £100 as an annual stipend; the prebendaries £20 each; the subdean £10; and the treasurer, always one of the prebendaries, £15 17s. 2d. Three of the four minor canons had each £50 per annum salary, and the fourth £90: one, as under-schoolmaster, received £10; and another, as librarian, £4 per annum; the stipends being paid out of the revenues of the dean and chapter. Of the surplus nett revenue, the dean received $\frac{2}{3}$ ths, and the prebendaries each $\frac{1}{3}$ th: the sum so divided, according to the average, was £3,440. Houses were assigned for the residence of the dean, and each of the prebendaries, but not for the minor canons. The requisite sum for repairs of the cathedral was annually taken from the general revenues of the chapter; and the fabric was in a sound state.

THE CATHEDRAL, one of the noblest edifices of its kind in England, was originally the church of a rich Benedictine abbey, established here in the beginning of the 11th century, and converted into a cathedral at the Reformation. This magnificent structure is cruciform, and affords a fine example of the various styles of Saxon, Norman, and English architecture; particularly of the latter. It “was built and finished by Aldred or Alfred, bishop of Worcester in 1047, who being afterwards made bishop of York, crowned William the Conqueror. It received divers additions and ornaments by several other benefactors in after-ages. Richard Hanley, abbot of St. Peter's in Gloucester, laid the foundation of the Virgin Mary's chapel; and William Farley, a monk of the same abbey, and abbot, finished it, and made it a beautiful building. Nicholas Morwent built the western front from the ground very handsome. Thomas Horton, first sacristan, and then abbot, added the north aisle, and a great hall to the abbey, in which a parliament was afterwards held. Abbot Trowestre, or Trowester, built the curious cloisters, adorned with fine ceilings, washing, and writing places, with other ornamental workmanship nowhere surpassed, and procured from the pope the grant of the mitre; and Thomas Seabroke, abbot, erected the great and stately tower.”—‘Mag. Brit.’ 1738. The roof is sustained on 28 columns, which extend in 2 rows from the west end to the high altar, where the presbytery forms nearly a semicircular sweep: the transepts have no isolated pillars. The chapel of our Lady is, as usual, attached to the presbytery, and there are chapels in the north-east and south-east angles of the transepts and choir, with 2 others projecting in the sweep between those and the chapel of our Lady. The nave is an interesting specimen of the style which continued to prevail for nearly two centuries after the Norman conquest. The arcade of ponderous round columns, and the rows of semicircular arches above, impress the mind with ideas of the strength, solidity, and profound solemnity which must have accompanied its original state. The architecture of the west end is very different from the other parts of the nave, and the vault is covered by intersecting ribs, and ornamented key-stones; but the remainder is of the plainest description, with 3 ribs only to each pillar; yet the key-stones are carved. On each side are 8 massive columns; the arches between them bounded by large mouldings, carved into zigzags, and other ornaments. Directly over each column, and at some distance, are a range of heads of various characters, some serene and others terrific; these serve as brackets to clusters of short pillars, whose capitals display the most beautiful variety of foliage, on which zigzag strings extend, serving as a base to other clustered pillars, with equally elegant capitals: from these the ribs of the vault commence. The gallery windows, pierced through the wall above the arches, are divided by short thick pillars, and bounded by others with zigzag arches: a twisted string separates them from the clerestory windows. The north and south aisles of the nave are nearly in the style of the west end, with pointed windows, and rich ramifications in the arches, from the mullions and filleted vaults. "The south aisle was rebuilt by the offerings which devout people made at the shrine of King Edward II., which were so large, that the register of the abbey says, if they had been all expended on the church, they might have built it entire from the foundation, so great a respect was paid to the memory of that injured prince. He lies buried here in an alabaster tomb, as is also Robert Curthose, son of William the Conqueror, and duke of Normandy, in a wooden one."—Mag. Brit. The arch of entrance to the cloister from the north aisle is most elaborately and exquisitely adorned by pillars, buttresses, niches, pinnacles, foliage, and pannels, and the singular ornament of twisted pinnacles under the arch. In the south aisle, nail-headed mouldings are introduced as embellishments on each side of the windows. An advanced gradation of style is exhibited in the interior of the south transept, but the most perfect and ornamental degree is displayed in the choir and chapel of our Lady. The present altar, which is of the Corinthian order, is placed before the rich tracery of the original high-altar, which is concealed from view, excepting from the side galleries of the choir. The great elevation of the vault, the richness of its design, the elaborate tracery which covers the walls, and the vast expanse of the eastern window, render the choir an almost unrivalled specimen of the florid style of architecture. The whispering gallery connects the upper side aisles of the choir, and is alluded to by Lord Bacon as being very remarkable. It is 75 feet in length, and forms 5 sides of an octagon; but the reverberation was most probably the effect of mere accident. The lowest whisper, if the mouth be applied close to the wall, or the slightest scratch with a pin, is distinctly heard from one end of the gallery to the other. There are many interesting specimens of monumental sculpture in the interior of this cathedral. The most remarkable are those of Robert, duke of Normandy, and the unfortunate Edward II.; the former carved in oak, the latter in alabaster. The greatest exterior ornament of the fabric is the central tower, which, for symmetry and proportion, is equal, if not superior, to any other in England. It is divided into 2 stories, surmounted with 4 elegant pinnacles, perforated into numerous small arches, and terminated with foliated finials. The summit is additionally embellished with open worked battlements: each story or compartment of the tower has 8 windows, richly ornamented with sculptured finials. The buttresses at the angles are also embellished with attached pinnacles, niches, and other ornaments. The great bell, in the first story,—the tenor of a chime of 8 bells,—is supposed to weigh 6,500 pounds. Its diameter, at the bottom, is 5 feet 10 inches. The prospect of the surrounding country from the summit of this tower, is exceedingly extensive; and, for rural beauty, scarcely to be paralleled. Between the south transept and the porch are six buttresses, which are detached from the wall at the bottom; and are ornamented with canopies, niches, statues, and purled pinnacles. The south or entrance porch is equally profuse in ornament with the tower; and, from the style of its pinnacles, perforated battlements, niches, &c., appears to have been erected about the same period. The west front contains a large central window, enlightening the nave; with two lateral windows, opening respectively into the north and south aisles. Beneath the former is a small entrance door-way, and another leading to the north aisle. In the spandrels of the first are the arms of the see, and the arms of England. Over this doorway is a gallery before the great window, with a quatrefoil open ballustrade. The extreme length of the cathedral is 427 feet; breadth 154 feet. The height of the central tower is 223 feet. The cloisters are remarkably beautiful: they form a square, measuring 148 feet by 144. The college library is in the east walk of the cloisters: it was formerly the abbey chapter-house, but was converted to its present use by Sir Matthew Hale and others, in the reign of Queen Mary. The college school-room is an apartment over the audit-room, at the end of the north transept. The episcopal palace is at the west entrance of the lesser cloisters. Bishop Benson expended large sums in modernizing it; particularly the great hall, the end window, and the chapel.

Parishes, Livings, &c.—Gloucester comprises the parishes of St. Mary de Crypt, St. Owen, St. John the Baptist, St. Michael, St. Mary de Grace, St. Aldgate, St. Nicholas, St. Mary de Lode, Holy Trinity, and St. Catherine, all formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol. Living of St. Mary de Crypt, a discharged rectory with that of St. Owen's; rated at £14 17s. 11d., returned at £130; gross income £113. Patron the Lord-chancellor.—Of St. John the Baptist, a discharged rectory, rated at £14 1s. 1½d., returned at £125; gross income £127. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—Of St. Mary de Lode, a discharged vicarage with that of the Holy Trinity, rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £286. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Gloucester.—Of St. Michael, a discharged rectory with the curacy of St. Mary de Grace, rated at £8 16s. 10d., returned at £130; gross income £235. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—Of St. Bartholomew with St. Nicholas, perpetual curacies; gross income £118. Patrons, the corporation of Gloucester.—Of St. Aldgate, a perpetual curacy; gross income £154. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.—Of Christ-church, a perpetual curacy; gross income £135; in the patronage of trustees. In the city and suburbs there were formerly 11 parochial churches; but several of them were either destroyed at the siege in 1643, or afterwards taken down. St. Michael's church consists of two aisles of unequal dimensions, with a square tower at the west end. Previous to the Reformation here were two chantries. St. Mary de Crypt consists of a nave, side aisles, and transept, with a neat tower, having pinnacles and other ornaments rising from the intersection: the east end is also finished with pinnacles. St. Mary de Lode is an ancient structure; but it was enlarged and almost rebuilt in 1826. In 1823, the Holy Trinity, a handsome church, was erected near the Spa. St. Nicholas consists of a handsome nave and aisles, with a tower and spire. St. John's occupies the site of an ancient church, ascribed to King Athelstan. A new chapel has recently been built in the extra-parochial district called High-Orchard, and the patronage thereof vested in the founder, the Rev. Samuel Lysons. Another new chapel has been built at Barton St. Michael, and the patronage thereof vested in the Bishop. There are here a Presbyterian church, formed in 1699; an Independent, in 1720; two Wesleyan Methodist, in 1770 and 1808; a Huntingdonian, in 1788; a Friends' meeting-house; and places of worship for the Roman Catholics, Jews, and Unitarians.

Schools, Charitable institutions, &c.—Besides 10 daily, and 4 day and boarding schools, there are here various charity schools. The college-school was founded by Henry VIII. The Crypt grammar-school, adjoining St. Mary de Crypt church, in Southgate-street, was founded by Joan Cooke, 31^o Henry VIII. It was anciently called Christ's school. It has now ceased to be properly a free school, though the master has a salary of about £30 a-year, and a small but comfortable house. There are two exhibitions, of £10 per annum each, belonging to this school, and tenable for eight years at Pembroke college, Oxford. These were conferred by George Townsend, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, in 1683. The master and fellows of the college are trustees of the charity whence these exhibitions are derived, and which amounts to £80 per annum for eight scholars out of Gloucester, Cheltenham, Camden, and Northleach schools. Extra exhibitions have fallen to the Gloucester school, according to the dispensations of the charity, in consequence of the election of non-fitting persons from the other towns. The poor working charity school, in Northgate-street, is endowed with property yielding upwards of £100 per annum, and attended by about 200 poor children. A Lancasterian school was established in 1813, and a National one in 1817. There are a number of Sunday schools.

Sir Thomas Rich's hospital, or blue-coat school, was founded in 1666. Its annual revenues amounted, in 1838, to £916 5s. 10d. It is situated in Eastgate-street, and was rebuilt in 1807-9, from its foundation, with brick, and a freestone front, at an expense of £4,000. It is a large salubrious establishment, with a good school-room, and a large play-ground behind. There are 20 boys educated and maintained. They are admitted between the ages of 10 and 14, and after having been three years at school, are apprenticed out with a premium of £10. They are clothed like the boys in Christ's hospital, London. The hospital of St. Bartholomew appears to have been of very ancient date as a religious house. The oldest charter extant is one granted to the brethren by Henry III. Queen Elizabeth, by her charter, dated 14th July, 1564, renewed the foundation as an hospital for a priest, physician, surgeon, and 40 poor people, vesting the right of patronage, &c., in the city corporation. By the rules made at Archbishop Laud's visitation for the good government of this hospital, and also of St. Mary Magdalene, and St. Margaret's, it was ordained that there should be eight officers or governors of the said hospitals, to be chosen out of the corporation, with the titles of president, treasurer, two surveyors, two almoners, and two scrutineers. The property of the hospital, in 1838, yielded annual revenues to the amount of £1,031 9s. 8½d. By virtue of gifts conferred on this hospital from time to time, the number of its inmates was increased, and in 1825 amounted to 59, including 36 alms-women, a father-man, matron, and other official personages. The hospital is situated in Westgate-street. The old house was taken down and wholly rebuilt in 1809. The front is of stone, and there is a fore court abutting on the street. St. Margaret's hospital appears to have been a religious establishment previous to the dissolution statutes, under the patronage of the abbey of St. Peter, now the cathedral, and consisting of a superior, a chaplain, and brethren and sisters. It is now inhabited by 8 men, including a father-man. They are allowed to have their wives with them, if they are married at the time of their appointment. Income in 1838, £158 3s. St. Mary Magdalene's, or King James's, hospital stands without the city, beyond the site of the north gate. In 1823 the corporation expended upwards of £150 in repairing and new-fronting it to improve the entrance to the city. It was also anciently a religious house, and appears to have been under the government of the prior and convent of Llanthony abbey. King James I. vested the government of it in the corporation. In 1825 there were 10 men and 9 women inmates. In 1836 John Garn, Esq., bequeathed £2,000 to this and Kimbrose hospital. Income of St.

Mary Magdalene's, in 1838, £150 12s. 6d. Kimbrose or Kyneburgh's hospital is said to have been built on the site of a chapel, anciently dedicated to St. Kyneburgh, supposed to have been the first abbess of the monastery of St. Peter, and made an appendage to the priory of Llanthony at the beginning of the 12th century. This priory with its dependencies came to the Crown by the dissolution of religious houses, and is said to have been sold, by King Henry VIII., to Thomas Bell, afterwards Sir Thomas Bell, who, with the Lady Bell, his wife, refunded and endowed it for six honest poor people. This hospital was considerably improved by the old corporation, who were the trustees. In 1825 it consisted of 12 rooms, occupied by 5 women and 1 man: two rooms to each person. Income, in 1837, £45 13s. 2d. The other and minor charities possessed by this city and county and its separate parishes, coming under the cognizance and inquiry of the charity commissioners, are very numerous, and amounted to nearly £500 per annum, besides £640 for application in loans, £300 of which arose from Sir Thomas White's charity. On 19th October, 1836, there were 21 trustees appointed to manage the charities previously vested in the corporation. In 1837 the total income derived from these, most of which have been already particularized, was £2,492 18s. 4½d., including £68 10s. derived from White's charity. The poor rates of this city, in 1838, were £2,111 4s.—The Gloucester poor-law union comprehends 37 parishes, embracing an area of 48 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 22,298. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £7,513. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,945; in 1839, £5,249 14s.

Among the other benevolent public institutions in Gloucester, is the county infirmary, in the lower part of the Southgate-street. This excellent establishment was opened in 1755. It was originally built by voluntary donations. The medical gentlemen connected with this institution have been in the habit of attending gratuitously; and, as the annual receipts arising from subscriptions, and the interest of funded property, have averaged between £2000 and £3,000, the benefits of the charity have been extended to an immense number of patients. About ½ a-mile from the city, on the London road, stands the lunatic asylum, erected some years since. There is an eye institution in the city, and a house of industry, both of which are well endowed. The latter was established in 1703.

Government, &c.—The historians of Gloucester have conveyed to us the names of Morvid, as consul or governor in the reign of King Arthur; Wulpin le Rue as governor in the fifth of Canute; and Whihside as prefect in the year 1022. "A little before the Conquest, Brictric the Saxon was lord of Gloucester; but he having refused to marry Maud, afterwards wife to William the Conqueror, when he was an ambassador in those parts, she (out of revenge) caused him to be imprisoned, and his estate seized to the Crown. King William Rufus gave this honour of Gloucester to Robert Fitz-Hamon, lord of Corbeille in Normandy. King John, in the first year of his reign, made Gloucester a borough-town, to be governed by two bailiffs, elected by their own burgesses, who were to farm the town, and granted them a guild and divers liberties. King Henry III., who was crowned at Gloucester, made it a corporation; and to the former liberties added markets and other privileges, on condition that they should pay the old rent of £55 per annum, and £10 increase-rent, viz., to elect four of the discreetest burgesses for coroners, keep the pleas of the Crown, and other matters belonging to the king."—'Mag. Brit.,' 1738. Succeeding monarchs granted various and important privileges. Richard III., in consideration of his having borne the title of Duke of Gloucester, added the two adjacent hundreds of Dudston and King's Barton to it; gave it his sword and cap of maintenance, and made it a county of itself. The hundreds were taken away by act of parliament after the restoration. The charter under which the late corporation acted was granted by Charles II. in 1672. The title of the corporation was 'the mayor and burgesses of the city of Gloucester, in the county of the city of Gloucester;' and the body, with its officers, consisted of a lord high steward—usually a nobleman—a mayor, and 11 other aldermen, 18 to 28 common-councilmen, a recorder, two sheriffs, a coroner, a town-clerk, chamberlain, sword-bearer, and four sergeants-at-mace; the corporation being "allowed to practise the highest marks of honour that are usually granted to magistracy, as scarlet gowns, the sword and cap of maintenance, and four sergeants-at-mace;" and to be attended on all public occasions by the masters of the 12 associated trading companies "in their gowns, with streamers, which add a reputation to the city."—'Mag. Brit.,' 1738. The only courts appointed to be held were the court of quarter-sessions, a court-leet, and a court of record,—the last, at the time of the municipal inquiry, had not been held within the memory of man. The court of quarter-sessions was authorized to be held before the mayor, bishop, recorder, dean, two prebendaries, and the aldermen, who were also appointed justices of jail delivery. Jurisdiction was given them over the whole city, applying to appeals and all offences except treason, and misprison of treason: capital felonies, however, were never tried by them. The old boundaries of the borough included most part of the city, though but a small part of the suburbs, excluding even the southern part of the city in the vicinity of the Spa. By the municipal corporation act, the parliamentary boundaries were fixed as the municipal also; but they did not extend much more than a mile in each direction from north to south and from east to west, and did not include the whole town, which has extended itself beyond them in several directions. The boundary commissioners, therefore, proposed the extension of the boundaries, so as to include the buildings on the Tewkesbury, Wooton or London, Painswick, and Bristol roads. By the municipal act the borough is divided into 3 wards, and governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors, the style of the corporate body being unaltered. It was included in schedule A, amongst boroughs which were to have a commission of the peace: this has accordingly been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions and a recorder appointed. The borough jail, in Southgate-street, is an old structure inadequate to its purposes, especially to the classification of prisoners. It consists of nine cells, two airing-yards, and three day-rooms, besides two apartments for debtors. Prisoners, in 1835, 158. There is a house of correction attached to it. The borough penitentiary and county jail are both comprehended in one building, although distinct in arrangement and position. This edifice, which Warner describes, as next to the cathedral, the most remarkable public edifice in Gloucester, was erected at an expense of £40,000, a little to the west of the town, on the site of an ancient castle, described by Camden, and built in the time of William I.; the remains having been destroyed to make room for the erection of the prison previous to 1791. This prison is worthy of notice, as being the first in England where attempts were made to introduce a more enlightened and humane system of prison discipline.

It reflects honour on the memory of Sir George Paul, who had the entire direction of the plan, and anticipated certain improvements which were not much noticed then, but have since been regarded as the discovery of later individuals. The ventilation is good, and the prison secure. There are in the jail 13 wards, with 6 day-rooms, and 6 airing-yards, while in the penitentiary there are 148 cells. Two tread-wheels are attached, containing 40 divisions or compartments. Prisoners, in 1835, 209. The town or shire hall, in Westgate-street, is an elegant building, with a portico of Ionic columns, erected in 1814, by Sir Robert Smirke. It is properly fitted up in the interior for judicatory purposes. The Tolsey, in the centre of the city, is appropriated to the use of the corporation: the front is ornamented with a pediment bearing the city arms. In the council chamber are good portraits of recent high stewards of the city. The income of the borough, in 1835, was £3,658 2s. 2d.; in 1839, £11,032 7s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., of which £4,447 15s. 6d. arose from the sale of property,* £2,075 12s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. from rents, £2,388 7s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. from borough rates, and £1,581 19s. 8d. from tolls and dues. The expenditure, for 1839, amounted to £10,437 13s. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., the items of which were:—

Principal paid off, and interest, &c., . . .	£4,210 19 2
Jail, maintenance, &c., of prisoners, . . .	1,078 2 1
Public works, repairs, &c., . . .	978 13 4
Police and constables, &c., . . .	872 9 1
Law expenses, . . .	868 14 6
Salaries, &c., to municipal officers, . . .	763 16 8
Administration of justice, prosecutions, &c., . . .	496 10 6
Charities, . . .	203 2 4
Printing, advertising, stationery, &c., . . .	138 5 1
Coroner, . . .	71 5 8
Rents, rates, taxes, and insurance, . . .	23 6 7 $\frac{1}{2}$
Municipal elections, . . .	10 2 6
Miscellaneous, . . .	722 6 5
	£10,437 13 11 $\frac{1}{2}$

Amongst the privileges with which Gloucester was anciently endowed was that of returning two members to parliament, a privilege which it still enjoys. The right of voting, previous to 1832, was in the freemen; and the greatest number of electors polled for 30 years previous to 1831 was 1,703, of whom about 1,000 resided out of the limits of the city. As already observed, the parliamentary boundaries were somewhat enlarged by the reform act. The number of electors registered in 1837 was 1,674, of whom 739 were freemen. The number actually polled at the general election in 1837 was 1,230. The sheriffs are the returning officers. Gloucester is one of the polling places, and the principal place of election for the eastern division of Gloucestershire.

Port, trade, &c.—Gloucester has been an inland port from time immemorial: there even appear to be no traces of the period when the old quay along the Severn was first erected. But though vessels of various sizes, from the ancient British coracle to those of 150 and 200 tons burden, have been navigated up the Severn, the larger vessels were rarely brought so far as Gloucester, and hence till recently this port was ever one of comparatively little importance—more especially from the proximity of the superior port of Bristol. The port of Gloucester, say the editors of the 'Magna Britannia,' 1738, "has a large key and wharf, on the banks of the river, very commodious for trade, to which belongs a custom-house, with officers proper for it; but the business is not great, by reason of the city of Bristol, which is not far distant from it, and has engrossed all the foreign trade in this part of the kingdom." Since the year 1827, however, when the Berkeley Ship canal was finished, the commercial importance of Gloucester has greatly increased, and is rising rapidly in competition with Bristol. In 1836 the formation of a magnificent line of public wharfs, upwards of 1,000 feet long, was begun, in continuation of the basin, and at which ships of the largest size, capable of entering the Gloucester and Berkeley canal, will be enabled to lie alongside and discharge their cargoes. Instead of the former means of transshipment and conveyance in barges up the Severn, the imports and exports of Gloucester are now effected at the port itself; and consequently it has not only acquired an increasing trade in timber, corn, &c.,—part of which was previously drawn through the medium of Bristol, its nearest port,—but also in the bulky and low-priced articles of the fertile northern districts, in the midst of which it is situated, and for the transport of the produce of which, as lying nearer than Bristol to the sources of demand, this port was always the legitimate channel, though the benefit was previously enjoyed by Bristol. The advantages thus now possessed by Gloucester will be further reinforced and made even more effectual by its communication, east and west, north and south, by canals and railways, now in progress or completed. Some idea of the ratio and rapidity of its commercial advancement may be formed from the increase of its custom-house receipts. In 1827, they were £2,836; in 1831, above £10,000; in 1838, £138,093 5s. 8d.; and in 1839, £163,466 17s. 5d. Of its foreign imports, the number of Russian ships alone, arriving here in 1834, was 8; in 1835, 14; in 1836, 12; and in 1837, 14;—amounting, in all, to nearly 20,000 tons burthen. The export of salt from hence, in a portion of the same vessels, was upwards of 11,000 tons. The quantity of coals shipped coastwise, in 1835, was 36,364 tons; culm, 65 tons; in 1836, 51,863 tons; culm, 123 tons.* The Gloucester and Berkeley canal was begun so long ago as the year 1794; but war, the common enemy of the human race, prevented the accomplishment of this great design; on which £120,000 had already been expended, and only 4 miles completed. A loan was ultimately granted by government to aid in its completion. It runs up from Sharpness point near Berkeley pill, in a line with the Severn, from which, in part of its course, it is only divided by the canal bank and towing path. The length of the canal is about 16 miles, with a short cut to Berkeley;—in all about 18 miles. For further particulars regarding this canal, see articles BERKELEY and GLOUCESTERSHIRE. At its terminus at Gloucester,—also the terminus of the Cheltenham railway,—there is a spacious basin communicating with the Severn, which it is now proposed to deepen 6½ feet to Worcester for barges. There are also extensive warehouses and bonded yards. The bonded warehouses, belonging to this port, are privileged to receive all bonded goods except tobacco and East India goods. The vessels in the Gloucester foreign trade are principally from the West Indies and the Baltic. Between Westgate-street, the Severn quay, and the Severn, there was formerly an offensive ditch which the old corporation covered up in 1827, and formed over it a road to connect the quay with the street,—an improvement which, with others connected with it, cost upwards of £2,200.

* A large part of the city has been corporation property, and a great many of the houses in it have been held under the corporation, on 41 years' leases, renewable every 10 or 14; some few being let at rack-rent.

Gloucester was anciently celebrated for its cloth manufacture; but that branch of industry has long ceased. On its decline, so far back as the year 1626, the manufacture of the diminutive but universally useful article, pins, was introduced by John Tilsby. This is still the principal manufacture of Gloucester, though, from the competition of Birmingham and other places, it has also declined. At one time it was carried on here to a far greater extent than at any other place in England. There were 9 manufactories furnishing employment to about 1,500 persons, and pins to the value of £20,000 were weekly sent to London alone: the principal demand was from Spain and America.† A large bell foundry was established here previous to the year 1500. It still exists, and has cast an immense number of church and other bells. Carriers' knives and other cutlery are also manufactured; and there are cast-iron works, and the usual trades connected with the more important towns, as glovers, sadlers, &c., and workers in the metals. Soap appears to be extensively manufactured in this city. We find from parliamentary returns that 1,361,674 lbs. of hard-soap were made during the year ending 5th January, 1840.

Besides the other privileges anciently granted to the inhabitants of Gloucester, was that of a mint, which appears to have been established here by King Athelstan, and afterwards confirmed by King John. In ancient grants, the monetarii, the moneyers or coiners, who were ministers of the mint, and coined and delivered out the king's money, are expressly mentioned, and had particular privileges granted them. Here are branches of the National Provincial bank of England, and the Gloucestershire bank. The Gloucester county and city bank was established in December 1834, and the county of Gloucester bank in August 1836. A great cheese fair is held on 5th April; and fairs for cattle, horses, pigs, and cheese, are held on 5th July, 28th and 29th September, and 28th November: that in September is principally for cheese. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday. For live stock, a market is held the first Monday of every month. Markets had been long established here by prescription; but the present are the markets chartered by Henry III. The market-house in Eastgate-street was built in 1786: it has a handsome front: here corn, meat, poultry, and vegetables, are sold on the market days. The market-house in Southgate-street is open daily for the sale of vegetables, butter, and fish.‡ Previous to 1821, the cattle markets were held in the open streets, to the great annoyance of the public; but the corporation afterwards, under an act of parliament obtained in that year, remedied the evil, by erecting a most commodious market, at an expense of more than £10,000.

† The art of making pins of brass wire, is asserted to have been introduced into England in the year 1543. Before that period, they appear to have been made of ivory, bone, box, and other hard woods. The pin of modern manufacture passes through the hands of 25 persons, from the state of rough wire, ere it assumes the form of a perfect pin. When the wire is reduced to a proper size, it is cut into portions of six inches in length, and afterwards to the size of the pin: each pin is then pointed on a grinding-stone, turned by a wheel. The head-spinning, as the workmen term it, is accomplished by means of a wheel, which, with astonishing rapidity, winds the wire round a small rod; this when drawn out, leaves a hollow tube between the circumvolutions: every two circumvolutions, or turns, being cut off by shears, forms one head. The heads are then distributed to children, who, with great dexterity, by the assistance of a hammer and anvil, worked by the foot, fix the head in its proper place. The pins thus formed, are boiled in a copper, containing a solution of black-tin pulverized, and the lees of port: by this process they lose their yellow brassy colour, and assume the appearance of silver or tin. From patent and other inventions, however,—especially that whereby the head and body are composed of one piece of wire,—the methods of manufacturing pins are now considerably varied.

‡ The principal supply of fish is from Bristol and London; but the Severn furnishes salmon, chad, and lampreys. So abundant was the city supply of salmon, ere conveyance to a distance was facilitated, that it became a customary clause in indentures, that apprentices should not be obliged to eat salmon oftener than a certain number of days a-week!

* A kind of coal, which is preferred to that of the adjacent collieries for its superior quality, is brought down the Severn from Staffordshire. There is also coal brought from the forest of Dean, and by the Cheltenham railway, to the city.

History and Antiquities.—The origin of Gloucester has generally been attributed to the Britons, but “suche as have committed to writinge the begynninge of this towne,” says Lambard, “be not all of one mynd towching the foundation of the same.” We have already alluded to the chief points in its ecclesiastical and municipal history. The military history of Gloucester records events of some interest arising from its former military strength, which rendered it an object of importance to the partizans in various tumultuous scenes which civil convulsion has excited in this country. Shortly after the invasion, under Emperor Claudius, A. D. 44, it became subject to the Romans, who here established the celebrated station for their armies, called Colonia Glevum, or Clevum, intended as a check upon the Silures, or inhabitants of South Wales. The original name, as well as town, appear to have been adopted by the invaders;—Glevum, according to the Itinerary of Antoninus, being derived from its ancient British name Caer Gloev, or Glow, ‘the fair city,’—‘the bright city.’ The Saxons afterwards called it Gleaucester. Under the Mercian jurisdiction it long flourished in great repute; continuing to be somewhat eminent even after the Saxon Heptarchy was converted into a kingdom. “Here it was that King Edmund, surnamed Ironside, and King Canute, fought for the kingdom in the isle of Alney, as is before mentioned; and afterwards the Danes, after many turnings and windings, as Æthelwerd, an ancient writer, observeth, set up their tents at Gleu-cester. Here it was that Edward the Confessor magnificently treated Eustace, earl of Bologne, who had married his sister, when he came to visit him, A. D. 1051, and afterward held a great assembly of his nobles in the ancient building of the monastery, now called the Long Work-house.—Several of our kings kept their Christmas here, and William Fitz-Osborn, earl of Hereford, built a castle here.”—‘Mag. Brit.’ 1738. “King William Rufus,” says Lambard, “and Malcolme, the kinge of Scottes, met at Gloucester to have compounded certeine outrages done on the borders by eyther of their subjectes, but William used him so contumeliously, that he departed, and said that of right he oughte to mete him in the marches, a place indifferent betwene bothe. Stephen, in his tyme, toke the castle of this towne from Robert, brother to Maude, and kept it; while Maude his wife, takinge Maude thempress prisoner at Wynchester, brought her layed on a horse to Gloucester to him. In the begynninge of Hen. II. his reign, Hugh Mortymor fensed this castle against the kinge; but it was besieged and broken, and he with much to doe reconysled. King Hen. III. was crowned at Gloucester in the 10th of his age.” In Henry’s wars with the barons, whom he had offended by appointing a foreigner to the office of constable of Gloucester castle, the barons, under Simon Montfort, earl of Leicester, besieged and took it; but it was retaken by Prince Edward his son. “King Edward I., reg. 6., held a parliament in this place A. D. 1278, where were divers good acts made concerning the liberties and franchises of the nation, called at this day The Statutes of Glocester.”—‘Mag. Brit.’ 1738. During the struggles in the 17th century between monarchy and republicanism, the military history of Gloucester made a conspicuous and memorable figure. It was considered “so prejudicial to the king’s affairs, and as it were a guard to all the other western garrisons, which would soon have submitted if this had been reduced,” that King Charles in person, and the most celebrated of his generals, with a well-appointed army of 30,000 men, besieged it at a time when there were but 1,500 men within the garrison—ill-conditioned and worse supplied—possessing only 3 barrels of gunpowder when relieved. The successful resistance which it made against the attempts of the royal forces is said to have been the commencement of that train of misfortunes which followed the unhappy Charles from 1643, till his untimely death; and a parliamentary orator of the time declared, that “the standing out of this place made it the vertical point in the civil war; for from that time the enemies more and more declined.” Among distinguished natives of this city, may be mentioned Robert of Gloucester, author of a metrical chronicle of English history, who lived in the thirteenth century; Miles Smith, one of the translators of our present version of the Bible; Taylor, the water poet; and George Whitefield, founder of the religious sect usually distinguished by the name of Calvinistic Methodists.

Monastical and other religious institutions and edifices were anciently so numerous in this city, that a monkish proverb, ‘As sure as God is in Gloucester,’ was in consequence originated. During the Saxon heptarchy, “Osrick, king of the Northumbrians, by the permission of Ethelred, king of the Mercians, founded a great and stately nunnery over which Kineburga, Eadburga, and Eva, all Mercian queens, successively presided; and Edelfleda, a famous Mercian lady, adorned it with a noble church in which she lies buried.” Kimbrose hospital, as already stated, was built on the site of the chapel dedicated to St. Kiniburgh. The nunnery or abbey itself was dedicated to St. Peter. It was despoiled by the Danes. “Some of the legendary writers report that Merwald, viceroy of the western part of Mercia, and his wife Domneva, did, about the year 660, build a stately monastery here, in honour of St. Oswald, the king and martyr. It is more certain that A. D. 909, Ethelred, earl of Mercia, and the famous Edelfleda, daughter of King Alfred, his countess, translating the relics of that canonized prince from Bardney to this place, founded here a religious house, from whence the monks being forced to fly in the Danish wars, it became a college of secular priests, which was accounted a free chapel royal, exempt from the jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury or the bishop of Worcester, but King William Rufus gave it to the archbishop of York in lieu of their claims to Lindsey and some parts of Lincolnshire, which they quitted to the bishops of Lincoln. Henry Murdae, archbishop of York A. D. 1153, placed here regular canons of the order of St. Austin, who continued till the dissolution, at which time here were about seven of them, and their revenues were valued at £90 10s. 2d. ob. per annum, Dugd., Speed.”—Tanner’s Not. Mon. Lambard, in his Top. Dic., states that the Benedictine abbey, converted into the cathedral, was founded on the despoiled abbey of St. Kiniburgh; and he also states, that, “The hysshoprice is valued in the records at 315 poundes yearly, St. Peter’s abbey at 1,946, and the priory of Lanthonie adjoyninge to the towne at 648 poundes of yearly revennew.” “This town,” says he, “and some of the religious places also have received much harme by casualtie of fyre; for, in the year 1101, the most part of the town, and St. Peter’s monastrie also, was consumed with fyre; the like happened to them bothe in the year 1122. The towne itselfe was for a great part wasted with fyre in the year 1190, and almost cleane consumed in the year 1214, beside a fyre that burnt St. Marie’s parishe wholye in the year 1223. Over all these harmes the great tower of St. Peter’s church fell downe; but it was reedified in the year 1220. The fryers preachers got into this towne in the yeare 1239." Of the convents belonging to Dominicans, Franciscans, and Carmelites, there is not a vestige remaining. The last of the numerous destructive calamities with which Gloucester appears to have been visited, occurred at the siege by King Charles, when not only the churches were destroyed, but the city itself, it is said, with its suburbs, reduced to the original dimensions marked out by the Romans. The walls, destroyed after the Restoration, were of antiquity the most remote. The eastern and north-eastern parts most probably belonged to the Roman station. Many Roman antiquities have been found, especially at the suburb of King's-holm.

GLOVERSTONE, a township in the parish of St.-Mary-on-the-Hill, co.-palatine of Chester. Pop., in 1801, 122. In the returns of 1811, it is stated to have been converted into barracks.

GLUSBURN, a township in the parish of Kildwick, west riding of York; 4 miles south of Skipton, on the western bank of the river Aire, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. This township possesses 3 daily schools. Acres 1,360. Houses 188. A. P. £1,985. Pop., in 1801, 533; in 1831, 987. Poor rates, in 1838, £320 6s.

GLUVIAS (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Falmouth, county of Cornwall; 1 mile east by north of Penryn. It includes the borough of Penryn. Living, a vicarage with that of Budock, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21 6s. 10½d.; no return. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are 13 daily schools, 2 of which are National schools. At Glaseney in this parish stood a collegiate church, built, according to Leland, by Walter Bruncombe, bishop of Exeter, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, and St. Thomas the Martyr, for a provost, sacrist, twelve prebendaries, seven vicars, and six choristers, whose annual revenue at the dissolution was valued at £205 10s. 6d. There are now no remains of this college. Acres 2,770. Houses 799. A. P. £9,068. Pop., in 1801, 2,948; in 1831, 4,490. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,659.

GLYME (THE), a river in Oxfordshire, rising in the northern hilly parts of Wootton hundred, and flowing southwards through Blenheim park, in the grounds of which it forms a small lake, and then meets the Evenlode, falling into the Isis about 5 miles north-west of Oxford.

GLYMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; 4 miles north-west of Woodstock. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £6 16s. 0½d.; gross income £258. Patron, in 1835, E. Way, Esq. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,670. Houses 21. A. P. £1,161. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 125. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 1s.

GLYN. See ALBERBURY.

GLYNCAERIG, and LLAWRIN, a township in the parish of Llawrin, county of Montgomery, North Wales. A. P. £3,929. Pop., in 1801, 434; in 1821, 458.

GLYN-CEIRIOG. See LLAN-ARMON.

GLYN-CONNON, a hamlet in the parish of Llanwonno, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 6 miles south of Merthyr-Tydvil; situated near the Aberdare canal, in a district abounding with coal and lime. Houses 73. A. P. £782. Pop., in 1811, 467; in 1831, 415.

GLYND, a parish in the hund. of Ringmer, rape of Pevensey, union of West Fife, county of Sussex; 3 miles east-south-east of Lewes, and east of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 1s. 3d., returned at £97 5s. 4d.; gross income £132. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £140 due the dean and canons of St. George's chapel, Windsor, and £117 5s. 10d. to the vicar. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £80 per annum. On the summit of Mount Caburn, in this parish, is a spacious and deeply indented intrenchment of a circular form. Acres 1,370. Houses 35. A. P. £1,740. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 17s.

GLYN-LIFFAN, a township in the parish of Llandwrog, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 5 miles south-west of Pwllheli. Here is the beautiful seat of Lord Newborough. Returns with the parish.

GLYNN, a hamlet in the parish of Defynnock, county of Brecon, South Wales; 9 miles west by south of Brecon. Houses 58. A. P. £1,164. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 351. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 11s.

GLYNN, a hamlet in the parish of Llanelly, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 8½ miles east-south-east of Kidwelly. Houses 154. Pop., in 1821, 801; in 1831, 765. Other returns with the parish.

GLYNN, a hamlet in the parish of Llannon, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 7 miles north-north-east of Llanelly. Pop., in 1821, 401. Other returns with the parish.

GLYNN-COLLWM, a hamlet in the parish of Llanvigan, county of Brecon, South Wales; 5 miles south-east of Brecon. Houses 57. A. P. £1,333. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 274.

GLYNNCORWG, a parish in the hund. and union of Neath, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 8 miles east by north of Neath. It includes the hamlets of Glynnorwg, and Blaengwrack. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Blaengwrack, in the province of Canterbury and dio. of Llandaff; gross income £89. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Jersey. Houses 90. A. P. £1,462. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 547. Poor rates, in 1838, £205 5s.

GLYN-RUMNEY, a hamlet in the parish of Llan-vabon, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4 miles north-west of Caerphilly. Houses 47. A. P., with the hamlet of Garth, £1,480. Pop., in 1811, 199; in 1831, 276.

GLYN-VACH, a hamlet in the parish of Llanigon, county of Brecon, South Wales; 2 miles south of Hay. Houses 15. A. P. £220. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 6s.

GLYN-TAFF, a hamlet in the parish of Eglwysilan, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 5 miles west of Caerphilly; situated near the line of the Glamorganshire canal, in a district abounding in ironstone and coal. Houses 120. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 635.

GLYN-TRAIAN, a township in the parish of Llan-gollen, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 3½ miles south-east of Llan-gollen. Here are a place of worship for the Calvinistic Methodists; and 3 daily schools. It abounds in coal, lime, and ironstone. Houses 178. Pop., in 1801, 806; in 1831, 868. Poor rates, in 1838, £292 9s.

GNOSALL, a parish in the west division of Cuttleshon hundred, union of Newport, county of Stafford; 6½ miles west-south-west of Stafford, on a branch of the Trent; and close upon the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal, which passes over Gnosall heath through Cowley. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £108; gross income £114. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. The church—a very ancient edifice—was formerly a royal free chapel for secular canons. The bishop was dean, and there were four prebends. The church retained peculiar privileges after it ceased to be a royal free chapel. Here are 8 daily and 2 boarding schools; one of the former of which is Cartwright's free school: income, in 1823, £214 4s. 6d. Other charities £144 3s. 11d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,017 12s. Acres 7,820. Houses 623. A. P. £7,253. Pop., in 1801, returned under the quarters of Apton, Gosall, Cowley, and Knightley, with the hamlet of Moreton, 2,246; in 1831, 3,358.

GOADBY, a chapelry in the parish of Billesdon, county of Leicester; 8 miles north-north-east of Market-Harborough, and near a branch of the river Welland. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Billesdon. Charities, in 1836, £24 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £77 17s. Acres 870. Houses 21. A. P. £1,626. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 98.

GOAT. See PAPCASTLE AND GOAT.

GOATHILL, a parish in Horethorne hund., union of Sherborne, county of Somerset; 2½ miles east of Sherborne. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £3 11s. 10½d., returned at £90; gross income £90. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £58. Patron, in 1835, Earl Digby. Acres 230. Houses 5. A. P. £480. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 35. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 8s.

GOATHURST, a parish in the hund. of Andersfield, union of Bridgwater, county of Somerset; 3½ miles south-west by west of Bridgwater. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 10s. 7½d.; gross income £412. Patron, in 1835, C. K. K. Tynte, Esq. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1825, £47 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 11s. This parish is famous for producing fine trees. Acres 1,370. Houses 57. A. P. £1,962. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 349.

GODALMING HUNDRED, in the western division of the county of Surrey. It occupies the south-west point of the county, on the borders of Sussex, and consists of two divisions,—first and second. Area 37,200 acres. Houses 1,843. Pop., in 1831, 10,476.

GODALMING, a parish, borough, and market-town, in the hund. of Godalming, union of Guildford, county of Surrey; 4½ miles south-south-west of Guildford, and 3½ south-west of London; on the river Wey. Woking common, on the Southampton railway, is 10 miles distant. Acres 8,470. Houses 836. A. P. £13,889. Pop., in 1801, 3,405; in 1831, 4,529. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £23 17s. 11d.; gross income £500. Patron, the dean of Salisbury. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1730. There are ten daily schools, two of which are National schools, and two Lancasterian. Wyatt's hospital here consists of almshouses for ten poor men, five of whom are chosen from Godalming: income, in 1824, £148 1s. 8d. Henry Smith's charity yielded an annual income of £258 18s. 11d., of which about £30 were annually laid out in apprenticing and clothing poor children, and the residue distributed amongst the poor. Other charities, £4 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,876 11s. The town of Godalming is situated in a beautiful valley, where the river is divided into several streams. It is nearly surrounded by high and steep ground, and consists principally of one street, which extends about three-fourths of a mile along the high road from London to Portsmouth. The village of Ferncombe—north-east of the town—is united to it by an almost continuous line of houses; and that of Crownpits is situated about one-fourth of a mile to the south-east. Godalming-bridge across the Wey, originally private property, was opened for public use in 1783. The vicinity of the town at West Brook place, &c., is adorned with trees; and at Busbridge, a mile southward, is a fine piece of water in the pleasure-grounds, with a conservatory opening on a bold terraced walk, at the extremity of which is a curious cavern, or winding passage, 140 feet long, terminating in a circular apartment, supported by a massive pier in the centre; all cut out of the solid rock. By a charter granted in the reign of Elizabeth, the government of Godalming was vested in a warden, bailiff, and eight assistants; the warden being elected annually out of the assistants, who held their places for life. This corporation possessed no jurisdiction, civil or criminal; the town being within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The ancient limits of the borough were in consequence lost. Under the new municipal act, the government is vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors; the style of the corporate body being 'the warden and inhabitants of the town of Godalming.' The boundaries laid down in the boundary reports include Ferncombe, Crownpits, Meadow-row, &c. The income of the borough, in 1839, arising from borough rates, was £61 3s. 3d.; expenditure £55 2s., chiefly consisting of rents, taxes, &c. Godalming possesses very little importance beyond being a place of considerable thoroughfare. There are four or five mills on the river Wey for the manufacture of paper, parchment, and leather, at which about 50 hands have been employed; and a stocking manufactory some time ago employed about 80 hands. There is also a considerable coal-trade. Besides the Wey, it has the benefit of the Arundel and Wey canal, which passes through the parish. The peat dug in the heaths, in this vicinity, is used for fuel. There is a market on Wednesday for corn, and on Saturday for poultry and vegetables: fairs are held for horses, cattle, sheep, and hops, on February 13th; and for horses, cattle, sheep, and store-pigs, on July 10th. Here it was that Mary Toft, in 1726, for some time puzzled certain celebrated physicians and anatomists, by practising the imposition of being delivered of live rabbits. Hogarth has celebrated this curious deceit in his 'Cunicularii.'

GODDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 5½ miles north-east of Bicester; on the borders of Buckinghamshire. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 18s. 9d.; gross income £361. Patron, Corpus Christi college, Oxford. Acres 1,030. Houses 20. A. P. £2,947. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 11s.

GODELAND, or GOATLAND, a chapelry in the parish of Pickering, north riding of Yorkshire; 12 miles north by east of Pickering; intersected by the Pickering and Whitby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £4, returned at £42 12s. 6d.; gross income £58. Patron, the dean of York. In 1821, a neat chapel was built here. There is a daily school. A Benedictine cell—formerly here—was granted by Henry I. to Osmund, a priest, and a few brethren: it was afterwards transferred to Whitby abbey. In Newton dale, in this vicinity, and within the liberties of Pickering forest, the farmers were obliged, by the ancient tenures of their land, to attend to the breed of hawks, which annually built their nests in a cliff or scar, called Killing-Nab-Scar; in order to secure them for the king's use. These hawks are of a very large size, and still continue to frequent their ancient place of resort: but it is singular that there is every year a single breed, and very seldom more. Acres 11,030. Houses 70. A. P. £1,172. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 326. Poor rates, in 1833, £80.

GODERICH, or GOODRICH, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Ross, county of Hereford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Ross, on the river Wye. It includes the townships of Glewston, Goderich, and Huntisham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £8; gross income £430. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. For beautifying and repairing the church there is an ancient bequest now worth £30 10s. per annum. Here are 3 daily schools. Poor rates, in 1838, £326 19s. A communication between this parish and the Forest of Dean has been established by a beautiful bridge across the Wye, at the estimated expense of £8,000. Here are the remains of the ancient castle which formed at one time the principal residence of the Talbots; and afterwards of the Grays, dukes of Kent; a descendant of the latter of which noble families, the Right. Hon. Frederick John Robinson, was created Viscount Goderich in 1827. From the old tower of the castle ruin is obtained a most enchanting view of the windings of the Wye, which nearly encircles the parish, and of a large portion of this most romantic corner of the county. At Flanesford, in a fertile vale, south of the castle, there was anciently a priory of Black canons founded and endowed in honour of St. John the Baptist, 1347, by Richard Talbot, lord of Goderich castle, then named Goodrich. Its revenues at the dissolution were valued at £15 8s. 9d. They were granted to the earl of Shrewsbury. Goderich court, on a precipitous height above the Wye, is an edifice erected since 1828, by Samuel Rush Meyrick, Esq., LL.D., in the style of the period of Edward II. It contains a magnificent collection of armour, and other antiquities and curiosities, all so arranged as to illustrate the history of various periods and countries. Acres 2,460. Houses 153. A. P. £4,174. Pop., in 1801, 512; in 1831, 792. Houses 92. Acreage and A. P. of the township with the parish. Pop., in 1831, 519.

GODESTOW, the site of an ancient nunnery in the parish of Wolvercote, hund. of Wootton, county of Oxford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Oxford; on the northern bank of the river Isis, and near the Oxford canal. "John, of St. John, in the latter end of the reign of King Henry I., gave some ground here to a religious matron, called Editha or Ediva, who, assisted by the contributions of well-disposed persons, built thereon an abbey for Benedictine nuns, which was consecrated, A. D. 1138, to the honour of the Virgin Mary and St. John the Baptist, in the presence of King Stephen and his queen, the archbishop of Canterbury, and six other bishops, with several of the nobility, who most of them gave toward the endowment of it. King Henry II. was a great benefactor, on account, as it is thought, of fair Rosamond Clifford, his concubine, here interred. Its revenues, 26th Henry VIII., amounted to £274 5s. 10d. per annum, Dugd.; £319 18s. 8d., Speed. Upon the dissolution, the site, with the greatest part of the adjoining estates, was granted by Henry VIII. to his physician, George Owen." Tanner's Not. Mon. It is stated by some historians that Rosamund was also educated in this nunnery. Others give a different history of the nunnery itself from that here already given. Lambard's account of it is this: "Godestowe. Locus Dei, or Bellus Locus, a towne neare Oxforde, where stoode sometyne a house of nonnes, which Jhon buylte upon this occasion. Kinge Henry II., besides the fellowship of his wife, used also the familiaritie of a faire gentlewoman, called Rosemund; and to tend that jelouze Juno, ne Argus her man, with al his eyes, should espie this conveyance, he found out a Mercury to frame him such an engine in his chamber at Woodstoc, that none but suche as he lyst to emparte it withal wist of her comynge and goinge. King Jhon his sonne, althoughe he weare offended therwithe in the life of his father, and toke thereby occasion to joyne with his brothers against him, yet beinge perswaded (as the maner of men was to be seduced in that age) that prayer was meritorious for his soule after his deathe, founded this monasterie for expiation of the synnes of him and his lover; whose bodye he caused to be curiously interred theare, withe this inscription:—

Hic jacet in tumba Rosa mundi, non Rosa munda,
Non redolet, sed olet quæ redolere solet.

There are kept in this house a casket of hers, of exquisite workmanship, about 2 foote long, whearin weare sene foules flyinge, beastes runnyng, fishes swymmyng, and men fightinge, altogether movyng, without any apparent helpe. This monasterie was valued in the recordes at 274 poundes yearlye, and is nowe the dwelling-house of a gent., called Owen." There are now scarcely sufficient remains of this edifice to identify its site. The 'engine' in King Henry's chamber, or 'Rosamund's bower' at Woodstock, alluded to by Lambard, is said by others to have been connected with a private door and subterranean passage, leading, by a kind of antepast to the Thames tunnel,—under the Isis—or Thames itself,—to Godestow; and through which 'the fair Rosamund,'—so called from her surpassing beauty,—passed and repassed in her secret intercourse with Henry. Rosamund was the daughter of Lord Clifford, of Clifford castle in Herefordshire. By her King Henry had two sons, William Longspee, earl of Salisbury; and Geoffrey Plantagenet, archbishop of York, and Lord-chancellor of England.

GODLEY, a township in the parish of Mottram-in-Longden-Dale, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-east of Stockport; intersected by the Manchester and Sheffield railway, by which it is 8 miles distant from Manchester. Here is a daily school. Acres 600. Houses 107. A. P. £1,320. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 636. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 9s.

GODLEY HUNDRED, in the western division of the county of Surrey. It consists of two divisions,—first and second,—and lies on the north-west point of the county, being separated from Bucks and Middlesex by the Thames. Area 43,730 acres. Houses 2,693. Pop., in 1831, 14,517.

GODMANCHESTER, or GUMECESTER, a corporate town and parish in the hund. of Toseland, union and county of Huntingdon; on the south-eastern bank of the navigable river Ouse, and $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile south-south-east of Huntingdon, with which it is connected by the Cambridge road, here crossing the Ouse by a bridge at Huntingdon. The parish is an agricultural district, containing, except the town, not more than three or four small cottages, inhabited by servants of the proprietors. Time out of mind it has been celebrated for its agriculture, and it has entertained the kings of England with "the rustic show of nine score ploughs at once, finely adorned with their trappings." James III. of Scotland, going up to take possession of his long desired Canaan, England, was met here by the husbandmen, who presented themselves before him in a procession of "70 teams of horse, all traced to new ploughs, and told him they held their lands of the kings of England by that tenure." His majesty said he was glad he had so many good husbandmen for his tenants in one town, and made it a corporation. The old borough and parish boundaries coincided. Acres 5,590. Houses 457. A. P. £11,971. Pop., in 1801, 1,573; in 1831, 2,146. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £17 0s. 5d.; gross income £330. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Westminster. Tithes commuted in 1803. Here are 10 daily schools, one of which, the grammar-school of Queen Elizabeth, is endowed. There is also a day and Sunday school of industry, with a lending library attached. Charities, in 1830, £73 10s., besides several annual contributions of wheat and barley, and 2 acres, 32 roods of land, belonging to the grammar-school, the rent of which is not stated: the residue of the school endowment then amounted to £20 10s. per annum: £20 of the charity income was designed for the apprenticeship of poor lads. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,019 11s.

Godmanchester is a place of great antiquity, "whiche, as it may appeare, bothe by the name itselfe, and by Henry, tharchdeacon of Huntingdon, in his hystorie, hath bene in tyme past of more price. For the Saxons did neaver applye this name, Ceastre, but to a ctytie, and therefore Huntingdon sayethe it was sometyme nobilis urbs. It should seme to have decayed by the increase of Huntingdon;* for Unicum arbustum non alit duos psitacos. Leland sayeth that Romane antiquities have bene found there."—Lambard's Top. Dic. Many coins have since been ploughed up, and antiquarians seem now inclined to consider this, rather than Huntingdon, to be the site of the Roman settlement, Durolipons, —a corruption probably of Dur-osi-ponte, or bridge, over the river Ouse. During the last century it was considered the largest village in England. It is situated on the bank of the river, and consists of several streets enclosing an irregular area in the middle of the town. There are a few good houses, but most of the dwellings are mere cottages, and the general appearance of the town does not bespeak any great prosperity. There are neither manufactures nor wholesale trades carried on within the borough, and the town was recently neither paved nor lighted. A fair for cattle of all sorts is held on Easter Tuesday. By the charter of James VI. the borough was appointed to be governed by 2 bailiffs, 12 assistants, a high steward, recorder, deputy-recorder, town-clerk, &c., under the style of "the bailiffs, assistants, and commonalty of the borough of Gumecester, alias Godmanchester, in the county of Huntingdon." A sub-bailiff, 2 coroners, &c., were officers not named in the charter. The corporation, at one time previous to the passing of the new municipal act, enjoyed a separate commission of the peace, and though ultimately discontinued, the old corporation still considered themselves entitled to it. The bailiffs presided at the court-leet, and took surrenders, and made conveyances of property according to the custom of Borough English prevalent here. The bailiffs and assistants held courts of pleas every three weeks, for debts not above 40s. Under the new municipal act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors, under the usual style of the old corporate body. The limits of the new borough, as laid down in the boundary reports, are confined to the more immediate vicinity of the town. In 1833, the debts of the old corporation amounted to £2,800; the revenues amounting to £307 a-year, chiefly derived from rents: income, in 1839, £479 3s. 8d.; expenditure £476 7s. 3d., of which £120 17s. 6d. consisted of principal paid off, interest, &c.; £138 16s. 10d. of rents, taxes, &c.; £15 1s. 10½d. of salaries, &c., to municipal officers; £75 7s. 0½d. of expenses on public works, repairs, &c.; and £67 2s. for police and constables. There is no gaol here; but a cage is used to secure offenders till they can be taken before a magistrate. The parish and borough unite with Huntingdon in returning two members to parliament.

GODMANHAM, or GOODMANHAM WITH EASTROP, a parish, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile north-east of Market-Weighton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £12 11s. 8d.; gross income £450. Patron, in 1835, J. Clark, Esq. Tithes of the manor of Godmanham commuted in 1775. The church is a very venerable structure, considered by Drake and others to have been built with materials taken from the chief Pagan temple in Northumbria. This celebrated place of idol worship was destroyed by Coisi, the high priest of the pagan religion of York, on his conversion by Paulinus, under Edwin king of Northumberland. Lambard, in his Top. Dic., styles this place Godmundham; and Bede, in his ecclesiastical history, Godmundingaham. It is very pleasantly situated on an eminence at the southern verge of the Wolds; and, from its form and general appearance alone, bears undoubted marks of very high antiquity. That there have been most extensive erections on all sides of it is evident from the state of the soil, which is so obstructed and disturbed that little of it is ploughed in the immediate vicinity of the town. Acres 2,930. Houses 47. A. P. £2,013. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 268. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 5s.

GODMANSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Cerne, Totcombe, and Modbury, union of Cerne, county of Dorset; 5 miles north-north-west of Dorchester, situated on a branch of the river Frome. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £265. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Goodenough. Here is a daily school, and a Sunday one with a small endowment. Acres 1,240. Houses 32. A. P. £890. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 15s.

GODMERSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Felborough, lathe of Seray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; 6 miles north-north-east of Ashford; agreeably situated on the river Stour, where it is navigable. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Challock, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 3s. 4d., returned at £143 4s.; gross income £234. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £330 to the dean and chapter, Christ's church, Oxford; and £42 10s. to the vicar. The church, which has in it eight stalls, had formerly a chantry, and was appropriated to the prior and monks of Canterbury. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, upwards of £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £259 9s. The residence of the prior still remains here, bearing the name of 'The Priory,' and exhibiting much of its ancient appearance. Acres 73. Houses 3,440. A. P. £2,479. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 444.

GODNEY, a chapelry in Meare parish, county of Somerset; 2½ miles north-west of Glastonbury, on the river Brue. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £84; gross income £72. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of Peter Davis. Returns with the parish. Lambard describes 'Godeney, i. Insula Dei, or Insula Bona,' as "sometyme parcel of Glassenburye, an ile within the compass of twelve hydes of

* Camden, on the other hand, considers Huntingdon to be 'as it were the mother that brought it forth,'—an idea partially, if at all, reconcilable with Lambard's reasonable surmise, only on the supposition that Huntingdon has tended, like certain unnatural mothers, to destroy her own offspring.

lande,* which the three pagan kings of this realme, Arrivragus, Marius, and Coillus, suffered the disciples of Philip to enjoy as their first possession. These lands were afterward endowed with special privilege above the rest."

GODOLPHIN, anciently GODOLCAN, a hamlet in the parish of Breage, western division of the hundred of Kerrier, union of Helston, county of Cornwall; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Helston, and 4 miles east of Marazion, or Market-Jew. Returns with the parish. It is situated on a granitic and slaty hill, which is celebrated for its stanniferous and cupriferos ores and mines. Treating of the granite of Tregonning hill, "where we find a mixture resembling the China stone of St. Stephen's; some of it being sufficiently decomposed to be worked for China clay," the geologist, De la Beche, observes, in his report on Cornwall and Devon, that "The granite of Godolphin hill forms another variety, part of it differing somewhat from the common Cornish granite, as Dr. Boase observes, in having a base of felspar in which white crystals of felspar, nodules of clear quartz, and black mica, are thickly imbedded. Schorlaceous veins are common in it." The granite of Godolphin terminates in the altered slate at Godolphin bridge. The great mineral lode or vein which runs from Godolphin hill to Trevean Cove, takes a west-south-west, or east-south-east, course; but the Breage and Marazion country is crossed by another line of principal lodes, much complicated in detail. The lodes here are rich where the argillaceous slate is of a bluish-white colour, but poor where it is black. Godolphin hill is 495 feet above sea-level. Here is the Godolphin mine, from which alone 1,602 tons, of 21 cwt. each, were sold by ticketings in the year ending 30th June, 1838. The money derived from this ore amounted to £11,963 19s.: average price per 21 cwt., £7 9s. 4d. In 1836 and 1837 there were 370 men, 70 women, and 40 children, employed in the Godolphin mine. The Great-work mine is situated between this and Tregonning hill. 207 tons of ore were sold by ticketing from this mine in 1838: value, £2,033 1s.:—average price, £9 16s. 5d. Here 298 men, 46 women, and 74 children, were employed in 1836 and 1837, in which latter year 225 tons of block tin, sold, by ticket, from this mine, yielded, at an average price per ton of £52 4s. 9d., the sum of £11,753 10s. These statements, however, do not show the full annual value of either mine; as tin and copper are both produced from each, and partly sold by ticketing, and partly by private contract. Godolphin has not only been for centuries celebrated for its mines, but also, and as some even allege, "principally for that noble family, who, even in the Conqueror's time, were lords of it, and took their name from it." These were the Godolphins, who anciently dwelt here. Previous, however, to the erection of the last ancient mansion of the family, which was ultimately converted into a farm-house, a castle at Godolphin is spoken of by William of Worcester, whose Itinerary of Cornwall was written in the reign of Edward IV. This he calls Godollen, and describes it as in a state of dilapidation. Leland says, "Carne Godolcan, on the top of an hille, wher is a diche, and there was a pile and principal habitation of the Godolcans. The diche yet apperith, and many stones of late time hath bene fetched thens."—Itin. III. p. 16. The Godolphin-house of more recent times was built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by Sir Francis Godolphin, who, by his successful endeavours and perseverance in mining concerns, and with the aid of "a Dutch mynerall-man," as Carew calls him, improved the previously rough and wasteful methods of smelting the tin ore, and so immensely increased the produce, that the queen's customs were thus benefited to the extent of more than £10,000 a-year. Sir Sidney Godolphin was created, by King Charles II., Baron Godolphin of Rialton; and, by Queen Anne, Viscount Rialton and Earl Godolphin. The Godolphin estates passed into the Osborne family, by the marriage of the youngest daughter of Francis, Baron Godolphin, in 1744, to the Duke of Leeds. The name Godolphin, or Godolcan, is said to signify a white eagle, which was part of the armorial bearings of this noble but now extinct family.

GODSFIELD, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Bountisborough, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of New Alresford. Acres 160. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 4.

GODSHILL, a tything in Fordingbridge parish, county of Southampton. Acres 1,850. Houses 53. Pop., in 1831, 211. Other returns with the parish.

GODSHILL, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, incorporation of the Isle of Wight, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Newport. Living, a discharged vicarage united to the rectory of Niton. Here are 4 daily schools kept by mistresses, and a day and Sunday National school, endowed with £10 per annum. Acres 6,400. Houses 184. A. P. £8,336. Pop., in 1801, 1,079; in 1831, 1,305. Poor rates, in 1838, £988 10s.

GODSTONE, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Tandridge, union of Godstone, county of Surrey; 20 miles south of London, and near the Broad Mead water. It is intersected by the South-Eastern railway, which has a station at Godstone, 20 miles distant from either terminus at London and at Tunbridge. A branch railroad runs from Godstone-green to Merstham, where it joins the Reigate, Croydon, and Wandsworth railroad. Living, a rectory, in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 11s. 5½d.; gross income £385. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. J. Hoare. Here are 6 daily schools, one of which, Evelyn's school, is endowed. Charities, in 1824, about £50 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £763 10s. The Godstone poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 67 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 7,367. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,517. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,788; in 1839, £4,250 11s. This parish is adorned with many fine mansions, and it derives its name from excellent quarries of freestone much in request for wet-docks and for ovens, as it is singularly durable, it it be kept either always wet or always dry. There are two small barrows on Godstone-green, and several others in an adjoining field. The ancestor of the Evelyn family who purchased this manor was, in his time, the only maker of gunpowder in England.

* "Now, for the better conjecture at this quantitie, it shall not be amisse to show what a hyde land was. It seemeth to be called a hyde of the skyn of a beaste devyed into smal sections, as it was done at the buildinge of Carthage, taurino possint, quantum circumdare tergo, and thereby in tyme grown to be the name of a measure. Polydor, speakinge of the great imposition that William the Conqueror layed upon the subjects of this realme, sayeth that a hyde of land containeth twenty acres. But I thinke he was deceived, for that cometh nearer to the measure which we call Virgate,—a yarde laide, which, in most countries, is about twenty acres. And Matthew Paris, writinge of the same exaction, sayeth that the Conqueror charged every plough, i. sayeth he, Hydam terræ, with six shillings of money; so that he called a hyde a plough-land, which the Saxon bookes call so muche ground as a plough may till in a yere, i. 280 acres; even so call they an acre so much as one plough may till in a daye, which they accompt 640 fute in length, and 64 in bredthe, which reckoninge agreeth with the statute. And this is the most likely accompte that I find of an hyde of lande."—TOP. DIC.

Sir John Evelyn, his son, built a house here which cost him £9,000. Acres 6,600. Houses 223. A. P. £7,475. Pop., in 1801, 1,081; in 1831, 1,397.

GODWICK. See TITLESHALL.

GODWIN-SANDS. See GOODWIN-SANDS.

GOGMAGOG-HILLS, a range of hills in Cambridgeshire, a few miles to the east of Cambridge, noted for chalk pits and for several rare plants. On the summit of the highest of them are the remains of an ancient fortification or encampment, but by what people or when formed, has not been determined. In the area, King James II. had a spacious stable built for his hunters. From thence there is a prospect of the rich and pleasant vale to the west, and of Cambridge itself at a greater distance. On the Gogmagog-hills, the earl of Godolphin, in the eighteenth century, had a seat whither he often went, especially in the hunting season.

GOGOYAN, a township in the parish of Llandewi-Brefi, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 4 miles south-west of Tregaron. Houses 20. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 111. Poor rates, in 1838, £42.

GOKEWELL, or GOWKESWELL, in the parish of Broughton, county of Lincoln; 5 miles west-north-west of Glandford-Briggs. A Cistercian nunnery was founded here by William de Alta Ripa, before A. D. 1185.

GOLBORN-BELLOW, a township in the parish of Tattershall, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles south-east of Chester, and near the Newton and Nantwich canal. Acres 520. Houses 10. A. P. £689. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 96. Poor rates, in 1838, £47.

GOLBORN-DAVID, a township in the parish of Hendley, county of Chester; 6½ miles south-east by south of Chester. Acres 550. Houses 15. A. P. £833. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 80. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 14s.

GOLBORNE, a township in the parish of Winwick, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles north-north-east of Newton, intersected by the Wigan and Newton railway. Here is a daily school, endowed with £6 per annum. Acres 1,340. Houses 227. A. P. £3,666. Pop., in 1801, 962; in 1831, 1,532. Poor rates, in 1838, £34 14s.

GOLCAR, a chapelry in the parish of Huddersfield, west riding of Yorkshire; ¾ miles west by south of Huddersfield, and west of the river Colne. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £66. Patron, the vicar of Huddersfield. The church is a handsome edifice, in the early pointed style, with a tower and spire. It was consecrated in 1830. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1836. There are two daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. Acres 568. Houses 1,560. A. P. £2,255. Pop., in 1801, 1,846; in 1831, 3,143. Poor rates, in 1838, £480 16s.

GOLCEBY. See GOULDSBY.

GOLDANGER, or GOLDHANGER, a parish in the hund. of Thurstable, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 4 miles east-north-east of Maldon; on the northern bank of the Blackwater river, at its mouth. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Little Totham, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £25 14s. 9½d.; gross income £403. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £505 12s. 2d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Leigh. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. A fair for toys is held on May 14th. This parish occupies low marshy ground, extending from Little Totham to Blackwater bay, opposite the isle of Osey. Acres 1,140. Houses 108. A. P. £3,112. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 496. Poor rates, in 1838, £288 6s.

GOLD-CLIFF, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Caldicot, union of Newport, county of Monmouth; 4½ miles south-east of Newport; between the mouths of the rivers Usk and Severn, and on the shore of the Bristol channel. Acres 2,130. Houses 43. A. P. £3,975. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 270. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 19s. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £13 2s. 6d., returned at £105; gross income £85. Patron, Eton college. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Near the village are the remains of an ancient priory, founded by Robert de Chandos, for Benedictine monks, in 1113. At the dissolution it was valued, among the possessions of Eton college, at £144 8s. 1d. The site of this once flourishing monastery is now occupied as a farm-house, built with the materials. Above, upon the edge of the cliff, is a curious antiquated doorway. The cliff on which these stand is a peninsulated rocky hill rising abruptly from the sea to the height of about 60 feet. In an extent of 16 miles this single rock is the only natural barrier against the encroachments of the sea. The remainder of this extent of coast, in the Caldicot level, is guarded from inundations by artificial mounds. The rock consists of limestone, lying horizontally; intersected with silicious crystallizations, above an immense bed of yellow mica. The glistening of this substance, when the sun shines upon it, gives the parish "the name—as Gyrard reporteth—of the colour of gold, wherein also he thought the metall to be, if it were tried"—Lambard's Top. Dic.—rather an idle 'thought,' perhaps; but it is a curious fact, that the very considerable quantity of gold which Becquerel has recently found at Cantal, near Aurillac in France, occurs in a rock or bed of mica:—"268 lbs. troy contain about 261 grains of gold."—"The matrix contains lead," another 'curious coincidence,' as lead is generally found in connection with limestone. See article DEVONSHIRE, and Athenæum, 22d August, 1840.

GOLDEN-VALE, in the county of Hereford, extends west of Hereford along the banks of the Dove or Doier. It is remarkable for its luxuriant vegetation and its yellow vernal flowers. The hills are wooded; and altogether, says Nicolson, it is a charming scene. The wool grown here has been reckoned as fine as any in England.

GOLDHANGER. See GOLDANGER.

GOLDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Barford, union and county of Bedford; 1½ mile north-east by east of Bedford, and north of the river Ouse. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 9s. 4½d.; gross income £188. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Bedford. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1821, £13 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £357 15s. Acres 3,940. Houses 99. A. P. £3,032. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 494.

GOLDSBOROUGH, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles east-south-east of Knaresborough, and north of the river Nidd. It includes the townships of Coneythorpe, Flaxby, and Goldsborough. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £10 1s. 0½d.; gross income £293. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Harewood. Tithes of the manor of Claretton with Coneythorpe, and that part of Allerton-with-Flaxby which is within the parish of Goldsborough, commuted in 1772. Here are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £15 per annum. Charities, in 1819, £53 16s. 6d. Poor rates, in 1838, £165 6s. Acres 3,230. Houses 73. A. P. £3,229. Pop., in 1801, 342; in 1831, 359. Acres of the township 1,850. Houses

34. A. P. £1,674. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £83 6s.

GOLDSHAW-BOOTH, a chapelry in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-north-east of Haslingden. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £123. Patron, the vicar of Whalley. Here are two daily schools. Acres 980. Houses 142. A. P. £1,801. Pop., in 1801, 516; in 1831, 763. Poor rates, in 1838, £213 13s.

GOLD-SITHNEY, a township in the parish of Perran-Uthnoe, county of Cornwall. Here was formerly a chapel. Gold-Sithney is the principal village in the parish. Here a fair is held on 5th August for cattle, coarse clothes, hardware, &c. There is a tradition that this fair was originally held at Sithney, near Helston, and that some one ran off with the glove,—by the suspension of which to a pole the fair was by its charter held,—and carried it to this village, where it is said to have been hung out for many years at the time of the fair. It is certain that the lord of the manor, as proprietor of the fair, used to pay an acknowledgment of one shilling per annum to the church-wardens of Sithney. The custom of holding out a glove has long prevailed at the great fair of Chester.

GOLDSBUR HUNDRED, in the rape of Hastings, county of Sussex, at the eastern extremity of the county on the borders of Kent, from which it is divided by the Rother. Area 15,790 acres. Houses 486. Pop., in 1831, 3,337.

GOLFTYN, a township in the parish of Northop, county of Flint, North Wales; 2 miles east of Northop. Houses 57. Pop., in 1821, 269; in 1831, 289. Other returns with the parish.

GOLLAN, a township in the parish of Llanbister, county of Radnor, South Wales; 2 miles west of Knighton. Houses 55. A. P., with Ceverpawl, £1,961. Pop., in 1801, 211; in 1831, 364.

GOLTHO, a parish in the west division of Wraggöe wapentake, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-south-west of Wraggöe. Living, a donative curacy, a sinecure with that of Bullington, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Lincoln; returned at £20. Patron, in 1835, T. Mainwaring, Esq. The church is a small modern edifice. Acres 1,780. Houses 15. A. P. £1,374. Pop., in 1811, 97; in 1831, 93.

GOMELDON, a tything in the parish of Idmiston, county of Wilts. Pop., in 1821, 20; in 1831, 48. Other returns with the parish.

GOMERSAL (GREAT AND LITTLE), a township in the parish of Birstall, west riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-east of Bradford. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1827; a Wesleyan Methodist in the same year; and a Moravian in 1755. There are five daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. Birstall—though it gives name to the parish—is included in this township.—See BIRSTALL. Besides the returns there given relative to the state of manufactures in 1838, there were 344 hand-loom in Great and Little Gomersal, Birstall, and Birkenshaw, employed in the woollen cloth manufacture, except 10 which were worsted looms. Acres 3,000. Houses 1,247. A. P. £8,766. Pop., in 1801, 4,303; in 1831, 6,189. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,129 12s.

GOMERSHAY, a tything in the parish of Stalbridge, county of Dorset; 1 mile west of Stalbridge. Houses 16. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 90. Other returns with the parish.

GONALDSTONE, a parish in the south division of Thurgarton wapentake, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Southwell, on a branch of the Trent. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 19s. 2d.; gross income £327. Patron, in 1835 R. Franklin, Esq. Acres 950. Houses 21. A. P. £1,772. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 107. Poor rates, in 1838, £145 8s.

GONERBY (GREAT), a parish in the soke of Grantham, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Grantham; on the post-road from Stamford. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, united to that of Grantham. Tithes of the lordship of Great Gonerby commuted in 1804. The church is a handsome stone building, with pointed arches and an embattled tower, from which rises a beautiful crocketed stone spire. Here are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £22 2s. per annum. Acres 2,230. Houses 199. A. P. £5,684. Pop., in 1801, 559; in 1831, 916. Poor rates, in 1838, £415 12s.

GONERBY (LITTLE). See MANTHORPE.

GOODERSTONE, commonly called GOODSON, a parish in the hund. of South Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Stoke-Ferry. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 12s., returned at £109 5s. 6d.; gross income £136. Patron, in 1835, A. Horrox, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1834, £30 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £665 13s. The village of Gooderstone consists of a long stretch of detached houses in the vale of a rivulet, which flows southward to the Wissey. Here are three wind-mills and a water-mill. Acres 2,870. Houses 96. A. P. £1,558. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 476.

GOODLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Branton, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Barnstaple, and east of the river Taw. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £14 19s. $4\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £302. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £184 19s. 2d. Patron, in 1835, D. Harding, Esq. The church is a large fabric, consisting of a nave and chancel, with a short square tower and 3 bells. Several of the windows have stained glass; and the screen is richly ornamented. Here are 2 day and Sunday schools. This parish has long been considered "a prime place" for black cherries. Acres 1,180. Houses 67. A. P. £1,316. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 442. Poor rates, in 1838, £237 1s.

GOODMANHAM. See GODMANHAM.

GOODNESTONE, a parish in the hund. of Wingham, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Eastry, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Wingham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, Sir B. W. Bridges, Bart. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £45 per annum, being the endowment of an almshouse for 4 decayed and aged gentlemen or gentlewomen, yeomen, or single men or women. Poor rates, in 1838, £208 16s. Fairs for cattle are held on Whit-Tuesday, July 22d, and September 25th. Acres 1,900. Houses 70. A. P. £3,459. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 486.

GOODNESTONE, a parish in the hund. and union of Faversham, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 2 miles east of Faversham. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Graveney in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 2s. 6d.; gross income £400. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury, and J. H. Lade, Esq. Acres 140. Houses 14. A. P. £558. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 74. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 8s.

GOODRICH. See GODERICH.

GOODSON. See GOODERSTONE.

GOODWIN, or GODWIN, SANDS, a range of sandbanks in the sea, near the isle of Thanet, extending about 10 miles along the coast of Kent, between the North and South Forelands, and on a parallel line with Deal. "Whatsoever old wives tell of Goodwyne, earle of Kent, in time of Edward the Confessor, and his sandes, it appeareth," says Lambard, "by Hector Boetius, the Britisch chronicler, that these sands weare mayne land, and some tyme of the possession of Earl Godwyne, and by a great inundation of the sea, they weare taken therfro, at which tyme also much harme was done in Scotland and Flanders by the same rage of the water, for Sylvester Gyrald reporteth, that Hen. I. sent dyvers Flemings, which weare dryven out of their countrey by the fure of the sea into the north partes about Carleol, which weare afterwards removed into Wales." These lands are said to have been inundated in the year 1100, and to have previously extended to upwards of 4,000 acres of low grounds, defended from the sea by a great wall, requiring constant care in its preservation. The tract was ultimately given to St. Austin's monastery near Canterbury, the abbot of which neglected the wall; and, in consequence, the sea broke in and overwhelmed the whole, converting it into those famous or more properly infamous sands, which are so dangerous to vessels riding in the Downs; though by breaking the waves that would otherwise in easterly winds roll in upon the shore with immense impetuosity, they otherwise contribute to the safety of that celebrated roadstead. They are divided by a very narrow swatch or channel, navigable only by small boats, into two parts, and are in many places dry at low water. Their position, however, is often shifted by the force of the tides, aided by violent storms. The material of which they are composed is soft, porous, and tenacious, and traditional testimony, the records of history, and living experience all go to show that should a ship of the largest size strike on the Goodwins, it would be so wholly swallowed up by the quicksands, that in a few days no vestige of it would remain to be seen. Here millions upon millions of property and thousands of lives have been lost. When the water is off, these banks become hard and firm, but the moment the tide begins to cover them they are again soft, and shift to and fro with the waves, occasioning that redness of the water which is plainly discoverable from the town of Deal. In hazy weather, a bell is kept constantly ringing to warn the approaching mariner of his danger; and, in all weathers, floating-light vessels are stationed,—one of them exhibiting 3 lights, at their northern, and another 1 light,—at the south-western extremity; while, in the Downs, and on their inner margin, there is one exhibiting 2 lights. At the North and South Forelands also, clear of the range, and beyond their extreme points, are placed fixed light-houses; two at the latter, and one at the former. In September, 1840, Captain Bullock, R. N., succeeded in erecting a safety-beacon on the Sands, about 7 miles from Deal. The beacon consists of a column rising about 40 feet above sea-level,—having cleets and ropes attached to four of its sides, with holds for the hands and feet. At the summit of the column is attached a gallery of hexagonal form, made of trellis work, and capable of holding 20 persons at one time. Above the gallery, and in continuation of the column, is a flagstaff 10 feet long, thus making the entire beacon 50 feet in height. The sides of the gallery are so constructed as to enable the persons in it to be covered in with sailcloth, which is reefed in and round it, and can be used at pleasure; an awning is also made to pass over it; thus entirely protecting any unfortunate mariner who may seek shelter on the column from foul and tempestuous weather. A barrel of fresh water, together with a painted bag enclosing a flag-of-distress, is stationed on the gallery; and the words, 'Hoist the flag,' are painted in the languages of all nations, on boards stationed round the inner part of the gallery.—A still more magnificent beacon is about to be erected on these fatal sands, under the superintendence of Mr. Bush, civil engineer. Formed of cast iron, and hollow within, the base or under shaft, on which a column is to be raised, will be 64 feet in height, 90 feet in diameter, and above 200 feet in circumference. The column will be 86 feet; and the summit, which is surmounted by a cast-iron statue of her Majesty, is 40 feet in length; making a total altitude of 190 feet. The weight of the lower shaft alone is 120 tons. It will be towed to the North Galloper Sand-head, where Mr. Bush proposes to sink it 30 feet below the sands, on a chalky substratum. The North Galloper is situate midway between the North and South Sand-head, about 12 miles distant from the North Foreland, and 3 miles from the Gull-stream light. In the shaft there is a cell large enough to hold 100 men, with provisions, store-houses, magazines, &c.; and in the upper portion or capital, there is room for 20 men, whose attendance will be constantly necessary to manage the light.

GOOLE, a township and inland port in the parish of Snaith, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Howden, on the western bank of the river Ouse, at its junction with the Dutch river, and about 10 miles above the junction of the Ouse with the Trent, at the Humber. Acres 3,020. Houses 236. A. P. £4,280. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 1,671. Here is a chapel belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. An Independent church was formed here in 1831. There are 8 daily schools, one of which is endowed with houses and lands of the annual value of £21 3s. Poor rates, in 1838, £529.—A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Goole, capable of accommodating 120 persons. The Goole poor-law union comprehends 18 parishes, embracing an area of 55 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 10,531. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £3,336 19s. The town of Goole has recently been formed into a port, with a custom-house and large warehouses, including bonded warehouses. There are two docks. One of these, the ship-dock, is 600 feet long and 20 feet wide, with 18 feet depth of water: it is chiefly for the foreign trade, and will contain 54 sail of square-rigged vessels, of which number the quay admits 17 to load and unload at once. The other the barge-dock, for coasting vessels, is 900 feet long by 150 feet wide, with 8 feet depth of water: it is calculated to contain 200 sail of the river craft which navigate into the interior of the country by means of the canal which passes westward from this dock, and forms an uninterrupted communication by water between the German ocean and the Irish sea. Between the docks and the river is a basin or entrance-harbour 250 feet long by 200 wide, with 9 feet depth of water. It has two entrance gates; one for the foreign and the other for the coasting trade; and from the basin are interior gates opening upon the docks. Although Goole is situated so far inland, vessels drawing from 15 to 17 feet water have arrived and discharged their cargoes here in perfect safety, and the port is likely to become an important station for inland and maritime trade. The gross receipt of customs duty, in 1838, was £60,066 16s. 2d.; in 1839, £79,003 13s. 5d. There were 121,445 tons of coals shipped hence in 1835. Here are branches of the York city and county, the Hull, and the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial, banks.

GOOSEY AND CIR COURT, a tything in the parish of Stanford in the Vale, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Wantage, and near the Great Western railway. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 850. Houses 35. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £155 13s.

GOOSNARGH, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkham, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Preston, near the Lancaster and Preston railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £3 18s., returned at £109 18s.; gross income £97. Patron, the vicar of Kirkham. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1827; a Roman Catholic chapel; and six daily schools, three of which are endowed. There is also here a splendid establishment for decayed persons of the higher orders of society, founded and liberally endowed in 1735, by William Bushe, M.D.—See KIRKHAM. Poor rates, in 1838, £676 13s. Acres 9,290. Houses 291. A. P. £10,508. Pop., in 1801, including the township of Newsham, 1,553; in 1831, 1,884.

GOOSTREY WITH BARNSHAW, a chapelry in the parish of Sandbach, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles north-north-east of Sandbach. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £10 10s., returned at £82 11s. 11d.; gross income £292. Patron, the vicar of Sandbach. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,230. Houses 51. A. P. £2,605. Pop., in 1801, 231; in 1831, 292. Poor rates, in 1838, £144 19s.

GOPSALL, or GOPESHILL, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, county of Leicester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Market-Bosworth, and near the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. This was at one time a cell to the abbey of Merevale, in the county of Warwick. Gopsall hall, the seat of Earl Howe, is a splendid edifice surrounded with a park well stocked with deer. The chapel is a very beautiful one: its length is 36 feet, and breadth 24 feet; the seats, altar, and wainscoting, are entirely of cedar, richly carved; the standards of the communion-table are made of the oak in which Charles II. was concealed after the battle of Worcester. Bardon-hill forms a fine distance to the landscape from the east side of Gopsall hall. The park is adorned with clumps of trees; and there are gardens occupying ten acres of ground. Acres 600. House 1. A. P. £911. Pop., in 1801, ; in 1831, 7.

GORE HUNDRED, in the county of Middlesex. It lies in the north-west side of the county. Area 28,660 acres. Houses 1,726. Pop., in 1831, 11,315.

GORING, a parish in the hund. of Langtree, union of Bradfield, county of Oxford; 6 miles south of Wallingford; situated on the eastern bank of the Thames, and intersected by the Western railway, on which there is here a station, distant by railway $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Reading. Three roads to Woodcot and Whitchurch are here diverted over Goring bridge and across the cutting for the railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, returned at £72; gross income £146. Patron, in 1835, C. W. Gardiner. Tithes commuted in 1809. Here is a Huntingdonian Methodist church, formed in 1793. There are two daily schools, and a day and Sunday school. A bequest by Henry Alnutt, Esq., in 1822, yielded upwards of £1,000 per annum, laid out in educating, partly clothing, and apprenticing children belonging to this parish, with those of Cassington, Checkenden, Ipstone, and South Stoke. Lybbe's hospital or almshouse for 2 poor men of this parish, and one each from Checkenden and Whitchurch, is endowed with about £50 per annum. Other charities, upwards of £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £478 16s. Here was formerly an Augustine nunnery, founded in the reign of Henry II. Near this place the Icknield-street quits Oxfordshire. A medicinal well, on the bank of the Thames in this vicinity, was formerly in high repute for the cure of cutaneous diseases. Acres 4,670. Houses 182. A. P. £3,802. Pop., in 1801, 677; in 1831, 933.

GORING, a parish in the hund. of Poling, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 2 miles west of Worthing. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 10s., returned at £130; gross income £146. Patron, in 1835, W. Richardson, Esq. The church was recently rebuilt at an expense of £6,000, defrayed by D. Lyon, Esq. Here are three daily schools. Castle Goring, in this parish, is the ancient seat of the Shelleys, a late celebrated descendant of whom was Percy Bysshe Shelley, the singular but highly gifted author of 'Queen Mab,' 'Prometheus Bound,' 'The Cenci,' 'The Revolt of Islam,' and other poetical works. He was drowned in his return from Leghorn to his house on the gulf of Lerici, in the bay of Spezia, by the wreck of his small sailing boat in a violent and sudden squall. Acres 2,120. Houses 89. A. P. £3,862. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 527. Poor rates, in 1838, £380 15s.

GORLESTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Lowestoft, on the coast of the North sea, west of the river Yare, south of Breydon water, and 2 miles south of Yarmouth, with which the village of Gorleston is connected by a bridge over Breydon water. Living, a discharged vicarage with the rectories of South Town and West Town, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11; gross income £385. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Brown. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1825. There are six daily and three infant schools. This parish now unites with Yarmouth in returning two members to parliament. A fair is held here on June 8th. A priory of Augustin friars was founded here in the reign of Edward I., by William Wode-rove and Margaret his wife; the site of which, after the dissolution, "was granted," says Tanner, "to the great dealer in that kind of houses, John Eyer." "Here," says Lambard, "was of late yeares a librarie of most rare and pretious workes, gathered together by the industrie of one Jhon Brome, a monke of the same house, which dyed in the reigne of King Henry the Sixte." Acres 1,830. Houses 475. A. P. £3,796. Pop., in 1801, 1,728; in 1831, 2,116. Poor rates, in 1838, £779 1s.

GORRAN (ST.), a parish in the east division of the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austell, and eastern division of the county of Cornwall; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Tregoney. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20; gross income £305. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are three daily schools. At Gorran haven, or Port-east, one of the principal villages in the parish, coals are imported, and great quantities of pilchards are taken and cured. This small port is supposed to have been anciently of more consequence. Its pier, which is very old, is said to have been constructed by some of the Bodrugan family, possessors of the manor of Bodrugan here, under the Champenoues. The line direct of the former family became extinct about the year 1330; but in the reign of Richard III. the manor was the property of Sir Henry Bodrugan, whose original name was Trenowth. This gentleman fled to Ireland on his attainer at the accession of Henry VI., and his large possessions were seized by the Crown. It is said that he was in arms in Cornwall against the earl of Richmond; and, having sustained a defeat on a moor near his own castle, that he escaped by a desperate leap from the cliff into the sea, where a boat was ready to receive him. Most of his estates were granted to Sir Richard Edgecombe, ancestor of Lord Mount Edgecombe, by whom he had been defeated. The remains of Bodrugan castle—a very extensive edifice—were destroyed many years ago. Mr. Anthony Wills, who, with his six sons, joined the prince of Orange, afterwards William III., on his landing in 1688, resided in the vicarage house here. One of the sons rose to the rank of a general in the reign of George I. Acres 4,660. Houses 234. A. P. £3,487. Pop., in 1801, 1,009; in 1831, 1,205. Poor rates, in 1838, £547 5s.

GORTON, a chapelry in the parish of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; on the borders of Cheshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Manchester; on the Sheffield and Manchester railway, and Stourport canal: the railway line passes 20 feet under the canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chichester; valued at £8 15s., returned at £130; gross income £140. Patrons, the collegiate church of Manchester. Here are five daily schools. There is here a reservoir for the supply of the town of Manchester with water. For an account of the cotton and other manufactures of MANCHESTER, see that article. Acres 1,350. Houses 417. A. P. £4,653. Pop., in 1801, 1,127; in 1831, 2,623. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,110 8s.

GORWYDD, WITH GARTH AND ISTRAD, a township in the parish of Llan-Ddewi-Brefi, county of Cardigan, North Wales; 2 miles north of Lampeter. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £85 3s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Here are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £10 per annum. Houses 180. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 720. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 15s.

GOSBECK, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Needham, and near the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 5s. 5d.; gross income £316. Patron, in 1835, — Porter, Esq. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,530. Houses 59. A. P. £1,991. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 319. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 16s.

GOSBERTON, a parish of Kirtton wapentake, parts of Holland, union of Spalding, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-north-west of Spalding. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £45, returned at £76; gross income £142. Great and small tithes, &c. commuted in 1799. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1650. There are five daily and two day and Sunday schools. Acres 8,820. Houses 386. A. P. £14,878. Pop., in 1801, 1,189; in 1831, 1,951. Poor rates, in 1838, £927 3s.

GOSCOTE (EAST) HUNDRED, in the north-east parts of the county of Leicester. Area 79 830 acres. Houses 3,830. Pop., in 1831, 18,770.

GOSCOTE (WEST) HUNDRED, in the northern parts of the county of Leicester. Area 8,656 acres. Houses 9,442. Pop., in 1831, 47,312.

GOSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Halstead, county of Essex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Halstead; on a branch of the river Calne. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £268. Patron, in 1835, E. G. Barnard, Esq. The church contains a small, neat chapel, and another small private one in which is a large marble monument to the memory of John Knight, Esq. This monument was executed by Scheemaker, according to directions of Pope, by whom the following epitaph was written:—

"O fairest pattern to a falling age,
Whose public virtue knew no party rage;
Whose private name all titles recommend,
The pious son, fond husband, faithful friend.
In manners plain, in sense alone refined;
Good without show, and without weakness kind.
To reason's equal dictates ever true;
Calm to resolve, and constant to pursue;
In life with every social grace adorned,
In death, by friendship, honour, virtue, mourned."

The church contains other monuments of minor note. Here are 2 infant schools, and a day and Sunday school. The straw-plait manufacture has been introduced by the marquis and marchioness of Buckingham, and contributes largely to the subsistence of the poor. Gosfield-hall is an ancient stately mansion, which, though much altered from its original appearance, yet presents one of the most perfect specimens of the castellated mansions of the nobility in the reign of Henry VIII. The park is extensive, and adorned by many fine old trees. Plantations are so disposed as to attract the eye in every direction; and there is a splendid lake, of 100 acres, which enlivens and adds picturesque beauty to the whole scene. Acres 2,990. Houses 108. A. P. £3,500. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 512. Poor rates, in 1838, £434 6s.

GOSFORD, a township in the parish of Kidlington, county of Oxford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Oxford; on the western bank of the Cherwell, and close upon the Oxford canal. Here, according to Tanner, there was a house of sisters, of the order of St. John of Jerusalem: about the year 1180 they were removed to Buckland in the county of Somerset. Acres 280. Houses 10. A. P. £353. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 45. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 2s.

GOSFORTH, a parish in the east and west divisions of Castle ward, union of Castle ward, county of Northumberland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Newcastle, and north of the river Tyne. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of St. Nicholas, Newcastle. Here are 8 daily schools. There are several excellent coal-mines in this parish, at which many of the inhabitants are employed. The following particulars regarding a colliery opened at a great expense, previous to 1829, are taken from the Northern Year Book:—The depth of West pit is 112 $\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms: of East pit, 189 fathoms: total, 371 $\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms. The time occupied in sinking the above depth was 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ years. There was solid rock for 160 fathoms: the other strata consisted of 45 seams of coal, divided by beds of argillaceous stone. Drifts nearly 600 yards long were completed in 18 months: size 10 feet wide by 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ high. The coal was first discovered on 31st January, 1829; its thickness being 5 feet 6 inches, with 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches of clay beneath: next 3 feet 6 inches of coal, making in all 9 feet of good workable coal. At the winning of the coal here, a singular entertainment, consisting of a grand ball, took place in the 'regions of blackness and darkness,' at the bottom of the pit,—1,100 feet below the surface of the earth. There were 230 dancers, 100 of whom were ladies. The ebon hall was in the form of L. It was brilliantly illuminated; and 'celestial music mingled with the radiance.' The floor was paved, and seats stood round the hall, the dusky walls of which were 48 feet high; base 22 feet; width 15 feet. All returned in safety to the upper regions, highly gratified with their subterranean revel, carrying away with them reminiscent specimens of the 'black diamond' hewed from the face of the drifts, with their own respective hands. Acres 6,010. Houses and pop. returned under the townships of Brunton East, Brunton West, Coxlodge, Fawdon, Gosforth North, Gosforth South, and Kenton East and West.—Houses 617.—Pop., in 1801, 1,385; in 1831, 3,546. A. P. £19,676. Poor rates, in 1838, £523 16s.

GOSFORTH (NORTH), a township in the above parish; 4 miles north of Newcastle; on the post-road to Morpeth. Here is a daily school. Gosforth-house, and Low Gosforth, seats of the ancient family of the Brandlings, are situated in this township. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 23. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 145. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 8s.

GOSFORTH (SOUTH), a township and hamlet in the same parish. Here the parish church is situated. There are two daily schools. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 43. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 237. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 13s.

GOSFORTH, a parish in Allerdale ward above Derwent, union of Whitehaven, county of Cumberland; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east of Egremont; on a small stream which flows into St. George's channel. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £17 14s. 7d., returned at £100; gross income £85. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. W. Senhouse. Here are 5 daily schools. There are two fairs held annually here on Bernwood common, April 25th, and October 18th. Freestone is abundant in this parish. Acres 8,400. Houses 187. A. P. £2,485. Pop., in 1801, including the townships of High and Low Bolton, Bernwood, &c., 652; in 1831, 935. Poor rates, in 1838, £823 12s.

GOSPORT, a seaport, market-town, and chapelry, in the parish of Alverstoke, county of Southampton; 15 miles west-south-west of Southampton, and 78 south-west of London; situated on a projecting point of land, on the west side of the entrance to Portsmouth harbour. A creek on each side affords excellent anchorage,—a circumstance which, with its vicinity to Portsmouth, has raised the town into importance. There is a ferry across the harbour to Portsmouth; but though the distance be only three-fourths of a mile, it is sometimes scarcely passable in high winds. There is a railway from Gosport to the Southampton railway. It is 15½ miles in length. The capital of the company was £300,000. Though in Leland's time Gosport was only a fishing-village, it is now an extensive market-town, with a considerable trade, especially in times of war. Its importance, indeed, is so great, that it has been regularly fortified by a line of redoubts, bastions, counterscarps, &c., which appear to be a segment of those of Portsmouth, and extend from one creek to the other, protecting all the town from the land side. The principal street of the town extends westward from the harbour to the fortifications; others run parallel with this, and, like it, are crossed by various minor streets. There are also different ranges, chiefly of respectable houses, extending along the shore and near the lines. Besides extensive barracks, Gosport contains numerous government works for the supply of the navy. Among these on the Weevil, or north side of the town within the lines, are the royal Clarence victualling yard, containing a steam-mill, brewery, and cooperage, with a very extensive range of store-houses for wine, hops, malt, &c. Here was erected the first machinery for making biscuits for the navy. The victualling premises at Portsmouth were sold a few years ago, and almost a new establishment built here. It is connected with the harbour by a large basin and canal, with extensive quays where vessels of considerable burden can take in stores; while, to the ships in the harbour, they are conveyed by numerous small sloops belonging to Gosport or Weevil. Across the upper creek, at Priddy's-hard, is a large powder-magazine for the use of both army and navy; also an extensive iron-foundry, where anchors, &c.

are manufactured. At Haslar, across the lower creek, where an iron-bridge has been recently erected, stands Haslar hospital, a royal endowment for sick and wounded seamen. The building is surrounded by a high wall, nearly a mile in circumference. It has a grand front of 570 feet, with wings, each 550 feet in length. The pediment displays a sculpture, in Portland stone, of the royal arms, with the figures of Navigation and Commerce,—the former pouring balm upon a sailor's wounds,—and other appropriate ornaments. The hospital is capable of accommodating 2,000 patients. The wards are all uniform, 60 feet long and 24 broad, each for the reception of 20 patients, with nurses, &c. Opposite the grand entrance is a neat military pavilion or guard-house, where a constant guard of marines is kept to prevent desertion. Within the airing-ground are also a chapel and houses for the governor and other officers and servants of the establishment, the full complement of which consists of more than 260 persons. During the late war the annual expenditure was about £5,000. At the eastern point of the reef of land, which projects from the hospital premises across the mouth of the harbour of Portsmouth, constituting a natural protection of a peculiarly artificial aspect, is a very strong fort or block-house, with a battery of extensive range and power. The land on the Gosport side stretches outwards towards Stokes bay in a south-western direction to Gilkicker point, near which is Fort Moncton, a regular modern and very strong fortification, defended by 32 pieces of heavy ordnance. Thence to the westward, ranges a strong redoubt, which, with the fort, effectually secures this part of the coast. To the westward, a high and massive stone wall has been erected to preserve the land from the ravages of the sea. The approach to Gosport by water is extremely fine, as the various forts and large piles of building in its vicinity are then seen to great advantage,—and the town itself, considered as a seaport, is well-built and handsome. The amusements of the more respectable class, in this town, consist of dramatic performances in a neat theatre, concerts, and assemblies. Living, a perpetual curacy and a peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; gross income £282. Patron, the vicar of Alverstoke. The chapel is a spacious edifice, standing in a large, well-arranged cemetery, to the south of the town. The organ formerly belonged to the duke of Chandos. Here are two independent churches, formed in 1690 and 1826; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1809; and a Roman Catholic chapel. Several charity schools have been established here by subscription; and there are almshouses for distressed widows, endowed with about £30 per annum. Other charities, in 1826, £17 10s. per annum. Poor rates, including Alverstoke, in 1838, £3,118 1s. Gosport is not incorporated: it is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The county house of correction is situated on the public highway. It is without a boundary wall, but overlooked by no other building. Part of the edifice is old; the better and more commodious portion is new. It comprises 28 cells, 4 airing-yards, 4 wards, and 4 day-rooms. A capstan-mill supplies the hard labour of the establishment. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 339. Although neither connected in municipal government, nor by parliamentary representation, the inhabitants of Gosport and Portsmouth are of the same description, and derive the same benefit from the public establishments. There is little trade or manufacture carried on in Gosport but such as is connected with the navy. There are markets on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday,—and fairs, May 4th and October 10th. Fish and vegetables are sold here in great abundance: the latter are brought from a considerable distance inland, and also from the Isle of Wight. Pop., in 1811, 7,778; in 1821, 6,184: other returns with the parish.

GOSTROW HUNDRED, in the rape of Hastings, county of Sussex. It lies in the eastern extremity of the county. Acres 7,950. Houses 176. Population, in 1831, 1,500.

GOSWICK, a hamlet and farm situated in Northamshire, although belonging to the parish of Holy Island, Islandshire, co. palatine of Durham. It is situated 5 miles north by west of Holy Island, contiguous to a small bay of the North sea. It occupies the entrance to the fordable sands between the mainland and Holy Island, on which account it is supposed that this place and Fenham are retained in the parish of Holy Island.

GOTHAM, a parish in the south division of Rushcliffe wapentake, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Nottingham, south-east of the Trent, and within 3 miles of the Midland counties railway. Acres 2,740. Houses 118. A. P. £2,525. Pop., in 1801, 475; in 1831, 748. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £19 8s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £513. Patrons, in 1835, the Duke of Portland, Earl Howe, &c., alternately. Tithes commuted in 1804. The church is an antique edifice with a heavy spire. Here are 2 daily schools, besides an infant and a day and Sunday National school. The two latter are endowed by Countess Howe. Charities, in 1829, £2 7s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 8s. The village of Gotham, so renowned in infantile story, stands upon a gentle eminence, and consists only of a few not very elegant cottages. In the Domesday survey the village is said to be called Gotham, or Goat's-home, from goats having been much cherished by the inhabitants. It is even still pronounced Goteham. No reader can cast his eye on this article without remembering what most probably amused and interested his childhood;—namely, the 'History of the Wise Men of Gotham.' Warton, treating of the "idle pranks of the men of Gotham," observes, "that such pranks bore a reference to some customary law tenures belonging to that place or its neighbourhood, now grown obsolete." Hearne, too, remarks,—“Nor is there more reason to esteem the merry tales of the madmen of Gotham (which were much valued and cried up in the time of Henry VIII., though now sold at ballad singers' stalls) as altogether a romance: a certain skilful person having told me, more than once, that they formerly held lands there by such sports and customs as are touched upon in this book.” The proverb, says Fuller, “‘As wise as a man of Gotham,’ passeth publicly for the periphrasis of a fool; and an hundred fopperies are forged and fathered on the townfolk of Gotham.” Stigmatizing some particular spot, as remarkable for stupidity, has been noticed as a prevalent custom even amongst the earliest nations. Thus, amongst the Asiatics, Phrygia was the Gotham of the day; Abdera, amongst the Thracians; and Boeotia among the Greeks. It is evident that publicity had been given to ridiculous traditions of the men of Gotham; and particularly to the fable of their having often heard the cuckoo; and, having never seen her, of their having therefore hedged the bush in whence her note proceeded, that they might at length, by catching her, behold the curiosity. What originated this story is now uncertain, but at a place called Courthill, in this parish, there is a bush still designated as the ‘Cuckoo bush.’ The present inhabitants, however, turn this hill to better purpose than their ancestors did, as they work in its side two very excellent quarries; one of gypsum, in large blocks; the other of a reddish stone, sufficiently hard for building; but calcareous, and fit either to burn into lime, or to polish as marble. The book alluded to by Hearne, is mentioned by Walpole, who says, “‘The merry Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham,’ a book extremely admired, and often reprinted in that age, was written by Lucas de Heere, a Flemish painter, who resided in England, in the time of Elizabeth.” Wood, however, is of a different opinion, and tells us, that the tales were written by one Andrew Borde, or Andreas Perforatus, as he calls himself. This facetious gentleman was a kind of travelling quack; and it is supposed that the name and occupation of a Merry Andrew took its rise from him. There is an old black letter edition of the work, at the Bodleian library at Oxford, called ‘Certaine merry Tales of the Mad Men of Gotham, compiled in the reign of Henry VIII., by Dr. Andrew Borde, an eminent physician of that period.’

GOTHERINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Bishop's Cleeve, county of Gloucester; 4 miles west-north-west of Winehome. Tithes of this hamlet commuted in 1806. Here is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 70. A. P. £964. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 12s.

GOUDHURST, a parish, partly in the hund. of Cranbrooke, but chiefly in that of Marden, lathe of Scray, union of Cranbrooke, Kent; 13 miles south of Maidstone. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £26 19s. 2d.; gross income £445. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. A handsome district church has recently been erected at Kilndowne. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. There are 9 daily schools,—two of which are endowed,—and a National school. Charities, in 1836, £24 per annum; besides 40 bushels of wheat provided annually for 40 poor people, and £1,000 three-and-a-half per cent. annuities, in expectancy, on the death of an annuitant. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,275 6s. Goudhurst consists of houses standing on four different public roads, which unite in the centre of the village. The clothing-trade was at one time carried on here to a very considerable extent, but long since went to decay. The market-day used to be Wednesday, but that too has gone into desuetude. An annual fair for cattle is still held on August 26th. Acres 9,820. Houses 429. A. P. £3,969. Pop., in 1801, 1,782; in 1831, 2,793.

GOULDSBY, or GOLCEBY, a parish in the north division of Gartree wapentake, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Louth, and east of the river Bain. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 0s. 2d., returned at £100; gross income £156. Patron, in 1835, M. B. Lister, Esq. Acres 144. Houses 57. A. P. £934. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 252. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 1s.

GOURTON, a township in the parish of Wrexham, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 2 miles east of Wrexham. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the iron and coal works which abound in this vicinity. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 41. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 10s.

GOWDALL, a township in the parish of Snaith, west riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Snaith, on the southern bank of the Aire. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,100. Houses 50. A. P. £1,276. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 260. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 1s.

GOWKESWELL. See GOKEWELL.

GOWTHORPE. See YOUTHORPE WITH GOWTHORPE.

GOXHILL, a parish in the north division of Yarborough wapentake, parts of Lindsey, union of Glanford Brigg, county of Lincoln; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Barton-upon-Humber. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 18s. 4d., returned at £148; gross income £133. Tithes commuted in 1773. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 5 daily schools. Acres 5,860. Houses 178. A. P. £6,638. Pop., in 1801, 596; in 1831, 801. Poor rates, in 1838, £336 12s.

GOXHILL, a parish in the north division of Holderness wapentake, union of Skirlaugh, east riding of Yorkshire; 11 miles east-north-east of Beverley, near the coast of the North sea. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £8; gross income £285. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £202 1s. 7d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Constable. Acres 880. Houses 11. A. P. £1,679. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 65. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 13s.

GOYTREY, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Abergavenny, union of Pont-y-pool, county of Monmouth; 5 miles north-west of Usk, west of the river Usk, and intersected by the Brecon canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £4 7s. 6d., returned at £150; gross income £269. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Abergavenny. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1826; and a Calvinistic Methodist, in 1800. There is a day and Sunday school. Acres 3,730. Houses 107. A. P. £1,807. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 521. Poor rates, in 1838, £202 17s.

GOYT (THE), a river which has its source in Derbyshire, and forms, for a considerable space, the boundary between that county and Cheshire. Opposite Mellor it meets the Etherow, turns west, and falls into the Mersey at Stockport.

GRABY, a hamlet in the parish of Aslackby, county of Lincoln. Pop., in 1821, 21. Other returns with the parish.

GRACE-DIEU, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of West Goscote, county of Leicester; 5 miles east-north-east of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel.

GRACE-DIEU, an extra-parochial liberty in the lower division of the hund. of Ragland, county of Monmouth; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Monmouth. There was here a small abbey of the Cistercian order, built A. D. 1226.

GRADE, a parish in the west division of Kerrier hund., union of Helston, county of Cornwall; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Helston. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £276. Patrons, in 1835, the representatives of J. Rogers. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,420. Houses 67. A. P. £1,357. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 306. Poor rates, in 1838, £168 12s.

GRAEG, a hamlet in the parish of Bassaleg, county of Monmouth; 3 miles west by north of Newport, intersected by the Crumlin canal. Houses 124. A. P. £1,443. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 581. Poor rates, in 1838, £161 13s.

GRAFFHAM, WITH EAST-PERRY, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of St. Neots, county of Huntingdon; 4 miles east-north-east of Kimbolton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 14s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £201. Patroness, in 1835, Lady O. Sparrow. Tithes, moduses, &c., of the township of Graffham, commuted in 1774. Here is a day and Sunday school, with a lending library attached. Acres 2,380. Houses 53. A. P. £1,847. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 281. Poor rates, in 1838, £62 5s.

GRAFFHAM, a parish in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, union of Westhamphett, county of Sussex, now included within the boundaries of Midhurst; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Midhurst. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £9 10s. 5d.; gross income £147. Patron, in 1835, Mrs. C. J. Sargent. Here is a daily school, with a lending library attached. In 1835, Jeremiah Dyson of New Grove, Petworth, invested the sum of £266 13s. 4d., consolidated 3 per cent. bank annuities in the name of trustees for behoof of poor persons in this parish and that of Woolavington—a moiety of the annual proceeds to each. Acres 1,550. Houses 53. A. P. £904. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 372. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 10s.

GRAFTON, a township in the parish of Tilston, co.-palatine of Chester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Malpas. Acres 500. Houses 1. A. P. £525. Pop., in 1801, 23; in 1831, 18. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 5s.

GRAFTON, a hamlet in the parish of Beckford, county of Gloucester; 6 miles south-south-west of Evesham. Tithes of this hamlet commuted in 1773. A singular circumstance took place near this hamlet in 1764. About 16 acres of land slipped from the side of Breedon-hill and entirely covered the pasture grounds below. The accident was attributed to incessant heavy rains. It is said that on the day previous to the land slip a horse discovered the insecurity of the ground and refused to pass.

GRAFTON, a township in the parish of All Saints, city of Hereford, county of Hereford, south of the river Wye, and about a mile south-west of the city. Acres 410. Houses 12. A. P. £484. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 2s.

GRAFTON. See MARTON WITH GRAFTON.

GRAFTON, a township in the parish of Longford, county of Oxford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Lechlade, and north of the Thames. Acreage, with the hamlet of Radcutt, 980. Houses 12. A. P. £807. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1833, £62 13s.

GRAFTON-FLYFORD. See FLYFORD-GRAFTON.

GRAFTON-MANOR, an extra-parochial manor in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, county of Worcester; 2 miles south-west of Bromsgrove, near the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and the Worcester and Birmingham canal. It anciently belonged to the Talbots, earls of Shrewsbury. Acres 1,380. Houses 7. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 45.

GRAFTON-REGIS, a parish in the hund. of Cleley, union of Potterspury, county of Northampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Towcester, bounded on the east by the river Towe, intersected by the Grand Junction canal, and in the line of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory with that of Alderton, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £286. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Lace-making is the principal business carried on here. In the reign of Edward III. this manor was held by a singular service, viz., keeping one of the king's white brackets or beagles with red ears. It afterwards became the seat of the Woodvilles, or Wydvils, a noble and very powerful family, one of whom, Richard Woodville, was fined by Henry VI. in £1,000, for marrying without his leave, Jacques, dowager of John, earl of Bedford. This same Richard was afterwards, by the same Henry, created Baron Rivers, Grafton, and De la Mote; and his daughter Elizabeth, relict of John Gray of Groby, obtained in marriage the hand of Edward IV.; in consequence of which, he was advanced by that monarch to the dignity of constable of England. The connection, however, proved most calamitous to both parties. Grafton-regis has given the title of duke to the Fitzroy family ever since the time of Charles II., whose natural son, by the duchess of Cleveland, was the first duke of Grafton-regis. Acres 1,510. Houses 47. A. P. £2,247. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 241. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 8s.

GRAFTON-UNDERWOOD, a parish in the hund. of Huxloe, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 4 miles east-north-east of Kettering. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 16s. 3d.; gross income £287; in the patronage, in 1835, of Ladies A. and G. Fitzpatrick. Tithes commuted in 1777. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1830, £16 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 8s. Acres 2,050. Houses 56. A. P. £1,469. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 290.

GRAFTON-TEMPLE AND ARDEN, a parish in the hund. of Barlichway, Stratford division, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Warwick; 2½ miles south-east by east of Alcester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, of the clear yearly value of £5 5s.; gross income £103. Patron, in 1835, F. F. Bullock, Esq. Tithes commuted in 1812. Here are 2 infant and 2 Sunday schools. Acres 1,830. Houses 66. A. P. £3,600. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 374. Poor rates, in 1838, £97 4s.

GRAINE (ISLE OF), or ST. JAMES, a parish in the hund. and union of Hoo, lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent; 2 miles west by north of Sheerness, on the opposite side of the Medway, and west of the isle of Sheppey. It is bounded on the north by the Thames, west by the Yantlet creek, south by the Medway, and east by the junction of the Thames and Medway. It is about 3½ miles from north to south, and 2½ from east to west. The parish and the isle are co-extensive. Living, a vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 11s. 8d.; gross income £298. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. George Davies. Yantlet creek, in the early period of our history, was the usual and principal passage for ships trading to and from London to the southwards, but it had for a long period been choked up, and for many years had a road across it. Of late years it has been opened up so as to give about 8 feet of water at high tide, allowing barges to pass, by which a distance of 14 miles is saved, and the danger of going round the Nore avoided. This island lies very flat and low, the greatest part of it being pasture and marshes, which, with the badness of the water, makes it a very unhealthy place. By strong embankments of earth, called sea walls, the land is kept from being overwhelmed by the sea. Off the eastern end of the isle is the well-known Nore-light, stationed here to enable mariners to avoid the long and narrow sand-banks which lie in parallel ranges in the estuary of the Thames. The charges of maintaining this light, in 1837, were £386 2s. 6d.; gross amount of light duties £2,912 19s. 6d.; commission on collection £85 4s. 9d. There are rather extensive salt-works on the south-east side of the island. Acres 3,160. Houses 41. A. P. £2,390. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 240. Poor rates, in 1838, £161 4s.

GRAINSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6½ miles south of Great Grimsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 18s. 4d.; gross income £285. Patron, in 1835, T. Sands, Esq. Acres

1,390. Houses 16. A. P. £1,221. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 11s.

GRAINTHORPE, with LUDNEY AND WRANGHOLME, a parish in Marsh division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 7 miles north-east by north of Louth. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; certified to value £19 14s., returned at £60; gross income £115. Patron, Magdalen college, Cambridge. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which was endowed in 1820 by Mr. George Lill, and has a lending library attached. Acres 4,280. Houses 114. A. P. £5,242. Pop., in 1801, 408; in 1831, 517. Poor rates, in 1838, 331 13s.

GRAISLEY, a tything in the parish of Salhamstead-Abbots, county of Berks; 6 miles south-west of Reading. Acres 1,400. Houses 15. A. P. £726. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 66.

GRAMPOUND, or GRANDPONT, a tything in that part of the parish of Aldate which is in the county of Berks. Returns with St. Aldates, city of Oxford.

GRAMPOUND, or GRANDPONT, a borough and market-town, partly in St. Probus parish, but chiefly in that of Creed, west division of the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austell, county of Cornwall. It is situated 37 miles south-west of Launceston, and 14 north-east by north of Falmouth, on the river Fal,—here crossed by a good stone-bridge, whence the name, originally Grandpont, was derived. The town stands near the post-road from London through Plymouth to the Lands-end. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Creed. There are 4 daily and 3 infant schools here. Gram-pound principally consists of one street on the declivity of a hill, but the houses have a decayed and mean appearance. The whole vale of Gram-pound, and all the lands of Coytfala or Falawood, with the privilege of a market, were granted to the town by John of Eltham, earl of Cornwall, brother to Edward III. Edward III., after the death of his brother, confirmed the charter, and erected the town into a borough. It did not, however, send members to parliament till the reign of Edward VI., after which, it sent regularly two members till 1824, when it was disfranchised for corrupt practices. The corporation, which was chiefly maintained for purposes connected with the election of members to parliament, then fell into decay. For 12 years no mayor was elected; but the corporation was then re-established; though the mayor was chosen neither according to ancient usage nor the provisions of the charter. The only revenue of the borough in 1834, was £8 per annum derived from market tolls. The only manufacture here has been that of gloves. The market-day is Saturday; and fairs for cattle are held on January 18th, first Tuesday after March 25th, and June 11th. Borlase imagines this to have been the Voluba of Ptolemy; but see FALMOUTH. Acreage with Creed. Houses 112. A. P. £864. Pop., in 1801, 525; in 1831, 715. Poor rates, in 1838, £143 10s.

GRANBY WITH SUTTON, a parish in the north division of Bingham wapentake, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south-east by east of Bingham, near the source of the Devon, and west of the Grantham canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 3s. 6d., returned at £120; gross income £123. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. Tithes, &c., of the liberties of Granby and Sutton, commuted in 1793. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1829, £1 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £188

Ss. Acres 2,420. Houses 76. A. P. £3,354. Pop., in 1801, 329; in 1831, 342.

GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY. See BIRMINGHAM.

GRANDBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Winslow, county of Buckingham; 2 miles south of Winslow. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of St. Alban's and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £201. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Improper and vicarial tithes commuted in 1796. Charities, in 1830, 8s. per annum, besides 5 acres, 2 roods, 22 falls of land held in lots by the poor, and 1 acre 10 falls of church land. Poor rates, in 1838, £315 13s. Acres 1,560. Houses 64. A. P. £2,008. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 341.

GRANDBOROUGH, a parish in the Southam division of Knightlow hund., union of Rugby, county of Warwick; 6 miles north-west by west of Daventry, on the western bank of the river Leam, and near the Oxford canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £5; gross income £185. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Bromfield. Tithes of the lordship and liberties of Grandborough, commuted in 1765. Here is a daily National school. Charities, in 1826, upwards of £6 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £295. Acres 4,100. Houses 105. A. P. £3,247. Pop., in 1801, 407; in 1831, 528.

GRANDPONT. See GRAMPOUND.

GRANGE. See CLAUGHTON WITH GRANGE.

GRANGE, a township in the parish of West Kirby, co.-palatine of Chester; 8½ miles north of Great Neston, and west of the river Mersey. Here is a daily school supported by endowment, and free to the whole parish of West Kirby. Acres 1,180. Houses 21. A. P. £1,287. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 124.

GRANGE. See ADFORTON.

GRANGE-IRON-BROCK. See IRON-BROCK-GRANGE.

GRANGE, or GRENCH, a hamlet, locally situated in the lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent; but a member of the town and Cinque-port of Hastings, in the county of Sussex, though distant from it 59 miles. Here is a daily school. The magistrates of the county of Kent have had jurisdiction given them over Grange, concurrently with the corporation of Hastings, which, till then, used to provide a resident magistrate, with the title of Deputy, at Grange. Pop., in 1821, 112; in 1831, 134. Poor rates, in 1838, £31 12s.

GRANDSDEN, or GRANDSON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Toseland, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Huntingdon; 7 miles south-east by east of St. Neot's, on the borders of Cambridgeshire. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £5 7s. 3½d.; gross income £200. Patron, Clare-hall, Cambridge. There is here a place of worship for the Baptists. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £61 18s. 11d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £318 14s. Acres 3,200. Houses 120. A. P. £2,149. Pop., in 1801, 412; in 1831, 527.

GRANDSDEN, or GRANDSON (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Longstow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 3 miles south-west of Caxton. Living, a rectory exempt from visitation; in the dio. of Ely; rated at £18 15s. 2½d.; gross income £201. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1813. Here is a daily school endowed with £14 per annum. Other charities, in 1836, £30 15s. per annum, including £13 5s. arising from church lands. Poor rates, in 1838, £109 17s. Acres 1,896. Houses 53. A. P. £1,361. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 251.

GRANSMOOR, a township in the parish of Burton-Agnes, east riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles east by north of Great Driffield. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount belonging to the vicar of Burton-Agnes, £171. Acres 13. Houses 1,050. A. P. £2,175. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 93. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 15s.

GRANSTON, a parish in the hund. of Dewisland, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 5 miles west-south-west of Fishguard. Living, a discharged vicarage with those of Mathry and St. Nicholas, in the archd. and dio. of St. David's, returned at £29 18s. 7½d.; gross income £322. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount belonging to the vicar, £45. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Here is a day and Sunday school. Houses 35. A. P. £612. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 3s.

GRANTA (THE), or CAM. See CAMBRIDGE-SHIRE.

GRANTCHESTER, a parish in Wetherley hundred, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 2½ miles south-south-west of Cambridge; on the western bank of the Granta or Cam, and near the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £7 14s. 4½d.; gross income £292. Patron, Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1799. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £36 10s., besides a house occupied by the parish-clerk, a charity under the management of Corpus Christi college, and £80 made available to the parish in 1835. Poor rates, in 1838, £366 14s. "Grantchester is said to be the Cambritorium of Antonine, and to have been changed into this name by the Saxons. In Bede's time it was a little but desolate city, but now a small village. Out of this ruined city the adjoining university of Cambridge is believed to have had its original." Blomfield's Col. Ca. page 228. "This towne," says Lambard, "the towne of Cambridge, and the shyre also, take their naming of the ryver Granta or Gronta; for Cambridge ought to be called Grantbridge, as it is most evident by Marian and others. This ryver rysethe by Walden in Essex, and runneth by this towne, which, in auneynt tyme, thoughte it weare but Civitatula, as Beda termeth it, yet was it the best that stoode upon that water, and, for prehemineance above the rest, was called the cytie upon Grant, as Excester the cytie upon Ex, and Darwented the cytie upon Darwent, now Darby, corruptly for Darwenthy, which 'by,' significthe a dwellinge,—a word most usual in the names of our Englishe townes. It is likely that it was defaced in the tyme that Uffa, expulsiinge the Brytons, set up the kingdome of East Angle, and that it hath not bene regarded sythence, but the estimation therof translated to Cambridge, bothe for the more comoditie of the ryver, and for regard for the universitie." Acres 1,591. Houses 96. A. P. £1,717. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 488.

GRANTHAM, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the soke of Grantham, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 25 miles south-south-west of Lincoln, and 111 north-west of London. Acres 4,320. Houses 1,413. A. P. £21,424. Pop., in 1801, including the townships of Harrowby, Spittlegate, Houghton with Walton, and Manthorpe with Little Gonerby, 4,288; in 1831, 7,427. Living, a vicarage with those of Gonerby, London-thorpe, and Braceby, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £1,057. Patrons, the prebendaries of North and South Grantham, in Salisbury cathedral, alternately. Tithes of the lordships or liberties of Spittlegate, Houghton and Walton, commuted in 1795. The church is a beautiful stone structure, with a lofty tower, surmounted by an elegant spire, rising to the height of 273 feet. The tower is disfigured by a staircase forming an octangular projection at one corner. The church contains some handsome monuments. The font is an elegant specimen of ancient sculpture. It stands upon a pedestal of two steps. The shape is octangular. The base of the shaft is ornamented with heads, alternated with roses. On the shaft are statues of various saints in niches; and round the font, under crocketed canopies, are many figures in basso-relievo, representative of the seven sacraments. The charnel-house here was at one time remarkable for containing about 1,500 skulls, whitened by exposure, and piled up in rows one above the other. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1823; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1803, and a Huntingdonian. A handsome Roman Catholic chapel has been recently erected. There are a day and Sunday, and 19 daily schools, including a free grammar-school founded by Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester; and further endowed, by Edward VI., with the possessions of 2 dissolved chantries. The annual income is about £800; a portion of which is appropriated to the establishment of exhibitions at Oxford and Cambridge, for scholars of 2 years' standing. The school-house, built of stone, is remarkable as having been that at which Sir Isaac Newton received the rudiments of his education. A charity school for girls was founded by Mr. Hurst; and a Lancasterian school for boys, and another for girls, are supported by subscription. There are some almshouses and other charities. On 6th February, 1837, 15 trustees were appointed to manage the charities previously administered by the corporation. The income of these, in 1837, amounted to £878 4s. 10½d., of which £798 16s. 7½d. consisted of the income of the grammar-school. The poor rates of the parish, in 1838, were £2,348 19s.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Grantham, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Grantham poor-law union comprehends 52 parishes, embracing an area of 155 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 22,839. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,825. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,084; in 1839, £5,350 12s.

The town of Grantham is situated on the ancient Roman road called Irmin-street, west of the Witham. To the westward of the town is the Grantham and Nottingham canal. It communicates with the Trent, and is supplied with water by large reservoirs. The level line from Grantham to Wools-thorp-point is supplied by a reservoir covering 27 acres of ground, in Denton and Harlaxton parishes. This reservoir is fed by the flood-waters of Denton rivulet: the other part of the line from Wools-thorp-point to the Trent has a fall of 140 feet, and is supplied by a reservoir, of 52 acres, at Knip-ton. The chief articles conveyed are large quantities of coals, corn, &c., which constitute the principal and increasing trade of the town. The market is on Saturday: it is well supplied with corn and provisions of all sorts, and there is every alternate week a large mart for live stock. Fairs are held for horned cattle, horses, and sheep, on the 5th Monday in Lent; for sheep and horses, on Holy Thursday; and for horned cattle and horses, on July 10th, October 26th, and December 17th. The Northern and Central bank of England have a branch here.

Grantham consists chiefly of four streets,—called Castle-gate, West-gate, Water-gate, and Swine-gate streets, from which it appears evident that the town was once walled, although no vestige of the walls remains; neither is there any vestige of a castle, which it is said to have formerly possessed; and the existence of which, the name Castle-gate-street would seem to indicate. On St. Peter's hill, near the southern entrance into the town, formerly stood an elegant cross, erected by Edward I., in memory of Eleanor his queen, who died A.D. 1290; this being one of the resting-places on the way to interment in Westminster-abbey. There are ruins of several religious houses still to be seen. The Angel-inn—which took its name from some representations of angels cut in stone, with several other religious devices about the building—was a commandery of the Knights Templars. It still displays some grotesque ornaments. A little to the south-west of the Angel-inn was formerly a beautiful stone oratory, with scripture representations in bas relief: the ceiling of stone carved. A priory of grey friars, since known as the Grange, or Cistercian's place, was founded here in 1290. It was pleasantly situated on the west side of the town. The house was pulled down the beginning of the present century. The town, however, still bears marks of considerable ancient importance. It even appears to have been a strong Roman station. As to its antiquity, it is said, in Stowe's Chronicle, to have been built by Gorbomanus, king of Britain, 303 years prior to the Christian era. "It is more likely by the name," says Lambard, "that it began with the Saxons." It appears from history, however, that Grantham, at an early period, was the residence of a suffragan bishop, and possessed peculiar privileges. Of the few buildings in the town demanding observation, are the guild-hall and borough-gaol, to be afterwards more particularly noticed. There is a neat but small theatre in the town. The streets are well-paved, cleaned, and lighted with gas. Spittlegate on the south, in the vicinity of which is Houghton paper-mill, and Gonerby on the north, are so connected with Grantham, that all are considered as constituting one united town. Without Spittlegate, at what is termed Grantham Spa, a mild chalybeate and salutary spring rises out of sandy ground. It is specifically lighter than common spring-water, and contains a small portion of aerated iron. The approaches to Grantham are particularly admired for the very elegant and substantial seats and villas by which they are adorned.

Under a charter granted in 1463 by Edward IV., and various others down to the governing charter, granted 7^o Charles I., the town was governed by an alderman, deputy-alderman, recorder, deputy-recorder, 13 com-burgesses, including the alderman, 12 second-burgesses, &c. The coroner was named in a prior, but not in the governing, charter; and there were other officers, consisting of an escheator, 2 chief constables, a chamberlain, and various others. The alderman was the head of the corporation: together they were appointed magistrates, not only for the town, but for the whole soke of Grantham; acting as justices of peace, with the same powers as all the other justices of the division of the county called the Parts of Kesteven, and holding courts of session usually twice a-year; a court of record, and an alderman's court. The style of the corporation was the 'Alderman and burgesses of the town or borough of Grantham.' Under the new municipal act the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors. The boundaries of the borough, laid down in the boundary reports, are limited to the town, with Spittlegate, and Manthorpe-with-Little-Gonerby: and the jurisdiction of the soke has merged into that of the county. Grantham is included in sched. A, among boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted,—and a court of quarter-sessions and a recorder appointed. The prison stands at the back of the town-hall. It consists of 4 day-rooms and 12 cells, upon a ground plan, with 4 airing-yards; where, detached from other buildings, it is enclosed by a boundary wall. It possesses a small tread-wheel. The number of prisoners, in 1837, was 23. The hall of the corporation was rebuilt in 1787, by a rate levied by act of parliament on the soke, and in addition to which, the duke of Rutland and Lord Brownlow gave each £300 to erect a large apartment for the occasional accommodation of the corporation, and to serve as an assembly-room for the use of the town. The income of the borough, in 1839, was £1,276 12s. 1½d., arising principally from borough-rates and rents, with £125 6s. 5d. of lighting rate. Expenditure £1,290 0s. 9½d., which principally consisted of

Lighting and cleansing,	£368	2	9
Salaries, &c., to municipal officers,	280	10	0
Police and constables,	189	4	0
Jail, maintenance, &c., of prisoners,	122	0	0
Administration of justice, prosecutions, &c.,	102	9	6
Public works, repairs, &c.,	71	10	1½

Grantham has regularly sent two members to parliament since the time of Edward IV.,—a privilege which it still enjoys. The parliamentary and municipal borough, previous to the passing of the reform act, formed but a small part of the parish of Grantham; indeed, it only comprehended an area not exceeding 100 acres, now almost wholly built on. The right of voting was in freemen not receiving alms. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years, previous to 1831, was 864. Under the reform act, the boundaries of the borough for parliamentary representation, have been extended so as to comprehend the whole parish of Grantham, and that part of the parish of Somerby contained between the boundaries of Grantham and High-dyke. The number of electors registered in 1837, was 678, of whom 280 were freemen. The number actually polled at the general election in 1837, was 585. The mayor is the returning officer.

At the time of the Norman survey Grantham was held in royal demesne. Henry III., in order to raise supplies which the parliament had refused him, mortgaged it, together with Stamford, to his uncle, William de Valence, earl of Pembroke. The king's forces, under Colonel Cavendish, took the town in 1642, and afterwards demolished its fortifications. "About this time," remarks De Foe, "it was that we began to hear of the name of Oliver Cromwell, who, like a little cloud, rose out of the east, and spread first into the north, till it shed down a flood that overwhelmed the three kingdoms. When the war first broke out he was a private captain of horse, but now commanded a regiment; and joining with the earl of Manchester, the first action in which we heard of his exploits, and which emblazoned his character, was at Grantham, where, with only his own regiment, he defeated 24 troops of horse and dragoons of the king's forces."

GRANTHAM SOKE, in the parts of Kesteven, county of Lincoln. Area 25,400 acres. Houses 2,072. Pop., in 1831, 10,780.

GRANTLEY WITH SKELDIN, a township in the parish, and within the liberties of Ripon, west riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles west-south-west of Ripon. Here is an endowed daily school. Acres 930. Houses 54. A. P. £1,101. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 243. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 19s.

GRAPPENHALL, a parish in the hund. of Bucklow, union of Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 2¾ miles south-east by south of Warrington, south of the river Mersey, and intersected by the Duke of Bridgewater's canal. It includes the township of Grappenhall, and the chapelry of Latchford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 11s. 10½d.; gross income £542. Patron, in 1835, W. Hall, Esq. All tithes commuted. The church was erected in 1539. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £10 per annum. The school-room was built by subscription. Other charities, in 1836, about £9 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £672 19s.; of the township, £261 6s. In 1838 there were 3 cotton mills here, employing 330 hands. Acres 2,550. Houses 509. A. P. £6,011. Pop., in 1801, 992; in 1831, 2,607. Acres of the township 1,540. Houses 87. A. P. £2,868. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 441.

GRASMERE, a parish in Kendal ward, union of Kendal, county of Westmoreland; 3½ miles west-north-west of Ambleside, most romantically situated on the small river Rother, which connects the Grasmere, Rydal, and Winandermere lakes. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £28 11s. 5½d., returned at £139 1s. 10d.; gross income £125. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Le Fleming. The church is encircled by a large plain of rich enclosures, at the southern end of which is the celebrated lake of Grasmere. The churchyard, shaded by aged pines and sycamores, with the melancholy yew, is interesting to those who court silence and solitude. In the parish of Grasmere there are 11 daily schools, two of which are endowed. Charities, in 1820, £36 19s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £890 10s.; of the township, £235 17s. There is a sheep fair on the first Tuesday in September. Acres 24,550. Houses 376. A. P. £7,333. Pop., in 1801, returned under the chapelry of Ambleside and the townships of Grasmere, Langdales, Rydal, and Loughbrigg, 1,338; in 1831, 2,083. Houses of the township 68. A. P. £1,567. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 359.

Grasmere lake, in the above parish, with the deep vale in which it is situated, are universally admired for their peculiar beauty. The vale is about 4 miles in circumference. It is "hedged in by mountains, whose heads, rude, craggy, and fantastic, give all the force and beauty of contrast to the smiling meads and peaceful dwellings which rest beneath their feet. At the entrance, Helm-Crag lifts its rugged form, the seat of echoes strange and wild; who shelters under his broad precipitous side the exquisitely beautiful recess called Ease-Dale, a picture better deserving the artist's pencil than most of the points about which it is in general employed. On each side, the screen is formed by plantations of young oak and ash trees; meadows present themselves in front, scarred with rocks which start abruptly from the ground, bearing on their crests groupes of verdant trees; beyond are caught in succession the village, its little church, the tranquil lake, and the dark heads of its patron mountains. Indeed the character of Grasmere is more properly its own than that of any other lake; a deep repose reigns around, which calls up the ideas of perfect abstraction and tranquillity more completely than any scenery we had yet visited. It is, however, but little known, as travellers usually pass through it without tarrying at its comfortable sequestered inn; and by these means miss some of the finest walks among the lakes."—Warner. This lake is only about 1½ mile in circumference. It has a well defined and beautifully embayed margin, "with eminences; some of rock, some of soft turf, that halt conceal and vary the figure of the little lake they command: from the shore, a low promontory pushes itself far into the water, and on it stands a white village with a parish-church rising in the midst of it: hanging enclosures, corn-fields, and meadows, green as an emerald, with their trees, and hedges, and cattle, fill up the whole space from the edge of the water; and just opposite to you is a large farmhouse, at the bottom of a steep smooth lawn, embosomed in old woods which climb half-way up the mountains' sides, and discover above a broken line of crags that crown the scene. Not a single red tile, no flaring gentleman's house, or garden wall, break in upon the repose of this little unsuspected paradise; but all is peace, rusticity, and happy poverty, in its neatest, most becoming attire."—Gray. Grasmere has been the abode of men of no little eminence, however, as the names of Wordsworth and De Quincey will sufficiently testify. In the midst of the lake is a small island, the views from which "have a pleasing mixture of beauty and sublimity, and the spectator finds himself completely enclosed in an amphitheatre of mountains, from which, on all sides, escape appears impossible."—Green.

"The deep hush of Grasmere vale, the town
Chiming through mournful silence, and the lake
Reflecting all the heavens:

So have I seen the shore—
Mid sunshine blent with the sleeping waters
In unobserved union, fair and still,
O blessed lake."

The City of the Plague.

Much of the effect of Grasmere lake, however, is lost, by the trifling circumstance of its being "sprinkled with reeds, which show their waving heads above the water far into the lake. This appearance produces the idea of shallowness, which is naturally connected with insignificance; for water, whatever its form or extent may be, if it do not impress us with the feeling, in some degree, of dread, can never produce a powerful effect upon the mind."—Warner.

GRASMERE-FELL, a mountain in Allerdale ward above Derwent, county of Cumberland. It is situated near Crummock-water, and forms rather a vast ridge than a pointed summit. It is connected with two or three other mountains of inferior dignity, and is itself nearly equal in height to Skiddaw and Helvellyn. It rises 2,756 feet above sea-level. Grasmere, and the mountains in its vicinity, form the eastern boundary of a vale about 5 miles in length, and $\frac{1}{2}$ of that space in breadth. This fell contains extensive quarries of slate. It has no connexion with the lake or parish of Grasmere.

GRASSBY, a parish in the south division of Yarborough wapentake, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-west of Caistor. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 17s. 8d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, S. Turner, Esq. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1815. Acres 1,720. Houses 82. A. P. £1,117. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 287. Poor rates, in 1838, £57.

GRASSINGTON, a township in the parish of Linton, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Skipton, and east of the river Warfe. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1811; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1810. There are 2 daily schools in this township. Lead mines have been wrought here, sometimes with great success, since the time of James I. Dr. Whitaker states, that "the lead on Grassington moor is extremely rich, a ton of ore sometimes yielding 1,600 lbs. weight of metal; but is poor in silver."—History of Craven. The market is on Friday; and there are four annual fairs, for horned cattle, on March 4th, and September 26th; and for sheep, on April 24th, and June 29th. Acres 4,960. Houses 216. A. P. £3,714. Pop., in 1801, 763; in 1831, 1,067. Poor rates, in 1838, £300.

GRASSTHORPE, a township in Marnham parish, county of Nottingham; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Tuxford, and west of the Trent. Tithes commuted in 1799. Here was formerly a chapel, now occupied as a dwelling-house. Acres 510. Houses 24. A. P. £1,128. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 14s.

GRATELY, a parish in the hund. and union of Andover, Andover division of the county of Southampton; 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Andover. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £15 9s. 2d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Constable. Here is a daily school, endowed with the interest of £105, bequeathed by W. B. Earl, Esq., in 1794: other charities, in 1825, £15 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £77 13s. Here "Kinge Ethelstane, after that he had obteyned the monarchie of this realme, held a great counsell for the preservation of peace within the same, as in the booke of Saxon lawes is to be sene."—Lambard's Top. Dic. Acres 980. Houses 32. A. P. £1,035. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 130.

GRATTON, a hamlet in Youlgrave parish, county of Derby; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Bakewell, and in the line of the Cromford and High Peak railway. Acreage with the parish. Houses 4. A. P. £1,311. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 26. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 4s.

GRATWICH, a parish in the south division of Totmonslow hund., union of Uttoxeter, county of Stafford; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Uttoxeter. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £4 7s. 6d., returned at £140; gross income £123. Patron, in 1835, Earl Talbot. Here is a small daily school. Acres 800. Houses 22. A. P. £1,161. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £3 19s.

GRAVELEY, a parish in Papworth hund., union of St. Neot's, county of Cambridge; 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Caxton, on the boundary between Bedford and Huntingdon, and east of the Ouse. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £13 3s. 4d.; gross income £340. Patrons, Jesus college, Cambridge. Tithes commuted in 1802. Here is a daily school, with a small endowment. Charities, in 1836, £48 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £61. Acres 1,558. Houses 32. A. P. £1,510. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 255.

GRAVELEY, a parish in Broadwater hund., union of Hitchin, county of Hertford; 2 miles north of Stevenage, on the post-road from London to Biggleswade. Living, a rectory with that of Chivesfield, in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 0s. 10d.; gross income £393. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £398 11s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. F. Green. The ancient church of Chivesfield lies here in ruins. There is a day and Sunday school. Acres 2,110. Houses 82. A. P. £2,151. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 331. Poor rates, in 1838, £152.

GRAVELTHORPE, a township in Kirkby-Malzeard parish, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-west of Ripon, and west of the river Ure. Here are 2 daily schools. In this township lie the pleasure-grounds of Hartfull, so highly celebrated for their natural and artificial beauties. Acres 2,900. Houses 125. A. P. £2,950. Pop., in 1801, 479; in 1831, 571. Poor rates, in 1838, £162.

GRAVENEY, a parish in the hund. of Boughtonunder-Blean, lathe of Scray, union of Faversham, county of Kent; 2 miles north-east by east of Faversham. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Goodstone. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £10 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 3s. Acres 1,920. Houses 33. A. P. £3,064. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 197.

GRAVENHANGER, a township in Muckleston parish, county of Salop; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Drayton, on the north-eastern boundary of the county, between Cheshire and Staffordshire. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 34. Pop., in 1821, 200; in 1831, 198.

GRAVENHURST (LOWER), a parish in Flitt hund, union of Amptill, county of Bedford; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Amptill. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 12s. 11d.; gross income £244. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Tithes commuted in 1820. Acres 1,240. Houses 8. A. P. £1,435. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 77.

GRAVENHURST (UPPER), a parish in Flitt hund, union of Amptill, county of Bedford; 3 miles south-west by south of Shefford. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; certified to value £25, returned at £134 0s. 6d.; gross income £50; in the patronage of the parishioners. Tithes commuted in 1820. Here is a daily school. Acres 385. Houses 66. A. P. £1,842. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 318. Poor rates, in 1838, £165 19s.

GRAVESEND, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Toltingtough, lathe of Aylesford, union of Gravesend and Milton, county of Kent. It is situated $22\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of London, and 49 west-north-west of Dover, on the southern bank of the Thames, the navigation of which, for small craft, to the Medway, is here shortened nearly 23 miles by the Gravesend and Rochester canal. It begins at Gravesend reach, almost opposite to Tilbury fort, where there is a basin and wharf; and terminates in the Medway, near Rochester bridge, by a tunnel 2 miles 1 furlong in length, cut through the chalk-hills. There is a ferry to Tilbury. Acres 630. Houses 756. A. P. £7,925. Pop., in 1801, 2,483; in 1831, 5,097.

Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £15; gross income £398. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church stands in a street near the river. There is also a chapel-of-ease. A new cemetery has been recently consecrated. Milton parish-church stands near the east end of the town. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1717; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1812. There are 8 daily and 3 boarding schools: 2 of the former are National schools. The free-school of Gravesend and Milton was founded previous to 1703, when David Varchell, of Gravesend, endowed it with property, latterly yielding upwards of £70 per annum, for teaching and clothing 20 boys of Gravesend and Milton, subject to a payment of £3 to the poor of Gravesend. In 1710, James Fry of Milton further endowed this school with an unimprovable rent-charge of £14 10s. to the master, for teaching 4 boys of Gravesend, 4 of Milton, and 2 of Chalk. Pinnock and Fry's, or St. Thomas's, almshouses, for the parishes of Gravesend and Milton, were founded in 1624 by Henry Pinnock, and in 1710 by James Fry. The property belonging to this charity, which was placed under the administration of trustees—two from Gravesend and two from Milton—consists of 4 messuages with gardens, out-houses, &c., 2 a. 2 r. 18 p. of fresh marsh, and 2 a. 2 r. 20 p. of salt marsh, in the parish of Gray's Thurrack in Essex. Sixteen dwellings were ultimately erected in the parish of Milton, at the junction of 3 streets—King-street, through which the Dover road passes; Windmill-street, and High-street. Eight of them were appropriated to Gravesend, and eight to Milton; each tenement being marked with the name and under the patronage of one of the trustees. The whole income of this charity, in 1836, was £72 3s., including 2s. each from the inmates of the almshouses. In 1836 a range of new almshouses was erected at Gravesend, forming 3 sides of a square, but without any chapel or other principal feature to distinguish the central part. The style adopted is Elizabethan. Besides a few other minor charities, Gravesend participates in the benefits of Cobham college, to the extent of one place. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,012 4s.—The Gravesend and Milton poor-law union comprehends 2 parishes, embracing an area of 2 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 9,445. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,518. Expenditure, in 1838, £2,457; in 1839, £2,642 14s.

Gravesend consists of several streets built on a declivity leading down to the Thames. They are well-paved and lighted with gas. A water company having been recently formed, the inhabitants are supplied with water from a reservoir on Windmill-hill—an elevation in the vicinity, to which it is conveyed by mechanical power, and then distributed over the town by pipes. The central streets are Windmill-street and High-street. They form one continuous line, dividing the parishes of Gravesend and Milton: passing down the declivity, they end at the quay. The principal street crossing this line forms part of one branch of the great thoroughfare road from London to Rochester, Chatham, Canterbury, and the coast. The market-place is commodious: near the centre of it stands the town-hall, a substantial edifice, supported by 6 columns in front; and at the back by 3 arches: the space beneath is used as the poultry market. The old town is mean and irregular; but, for the accommodation of the great influx of visitors, new streets and houses of a more tasteful description have been recently built, diverging all round the town; but principally to the south towards the Windmill hill, and on the Milton side, $\frac{3}{4}$ of-a-mile from the river. Within the period of two years, 120 houses were recently erected in this quarter of the town. The hill itself is one of the attractions of Gravesend, owing to the fine views of the Thames and Medway, and the pleasant walks in the vicinity. It has been purchased for building purposes, and there seems great probability that the southern side of it, which affords a sheltered and favourable aspect, will be shortly occupied with houses. To the eastward of Windmill hill are tea-gardens and archery-grounds with houses attached to them. The Royal terrace garden has very recently been laid out on the site of what was formerly called the Block-house Fort, between the Thames and the parishes of Gravesend and Milton; and although the ground does not exceed 4 acres, it is so managed as to appear of greater extent, and to offer much variety. This has been effected by forming different levels; by fencing off the walks by plantations of evergreens, and by leading the walks through a great extent of line. One principal walk runs partly through a tunnel 60 feet long, lighted by circular funnels, to the esplanade. There is a pier attached to the garden at the river side. These very pleasant grounds,—which constitute almost the only attempt at the formation of any thing in this country meriting the name of public gardens,—have become a favourite and almost gratuitous promenade. The estimated expense was £20,000, the amount of which is now being redeemed by a toll of 2d. payable by each visitor to the gardens, or 10s. 6d. per annum by a whole family. About 18 acres of ground, in a picturesque situation near Gravesend, were recently taken for the establishment of the Kent Zoological and Botanical Gardens; the capital of the company is £30,000. These grounds are exceedingly beautiful. They are sheltered from too hot a sun and too piercing a wind by the chalk cliffs, by which they are surrounded. They are laid out with great taste, and are planted with every variety of rare shrub and tree. Great expense has been incurred in the outlay, and in preparing the grounds for horticultural purposes. Tigers, bears, eagles, &c., are so located, that their presence adds to the effect of the general landscape. The gardens are yet in a state of comparative infancy; but they promise a most vigorous and early maturity of excellence. As a fashionable watering-place, there is every accommodation at Gravesend, including a convenient bathing-house, hot baths, elegant shops, libraries, a concert room, a neat theatre, &c. Some of the business gentlemen of London reside here. It is the farthest point in the river, which admits of this being easily and pleasantly accomplished. They pass to and from London by the steamers, which run in 2½ hours. It is since the establishment of these, that Gravesend has gradually increased so much in size and importance. The easy access of steamers to this place, renders it also the resort of a constant succession of casual visitors from London: upwards of 5,000 have landed here in one day. The town quay, pier, or wharf-wall, is a spacious modern erection built of stone, and encompassed with strong railings. The inconvenience of not being able to land passengers from the steamers without small boats, led to the erection of a new pier, opened in July, 1833, which extends 100 feet into the river from the grand stone pier; and a further projection, opened in 1834, which consists of insulated columns or piles of cast-iron, supporting a floor or road-way, and running out upwards of 40 feet into the river. This pier was thus constructed, in order that the current of the river might not be impeded. The steamers now take in and land passengers at all periods of the tide. Every passenger at landing or embarking, either here or elsewhere within the parishes of Gravesend or Milton, pays a penny for pier dues. It was calculated that the tolls from this source would produce £4,000 a-year: but they amounted in 1834, to £7,000. The number of passengers landed and embarked from the Town and Terrace piers, at Gravesend, from July 30th, 1839, to August 1st, 1840, was as follows:—Town-pier, 468,186; Terrace-pier, 345,443: total, 813,629. Railways have been recently projected to unite Greenwich, where the London and Greenwich railway terminates, with Gravesend and Rochester.

All vessels sailing from the port of London were, till recently, obliged to clear out at Gravesend; but this is now done at the custom-house at London; and Gravesend has thus lost some trade in the supply of ships with stores, including vegetables; a large portion of the land here having been cultivated by market-gardeners for that purpose. The asparagus, large quantities of which are sent to the London markets, is famous for its size and flavour. There are various brick-fields and lime works in the parish. The 'Gravesend chalk' and flint are extensively worked in this vicinity. The chalk is converted into lime, and also sent to Essex, and the flints to the potteries; more especially, however, from GREENHITHE and NORTHFLEET:—which see. The Gravesend chalk is connected with the chalkhills which bound the marshes of the Thames to the south.* Here rope-making and ship-building are carried on to some extent, and numerous smacks belonging to Gravesend are employed in the herring, turbot, and cod fisheries. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter of which is a good fish market. Fairs are held for toys, &c., on April 25th; and for horses, clothes, toys, &c., on October 24th.

The parishes of Gravesend and Milton were incorporated by charter 4° Elizabeth; but it is said that the corporation had previously existed by prescription. The charter, which was somewhat extended by the late governing charter, 7° Charles I., after reciting that the town or parishes of Gravesend and Milton were in great ruin and decay by reason there was not a common weekly market in the town, and by reason of the diminution or discontinuance of the common passage between Dover and London, and of the misgovernment of the ferry between Gravesend and London, constituted the inhabitants a body corporate, with a portreeve and jurats, having power to regulate the ferry, and to hold a market and two fairs, &c. The style of the corporation in the charter from Charles is 'the mayor, jurats, and inhabitants of the villages and parishes of Gravesend and Milton, in the county of Kent.' The corporation consisted of a high-steward,—the office being hereditary in the family of the Earl of Darnley,—a mayor, recorder, 12 jurats, and 24 capital inhabitants, or common councilmen. The corporate officers, besides the steward, mayor, and recorder, were a justice, a coroner, who was generally the mayor, a chamberlain, town-clerk, and inferior officers. The mayor and 3 jurats were appointed by the charter to hold a court of record every 3 weeks for debts to any amount; but the ordinary jurisdiction of the borough justices was not exclusive of the county magistrates, though they did not interpose. The mayor and justice superintended the jail, for debtors in execution, and the safe custody of offenders before commitment; the magistrate being authorized by the charter to commit to the county jail. Under the municipal reform act, the borough is divided into two wards, and is governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors. It is included in schedule A of the act, amongst boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. The boundary of the borough, as laid down in the boundary report, includes the village, and part of the parish of Northfleet, besides the parishes of Gravesend and Milton-next-Gravesend. The income of the borough, in 1839, was £2,585 13s. 6d., of which £1,445 2s. 4d. were derived from borough and watch rates, and the remainder principally from rents, tolls, and dues. Expenditure—

* Professor Ehrenberg, in 1836, announced that in examining the Gravesend and other chalk, and calcareous rocks, he had discovered the characteristic fact, that the smallest grains of chalk appeared to consist of regular elliptical particles possessing a crystalline aspect. Since that period he has also discovered the curious facts, that the chalk of Gravesend and Brighton, together with some foreign chalks, "present two different structures; the one inorganic, distinguished by its regular elliptical structure and granular slaty disposition, and the other organic, consisting of microscopical shells. By mixing Canada balsam, by the assistance of heat, with the dry chalk, in a fine state of division, Ehrenberg found that the chalk contained an immense number of microscopical animalcules hitherto unknown, varying in size from 1-24th to 1-288th of a line. A cubic inch possessed upwards of a million of them; consequently, a pound weight of chalk contains above 10,000,000 of these animalcules. In the white or yellow chalk of the north of Europe the mineral particles equal or exceed in quantity the organic matter. But in that of the south of Europe the nautilites greatly predominate, and the chalk appears to be almost exclusively composed of them. Besides the calcareous nautilites, siliceous infusoria have been found in the chalk of Gravesend."

Principal paid off and interest, &c.	£1,081	10	6
Police and Constables,	729	5	7
Salaries, &c., to Municipal Officers,	176	5	0
Public works, repairs, &c.,	104	8	8
Miscellaneous,	242	13	1

Total expenditure, £2,334 2 10

This is one of the polling-places for the western division of the county of Kent.

Gravesend, says Lambard, "should seme (as Leland taketh it) by the deryvation of the woorde, to be the lymite of some auctoritie. But bycause I find not what that was, I will show that it was once the limite of a great calamitie; for in the beginning of the tyme of Rich. II., the Frenchmen entered the mouth of the Thamise, and brent and spoyled al the way that they came; and at the last, approaching this towne, set on fyre and spoyled it alsoe. Kinge Henry VIII. buylded a blockhouse at this towne, and fower others not farre of it.

Sed nec greva suo caret rotunda
Moles presidio, frequens viator
Urbem quam voluerit petit Celoece.

Leland.

Thone side of the streete of this towne standeth in Mylton." As early as the year 1293, the watermen of Gravesend had the exclusive right to the ferry between Gravesend and London; and they were then ordered to take in future "but one half-penny of a person passing" as they had formerly done, and not to extort "fares hurtful to, and against the will of the people." But to enable the town to recover the loss inflicted on the occasion to which Lambard alludes, the abbot of St. Mary-le-Grace of Tower-hill, lord of the manor of Gravesend, obtained of Richard II. a grant to the men of Gravesend and Milton, of the exclusive privilege of conveying passengers to London on certain conditions. In the year 1798 an attempt was made to form a tunnel under the Thames between Gravesend and Tilbury in Essex, opposite Gravesend, to supersede the ferry between these places. The excavation was commenced on the Gravesend side, but it was relinquished in consequence of insufficient measures being taken to prevent the ingress of the water. The blockhouse erected by Henry VIII. was suffered to fall to ruin; but there is a battery of 16 guns on the east side of the town. Gravesend gave name to an ancient family, of whom Sir Stephen de Gravesend occurs in the list of knights who accompanied Edward I. to Scotland. The celebrated French mathematician, Gravesend, is supposed to have been descended from this family.

GRAVESHIP (NETHER), a township in the parish of Kendal, Westmoreland; 1 mile south of Kendal. Here are 2 day and Sunday National schools, one of which is endowed with the sum of £2,000. Acreage with the parish. Houses 63. A. P. £1,953. Pop., in 1801, 371; in 1831, 312. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 18s.

GRAYINGHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Corringham, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 9 miles north-east by east of Gainsborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £25 17s. 6d.; gross income £450. Patron, Sir J. C. Thorold, Bart. Acres 1,930. Houses 25. A. P. £1,879. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 137. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 7s.

GRAYRIGG, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Kendal, Westmoreland; 5 miles north-east by east of Kirkby-Kendal, near the source of the river Mint. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £84. Patron, the vicar of Kendal. Here is a meeting-house and burying-ground belonging to the Society of Friends. There is also a daily school, endowed with £30 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 43. A. P. £1,998. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 242. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 6s.

GRAY'S-INN, an extra-parochial chapelry in Holborn division, hund. of Ossulston, county of Middlesex; 1 mile north-west of St. Paul's cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 324.

GRAYSOUTHEN, a township in the parish of Brigham, Cumberland; 3½ miles west-south-west of Cockermouth, and south of the Derwent. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £15 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 124. A. P. £2,223. Pop., in 1801, 454; in 1831, 555. Poor rates, in 1838, £220 3s.

GREASBOROUGH, a chapelry in the parish of Rotherham, upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-west of Rotherham, and near the North Midland railway, from which there is here a branch to Earl Fitzwilliam's collieries. This railway was constructed by the North Midland company, for the Sheffield and Rotherham railway company: the latter, however, requiring to pay for it. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £5 10s.; gross income £184. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. Here are 5 daily schools, 3 of which are partly supported by endowments from Earl Fitzwilliam. Acres 2,270. Houses 287. A. P. £4,311. Pop., in 1801, 1,166; in 1831, 1,290. Poor rates, in 1838, £467 12s.

GREASBY, a township in the parish of West Kirby, co.-palatine of Chester; 7¼ miles north-north-west of Great Neston. Acres 750. Houses 24. A. P. £1,230. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 141. Poor rates, in 1838, £71.

GREASLEY, or GREYSLEY, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Broxtow, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 7 miles north-west of Nottingham. It is the largest parish in the county. Acres 8,010. Houses 852. A. P. £8,350. Pop., in 1801, 2,968; in 1831, 4,583. It includes the village of Kimberley. The Nottingham canal passes through the parish. There is a railway in its vicinity. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 5s.; gross income £134. Patron, Viscount Melbourne. A modus belonging to the lay-impropriator was commuted in 1775. Here are a place of worship for the Independents; and 8 daily schools, 3 of which are endowed. Rolleston school endowment amounted, in 1829, to £27: other charities to £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,649 3s. To the north of the ruins of the ancient mansion-house or castle of the Cantilopes of Greasley, are some tottering remains of the priory of Beauvale, founded by the Lord de Cantilope, in the reign of Edward III. It was Carthusian, with a prior and 12 monks, "who appear to have been jolly fellows, as John of Gaunt granted them annually a tun of wine as long as he lived."

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY. See GLOUCESTERSHIRE, &c.

GREATA (THE), a river in the county of Cumberland, tributary to the Derwent. It is formed by the junction of the two small rivers Glendera-maken and Bure. The former derives its origin from Threlkeldtarn, on Saddleback, and winding round Souter-fell, flows through the narrow vale of Grisdale and Threlkeld: having received supplies from the various streams issuing from the surrounding mountains, it then unites with the Bure below Threlkeld. The latter river rises near Dunmail rise, and after forming the lake of Thirlmere, at the base of the huge Helvellyn, pursues a rapid course through the vale of St. John, and soon contributes its waters to form the Greata, which, rushing along a narrow glen, passes Keswick, and falls into the Derwent.

GREATFORD, a parish in the wapentake of Ness, parts of Kesteven, union of Stanford, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Market-Deeping, on the river Glen. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Wilsthorpe, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £18 10s.; gross income £539. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,540. Houses 54. A. P. £3,520. Pop., in 1801, including the chapelry of Wilsthorpe, 320; in 1831, 296. Poor rates, in 1833, £127 19s.

GREATHAM, a parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, co-palatine of Durham; 7 miles north-north-east of Stockton-upon-Tees, intersected by the Clarence and Hartlepool Union railway. It includes the townships of Claxton and Greatham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £7 1s. 8d.; gross income £186. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £164, due to the master and brethren of Greatham hospital, and £29 7s. 3d. to the vicar. Patrons, the governors of Greatham hospital. This hospital, called 'the Hospital of God in Greatham,' was founded and endowed with the manor of Greatham in 1272, for a master, 5 priests, 2 clerks, and 40 poor brethren, by Robert Stichill, bishop of Durham. That martial bishop, Anthony de Bec, enlarged the original endowment, appropriated the parish-church to the hospital, and added a chaplain and a clerk to the establishment. From Edward IV. it received the privilege of a weekly market and two annual fairs. James I., in 1610, reduced the establishment to a master and 13 brethren, whom he incorporated under a common seal, with privilege to purchase lands, &c. Previous to 1819, when 7 new houses were built for the brethren by the earl of Bridgewater, then the master, there were only 6 in-brethren and 6 out-brethren. The establishment now consists of a master, a chaplain, and 13 brethren. The vicar of Greatham is the chaplain, whose duty is to read prayers in the chapel of the hospital every morning, for which he receives £42 per annum. The annual revenues, in 1836, amounted to £1,486 5s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. The master's revenue is between £700 and £800 per annum. Each of the brethren receives in money £8 per annum. Their diet amounted, in 1836, to £286; and they receive each a cloak every two years. The hospital and chapel were rebuilt, and the grounds laid out in a style of great taste and beauty, during the mastership of the late earl of Bridgewater, who expended several thousand pounds on the erection of the present very handsome buildings, and the grounds and plantations. The mansion-house or lodge of the master is pleasantly situated in a garden, surrounded by trees, and commanding a beautiful view of the Cleveland hills and the Tees. On a rising ground within the garden is the chapel. Besides the houses of the brethren, there are fold-yards, &c., for the use of the farm. Parkhurst's hospital was founded by Dormer Parkhurst, previous to 1762, on ground belonging to Greatham hospital. It is endowed with property yielding, in 1836, £91 10s. There are 6 sisters or almswomen; generally settled parishioners of the township of Greatham. The income is nearly all expended on them. Patron, the master of Greatham hospital. There are 5 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a National school. Acres 2,430. Houses 129. A. P. £3,154. Pop., in 1801, 484; in 1831, 551. Poor rates, in 1833, £221 9s. Acres of the township 1,820. Houses 123. A. P. £2,332. Pop., in 1801, 442; in 1831, 519. Poor rates, in 1833, £174 1s.

GREATHAM, a parish in the hund. of Alton, union of Petersfield, Alton (north) division of the county of Southampton; 5 miles north-east by north of Petersfield. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 5s. 10d.; gross income £275. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Godbold. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 4,230. Houses 33. A. P. £1,062. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 238. Poor rates, in 1833, £108 19s.

GREATHAM, a parish in the hund. of West Easwirth, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Arundel, on the eastern bank of the river Arun. Living, a rectory united with that of Wigenholt. Acres 1,030. Houses 7. A. P. £713. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1833, £55 7s.

GREAT-HAMLET, a township in the parish of Glossop, county of Derby; 3 miles north-west by west of Chapel-en-le-Frith. Here are 3 infant schools, and a daily school, endowed with £10 per annum. Houses 188. A. P., including Kinder and Phoside, £3,329. Pop., in 1821, 705; in 1831, 1,092. Other returns with the parish.

GREATWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Chippen-Warden, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 5 miles north-west by north of Brackley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 0s. 5d.; gross income £310. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Bradridge. Charities, in 1830, £15 per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £92 12s. Acres 1,010. Houses 40. A. P. £1,586. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 214.

GREAT-YATE. See CROXDEN.

GREENCROFT, a township in the parish of Lancaster, co-palatine of Durham; 9 miles north-west of Durham, and intersected by the Stanhope and Tyne railway. Acres 2,620. Houses 36. A. P. £2,023. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 235. Poor rates, in 1833, £87 15s.

GREENFIELD, a hamlet in the parish of Aby, county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-west of Alford. "Before A. D. 1153, Eudo de Greinesby and Ralph de Abi, his son, built a priory here for nuns of the Cistercian order, to the honour of St. Mary, wherein were, about the time of the suppression, ten nuns who had an estate worth £63 4s. 1d. per ann., Dugd.; £79 15s. 1d., Speed."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Returns with ABY.

GREENFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Brentford, county of Middlesex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Hounslow, on the northern bank of the river Brent, close on the Paddington canal, and north of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory and a peculiar of the commissary of London, concurrently with the bishop; rated at £20; gross income £560. Tithes commuted in 1813. The church has a wooden turret, with a spire, and some windows with fragments of fine stained glass. Patrons, the masters and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. The Baptists have here a place of worship; and there is a school, endowed with upwards of £200 per annum, for the education, clothing, &c., of poor children. There are other small school endowments. Charities, in 1822, exclusive of the school endowment, about £25 per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £219 3s. Acres 2,070. Houses 86. A. P. £6,750. Pop., in 1801, 359; in 1831, 477.

GREENALGH, or GREENHALGH, WITH THISTLETON, a township in the parish of Kirkham, co-palatine of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Kirkham, and near the Preston and Wyre railway. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £64 12s. belonging to the vicar of Kirkham, £166 18s. 4d. to the dean and chapter of Christ's church, Oxford, and £1 2s. to the parish clerk of Kirkham. Here is a daily school endowed with £17 per annum. Acres 2,270. Houses 76. A. P. £3,151. Pop., in 1801, 378; in 1831, 408. Poor rates, in 1838, £189 9s.

GREENHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Thatcham, county of Berks; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east of Newbury, and south of the river Kennet. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Thatcham. Here are 4 daily schools. "Maud, countess of Clare, in the reign of Henry VI., gave the manor of Greenham to the Knights-hospitalers, at the same time, Gervase Pagnell gave them the village. The Hospitalers had a preceptory at this place, as appears by a catalogue of Berkshire gentry in the reign of Henry VI., among whom is John Pendergast, preceptor of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem of Greenham."—Lyson's Mag. Brit., vol. i. p. 387. Acres 5,670. Houses 221. A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1801, 633; in 1831, 1,061. Poor rates, in 1838, £611 8s.

GREENHEAD, a hamlet in the parish of Haltwhistle, Tindale ward, county of Northumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Haltwhistle, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ east by south of Gilsland spa on the Carlisle road, and near the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. A neat chapel-of-ease has been erected here on ground given by John Blenkinsopp Caulson, Esq. Here is an endowed school. The village is very pleasantly situated on the west side of the Tippal, across which there is here a bridge connecting it with the hamlet of Glenwhelt, formerly its eastern suburb.

GREENHILL, an extra-parochial liberty in the south division of the hund. of Corringham, county of Lincoln. Acres 250. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 4; in 1831, 7.

GREENHOE (NORTH and SOUTH) HUNDREDS, in the western division of the county of Norfolk, situated, the former in the north, and the latter in the south-west parts of the county. Area of the former 32,120 acres. Houses 2,101. Pop., in 1831, 10,411; of the latter, 63,850 acres. Houses 1,850. Pop., in 1831, 10,237.

GREENHOW, a township in the parish of Ingleby-Greenhow, west division of the liberty of Langbaugh, north riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Stokesley. Acres 3,050. Houses 15. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 94. Other returns with the parish.

GREENHYTHE, a hamlet in the parish of Swanscombe, county of Kent; 3 miles east by north of Dartford, on the southern banks of the Thames, across which here is a very ancient ferry into Essex. Greenhythe, Gravesend, &c., are now very much frequented in summer by the citizens of London, and considerable additions and improvements have been recently made. In this vicinity is a beautiful seat, at one time belonging to the Dartford nuns, and named Ince-Grice, now Ingress. It is situated on an eminence rising from the Thames, and commands a splendid view of the river and the Essex side. The grounds are now beautifully adorned with plantations; and in an elegant summer-house, erected in a cavity of the chalk cliffs, a valuable collection of Roman altars from Italy has been placed. The garden is ornamented with statues and other choice specimens of Roman sculpture. Here, and at Northfleet, are very extensive chalk-pits, the chalk of which is connected with the chalk-hills forming the southern boundary of the Thames marshes:—see GRAVESEND. The perpendicular depth of some of these immense excavations is 100, and even 150, feet; and, in some parts, they are considerably below the level of the river. The chalk is burnt for lime, and it is also sent into Essex, &c. It forms a considerable branch of commerce, and wharfs are placed along the shore for the convenience of shipping. The flints with which the chalk is intermingled furnish a material ingredient in the composition of the Staffordshire ware; and vast quantities have also been exported to China, though at present, during the awful indignation of his celestial majesty, he and his 'enlightened' subjects must, so far as the English material appears to be requisite, endeavour to 'live without' their cups, although the poor 'barbarians' of England 'cannot live without their tea.'

GREENLEIGHTON, a township in the parish of Hartburn, Northumberland; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Rothbury. This township is noted for its fine green hill, and the excellent limestone it produces. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 4. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 20. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 14s.

GREENS and GLANTLEES, a township in the parish of Felton, Northumberland; 6 miles north-east of Rothbury. Tithes commuted in 1839. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 11. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 10s.

GREENSIDEHILL. See INGRAM.

GREENS-NORTH HUNDRED, in the southern division of the county of Northampton, bounded on the north by Fawsley hundred, east by the hundreds of Towcester and Cleley, south by Buckinghamshire, and west by King-Sutton and Chipping-Warden hunds. Area 22,080 acres. Houses 1,115. Pop., in 1831, 5,333.

GREENS-NORTON, a parish in the hund. of Greens-Norton, union of Towcester, county of Northampton; 2 miles west-north-west of Towcester. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Silverstone and Whittlebury, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £38; gross income £804. Patron, the Crown. Tithes of the precincts and liberty of Greens-Norton, and the hamlet of Duncott, commuted in 1799. The memory of a chantry is still preserved here by a barn and yard, which is all of it that remains. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1825, upwards of £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £327 15s. Acres 2,490. Houses 146. A. P. £3,222. Pop., in 1801, 615; in 1831, 771.

GREENSTEAD, or GRINSTEAD, EAST, a parish within the liberties of the town of Colchester, union of Colchester, county of Essex; 2 miles east by south of Colchester, on the eastern bank of the river Colne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £5; gross income £220. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £271 19s. 5d. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Houses 131. A. P. £2,454. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 598. Poor rates, in 1838, £187 17s.

GREENSTEAD, commonly called GREENSTEAD-NEAR-ONGAR, a parish in the hund. and union of Ongar, county of Essex; 5 miles east of Epping, and west of the river Roding. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £280. Patron, the bishop of London in trust. The church has attained celebrity from the supposition that it is one of the most ancient in Great Britain. The nave of this singular edifice is formed of the half trunks of oaks about $1\frac{1}{2}$ foot in diameter, split and roughly hewn at each end to let them into a sill at the bottom, and into a plank at the top where they are fastened with wooden pegs. "It seems not improbable that this rough and unpolished fabric was first erected as a sort of shrine for the reception of the corpse of St. Edmund."—Wright's History of Essex. Acres 2,610. Houses 25. A. P. £1,179. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 134. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 11s.

GREENWICH,

A market-town, parliamentary borough, and parish in the hund. of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-hone, union of Greenwich, county of Kent. It is situated on the southern bank of the Thames, opposite to the Isle of Dogs, and is distant $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles, by railway, from the eastern end of the metropolis.* Woolwich is in the vicinity on the east, and Deptford adjoins it on the west. The great road from London by Chatham and Canterbury, to Dover, &c., on the coast of Kent, passes through the parish. Acres 2,030. Houses 3,665. A. P. £46,738. Pop., in 1801, 14,339; in 1831, 24,553.

General description.—The town of Greenwich is very irregularly built; but it is splendidly adorned with highly important public establishments. The streets in general are narrow, and the houses insignificant; but the spacious street leading from the church to the celebrated Royal Greenwich hospital, with a continuation of the road beyond the hospital to the lower Woolwich road, made some years ago, and other recent works, have greatly improved the town. A market has been erected on the hospital grounds. There is a theatre, occasionally opened; and a literary and scientific institution has been established. The town is well lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the Kent water-works at Deptford. There are numerous elegant villas, &c., in the vicinity of Blackheath, higher up the eminence from the river: these are generally inhabited by gentlemen of property, and merchants in the city, on whom the town partly depends for its trade. This is a thriving place, although without any particular trade or manufacture, except a flax-mill, which, in 1838, employed 75 hands. A great portion of the lower classes obtain their livelihood on the river, which is here 840 yards wide at low water, and of considerable depth. Besides the expenditure of the public establishments, the town depends much on its casual visitors,† and on the two annual fairs at Easter and Whitsuntide, at which, according to a recent computation, “80,000 persons visited Greenwich on Monday, and on Tuesday 100,000, upwards of 60,000 of whom were conveyed by steam-boats, some of which took each 1,000 passengers at one trip.” Wednesday and Saturday are market days. Greenwich park, where the fairs were at one time held, is one of the chief attractions of this locality. It is open to the public. The scenery which it presents, and the views embraced from the summits of its hills, have been subjects of admiration to many generations. It was the beauty of its situation which first arrested the attention of Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, protector of the realm, and induced him to enclose it as a park, and subsequently led the kings and queens of England to make it their favourite residence. The extent of ground thus enclosed by Duke Humphrey, and afterwards attached to the palace of Placentia,—the site of which is now occupied by the Royal hospital,—was 400 acres, including the whole of the ground from the river to Blackheath. It was walled in by James I., and at the restoration in 1660, was planted and well stocked with deer. After the palace was converted into an hospital, the park was detached from it, and may now be estimated at about 200 acres. “The scenery in this park is delightful and varied in the extreme: the diversity of foliage, the uneven surface of the ground, broken into hill, and dale, and glen, with the glimpses of river scenery obtained through the parting of the trees, all conspire to heighten the delight experienced by the mind.”—Ruegg’s Guide to Greenwich. At the extremity

* The Greenwich railway presents several peculiar and highly interesting features. It is the first executed railway, having its commencement in the metropolis. It has been intended to form the point of departure for various railways, branching out to many important towns on the south and south-east coast; the first of which, the Croydon—with which the Dover and Brighton unite—was opened on 1st June, 1839. It meets and unites with the Greenwich at Corbet’s-lane, a distance of 1 mile, 60 chains, from the London station, in the parish of Rotherhithe. A lighthouse with a powerful gas lantern is placed at the point of junction to prevent accidents after dark. The Greenwich railway is throughout laid on a viaduct, consisting of about 1,000 arches, each of 18 feet span, 22 feet high, and 25 feet in width from side to side. This form of construction was rendered necessary by the number of streets over which the line is carried; and with the traffic through which it would otherwise have greatly interfered. The arches are built of gray brick, and present a very curious and singular appearance, forming, however, as a work of art, one of the greatest ornaments of the metropolis. They appear almost interminable, and remind those who have seen the remains of the ancient Roman aqueducts on the continent of these stupendous vestiges of antiquity. The entire range of arches has been intended to be converted into manufactories, warehouses, shops, and dwellings, the whole to be well lighted with gas, and form a street beneath the railway which thus passes over its roofs; the wetness of the viaduct, however, presents a considerable obstacle to the complete attainment of this profitable arrangement. A road has been formed at the base of the arches on the one side, and a gravelled foot-path planted with trees on the other. The railway begins at the east side of the south foot of London bridge, and is carried in nearly a straight line to the High-street of DEPTFORD—which see—and whence it is continued with a gentle curve across the Ravensborne river to its terminus about 200 yards from Greenwich church. To avoid even the appearance of danger in passing rapidly along a viaduct 22 feet above the ground, a parapet wall is built on each side about 4 feet high. In 1840 an act was passed for widening the railway, and providing station-room to be exchanged with the London and Croydon railway; the latter, which enters the Greenwich from the south, having its station, by a strange arrangement, on the north side; the carriages to and from Croydon being thus unnecessarily compelled to cross the Greenwich line to their station. The viaduct is to be widened for the purpose of laying down additional lines of rails for the Croydon company, a measure very requisite for the public safety, as is evident from the fact, that even independently of the Brighton and south-eastern traffic, there have been occasions when there were 10 trains each way, or 20 in all, crossing and recrossing on the line within an hour. The estimated expense of widening the line is £200,000. In 1838, while this railway was only partially opened,—not having been completed and opened throughout till 26th December, 1839,—the number of passengers conveyed was 1,544,266—aggregate number of miles travelled 4,225,960—amount of duty £2,000. The number of passengers for the half-year ending July, 1840, was 786,999—receipts, including Croydon toll, £30,326 14s. 11d. The resident population of the places on the line of this railway amounts to more than 100,000, a large proportion of whom have avocations which call them daily to London, and besides the steady traffic thus and otherwise to be expected on this line, it is considered that a very large proportion of the 3,000,000 of persons, foreigners, and others, annually visiting London, will run out to Greenwich by the railway. Besides those alluded to under articles Deptford, Croydon, &c., there are projected railway connections between this railway Rochester and Gravesend. The Rochester begins at Deptford, and ends at Rochester bridge, or near the Medway.

† The following are facts stated in the recent report of the Irish railway Commissioners:—“We learn that each of the two Greenwich steam-packet companies carried, last year, about 400,000 passengers; that the Woolwich old company, calling at Greenwich, carried more than 100,000 Greenwich passengers, besides 192,000 to Woolwich; and the new Woolwich company carried nearly 100,000 passengers between Woolwich, Blackwall, and London bridge. To these are to be added the many thousands who pass those places to Gravesend, Margate, Ramsgate, Southend, Dover, Herne Bay, &c. &c.; and above all, the multitudes, greatly exceeding one million, who during the last year passed by the railway to Greenwich, while the public conveyances on the high road scarcely appeared diminished in number or in the frequency of their journeys. We believe it to be a fact, that 30 years back, the only public mode of conveyance between Woolwich and London was by coach; and two coaches, each leaving and returning twice in the day, were then deemed sufficient for the whole passenger-traffic of that place. There are now omnibuses leaving 24 times, and returning as often, in the day; and a still greater number of vans and single horse coaches running, as they fill, to Greenwich only, whence most of the passengers proceed by railway, steam-boat, or omnibus, to London.”

near Blackheath, is a rabbit-warren enclosed from the park. It is still frequented by deer, and a variety of birds which animate the pleasing scene. From the summit of One-tree-hill and Observatory-hill, there are delightful views over the winding Thames, and the adjoining counties of Essex and Middlesex, with the 'modern Babylon,' pictured as on a map. In this park are numerous tumuli or barrows, whence spear-heads, human bones, &c., have been dug.

The approach to Greenwich by the Thames is held to be one of the finest even in Europe. Its highest attraction is the magnificent hospital, presenting to the river an imposing range of beautiful though unadorned Grecian buildings, extending for several hundred feet along its side, and divided into two wings by a noble lawn, with a terrace and handsome approach by steps to the river. The ever-green verdure of the lawn forms a very striking and pleasing relief to the massive pillars and porticoes with which it is surrounded. Each wing recedes to a considerable distance from the river, and is crowned in its retreat by a lofty dome—behind all which rise the hills of the Park, their verdure broken into various shades by its groves of elm, pine, and chestnut; and the summit adorned by the Royal Observatory.

The Royal Hospital.—Finding the old palace of Placentia to be in a state of decay, Charles II. caused it to be partly taken down, and a splendid pile of buildings, composed of freestone, to be erected as a palace in its place. This now forms the north-west wing of the hospital. It was built under the direction of Webb, son-in-law to Inigo Jones, and became the occasional residence of Charles, who also caused the Park to be replanted from designs by Le Notre, a Dane, but executed by the celebrated Evelyn. "The structure which King Charles left unfinished, King William III. granted it, with the grounds thereunto belonging, to be converted into an hospital for aged and disabled seamen; which, for its situation, nobleness of building, and spaciousness, surpasses any thing of that kind almost in the world. One would almost wish himself a decayed seaman to have such a fine dwelling."—Mag. Brit., 1738. It was in the year 1649, that William III. and his royal consort, Mary, issued their letters patent, granting to the Lord-keeper Somers, the duke of Leeds, the earls of Pembroke and Montgomery, the duke of Shrewsbury, Sydney, Lord Godolphin, and others, in trust, "to erect and found an hospital for the relief and support of seamen serving on board the ships or vessels belonging to the navy royal of us, our heirs, or successors, or employed in our or their service at sea." An act of parliament was passed immediately after this, providing for the support of the institution, by a tax of sixpence per month, to be deducted out of the wages of every seaman, in any of his majesty's ships. £2,000 were given yearly by the king for the carrying on of the work. A new building, called the Bass building, was finished in 1698. The architect was the celebrated Sir Christopher Wren, who, to his immortal honour, undertook to superintend the work without any emolument. In 1703, the internal regulation of the affairs of the hospital, was vested in a governor and council, by a commission of Queen Anne. In 1705, the building was in a state of preparation to receive 100 disabled seamen, and the work continuing, in 1708, the number was increased to 350; at which time the funds of the hospital were computed at £12,000 per annum, one-half of which was allotted to the support of the poor seamen; the rest towards the buildings in progress of erection. In the 8th of Geo. II., 1732, the rents and profits of the forfeited estate of the earl of Derwentwater,—who had been attainted for rebellion in 1715—amounting to £6,000 per annum, were granted by parliament to the commissioners; in consequence of which, the works were carried on with such rapidity, that, in 1737, the number of pensioners was increased to 1,000. In 1775, Geo. III. granted a charter, by which the commissioners became a body-corporate, to whom was committed the completion of the building, the making of bye-laws, regulation of the pensioners, &c. From this time the buildings continued to increase, and the number of pensioners to be augmented, till it assumed its present appearance.

Greenwich hospital is divided into four wings, built principally of Portland stone: two of these front the river, and two the Park. In the north-west wing, next the river—that erected by Charles II. shortly after the restoration—are the governor's residence and the officers' library, which is open to the public. In the library are shown an old oak table and a curious clock, said to have belonged to Charles II. The rooms are hung round with portraits of the benefactors to the hospital, and celebrated naval heroes. The north-east wing, called Queen Anne's building, is principally appropriated as a residence for the officers and men, the foundation was laid in 1698. In the south-west wing, called King William's building, is the Painted Hall, an object of great interest to all who visit the town and hospital of Greenwich. This wing was erected in 1703. The Painted Hall is a spacious room appropriated to the reception of paintings and models, connected with naval history and architecture. At the entrance stand colossal statues of the great admirals, Nelson, Howe, Duncan, and St. Vincent. The sides of the hall are hung with portraits of nearly all the naval characters of England, and paintings of the most victorious sea-fights: among these, by the most eminent marine painters, are the following,—the death of Nelson, the storming of Algiers, De Winter surrendering his sword to the English Admiral, Nelson boarding the San Josef, the death of Captain Cook, and others, illustrative of events equally important in the march of England's naval supremacy. At the upper part of the hall, where the models of a few ships of war are deposited, a plain case, the front of which is roughly set with glass, contains a memento of intense interest to every Englishman; it is part of the uniform of Nelson—the coat in which he fought the battle of the Nile. It was in this hall that the body of Nelson lay for three days in state, previous to its removal for interment to St. Paul's cathedral. The ceiling and part of the wall of the Painted Hall, are adorned with allegorical paintings, and enriched with elaborate ornaments. Between this and the south-east wing, as well as between the other two wings, is the beautiful lawn, along each side of which extends the long colonnade, supported by stone pillars. At the back of the western colonnade, is a fine piece of sculpture, representing the death of Nelson, after the design of Benjamin West, P. R. A. The body of the warrior is supported by Britannia, and surrounded by allegorical figures. It is much to be regretted that it should be placed in such a situation, as to be altogether out of sight, except from a very confined yard. The fourth or south-eastern wing—commonly called Queen Mary's building—contains the chapel, an object seldom passed by the visiter without notice, and unsurpassed perhaps by any thing of the kind in the kingdom. A fire, having on the 2d of January, 1779, destroyed the chapel, then considered the most elegant in the world, and eight wards, containing the apartments of nearly 600 pensioners, the new chapel was built under the inspection of James Stewart, Esq., and finished ten years afterwards, in 1789: it is allotted to the pensioners, who every Sunday attend divine service, led by their respective boatswains, and accompanied by the officers of the hospital and their families. The whole of the interior is admirable. The beauty of the marble pillars, the organ, the solid mahogany doors, the lime-wood pulpit, the communion table, all these are unsurpassed by any thing of the kind elsewhere. The chief attraction, however, is one of the masterpieces of West, a painting of the shipwreck of St. Paul in the island of Melita: it is a beautiful performance on a large scale, worthy the immortal genius which produced it. In the wards of the pensioners, particularly that in King Charles' building, each of the old pensioners has a separate bed-place, which is ornamented according to the taste and disposition of the owner. One enriches his dormitory with old pictures representative of naval victories; another adorns his with models of ships and frigates, cut out of wood, the trophies of his own patience and ingenuity; a third prides himself upon his library, consisting for the most part of a collection of naval songs and stories, a bible, and a few religious books; while a fourth, has fastened around, the portraits of naval commanders under whom he has sailed, and prints of the cities and countries he has visited.* Chalk walk is a long narrow crypt-like archway, on the ground-floor of the hospital. It is of course all stone,—floor, walls, and roof: along the walls are little lockers, where the old tars can 'stow away' their odds and ends: two fires are kept burning; and here, on wet and wintry days, the 'sons of thunder' congregate in scores, enjoying the quaintness of their everlasting comforts, as they loll on benches, smoke, and spin their yarns, 'fighting all their battles o'er again;—staunch

"Heroes every one

You might as soon have made the steeple run :
And then his messmates, if you're pleased to stay,
He'll one by one, the gallant souls display;
And as his story verges to an end,
He'll wind from deed to deed, from friend to friend :
He'll speak of those long lost,—the brave of old,—
As princes, generous, and, as heroes, bold :
Then will his feelings rise, till you may trace
Gloom, like a cloud, frown o'er his manly face ;
And then a tear or two, which sting his pride :
These he will dash indignantly aside,
And spice his tale."

CRABBE.—The borough.

Attached to the hospital, is an infirmary for the aged and worn. It stands on the western side, and consists of two wards, with all the rooms on the ground floor, for the convenience of the pensioners. Here are a great many aged and interesting characters, whose lives have been fraught with strange and important events. There is also a separate hospital for the sick and diseased. Among so large a body of old men the mortality is, of course, enormous, and twice in each week a long procession of humble funerals may be seen winding to the opposite burying-ground, where the bodies of these old veterans rest, 'unknelled, unknown'; their names and memories perishing with their bodies.

The officers of the military department of the hospital are a governor, lieutenant-governor, four captains, eight lieutenants, a military superintendent of halls and kitchens, two chaplains and an organist, a physician and assistant, a surgeon and 5 assistants, with a dispenser. The governor's salary is £1,500 per annum: the lieutenant-governor's, £800. The captains have each £400, and the lieutenants £230; the chaplains £300; the physician £600; assistant £400; surgeon £500; dispenser £300; and assistant surgeons £150. The office of governor has been filled, by men whose names are entwined with the records of English history, from Hood, Keats, and others, down to Admiral Hardy, the friend, shipmate, and companion of Nelson. Admiral Fleming, the last governor, having died, has been succeeded, in 1841, by Admiral Sir Robert Stopford. The appointment is in the gift of the first lord of the Treasury. In 1829 the government was changed: the old commission was abolished, and five commissioners appointed, who are under the control of the board of admiralty, and direct the civil department of the hospital. The Pay-master general, and the first Commissioner of woods and forests are, ex-officio, two of them. These have no salaries; but the other three have each £600 per annum. The other officers of the civil department are a secretary, cashier, steward, and clerk of the cheque, with £500 per annum each; numerous clerks with incomes ranging from £300 down to £80 per annum; and various other inferior officers. Many of the officers, in both departments, have other emoluments, apartments, &c. A number of the pensioners are employed for various purposes; and receive wages varying with the duties performed. There are various superannuated officers in both departments, including nurses, &c., who have comfortable pensions. The number of the hospital pensioners, in 1839, amounted to 2,710: the number of nurses, who are the widows of seamen, to 105. Each pensioner receives a liberal allowance of provisions and clothes, with one shilling a week, pocket-money: the mates receive one shilling and sixpence, and the boatswains two and sixpence per week: each nurse, in addition to provisions, &c., is allowed from 18 to £20 per annum. A library is provided for the exclusive use of the pensioners: another for the officers, is supported by voluntary contributions. The prize and out-pension departments were separated from the hospital in 1829, and the management of them transferred to the treasurer of the navy. Branches of revenue, which produced £39,000 per annum, were then withdrawn, namely:—

	£	s.	d.
Five per cent. on prize money	2,500	0	0
Naval sixpences	21,000	0	0
Officers half-pay	3,270	0	0
Reduction in freightage on specie	5,000	0	0
Light-house dues	7,300	0	0
Effects of run men from the navy	100	0	0

39,170 0 0

At the head of the central square of the hospital, a neat square building appears in the distance, and by filling up the picture, heightens still more the magnificence of the scene. This is perhaps the oldest building connected with Greenwich. Queen Anne, consort of James I., laid the foundation of it, and it was finished by Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I., under the superintendence of Inigo Jones. It was considered one of the most splendid buildings of the time, and was designated 'the House of Delight.' It was the property of the Crown, and usually the dwelling of the ranger; but being thought, in close connection with the hospital, to be an important point on which to put the benevolent King, William III. interest was taken in its possession. The Duke of Wales, it was a great advantage to have a 'Naval Hospital' for the children of de- commissioned officers and seamen. Two wings were added,—united to the building by colonnades. The central building is devoted to the girls, in number 200; the two wings to the boys, 400 in each, and who, in addition to the usual course of education, are instructed in gymnastics and naval tactics.

* The following lively and graphic description is taken from Chambers' Journal, 15th July, 1833.—"The inmates have a strikingly antique air. They are all old sailors, with countenances well browned by tropical suns, and bleached by the tempests of the ocean; some hobbling on a timber toe; others with an empty sleeve; a few with only one eye, the other being burnt out, no doubt, by gunpowder, during some hot work one day in the channel; occasionally you may see one pulling an old maimed and decrepit shipmate in a wheeled chair along the terrace; and all, less or more, looking as if they had seen a good deal of service. And such funny dresses these old chaps have on. Their clothes are all of a dark blue colour, of so antiquated a fashion that you could almost fancy that each had accompanied Dampier, Woods, Roger, Captain Cook, or some other of our old navigators, in their voyages round the globe. A number wear cocked hats, which add vastly to their supposed antiquity; and you may remark that the boatswains, or other warrant officers, are allowed a yellow trimming or lace to their garments. I never any where remarked such an air of contentment, comfort, and peacefulness, as in this well-regulated establishment. An abundance of food is allowed, the clothing is warm and comfortable, the residence is good and respectable."

The officers of the Royal hospital schools consist of a chaplain and head master, with a salary of £250 per annum; an upper schoolmaster, £300; a lower, £150; four assistants with salaries of £150, £100, £80 and £70; a matron with a salary of £110; a schoolmistress, £100; and a workmistress £100. There are various other inferior salaried officers and servants, as boatswains for teaching gymnastics, tailors, shoemakers, laundresses, nurses, &c., &c. Almost all these officers and servants have other emoluments, apartments, &c., and about 24 superannuated ones have pensions ranging from £280 down to £11 per annum each.

In 1835, a duty of 6d. per month exigible under 10th Anne, from merchant seamen, was withdrawn. It averaged £23,000 per annum, and in lieu thereof £20,000 per annum were granted from the consolidated fund, making the amount of income surrendered by the hospital, £42,000. The revenues and expenditure of this truly royal and splendid establishment, in 1839, are stated in a parliamentary report to have been as under:—

REVENUE.		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Nett produce of the estates in Northumberland, Cumberland and Durham		31,205	13	7
Appropriated for a new winning of a colliery on Scremerston estate	£4,936	6	4
Purchase of land and tithe	2,044	17	11
Law charges, not paid in the north	28	7	5
		7,009	11	8
Nett produce of rents of property in Greenwich				21,196	1	11
Interest on invested property				2,466	7	11½
Grant from the consolidated fund in lieu of merchant seamen's sixpences, per act of parliament 4 and 5 W. IV. c. 34.		20,000	0	0
Less by retirements to officers formerly employed in the collection of the duty		271	10	2
				19,728	9	10
Freightage on treasure				9,931	18	9½
Collections at the Painted Hall and chapel				1,574	16	6
Contingencies				9	6	2
				£137,954	10	8

EXPENDITURE.

One year's household and contingent accounts, comprising the maintenance* and clothing of, and weekly allowance to, 2,710 pensioners, and 100 nurses, including salaries and allowances to officers, wages to under officers and servants, and for works and repairs of all kinds	£	s.	d.

One year's accounts for the schools	112,506	12	5
Parochial and taxes	17,932	10	9½
Quarantine charges on Newburgh	1,114	16	4
Charges on pro-	1,000	0	0
	730	16	0
	106	15	0
	842	0	11
	134,233	11	5½
	3,720	19	2½

£137,954 10 8

The Royal Observatory.—“When Charles II. ascended the throne, (the naval power of England having been greatly increased during the commonwealth,) public attention was directed to the improvement of navigation generally; but a great stir especially was made relative to that, which still remains an undecided question, how the longitude at sea could be correctly discovered? The pretensions of a Frenchman, named St. Pierre, ‘who proposed employing the distance of the moon from the fixed stars, in the solution of this important problem,’ came under the consideration of the celebrated Flamsteed, who was a clergyman. The circumstances which transpired during the inquiry, induced the king to order the formation of a national observatory, and Mr. Flamsteed was appointed ‘Astronomer Royal.’ In conjunction with Sir C. Wren, Flamsteed, (who during the building of the observatory, carried on his astronomical observations at the ‘House of Delight,’) set about the task of inquiry, where the building should be erected. The noble architect recommended the site of Greenwich castle, on account of its elevated position, and proximity to the river. Accordingly the old castle having been destroyed, the foundation-stone of the observatory was laid on the 10th of August, 1675. Flamsteed entered upon his labour of science in the following year, and continued the untired votary of astronomy till his death, which took place in 1719, at Burslow, in Surrey, of which parish he was rector. The history of this very remarkable individual, and the story of his harsh treatment, and of his enthusiasm which carried him triumphantly through all his labours, have attracted much attention and interest since the publication of Mr. Bailly’s ‘Account of Flamsteed.’ He was succeeded by Dr. E. Halley, who continued till 1742, and in his turn was succeeded by Dr. Bradley. On the death of Bradley in 1762, Mr. Bliss was appointed to the office, but in the short space of two years, he died, and was succeeded by Dr. Maskelyne, who in 1811, (at his death,) was followed by Mr. Pond. Mr. Pond died in 1837, and the present ‘Astronomer Royal’ is Professor Airy, who was removed from the observatory at Cambridge to Greenwich. The Royal society of London possesses the power of visiting the observatory at pleasure, and examining the condition of the instruments; and the proceedings are published in the transactions of that learned body.” The meridian of the observatory at Greenwich is celebrated as that whence the longitude is computed in all

* Statement of the Prices of various Articles of Food and Household Stores for the use of Greenwich Hospital, from 1800 to 1835.

Year.	Flesh per cwt.	Flour per sack.	Butter per lb.	Cheese per lb.	Oatmeal per bushel.	Salt per bushel.	Beer per barrel.	Candles per doz. lbs.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1800	3 4 4	4 16 0	0 0 11½	0 0 6½	0 14 0
1810	3 12 6	4 8 4	0 1 1½	0 0 8½	0 11 7
1815	3 8 0	2 4 9	0 1 2	0 0 8	0 10 3	0 19 9	0 15 4½	0 11 7
1820	3 10 4½	2 15 1	0 0 9½	0 0 7	0 13 4	0 19 9	0 15 10½	0 8 2½
1825	2 19 6½	2 13 4	0 0 10½	0 0 5½	0 17 6	0 2 10	0 16 6½	0 6 —
1830	2 3 6	2 14 11	0 0 6½	0 0 6½	0 16 11	0 1 8	0 12 6½	0 5 3½
1835	2 0 7½	1 11 0½	0 0 7½	0 0 4	0 14 6	0 1 3	0 13 9½	0 5 2

usually the dwelling of the ranger; but being thought, from its close connection with the hospital, to be an admirable spot on which to carry out the benevolent design of King William, the life-interest was purchased from its possessor, the princess of Wales, for £7,878, and it was appropriated as a 'Naval asylum,' or royal hospital school for children of decayed non-commissioned officers and seamen. Two wings were added,—united to the building by colonnades. The central building is devoted to the girls, in number 200; the two wings to the boys, 400 in each, and who, in addition to the usual course of education, are instructed in gymnastics and naval tactics.

The officers of the Royal hospital schools consist of a chaplain and head master, with a salary of £250 per annum; an upper schoolmaster, £300; a lower, £150; four assistants with salaries of £150, £100, £80 and £70; a matron with a salary of £110; a schoolmistress, £100; and a workmistress £100. There are various other inferior salaried officers and servants, as boatswains for teaching gymnastics, tailors, shoemakers, laundresses, nurses, &c., &c. Almost all these officers and servants have other emoluments, apartments, &c., and about 24 superannuated ones have pensions ranging from £280 down to £11 per annum each.

In 1835, a duty of 6d. per month exigible under 10° Anne, from merchant seamen, was withdrawn. It averaged £23,000 per annum, and in lieu thereof £20,000 per annum were granted from the consolidated fund, making the amount of income surrendered by the hospital, £42,000. The revenues and expenditure of this truly royal and splendid establishment, in 1839, are stated in a parliamentary report to have been as under:—

REVENUE.		£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Nett produce of the estates in Northumberland, Cumberland and Durham		31,205	13	7
Appropriated for a new winning of a colliery on Scremerston estate	£4,936 6 4
Purchase of land and tithes	2,044 17 11
Law charges, not paid in the north	28 7 5
		7,009	11	8
Nett produce of rents of property in Greenwich					24,196	1 11
Interest on invested property					2,466	7 11½
Grant from the consolidated fund in lieu of merchant seamen's sixpences, per act of parliament 4 and 5 W. IV. c. 34.		20,000	0	0	80,047	9 6
Less by retirements to officers formerly employed in the collection of the duty		271	10	2
					19,728	9 10
Freightage on treasure					9,931	18 9½
Collectors at the Painted Hall and chapel					1,574	16 6
Contingencies					9 6 2
					£137,954	10 8

EXPENDITURE.

One year's household and contingent accounts, comprising the maintenance* and clothing of, and weekly allowance to, 2,710 pensioners, and 165 nurses, including salaries and allowances

	£	s.	d.
to officers, wages to under officers and servants, and for works and repairs of all kinds	112,506	12 5
One year's accounts for the schools	17,932	10 9½
Parochial and assessed taxes	1,114	16 4
One year's annuity to Lady Newburgh	1,000	0 0
Buildings, repairs, and other charges on property in Greenwich	730	16 0
Out-pension account	106	15 0
Arrears of prize money paid by paymaster-general and refunded by Greenwich hospital	842	0 11

Surplus

£137,954 10 8

The Royal Observatory.—“When Charles II. ascended the throne, (the naval power of England having been greatly increased during the commonwealth,) public attention was directed to the improvement of navigation generally; but a great stir especially was made relative to that, which still remains an undecided question, how the longitude at sea could be correctly discovered? The pretensions of a Frenchman, named St. Pierre, ‘who proposed employing the distance of the moon from the fixed stars, in the solution of this important problem,’ came under the consideration of the celebrated Flamsteed, who was a clergyman. The circumstances which transpired during the inquiry, induced the king to order the formation of a national observatory, and Mr. Flamsteed was appointed ‘Astronomer Royal.’ In conjunction with Sir C. Wren, Flamsteed, (who during the building of the observatory, carried on his astronomical observations at the ‘House of Delight,’) set about the task of inquiry, where the building should be erected. The noble architect recommended the site of Greenwich castle, on account of its elevated position, and proximity to the river. Accordingly the old castle having been destroyed, the foundation-stone of the observatory was laid on the 10th of August, 1675. Flamsteed entered upon his labour of science in the following year, and continued the untired votary of astronomy till his death, which took place in 1719, at Burslow, in Surrey, of which parish he was rector. The history of this very remarkable individual, and the story of his harsh treatment, and of his enthusiasm which carried him triumphantly through all his labours, have attracted much attention and interest since the publication of Mr. Bailly’s ‘Account of Flamsteed.’ He was succeeded by Dr. E. Halley, who continued till 1742, and in his turn was succeeded by Dr. Bradley. On the death of Bradley in 1762, Mr. Bliss was appointed to the office, but in the short space of two years, he died, and was succeeded by Dr. Maskelyne, who in 1811, (at his death,) was followed by Mr. Pond. Mr. Pond died in 1837, and the present ‘Astronomer Royal’ is Professor Airy, who was removed from the observatory at Cambridge to Greenwich. The Royal society of London possesses the power of visiting the observatory at pleasure, and examining the condition of the instruments; and the proceedings are published in the transactions of that learned body.” The meridian of the observatory at Greenwich is celebrated as that whence the longitude is computed in all

* Statement of the Prices of various Articles of Food and Household Stores for the use of Greenwich Hospital, from 1800 to 1835.

Year.	Flesh per cwt.	Flour per sack.	Butter per lb.	Cheese per lb.	Oatmeal per bushel.	Salt per bushel.	Beer per barrel.	Candles per doz. lbs.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
1800	3 4 4	4 16 0	0 0 11½	0 0 6½	0 14 0
1810	3 12 6	4 8 4	0 1 1½	0 0 8½	0 11 7
1815	3 8 0	2 4 9	0 1 2	0 0 8	0 10 3	0 19 9	0 15 4½	0 11 7
1820	3 10 4½	2 15 1	0 0 9½	0 0 7	0 13 4	0 19 9	0 15 10½	0 8 2
1825	2 19 6½	2 13 4	0 0 10½	0 0 5½	0 17 6	0 2 10	0 16 6½	0 6 —
1830	2 3 6	2 14 11	0 0 6½	0 0 6½	0 16 11	0 1 8	0 12 6½	0 5 3½
1835	2 0 7½	1 11 0½	0 0 7½	0 0 4	0 14 6	0 1 3	0 13 9½	0 5 2

British maps and charts. The work performed in it is confined to meridional observations and the calculations connected with them. At the instigation of the British Association, the government has taken up the task of the reduction of the enormous mass of observations on the heavenly bodies, here accumulated since 1750; which, though collected at a great expense to the nation, and by the exertion of consummate skill in the observers, and though pronounced by the highest authorities in Europe to be of the utmost moment to the future progress of astronomy,—had been hitherto permitted to remain a rich, but unexplored, mine of facts. The sum of £500 has been assigned by the treasury for the commencement of this great national work, and it has been auspiciously begun. The chronometers for the navy are all rated here. In 1833, the eastern turret of the observatory was surmounted by a flag-staff, to which a ball is attached in order that the captains of ships on the river may, previous to sailing on long voyages, regulate their chronometers by the exact time which is thus pointed out to them:—at 5 minutes to one o'clock, p. m., the ball is raised half-way up the staff, then to the top, and precisely at one it falls. The interior of the observatory is amply furnished with the best mathematical, chronometrical, and optical instruments in the world: there is a deep dry well for making observations on the stars in the day-time. The admission of visitors, however, is now placed under strict restrictions, and cannot be obtained but by an order from the admiralty. This restriction has been recently judged necessary in order to secure the quietude of the astronomers.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The principal living in Greenwich is a vicarage, with the curacy of St. Margaret's, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £21; gross income £1,452; nett income £1,013. Patron the Crown. The chapelry of the hospital is a curacy, not in charge. Patrons, the governors of the hospital. Besides the old and new churches, there are chapels for various denominations of Christians, including Roman Catholics, with the latter of which a charity school is connected; two Independent churches were formed in 1776 and 1823; and a Wesleyan Methodist in 1816: there is also a Scotch Secession church.

Schools and Charities.—There are 12 daily and 33 day and boarding-schools, besides which there are numerous and liberal endowments for educational purposes. The Grey-coat school, under the management of the vicar, church-warden, and overseers of the parish, was founded and endowed in 1643 by John Roan, with lands and tenements now worth nearly £800 per annum, from which about 120 boys are educated and clothed. The sum of £130 is contributed to a National school for 150 girls, established in 1814, and otherwise supported by voluntary subscription: a few of the girls are clothed. There is a lending library attached to this school. The Green-coat school was founded and endowed by Sir William Boreman, clerk of the Green cloth to Charles II., for the maintenance, clothing, and education of 20 poor boys. In 1818, William Clavell further endowed it for 6 additional boys: the total income from these and other sources, now amounts to between £600 and £700 per annum. The girls Blue-coat school was founded previous to 1832: the permanent income is now upwards of £250 per annum; besides which nearly as much has been added from annual subscriptions, &c. The school is under the direction of Greenwich ladies: 30 girls are taught, maintained, and clothed.

The celebrated antiquary and historian, William Lambard, Esq.,—whose trustworthy writings we have had frequent occasion to quote, and who is described in the Mag. Brit., 1738, as “a person of great learning and singular piety; the author of divers books, and particularly of one containing the description of this county, which he styles the perambulation of Kent,”—here founded, in 1558, an hospital named Queen Elizabeth's college, for 20 poor and impotent men, and women, married or unmarried; of whom, “if equal in all degrees, the man should be preferred before the woman;” none, however, to be admitted, “but such as could say the Lord's prayer, the articles of the Christian belief, and the 10 commandments; no enemy to the gospel of God, or to his religion then established by authority; no common swearer, adulterer, fornicator, thief, picker, hedge-breaker, or drunkard,” &c. The pious founder, who was the first protestant that founded any charitable institution, and thus removed the odium cast upon the doctrines of the Reformation, also decreed, that “if a man, being able and valiant of body be admitted by reason of the choice of his unable and impotent wife, and she die, he continuing able and valiant, the place should be reputed vacant;—and the like should be of an able and valiant woman that should happen to come in by the election of her impotent husband; and the like of such as, being unmarried at the time of their admission, should afterward marry.” Genuine liberality of intention, as well as benevolence of feeling, is manifested even in the strictest of the statutes, so minutely set forth by the worthy old founder; unless, perhaps, in that wherein the poor, unable, and impotent woman is superseded by the man, who, though otherwise equal in all degrees, is certainly not ‘the weaker vessel.’ The total income of this charity, in 1836, was £665 16s. 4d. The college itself was rebuilt in 1817, at an expense of £4,729 3s. 11d.; principally defrayed by the produce of timber sold from estates let to the family of Lambard. The houses are situated at the end of the town, on the right of the high road from London. They consist of 20 tenements, inhabited by the 20 pensioners, and forming together 3 sides of a quadrangle, with a chapel in the centre of the south side. There is a walk planted with trees for the use of the inmates, and to each house is attached a small garden, &c. The alms-people have pensions of 35s. a-month, with a chaldron and a-half of coals. Of these pensioners, one is appointed by the master of the Rolls, who is president of the college; one by the two upper wardens of the draper's company, who are the governors; and the remainder from the parishes of Greenwich, Deptford, Woolwich, Kidbrooke, Charlton, Eltham, Lee, and Lewisham, by a committee of electors, consisting of the vicar, curate, church-wardens, &c.

Trinity hospital, or Norfolk college, was founded by Henry Howard, Earl of Northampton, in 1613, for the relief and support of 12 poor men of the parish of East Greenwich, [Deptford having at one time been called West Greenwich,] and 8 of the parish of Shotsham in Norfolk, where the founder was born. The income of this hospital, in 1836, was £2,270 8s. The warden,—appointed by the mercer's company, who are the patrons and managers,—receive in all £218 2s. a-year. Each of the poor men has for commons 11s. a-week, or £28 12s. a-year; £3 11s. yearly for pocket-money, and a small gratuity. There are a sub-warden, butler, cook, &c., who receive salaries for their services. Gowns are provided for the pensioners, viz., common gowns of brown cloth every year, and holiday gowns of blue cloth, lined with serge, and a new hat every 4th year. The men are allowed to carry on certain trades, and when sick are attended by a physician, nurse, &c. A committee of about 12 of the mercer's company annually visit the hospital; the expense of the entertainment at the visitation, is stated by the charity commissioners to have been upwards of £100, besides £60 per annum to the officers. The founder of this valuable charity was Lord Privy seal, Lord warden of the Cinque-ports, and Knight of the Garter. His body and monument were removed from Dover castle, and are now deposited in the small chapel of this hospital. The neatness and unique appearance of the whole of this building are worthy of observation. It stands on the banks of the Thames, below the Royal hospital.

Besides the Jubilee almshouses, erected in commemoration of the jubilee of George III., and afterwards enlarged by the Greenwich volunteer corps, there are numerous minor charities, the annual revenue of which, in 1836, amounted to about £337 15s. 6d. Poor rates, in 1838, £7,099 7s. The Greenwich poor-law union comprehends 4 parishes, embracing an area of 7 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at £62,009. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £22,574. Expenditure in 1838, £15,593; in 1839, £15,947 16s.

Franchise, &c.—Greenwich returned two members to parliament in the reign of Philip and Mary; but made no return except one, owing, it is generally believed, to the inhabitants being too poor to sustain the expense of an election, and the support of their members. By the reform act it was again erected into a parliamentary borough, returning two members to parliament: the boundaries of the borough comprise the parishes of Deptford and Woolwich, with part of Charlton parish lying between Greenwich and Deptford. The number of electors registered for the borough in 1837, was 3,155: the number polled at the general election in 1837, was 2,434. The returning officer is such person as the sheriff of the county may appoint. The town is not incorporated: it is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. A court of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, is held here for Greenwich and parishes within the hund. of Blackheath, Bromley and Beckenham, Ruxley, and Little with Lessness, in the county of Kent, and Wallington hund. in Surrey. Debtors are committed either to a place of confinement provided for the purpose at Greenwich, or at Croydon. A police court, established for Greenwich and Woolwich, under the new metropolitan act, was opened 19th October, 1840. The justice room and station-house are situated on Black-heath road, and are highly commodious.

History.—The first record regarding Greenwich is a charter of Edgar, dated 964, whereby he gave to the abbey of St. Peter Ghent in the Netherlands, "Lewisham, with all its appurtenances, Greenwich, Woolwich, Nottingham, and Comb." The name of Greenwich, says Lambard, "is deryved of Gren and wic, i, a green towne or dwelling, which last part of the word is now by corruption growen to wiche, as it is in many other, Norwiche, Donwiche, &c., which meaninge, Paulus Jovius, and Iel. (before him) followinge, call it Viridis sinus, a Viridariis. This town is not aunceyntly famous so much for any buyldinge in it, as for the roade for shippes before it. For in tyme of King Etheldred (whome Swein the Dane sore oppressed) the hole flete of the Danishe army lay theare, and they for the most part weare encamped in the hill above the towne, now called Blackheathe, where they lay two or three yeares. Duringe this tyme they spoiled Canterbury, and brought Alpheg tharchebyshope to their campe at Grenwiche, and theare a Dane called Thrum (whome tharchebyshope had conformed in baptisme the day before,) strake him on the head and slewe him, bycause he would not suffer himselfe to be ransomed for 3,000 poundes. They exercised such crueltie within this realme, that the kinge first sent over sea his wife and chyl dren, and afterward compoundinge to yeld them a yearly tribute, he followed himselfe. Theare was paid to this army at one tyme 48,000 poundes in the tyme of Swein, and at another payment, in the tyme of Cnut his sonne, 30,000 poundes, as Marian reportethe, or 21,000, as Huntingdon casteth; besides their meate and drinke: upon which conditions they sware to serve the kinge against straungers, and not to endamage his subjectes; but how little they performed promise, the harmes that followed in sundry places, and the coronation of Cnut their owne kinge, are sufficient witnesses. Of this campe are certain places within that parishes, called at this daye Combes; for theare is Eastcombe, Westcombe, and was some tyme (as by auncient evidences is to be sene) Midlecombe: and Comb in Saxon signifieth a campe, and comp also; for the Saxones used bothe wordes; howbeit I gess that the Saxones rather called it comb, for they called Wynchecombe, Wincelcomb, and then was comp eyther the Danishe word or the corrupt Saxon. In memory also of this Alpheg, their church in the towne at this daye remaineth dedicate to his name." The charter of Edgar by which the manor of Greenwich was granted to the abbey of Ghent, was confirmed by various charters from subsequent monarchs till 1414, when the alien priories being dissolved by Henry V., it reverted to the crown, and was shortly after settled upon the Carthusian priory of Jesus of Bethlehem at Shene. Ever since the monasteries and priories were swept away by the Reformation, this manor has continued in the possession of the Crown, and owing to the pleasantness of its situation, and the salubrity of its atmosphere, it became, in a great measure, the residence of the kings and queens of England, and has ever since been rich in historical associations; almost every inch of ground having been part and parcel of the scene of some important event in the great march of history. Henry IV. resided much here, and in 1408 he dated his will from his manor of Greenwich. Henry V. granted it for life to Thomas Beaufort, duke of Exeter; on whose death, in 1417, it passed to Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, and uncle to the king, who obtained, in 1433, the royal licence to fortify and embattle his manor house, and to enclose the park, within which he erected a tower on the spot where the royal observatory now stands. Shortly after this, we find it in the possession of Henry IV., who, after enlarging and beautifying the place, gave it, with the manor, to Elizabeth his queen. Henry VII. made it his favourite residence, and close to the palace founded a convent of Franciscan or observant friars, which, after the dissolution, was refounded by Queen Mary, and finally suppressed by Elizabeth. Greenwich was the birth-place of Henry VIII., who exceeded all his ancestors in the luxury and magnificence of his entertainments. In his reign it became the scene of a thousand festivities: tilts, and tournaments, and gorgeous spectacles succeeded each other in rapid succession. 'Bluff and bloated Hal' here celebrated Christmas with amazing splendour. He enlarged the town, and completed and adorned the palace, which was the splendid scene of rejoicing at his marriage with Anne, sister to the duke of Cleves. Henry was so delighted with Greenwich, and he was so often resident there with his queen, that the palace was honoured with the birth of the princesses Mary and Elizabeth, afterwards successively queens of England. Edward VI. died here at the age of 16. Philpot, one of the early historians of Kent, thus quaintly describes the death of 'fire and faggot' Mary, in 1559.—"In which year Calis was lost; which blow sat so heavy upon her heart strings, that the cordage, not able to undergo the pressure, was cracked with the burden which was lodged upon it." Queen Elizabeth during her reign made Greenwich the almost constant residence of the court. In June, 1535, she was here offered the sovereignty of the low countries by the Dutch deputies.* James I. resided a considerable time at Greenwich, and his Queen Anne of Denmark, improved the palace, walled in the park, and laid the foundation of the 'House of Delight.' His daughter, the princess Mary, was christened here with great pomp in 1606. The unfortunate Charles I., previously to the breaking out of the war with his subjects, often resided here. In 1660, Charles II., who also occasionally resided here, ordered the decaying palace to be taken down, and commenced the building of his new one on a most splendid scale. The erecting, however, of one wing, exhausted the means of that pensioned slave and specious tyrant, and it remained a monument of his ambition till it was converted to its present far more noble purpose. The great leviathan, Dr. Johnson, resided here in 1737. Here he "composed a great part of his Irene, during his walks in the park." On 10th August, 1822, George IV. embarked here for Scotland, amidst a vast display of magnificence.

GREET, a parish in the hund. of Overs, union of Tenbury, county of Salop; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Tenbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5; gross income £170. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Hope. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,040. Houses 17. A. P. £95. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 93. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 17s.

GREETHAM, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Horncastle. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10 19s. 4d.; gross income £275. All tithes commuted in 1793. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,180. Houses 29. A. P. £1,221. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 7s.

GREETHAM, a parish in the hund. of Alstoe, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 6 miles north-east of Oakham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £5 3s. 9d., returned at £127; gross income £168. Patron, in 1835, G. Finch, Esq. Tithes commuted in 1763. Here is an endowed day and Sunday school, founded in the reign of William III. In the time of the Saxons this pleasant little rural village is supposed to have been a large and important place. Acres 1,630. Houses 90. A. P. £2,993. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 505. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 12s.

GREETLAND. See ELLAND WITH GREETLAND.

GREETWELL, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Lawress, union and county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Lincoln, on the northern bank of the Witham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £20; gross income £52. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Acres 1,300. Houses 6. A. P. £1,800. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 42. Poor rates, in 1838, £45.

GREGORY (Str.), an extra-parochial ville in the hund. of Westgate, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent, contiguous to the city of Canterbury. Here are 5 daily schools. Acres 10. Houses 181. A. P. £591. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 833. Poor rates, in 1838, £235 6s.

GREINTON, or GRENTON, a parish in the hund. of Whitley, union of Bridgwater, county of Somerset; 6 miles west-south-west of Glastonbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 0s. 10d.; gross income £173. Patron, in 1835, S. T. Kekewich, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,140. Houses 37. A. P. £1,588. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 219. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 1s.

GRENCHE. See GRANGE.

GRENDON, a parish in the hund. of Wymersley, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Wellingborough, and south of the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8; gross income £91. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Tithes commuted in 1780. Charities, in 1830, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £465 9s. Acres 3,120. Houses 121. A. P. £3,116. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 622.

GRENDON WITH WHITTINGTON, a parish in the Tamworth division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Atherstone, county of Warwick; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by north of Atherstone, on the eastern bank of the river Anker, and intersected by the Coventry canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £20 3s. 4d.; gross income £541. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Chetwynd, Bart. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £4 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £228 10s. Acres 1,650. Houses 106. A. P. £4,350. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 577.

GRENDON-BISHOP'S, a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 4 miles west-north-west of Bromyard. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; returned at £64; gross income £59. Patron, the vicar of Bromyard. Acres 1,800. Houses 39. A. P. £1,555. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 19s.

GRENDON-UNDERWOOD, a parish in the hund. of Ashenden, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 7 miles east by south of Bicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £280. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1769. Patron, in 1835, W. Pigott, Esq. Here are 4 daily

* Hentzner, a German, who travelled in England in this reign, and saw the queen in the presence-chamber, which he observes "was hung with rich tapestry, and the floor, after the English fashion, strewn with hay," gives a curious description of her majesty, during her sojourn at Greenwich. "Next came the queen, in the 63th year of her age, very majestic, her face oblong, fair but wrinkled, her eyes small, yet black and pleasant, her nose a little hooked, her lips narrow, and her teeth black, (a defect the English seem subject to from their too great use of sugar,) she had in her ears two pearls, with very rich drops; she wore false hair, and that red; upon her head she had a small crown, reported to be made of some of the gold of the celebrated Lunebourg table. Her bosom was uncovered, as all the English ladies have it till they marry; and she had on a necklace of exceeding fine jewels. That day she was dressed in white silk, bordered with pearls, of the size of beans, and over it, a mantle of black silk, shot with silver threads,—her train was very long, the end of it borne by a marchioness; as she went along, in all this state and magnificence, she spoke very graciously, first to one, then to another, in English, French, and Italian, for besides being well skilled in Greek, Latin, and the languages I have mentioned, she is mistress of the Spanish, Scotch, and Dutch. Whoever speaks to her, it is kneeling; and now and then she raises some with her hand. In the anti-chapel, next the hall, petitions were presented to her, and she received them most graciously, which occasioned the exclamation, "Long live Queen Elizabeth!" she answered it with, "I thank you, my good people."

schools, one of which is supported by a small endowment. There is also a small charity for apprenticing poor boys. Acres 3,670. Houses 77. A. P. £2,484. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 379. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 16s.

GRENTON. See GREINTON.

GRESFORD, a parish, partly in the hund. of Bromfield, union of Wrexham, county of Denbigh, and partly in the hund. of Mold, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles north-north-east of Wrexham, south of the river Alen, and near the confluence with the Dee. This parish lies in a rich and fertile district mostly appropriated to gentlemen's seats. It includes the townships of Allington, Borrass-Riffrey, Burton, Earlas, Eithig, Gresford, Gwersylt, and Llay, and the lordship of Marford and Horseley. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £21 2s. 3^d.; gross income £715. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is supported by an endowment of £12 per annum from Lady Strode's foundation. Other charities, in 1836, about £140 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,868 11s.; of the township, £192 7s. The church has a spire, containing the finest ring of bells in North Wales; and within its chancel is entombed the famous Madoc-ap-Illewellyn-ap-Gryffyd, who died in 1313. In the churchyard are 18 yew-trees, which are stated by the parish register for 1726 to have been planted in that year. The average of the diameters of these trees is 20 inches. There is another, the trunk of which is 22 feet in circumference at the base, 29 feet below the first branches. This gives us a mean diameter of 1,224 lines, which, according to De Candolle's rule, alluded to under article DARLEY, ought also to indicate the number of years. From three sections obtained from this tree, it has been ascertained that the average number of rings deposited for one inch in depth of its latest growth, was 34³/₈. Comparing this with the data obtained from the eighteen young trees, the probable age of this one has been estimated by Mr. Bowman, a member of the British Association, at 1,419 years. Gresford has three annual fairs for cattle—on the second Monday in April, last Monday in August, and first Monday in December. Houses 723. A. P. £2,278. Pop., in 1801, 2,759; in 1831, 4,849. Houses of the township 108. Pop., in 1801, 392; in 1831, 573.

GRESHAM, a parish in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-west by west of Cromer. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 18s. 9d.; gross income £306. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Spurgin. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,220. Houses 73. A. P. £1,137. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 362. Poor rates, in 1838, £149 8s.

GRESLEY-CHURCH. See CHURCH-GRESLEY.

GRESLEY-CASTLE. See CASTLE-GRESLEY.

GRESSENHALL, a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 2³/₄ miles north-west of East-Dereham, and near a branch of the Wensum. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 13s. 4d.; gross income £703. In the patronage of King's college, Cambridge. This parish possesses a daily school. Charities, in 1834, £16 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £333 8s. There was here a collegiate chapel, founded by William de Stutville, and dedicated to St. Nicholas in the reign of Henry VIII., the remains of which after Blomefield's time were converted into a house. In 1775, an act of parliament was obtained for erecting an incorporated house of industry here for the reception of paupers from the 51 parishes in Mitford and Launditch hundreds; one of which, East-Dereham, was severed from the union in 1801. This extensive workhouse was built on a high and healthy part of the parish, and was finished in 1777, at a cost of £16,242 19s. 11¹/₄d. A fair for toys, &c., is held on December 6th. Acres 2,520. Houses 154. A. P. £2,917. Pop., in 1801, 1,224; in 1831, 924.

GRESSINGHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Lancaster, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 8 miles north-east of Lancaster, on the eastern bank of the Lune. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £93; gross income £80. Patron, the vicar of Lancaster. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,840. Houses 35. A. P. £2,516. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £177 11s.

GRESTY. See SHAVINGTON WITH GRESTDY.

GRETA (THE), a small river in the north riding of Yorkshire. It rises in Stainmoor by two sources, and running eastward turns to the north at Brignall, and falls into the Tees.

GRETA BRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of Brignall, north riding of Yorkshire; 24¹/₂ miles north-west by north of London. It is named from the bridge by which the great road from London to Glasgow here crosses the Greta.

GRETTON, a chapelry in the parish of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; 1³/₄ mile north-west of Winchcombe. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Winchcombe. Tithes commuted in 1814.

GRETTON, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Uppingham, county of Northampton; 3¹/₂ miles north-east by north of Rockingham, bounded on the west by the river Welland. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Doddington, a peculiar in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £268. Patron, the prebendary of Gretton in the cathedral church of Lincoln. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1786; and there is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1830, £14 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £439 16s. Acres 4,450. Houses 159. A. P. £3,679. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 762.

GREWELL, a parish in the hund. of Odiham, union of Hartley-Wintney, county of Southampton; 1¹/₂ mile west of Odiham, intersected by the Basingstoke canal, and in the vicinity of the Southampton and London railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Odiham. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 850. Houses 56. A. P. £968. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 287. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 18s.

GREY'S-FOREST, a township in the parish of Kirknewton, Northumberland; 7 miles west north-west of Wooler. Acreage with the parish. Houses 5. A. P. £1,664. Pop., in 1801, 58; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 15s.

GREYSLEY. See GREASLEY.

GREYSTED, or GAYSTEAD, a parish in the north-west division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, Northumberland; 5 miles west-north-west of Bellingham, pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river Tyne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham, not in charge; gross income £133. Patrons, the governors of Greenwich hospital. This parish consists of the two townships of Chirdon and Smalesmouth, which were separated from the ancient parish of Simonburn by act of parliament in 1811; shortly after which, the church, a neat Gothic structure, was erected by the commissioners and governors of Greenwich hospital. Acres 25,930. Houses 37. A. P. returned with Simonburn. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Chirdon and Smalesmouth, 199; in 1831, 250.

GREYSTOCK, a parish in Leath ward, union of Penrith, Cumberland; 5 miles west of Penrith, on the river Pettrill. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £40 7s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, Adam Askew, Esq. Here are 11 daily schools, several of which are endowed, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1820, £640 15s., including £292 12s., being the endowment of Matterdale school; and £63 12s. that of Watermillock school. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £948 6s.; of the township, £279 3s. The castle of Greystock, the ancient seat of the Howards, dukes of Norfolk, "is placed on an eminence having a gradual ascent from the north-east by which is the common approach; but to the east and south it stands upon the brink of a rock above a small stream which runs into the river Pettrill, now in part concealed, and rendered less steep by modern works. There are little remains of the old fortress: some broken towers are seen towards the east, and in the back part of the present mansion some other old edifice appears. A rivulet runs close by the castle; and as it naturally flows with great rapidity in this part, it is rendered still more pleasing and beautiful by being collected into reservoirs, and discharged down artificial falls. The upper sheet of water is of considerable extent; lying in a fine curve, ornamented with small islands, and bounded by a hanging wood which clothes a lofty eminence of a wild and romantic aspect. A sluice delivers water from this canal to a bath placed in a retired situation; the adjoining ground being laid out in flower-knots, shrubberies, and grass slopes. From this canal, the water of the whole river falls about 16 perpendicular feet over steps which break it into foam. The reservoir which receives this cascade is bordered with grass walks: on the one side is a hanging-garden; on the other a shady grove. From thence there is a second fall nearly of the same height, and the second reservoir is bordered like that above. From thence the water rushes over a natural channel, and passes by an arch through the fence of the pleasure-grounds."—Hutchinson's Cumberland. The plantations are extensive. The park is stocked with 1,000 head of deer; most of them fallow; some red; and a few American. Ornamental buildings have been erected as terminations to the prospects from the road conducting to the principal entrance to the present castle. This edifice was principally erected about the middle of the 17th century by the Hon. Charles Howard. In the interior, which is convenient and elegant, there are a number of valuable paintings. Two-thirds at least of this parish consist of mountainous lands, some of which are round, green, and beautiful; but lofty; others are rugged, craggy, and barren. Saddleback, Bowseale, Souther, and Mell-fell, are the most eminent. Near the top of Saddleback, which is elevated 2,787 feet above sea-level, is a lake, from whence a large brook issues, and near it a considerable branch of the Caldew rises: these streams flow in different directions. Acres 47,940. Houses 469. A. P. £17,071. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Berrier and Murrah, Blencow (Little), Greystock, Hutton-John, Hutton-Roof, Hutton-Soil, Johnby, and Motherby and Gill; with the chapelrys of Matterdale, Mungrisdale, Threlkeld, and Watermillock, 2,151; in 1831, 2,565. Houses of the township, 52. A. P. £4,788. Pop., in 1801, 318; in 1831, 337.

GREYTREE HUNDRED, in the county of Hereford. It lies in the south-east corner of the county. Area 43,060 acres. Houses 2,374. Pop., in 1831, 11,686.

GRIBTHORPE WITH WILLITOFT, a township in the parish of Bubwith, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north of Howden. Acres 1,790. Houses 21. A. P. £1,874. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 7s.

GRIMLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Worcester, and west of the Severn. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Hallow, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £14 0s. 10d.; gross income £599. Patron, the bishop of Worcester. Here in the chapelry of Hallow is a free school, endowed with about £60 per annum. In Grimley there is a daily school, endowed with £7 per annum. Other charities, in 1830, £135 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 12s. Acres 2,250. Houses 148. A. P. £3,802. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 711.

GRIMOLDBY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Louth Eske, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 4 miles east by north of Louth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 10s.; gross income £144. Patron, in 1835, T. F. Heneage, Esq. Tithes commuted in 1766. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,850. Houses 67. A. P. £1,704. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 311. Poor rates, in 1838, £304 12s.

GRIMSARGH WITH BROCKHOLES, a township in the parish of Preston, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles north-east of Preston, and west of the river Ribble. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; not in charge; returned at £112; gross income £77. Patron, the vicar of Preston. Here is a daily school. In August, 1840, an immense flood in the Ribble carried away 3 of the arches of the Brockholes bridge, a wooden structure on the Blackburn and Preston new turnpike road; together also with cattle, large trees, &c.; besides destroying the crops on the river's banks. So extraordinary a flood has not occurred here in the memory of man. Acres 1,830. Houses 57. A. P. £2,501. Pop., in 1801, 262; in 1831, 310. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 16s.

GRIMSBY (GREAT), a borough, market-town, and parish, situated in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 166 miles north of London, and 40 north-east of Lincoln, on the little river Freshney, near the mouth of the Humber. Acres 2,110. Houses 774. A. P. £5,825. Pop., in 1801, 1,524; in 1831, 4,225. It comprises the township of Clee, and the hamlet of Weelsley. The living includes two vicarages, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated, one at £7, and one at £7 18s. 4d., in the parliamentary returns together at £104; gross income £538. Patron, in 1835, G. R. Heneage, Esq. All tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, commuted. There were formerly two churches, but St. James's alone remains. It is a spacious cruciform structure with a central tower, which presents a beautiful specimen of English pointed architecture. It otherwise consists of a nave, two aisles, a spacious transept, whence the tower rises, a choir, chantry, and southern porch. Here are places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists: one of the New connexion was formed in 1821. The free grammar-school was founded in 1547 by letter-patent of Edward VI., and endowed with the revenue of a suppressed chantry, previously belonging to St. James's church, for the support of a master, for gratuitous instruction to the sons of parishioners. The lands called the chantry-farm belonging to this institution are worth about £150 per annum. There are other minor sources of revenue. The school is open for 70 boys. There are 6 other daily schools in the parish. Poor rates, in 1838, £598 15s.

The town of Grimsby is supposed to be the place where the Danes made their first landing when they invaded Britain about the end of the eighth century. It is one of the most ancient boroughs in the kingdom, and was once rich and populous, possessing a large portion of foreign and inland trade. In the reign of King John it was a mayoralty, and it furnished for the siege of Calais, in the reign of Edward III., 11 ships and 170 mariners. The harbour, however, became gradually choked up, and a dangerous sand-bank having formed across its mouth, it was deserted; the trade being transferred to Hull. By the patriotic and spirited exertions of the landed gentlemen in the neighbourhood, the harbour has of late years been greatly improved, wet and dry docks have been constructed at a vast expense, and a canal cut into the Humber, calculated to admit vessels of 1,000 tons burthen. In consequence, trade became greatly revived, and the town enlarged by the addition of several new and well-built streets, especially in the vicinity of the haven. Nevertheless, the new harbour has not fully met the sanguine anticipations entertained at Grimsby, that, as a seaport, it would soon out rival Hull. The landing at the ebb still continued very bad, but a jetty has been recently erected to remedy this inconvenience. The roadstead is said to be very safe, the holding ground good, and the shore so soft that a vessel might be driven on shore without sustaining serious injury. Grimsby is a port subordinate to that of Hull, and has a deputy, collector, comptroller, and coast-surveyor. Coal, salt, and the produce of the countries bordering on the Baltic, constitute the principal articles of commerce. There are bonded warehouses for all goods, except tobacco and East India goods. In 1813, the tonnage of foreign trade inwards was 3,116; outwards 611: in 1824, inwards 21,033; outwards 2,097: in 1832, inwards 6,479; outwards 116. The tonnage coastwise in 1813 was—inwards 1,605; outwards 1,916: in 1824, inwards 1,002; outwards 2,143: in 1832, inwards 1,620; outwards 4,310. In 1838, the gross amount of customs receipts was £9,824 12s.; in 1839, £10,388 3s. 9d. Ships are annually sent to the Greenland fishery, and here are a few yards for ship-building. There are in the town some extensive breweries; and bone crushing, and the trade in bones for manure and other purposes are largely carried on. There is also a tannery; and in 1838, a flax-mill employed 62 hands. Patent ropes are here manufactured on an extensive scale from the New Zealand flax, or Phormium tenax. The market day is Wednesday, and there are two annual fairs, June 17th for sheep, and September 15th for horses. There is a branch of the Hull banking company here.

Previous to 1835 this borough was governed by a mayor, recorder, 11 aldermen, a high-steward, 12 common council-men, 2 coroners, 2 bailiffs, 2 chamberlains, a town-clerk, and 3 sergeants-at-mace. The mayor, with two of the aldermen—who were annually elected justices of the peace—held a court every Tuesday; the bailiffs every Friday. The boundaries of the borough and the parish coincide. Under the new municipal act the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being 'the mayor and burgesses of the town of Grimsby in the county of Lincoln.' The borough is included in schedule A, amongst boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. The borough gaol is chiefly used for debtors from the borough court, and those in execution from a jurisdiction for the recovery of small debts, extending over 16 parishes. It adjoins the town-hall, and contains 1 cell, a room for debtors, and another for females, with a small airing-yard common to all the prisoners, who remain here only while under examination,—the borough having no grant of quarter-sessions. The number of prisoners, in 1837, was 55. The boundaries of the borough laid down in the boundary reports, comprehend the parish, together with a small district called Wellow, which is supposed to have constituted the demesne of an abbey. The income of the borough, in 1839, was £1,436 18s. 1½d., chiefly arising from rents and interest with money borrowed. Expenditure £1,377 9s. 1½d., consisting principally of—

Rents, taxes, &c., . . .	£445	9	9½
Charities,	388	19	5½
Interest,	178	18	7
Police and Constables, &c., . . .	82	1	6

Grimsby sent two members to parliament from the days of Edward I. till the passing of the reform act, which reduced its representation to one. The several parishes of Great Grimsby, Great and Little Coates, Bradley, Laceby, Waltham, Scartho, Clee, Weelsby, and Cleethorpes, are included within the elective boundaries. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1831, was 394. In 1837 the number of electors registered was 581. The mayor is the returning officer.

Grimsby was anciently called Grimsbigge. There is a tradition which Camden considers fabulous, that it was founded by a merchant named Gryme, who obtained great riches in consequence of having brought up an exposed child called Haveloc, who after having been scullion in the king's kitchen, was proved to be of the Danish blood-royal, and obtained the king's daughter in marriage. To this romantic story, whatever may be its foundation, there is a reference, in the device of the corporation seal. Holles supposes Grimsby to have been founded by a Norwegian pirate; and Macpherson observes, that "Grimsby is noted by the Norwegians or Icelandic writers, as an emporium resorted to by merchants from Norway, Scotland, Orkney, and the western islands." The numerous artificial hills, or tumuli, in the marshes adjoining the present town proclaim the spot to have been a station of consequence among the Britons. The most important of these stations, 7 in number, form an amphitheatre on which the ancient British town was situated; and from thence three lines of artificial embankments, under the designation of beacons, extended across the country in different directions, communicating with every part of the island. In this vicinity are several of those deep circular pits called Blow-wells, the water of which rises even with the surface of the ground but never overflows. A stone said to have been brought by the Danes to this country, and known as 'Haveloc's stone,' forms a landmark between Grimsby and the hamlet of Wellows. Great numbers of Roman, Saxon, Flemish, and Lombardic coins have been dug up in this vicinity at various periods. The two last were probably introduced into the town by the Flemish and Lombardic merchants. The copper coins which were issued from the mint at Nuremburg, and some other places, were dug up at Grimsby in such numbers, that before the present substantial copper coinage was substituted for the thin halfpence and farthings formerly in circulation, they passed current according to their size and value. Grimsby having been a port when the Hanseatic merchants and those of Flanders and Lombardy transacted considerable business, the coins above-mentioned were doubtless introduced by these merchants, who continued to trade to this port until the decayed state of the haven rendered the introduction of large ships impracticable. Here were at one time a monastery of Grey friars, a convent of Benedictine nuns, a Franciscan convent with an hospital, and a priory of Augustine canons. Spittal-hill is supposed to have been the site of an establishment of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem. Stow relates that "John Walsh, a native of Grimsby, being accused of high treason by a gentleman of Navarre, did on St. Andrew's day, in the 8th year of Richard II., A. D. 1385, enter the list to combat with the 'Navarois named Martilleto de Vilenos;' that he might, according to the custom of the times, refute the charge, by obtaining the victory over his antagonist; which having gained, his traducer was hanged for false accusation." Dr. John Whitgift, archbishop of Canterbury, and Dr. Martin Fotherby, a bishop of Salisbury, were natives of Grimsby.

GRIMSBY (LITTLE), a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north of Louth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3 6s. 8d.; gross income £78. Patron, in 1835, Lord F. Beaucherk. Acres 950. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 52. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 15s.

GRIMSHOE HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk. It lies on the south side of the county, where it borders with Suffolk. Area 69,340 acres. Houses 1,252. Pop., in 1831, 6,380.

GRIMSTEAD (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of West Dean, county of Wilts; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Salisbury, and north of the Salisbury and Southampton canal. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of West Dean. Acreage with the parish. Houses 27. A. P. £940. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 10s.

GRIMSTEAD (WEST), a parish in the hund. and union of Alderbury, county of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Salisbury, intersected by the Salisbury and Southampton railway. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Plaitford, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 10s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £420. Patron, the Earl of Ilchester. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 1,430. Houses 38. A. P. £1,918. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 186. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 5s.

GRIMSTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Edenham, county of Lincoln; 4 miles east-south-east of Corby, on the river Glen. Grimsthorpe castle, the seat at one time of the duke of Ancaster, afterwards of Lord Gwydir, is a large and irregular but magnificent structure, which has apparently been erected at different periods. The north front is the handsomest part of the edifice. It stands in a park 16 miles in circumference. From the principal or north entrance to the castle, is an avenue which extends nearly a mile in length: on the south are the gardens and pleasure-grounds, and on the west a beautiful sloping lawn descends to two lakes comprising upwards of 100 acres, beyond which is an eminence crowned by a grove of splendid trees. Eastward is the hamlet of Grimsthorpe, with the lordship of Edenham. The country round Grimsthorpe abounds with those striking alternations of wood and lawn, hill and dale, which constitute the picturesque in landscape. In the park, about a mile from the castle, formerly stood a Cistercian abbey, founded by William, Earl of Albemarle, about the year 1451. It was called Vallis Dei, and vulgarly Vaudy. A few sculptured stones still remain. Pop., in 1821, 90. Other returns with the parish.

GRIMSTON, a parish in the hund. of East Gos-cote, union of Melton Mowbray, county of Leicester;

5 miles west-north-west of Melton Mowbray. Living, a donative curacy in the dio. of Peterborough, a peculiar of the lord of the manor of Rothley; returned at £35; gross income £43. Improprate and vicarial tithes commuted in 1765. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Charities, in 1836, £13 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 11s. Acres 920. Houses 38. A. P. £1,483. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 185.

GRIMSTONE, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge Lynn, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-east by east of Castle Rising. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £26 13s. 4d.; gross income £395. Patrons, the president and fellows of Queen's college, Cambridge. All tithes, moduses, &c. commuted in 1779. In the churchyard here an iron anvil serves as the headstone of a deceased blacksmith; and under the west wall issue 3 copious springs, which form a pool on the opposite side of the road, flowing thence in a pellucid stream to Lynn, forming the chief supply of the water-works of that town. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which was endowed by John Talman in 1394, with 52 acres of land, from the proceeds of which the master is now allowed a salary of £73 per annum and the school-house. The residue of this charity income consists of upwards of £70 per annum, intended for apprenticeship of poor children and repairs of church. Here is also a girls' free-school, established in 1822 by the rector and his lady. Poor rates, in 1838, £568 15s. The village of Grimston is nearly a mile in length. Acres 4,240. Houses 179. A. P. £3,193. Pop., in 1801, 649; in 1831, 1,060.

GRIMSTON, a township in the parish of Dunnington, east riding of Yorkshire. Distance from York, 3 miles east-south-east. Acres 810. Houses 13. A. P. £524. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 70.

GRIMSTON (NORTH), a parish partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, partly in the wapentake of Buckrose, union of Malton, east riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of New Malton. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £162. Patron, the prebendary of Lantoft, in York cathedral. All tithes, &c. commuted in 1792. Here is a daily school endowed with £10 per annum. Acres 1,350. Houses 15. A. P. £1,319. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 16s.

GRIMSTON, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Wharf, upper division of the wapentake of Barkstone Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south of Tadcaster. Here is a daily school. Acres 600. Houses 19. A. P. £1,457. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 63. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 16s.

GRIMSTON, a township in the parish of Gilling, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south of Helmsley. Acres 930. Houses 10. A. P. £340. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 68. Poor rates, in 1838, £12 11s.

GRIMSTONE. See STRATTON WITH GRIMSTONE.

GRIMSWORTH HUNDRED, in the county of Hereford. It lies in the centre of the county. Area 40,740 acres. Houses 1,430. Pop., in 1831, 6,960.

GRIMTHORPE, a township in the parish of Gwendale, east riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Pocklington. Acres 480. Houses 3. A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1801, 16; in 1831, 19.

GRINDALL, a chapelry in the parish of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-west of Bridlington. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £5; gross income £57. Patron, in 1835, Y.

Græme, Esq. Acres 2,350. Houses 18. A. P. £898. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 121. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 16s.

GRINDLETON, a chapelry in the parish of Mitton, west division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Eweross, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-east by north of Clitheroe, bounded on the south-east by the river Ribble. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £4 3s.; gross income £85. Patron, the vicar of Mitton. Here is a daily National school, endowed with £5 per annum. Acres 3,760. Houses 197. A. P. £4,906. Pop., in 1801, 927; in 1831, 1,103. Poor rates, in 1838, £409 7s.

GRINDLEY. See TUSHINGHAM WITH GRINDLEY.

GRINDLOW, a township in the parish of Hope, county of Derby; 2½ miles east-north-east of Tideswell. Acreage with the parish. Houses 21. A. P. £405. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 87. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 18s.

GRINDON, a township in the parish of Norham, co.-palatine of Durham; 7 miles south-west of Berwick. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,380. Houses 26. A. P. £2,100. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 162. Poor rates, in 1838, £26.

GRINDON, a parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, co.-palatine of Durham; 5½ miles north-north-west of Stockton-upon-Tees, and in the neighbourhood of the Clarence railway. It includes the townships of Grindon and Whittton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £4 11s. 5½d.; gross income £142. Patrons, the master and brethren of Sherburn hospital. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Acres 3,900. Houses 71. A. P. £3,939. Pop., in 1801, 363; in 1831, 384. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 4s. Acres of the township, 2,880. Houses 59. A. P. £3,240. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 309. Poor rates, in 1838, £82 4s. See article WYNYARD.

GRINDON, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Totmonslow, county of Stafford; 7 miles east-south-east of Leek. It includes the township of Grindon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £15 14s. 2d.; gross income £341. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £357 6s. 11d. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Bradshaw. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £24 per annum. Acres 3,240. Houses 72. A. P. £3,998. Pop., in 1801, 388; in 1831, 431. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 13s. Houses of the township 33. A. P. £2,374. Pop., in 1821, 219; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £100 8s.

GRINGLEY-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the North Clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 6 miles east-south-east of Bawtry, and close upon the Chesterfield canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 18s. 4d.; gross income £207. Tithes commuted in 1796. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. Here are a daily and a day and boarding school. Charities in 1828, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £248 5s. Gringley was early noted for shoemaking, there being every year above 100, and some years near 200, shoemakers here. This is one of the polling-places for the members for East Retford. Here are several Saxon tumuli thrown up on mounds which themselves have very artificial aspects. A fair for cattle and merchandise, particularly boots and shoes, is annually held here on the 12th of December. Acres 4,280. Houses 164. A. P. £2,613. Pop., in 1801, 533; in 1831, 737.

GRINSDALE, a parish in Cumberland ward, union of Carlisle, county of Cumberland; 2½ miles north-west of Carlisle, on the river Eden, and intersected by the Ship canal, and the old Roman wall. Near the latter are two large square intrenchments. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; returned at £120; gross income £108. The church was rebuilt in 1739. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Daere. Acres 890. Houses 23. A. P. £825. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 135. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 19s.

GRINSHILL, a parish in the liberty of the town of Shrewsbury, union of Wem, county of Salop; 7 miles north-north-east of Shrewsbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £18 10s.; gross income £82. Patron, in 1835, John Wood, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities in 1830, £5 11s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 1s. Acres 970. Houses 41. A. P. £1,586. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 203.

GRINSTEAD (EAST). See EAST GRINSTEAD.

GRINSTEAD (WEST), a parish in the hund. of West Grinstead, union of Horsham, rape of Bramber, county of Sussex; 10 miles west of Grinstead, and 6 miles south of Horsham, on the river Adur. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £25 17s. 6d.; gross income £856. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 6,110. Houses 163. A. P. £4,223. Pop., in 1801, 939; in 1831, 1,292. Poor rates, in 1838, £957.

GRINTON, a parish, partly in the wapentake of Hang-West, and partly in the wapentake of Gilling, union of Richmond, north riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles west by south of Richmond, on the river Swale. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £12 5s. 7d.; gross income £220. The church is very ancient. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1791. There are 8 daily schools, several of which are endowed. The Fremington and the Reeth schools have each an endowment of upwards of £70 per annum: other charities £12 18s. 4d. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,677. Fairs for cloth, millinery, brass, pewter, and tin, are held on Good Friday, St. Thomas's day, and December 21st. At the source of a brook running through this parish, on its way to the river, is a curious cavern called Crack-pot, the entrance to which is extremely narrow. A few yards inwards is a spacious cavern which descends rather abruptly: at the bottom is a deep stream issuing out of the rock below, near which there is a curious pillar of solid stone. The narrow passages beyond are rather dangerous. Acres 49,810. Houses 976. A. P. £19,001. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Melbecks, Reeth, with the chapelry of Muker, 3,139; in 1831, 4,854.

GRISTHORPE, a township in the parish of Filey, north riding of Yorkshire. Acres 910. Houses 36. A. P. with Libberston, £2,527. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 217. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 17s.

GRISTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles south-east by east of Watton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 8s. 9d.; gross income £202. Patron, in 1835, F. Franklyn, Esq. The church was partly rebuilt in 1474. Charities, in 1834, £105 18s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £118. Acres 1,370. Houses 39. A. P. £242. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 203.

GRITTENHAM, a tything in the parish of Brinkworth, county of Wilts; 3½ miles west by north of Wootton-Basset. Houses 27. Pop., in 1811, 132; in 1831, 148. Other returns with the parish.

GRITTLETON, a parish in the hund. of North Damerham, union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Chippenham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 10s.; gross income £390. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. W. Burne. The Baptists have here a place of worship; and there are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,060. Houses 76. A. P. £3,444. Pop., in 1801, 340; in 1831, 438. Poor rates, in 1838, £244 14s.

GRONDRE, a township in the parish of Kilymaen-llwyd, county of Pembroke, South Wales. Houses 5. A. P. £80. Pop., in 1801, 37; in 1831, 23.

GROOBY, a hamlet, formerly a market-town, in the parish of Ratby, county of Leicester; 5 miles north-west of Leicester, in the immediate vicinity of the Leicester and Sweamington railway. Tithes commuted in 1789. The country in this vicinity is diversified with hill and dale, and well supplied with meadows. Groby pool, a fine sheet of water, extends over about 80 acres, and adjacent to it are some slight vestiges of the site of a castle built by Hugh de Grentemaisnel, and which was demolished about 1176, when in possession of Robert Blanchmains, earl of Leicester. Lambard's account of its demolition is this:—"Kinge Henry II. havinge issue, a young gentleman called Henry also, and for the instruction of the prince, which was inheritable to the same, to crowne him kinge in his owne life; but eyther he had not learned, or did not remember thold lesson, nulla fides regni, nulla sancta societas est; for he proved to his great sorrowe, that the young kinge thoughte the son of his father's glorye to longe above the earth, and was thereby so swollen in pride that his father was constraigned in great greif of mynde for to say, poenitet me fecisse hominem. Theare wanted not also amongst the nobilitie that (desyrous of a change) ministred matter to this fyre, amongst whome Robert, earle of Leycester was one, withe whome the kinge taking just offence beseiged and spoyled his towne of Leycester, and not longe after toke him also by occasion of this, suche as he had placed in Groby, and Mountsorrel in Notinghamshyre, came and yielded themselves to the kinge at Huntingdon, and desyred that their lord might be mercifully entreated. The king accepted their surrender; but it was not longe before he rased to the grounde the castles of Leycester, Huntingdon, Walton, Groby, and some other of the earles." Acreage with the parish. Houses 63. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 335.

GROOMBRIDGE, a chapelry in the parish of Speldhurst, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent; 4 miles west-south-west of Tunbridge-Wells. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Speldhurst. Fairs for cattle and pedlery are held on May 17th, and September 25th. Other returns with the parish.

GROSMONT, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Skenfrith, union of Dore, county of Monmouth; 10 miles north-west by north of Monmouth, and bounded on the north and east by the river Monnow. Acres 5,810. Houses 128. A. P. £4,421. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 690. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £6 5s. 2½d.; gross income £152. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here, endowed with the interest of £800. Other charities, in 1833, £26 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £302 10s. The small but pleasant village of Grosmont "is situated in an undulating valley, diversified with wood and pasture, and beautifully accompanied by the meandering Monnow. Though at present this place consists of an assemblage of small cottages only, it was formerly of more importance, and is yet governed by a mayor and burgesses. According to tradition, it once formed a town of considerable extent, and had a market held at the foot of the Graig. On an eminence at the south-east end of the village, and swelling above the river is the picturesque ruin of its castle; a pile of no great extent, but well disposed, and profusely decorated with shrubs and ivy. The form of this structure is irregular: large circular towers cover the angles of the ramparts; within which are traces of the baronial hall, and other apartments, and beyond the mount are some remains of the barbican, or redoubt, and several intrenchments. It is surrounded by a dry moat. All the door and window arches are pointed Gothic, and of the proportion in use about the 13th century; but the foundation of the castle is supposed to be coeval with that of Skenfrith's. The environs of the castle are delightful; the vale frequently swells into gentle eminences clothed with trees: on one side the view is bounded by the Graig, and on the other by the Garway, enriched and ornamented by the enchanting woods and plantations of Kentchurch park. This fortress was invested by the Welsh troops under prince Llewelyn, but before he could take it 'the king came,' says Lambard, 'with a great army, to raise the seige, whereof as soon as the Welshman had understandinge, they saved their lives by their legges.' In a subsequent expedition, the Welsh succeeded in cutting off the provisions of the royal army, obliging them to retreat; and while waiting for supplies they were surprised while asleep in the trenches, and deprived of 500 horses, baggage, waggons, &c. This castle was the favourite residence of the earls of Lancaster. The church continues to bespeak the former consequence of the place, for it is a large handsome structure, in the pointed style, with an octagonal tower. It is in the cathedral form, consisting of a nave, with two aisles, a transept, and a chancel. Many exterior traces of buildings, and raised causeways, constructed like Roman roads with large blocks of stone diverging from it, prove its antique extent and importance to have been considerable. Parts of these yet remain, measuring from 9 to 12 feet broad. The legend of this place recounts, with voluble earnestness, the exploits of their reputed necromancer, John of Kent."—Camb. Traveller's Guide. A market-day is held here on Tuesday; and there are fairs, principally for cattle, on August 10th and October 9th.

GROSMONT, or GROMOND, a hamlet in the parish of Egton, north riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles west-south-west of Whitby. Here, in the reign of King John, Joanna, the daughter of William Fossard, wife to Robert de Turnham, gave a parcel of land to the abbot and convent of Grandmont, or Gramont, in France, who settled it upon a convent of monks of their own order. When these alien priories became objects of jealousy to the English government, the abbot obtained leave to sell his right in this cell to John Hewit or Serjeant, in consequence of which it seems to have become 'Prioratus Indigena,' and to have subsisted till the dissolution, when there were not above four monks in it, whose revenues were rated at £12 2s. 8d. The site was granted, 35^o Henry VIII., to Edward Wright, Esq. From the ruins of the convent a spacious farm-house with out-offices were afterwards erected at the west end of the priory church.

GROTON, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Hadleigh. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 1s. 8d.; no return. Patrons, in 1835, J. W. Willet and others. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1828, £17 15s. per annum. There are also several almshouses. Poor rates, in 1838, £270 12s. Acres 1,580. Houses 117. A. P. £1,719. Pop., in 1801, 516; in 1831, 577.

GROVE, a hamlet in the parish of Wantage, county of Berks; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Wantage, intersected by the Wilts and Berks canal, and near the Great Western railway. Here is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 113. A. P. £3,719. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 520. Poor rates, in 1838, £173 4s.

GROVE, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Leighton-Buzzard, county of Buckingham; 2 miles south of Leighton-Buzzard, intersected by the Wendover canal, and in the line of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £63. Patron, the Earl of Chesterfield. Acres 210. Houses 4. A. P. £791. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 21. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 12s.

GROVE, a parish in South Clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of East Retford. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 14s. 2d.; gross income £155. Patron, in 1835, A. H. Eyre, Esq. Here is a daily school. Levinz's almshouse is endowed with £10 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 7s. Acres 1,500. Houses 20. A. P. £1,074. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 121.

GROVEBURY, a manor in the parish of Leighton-Buzzard, county of Bedford, given by Henry II. to the nuns of Fontevralt in Normandy, in lieu of a yearly pension granted them out of the exchequer by Henry I., whence it was settled with a convent of foreign monks. In consequence of the wars with France, it suffered the fate of the other alien priories, and after various grants of it by different monarchs, it came at last to the dean and canons of Windsor.—See Tanner, &c.

GRUMBALD'S-ASH HUNDRED, in the county of Gloucester. It lies in the south-east corner of the county. Area 40,670 acres. Houses 1,849. Pop., in 1831, 9,736.

GRUNDISBURGH, a parish in the hund. of Carleford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north-west by west of Woodbridge, in the line of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £17 11s. 3d.; gross income £485. The Baptists have here a place of worship; and there are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1829, £43 19s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £386 16s. Acres 1,420. Houses 105. A. P. £2,844. Pop., in 1801, 641; in 1831, 835.

GRUNTY-FEN-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty in the south division of the hund. of Wichford, isle of Ely, county of Cambridge. Acres 1,990. House 1. Pop., in 1831, 10.

GRWYNEY, or GROYNÉ-VAWR, a hamlet in the parish of Talgarth, county of Brecon, South Wales; 3 miles north-east of Talgarth. Tithes, with those of Grwyney, or Groyne-Vechan, commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £65, due to the dean and canons of St. George's chapel, Windsor, and £25 6s. 3d. to the vicar of Talgarth. Houses 4. A. P. £100. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 21. Poor rates, in 1838, £5 14s.

GRWYNEY, or GROYNÉ-VECHAN, a hamlet in the same parish with the above. Houses 20. A. P. £473. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 13s.

GUAHALL, one of the Scilly isles. It lies to the west of Brechar, and contains about 10 acres.

GUASH (THE). See RUTLANDSHIRE.

GUELDBALE, a township in the parish of Leek, north riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north-north-east of Thirsk. Acres with Nether-Silton 2,610. Houses 34. A. P. £395. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 4s.

GUERNSEY,

An island in the great gulf, or bay, of St. Michael, in the English channel, 7 to 8 leagues west of the Normandy coast, but subject to the British Crown, and frequently treated of, in topographical works, under article Southamptonshire. It is situated between 49° 24', and 49° 33' N. lat., and 2° 32', and 2° 48' W. long. It is distant about 108 miles south-west of Southampton; 94 south-west of Portsmouth; and 51 south of Portland. In relation to others of the channel islands, it is 7 leagues north-west of Jersey; 5 south-west of Alderney; and 2 west of Sarke. The two last are dependencies of Guernsey, as are Herm and Jethou, which serve to shelter the roadstead of Guernsey, but are otherwise of no importance. The form of this island is triangular, and its whole circumference,—upwards of 30 miles,—is deeply indented with commodious bays and harbours. Its length from north-east to south-west is about 12 miles: its breadth from north to south about 9. It contains 25 square miles, or 16,000 acres. Houses 3,476. Pop., in 1831, 24,349.

Physical aspect, &c.—The face of the country is varied with hills and little eminences, and it is tolerably well watered with springs and fine clear gravelly streams, many of them sufficiently copious to turn overshot mill-wheels. On the north or vale side, the coast, except a few rocky cairns and hillocks, is commonly low and flat, rising gradually, from a level very little above high water-mark, to the south side, which is intersected by deep ravines, while the cliffs on the coast rise precipitately to the height of 270 feet above sea-level. Off the land, at various distances, the island is surrounded with sunk rocks and crags, by which—together with the confluence of sea currents and tides rising frequently to the height of 32 feet,—at some places even to a much greater height—the approach is rendered extremely hazardous to strangers.* Amongst the curiosities of the coast is La Cave Mahie, at the foot of a rock, on a level with the sea, near Prevolet-point. It is upwards of 200 feet deep; and from the entrance, which is about 10 feet in breadth and 6 in height, it extends to 50 feet in either direction, and terminates in granite points. From one of the steep and rugged rocks by which the coast is defended, emeral, or emery, a substance used by lapidaries and cutlers in polishing precious stones, steel, &c., is collected. There was at one time a fine lake on this beautiful island. It was about half a league in extent, but was filled up and turned into a meadow. Many of the opulent inhabitants, however, have still very beautiful and convenient fish-ponds. The houses lie scattered throughout all the island; Peter's Port being the only town. Mansions, farm-houses, and even cottages, are handsomely built and delightfully surrounded by orchards. The scenery in general, however, is not much ornamented with trees; and though excellent elm and good oak, particularly the former, are commonly met with, there is nothing here that can be called a wood: coppices are equally rare. The fields are commonly divided either by stone fences, or by turf banks surmounted with furze. There are now good roads leading through the island from Peter's Port, but the other and older roads are very indifferent.

* A safeguard is thus afforded against foreign invasion, while every part of the coast is fortified with breast-works and batteries, besides the regular fort and citadel: the whole is properly manned with military forces. There are also barracks in the island for 5,000 men; and a militia of 2,000 men has been organized. There were anciently four castles in the island, the principal of which is Castle-cornet, at St. Peter's Port,—to be afterwards described. The castle in the marshes appears to have been a Norman structure: the site is laid out in garden ground belonging to the governor. The Vale-castle occupies a commanding eminence near St. Sampson's harbour, and has still its ramparts mounted with cannon, and barracks for troops. The Castle du Grand Geoffrey stood in the parish of St. Mary de Castro: there are no remains of it now existing.

Soil, produce, trade, &c.—The soil rests almost entirely on granite, and some of the heights are composed of granitic columns, apparently raised by the operation of a vertical power. In the vale the soil is rich and fertile, and yields very fine pasture. That of the higher parts affords plentiful harvests; and even the steep cliffs are covered with verdure to the water's edge. Nevertheless, in the western and northern quarters of the island there is a considerable quantity of waste land covered with furze, which is cut for fuel. Vegetables are produced in great variety and excellent quality. One of the most useful of the natural productions is a marine plant, called by the generic name of vrac, which is used for manure; and also for fuel, as wood is not plentiful, and coals require to be imported from England, &c. To prevent the indiscreet destruction of the vrac by the inhabitants, two seasons only, Midsummer and Michaelmas, are appointed for its collection. By manuring the land with this sea-weed, which is spread over it for some time, and then ploughed in, a succession of crops is obtained without impoverishing the earth. Fallow is seldom or never allowed. The lands are clean and well cultivated; agriculture being studied and practised with much assiduity and success. The general produce is similar to that in the west of England. Grazing and the cultivation of wheat are particularly attended to. The wheat and oats are reaped in the usual manner, but a strange custom has prevailed of pulling up barley by the roots, and piling it up in sheaves of a singular spiral form. The annual average growth of wheat is estimated at about 4,000 quarters; of barley at somewhat less. The Guernsey cows are highly celebrated; and the milk which they yield is so peculiarly rich, that it is not necessary to let it stand for a deposit of cream; the whole being amenable to the operation of the churn at once. While at pasture in the fields, the cows, like those of Jersey, are tethered together, so that the fields may be regularly cropped across, and new grass as regularly arise; and in the orchards in which the under grass crop is always used as pasture, the head of each is attached to the feet to prevent the animal from injuring itself by eating the apples, &c. Cows are sometimes exported to England where they sell at high prices.* Swine are numerous, and grow to a large size, affording excellent pork. They are generally fed with parsnips, the culture of which for fattening these, and for winter fodder to cattle, or for fattening them also, is much attended to. Few sheep are bred or fattened here: fat sheep, as well as oxen for beef, are generally brought from England or France. The insular breed of horses is poor: they are ill-shaped and have been worse kept, which must have debased their breed. No reptiles are seen in Guernsey, except the blind worm, a harmless snake, and some few lizards which frequent the furze lands. "More favoured, as to climate, than even Undercliff in the Isle of Wight, Guernsey emulates the genial lands of the south. The fig-tree attains great luxuriance, and sometimes reaches a remarkable size. This is literally the land of the citron and the myrtle. In the midst of a cider district, and besides the fig, there are sweet and Seville oranges, melons, &c. In January there are peas a foot in height, and blooming flowers. In summer you luxuriate among the flowers and foliage of the myrtle, aloe, lemon-scented vervain,—rising for more than 20 feet above your head, contending with a camelia japonica of equal growth,—the fuschia, 8 feet high; the magnolia, nerium oleander, cistus, ceitis macrantha; and the Guernsey lily, or Amaryllis Sarniensis, a most beautiful flower, supposed to be a native of Japan, and introduced by accident; but though here cultivated to perfection, never found to blow a second time in France nor England, where thousands are exported. Guernsey, nevertheless, is 3 degrees lower in temperature than Jersey." Snow, however, never lies above one or two days, and the summer's heat is always tempered by breezes from the sea. Though European fruits of almost all sorts grow in profusion, the chief fruit cultivated in the orchards is the apple; vast quantities of which are made into cider, and consumed in the island. It is the principal beverage of the inhabitants. The produce of the ocean in this vicinity is very various and abundant; and, in former times, most of the religious houses in Normandy were supplied from the fishery on this coast. Among the most common and plentiful fish are mackerel, sea-pike, whiting, pollack, bream, and rock-fish. There are also mullets, soles, and plaice, together with conger eels, sometimes weighing 30 or 40 lbs. In the reign of Edward I. and II., a duty was imposed on congers salted for export. Shell fish are no less abundant, amongst which are oysters, lobsters, and crabs of great size, and the ormer or sear, a fish which seems peculiar to this and the neighbouring islands. The mineral produce of the island consists principally of its fine granite, which is rather extensively exported to England for pavement, &c. At Grande Rocque are quarried large masses of sienite of the same quality as the beautiful stone of that species at Mont Mado in Jersey. It is used at Portsmouth, London, &c., for building and paving. Numerous vessels belonging to Guernsey, and averaging 100 tons burthen—but some of them much larger—are employed in the exports and imports of the island. Commercial in-light red, yellow, and white. The points of excellence are 20, viz.,—1. Pedigree of the bull, as well as the cow; yellow ears, tail, and good udder, 7 points. 2. General appearance; colour, cream, light red, or both, mixed with white, 3 points. 3. Handsome head, well horned; and bright and prominent eye, 4 points. 4. Deep barrel-shaped body, 3 points. 5. Good hind quarters, and straight back, 2 points. 6. Handsome legs, and small bone, 1 point. This classification of points of excellence, however, is not rigidly adhered to. It has been stated of the Guernsey cows, young and old, that the general average is rather more than 365 lbs. of butter in the year, being equal to one lb. of butter, or eight quarts of milk, in the 24 hours. But the proof of the superiority of the Guernsey cow, most triumphantly appealed to, is the superiority of Guernsey butter.

* In England, no difference between Guernsey and Jersey or Alderney cows is understood; but the number of the latter exported being by far the greater, they are generally better known to the jobbers. The Guernsey cattle are considerably larger than those of Jersey, and it appears from the evidence of the clerk of the market, that an ox has attained the weight of 1,500 lbs. Quail, in his report, says, those of 1,200 lbs., or 60 score, appear not unfrequently. It is said that a Guernsey cow, when its nativity is distinctly known, and when offered among those best able to judge, fetches a higher price than the Jersey cow. The importation into Guernsey or Jersey of any other than the native breed is prohibited under a severe penalty. Nay, it is said that a Guernsey farmer would not on any account admit even a Jersey cow on his grounds. The following is the description and standard of excellence of a Guernsey cow, transmitted by one well versed in these matters. Colour:

seacourse is also constantly maintained by vessels from England, Ireland, and the continent. Timber and cordage being, like almost every thing else, admitted duty free into Guernsey, a great many vessels are built here. Previously to the act of parliament passed in 1807, subjecting the Anglo-Norman islands to our revenue laws, commercial pursuits were, in a great degree, superseded by smuggling both in Guernsey and the rest of these islands. Since that period, the people have turned their attention much to foreign trade, which has been chiefly carried on with the Spanish and Portuguese establishments in America, with Newfoundland, and with various European ports. Guernsey was at one time the grand depot of all the foreign wines and brandies imported to London, and many other ports in this country; but after the establishment of the London docks, &c., this lucrative system of warehousing was entirely lost.

Steamers ply regularly between Guernsey and various ports. Weymouth, distant 72 miles, has been considered the principal point of intercourse with England. The English mail is regularly despatched from Guernsey, Jersey, &c., by her majesty's packet to Weymouth. A steamer at present leaves London bridge wharf for Guernsey and Jersey, the 10th, 20th, and 30th of every month, and returns from the islands on the 5th, 15th, and 25th: fares 20s. to 30s. Another steamer plies during summer between Falmouth, Plymouth, Guernsey, Jersey, and France. The Southampton steamers run every week to Guernsey and Jersey from Southampton, which is now connected with London by railway. Lists of the passengers' names appear to be published in the newspapers here on the arrival of the steamers.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—“This isle was pagan—and some of the heathen altars still remain, called poquelays—till anno 565, when Christianity was planted here by St. Magloire, who lies buried in a chapel in the parish of St. Saviour, still bearing his name.”—Mag. Brit. 1738. Childbert, king of France, annexed Guernsey and the other channel islands to the archbishopric of Dola. The bishop of Constance in Normandy afterwards held the ecclesiastical government; and, after the English reformation, refused to abjure the pope's supremacy in England, as the other bishops belonging to that crown had done. In the reign of King Edward, however, the English liturgy was used, though in that of Queen Mary the isles again conformed to the Roman doctrines. When Elizabeth restored the reformation, she took the episcopal jurisdiction from the diocese of Constance, and annexed it to that of Winchester. At this time “these isles were full of Frenchmen, who had fled hither from the persecutions of their own country, and some of their ministers had gotten possession of two of the chief churches, viz., St. Peter's Port here, and St. Helier in Jersey, and introduced the Geneva discipline, for which they sent a deputation to that queen, to beg her permission, that all the churches might be so modelled; but the queen utterly denied to grant it, yet allowed it to be continued in those churches. This did not discourage the ministers, but they went on to erect their worship, and having brought the English liturgy into contempt and disuse, convened two synods at Peter Port in Guernsey, to settle their form of classical discipline, which they digested into 20 chapters; the governors, contrary to the queen's order, agreeing to it, that they might keep possession of the dean's lands. Cartwright and Snape, the two famous English presbyterians, were at these assemblies. When King James I. came to the crown, they renewed their request for the settlement of their church government; and upon a suggestion, that Queen Elizabeth had allowed it, obtained a confirmation of it; but Sir John Payton being sent governor, happened to have a contest with the colloquy or assembly, about the presenting to vacant benefices, in which the latter showed so much pride and insolence, that most of the chief men of the isles joined in a petition to have the liturgy and English church government settled among them; which was so acceptable to that king, that he immediately appointed a new dean and ministers, who being ordered to draw up a body of canons, which Archbishop Abbot, and the bishop of Lincoln and Winchester corrected, they obtained the royal assent, January 30, Reg. 21, and so the settlement was made, which has continued ever since.”—Mag. Brit. 1738. Guernsey thus constitutes a deanery in the diocese of Winchester. The religious services are still marked by traits of the Calvinistic discipline which prevailed till the time of Charles II.

Of the 10 parishes into which the island is divided, St. Peter's Port is the chief one. The living is a rectory; rated at £12; gross income £360. Patron, the governor. To the church there are two chapels-of-ease—Trinity chapel and Bethel chapel; gross income of the former £160; of the latter £100. Patrons, the proprietors. St. James's church may also be accounted a chapel-of-ease; gross income £165. Acres 1,728. Houses 2,864. Pop., in 1821, 11,173; in 1831, 13,893.—St. Samson's is a rectory, with the vicarage of the Vale annexed; rated at £5; gross income £130. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 183. Houses 187. Pop., in 1831, 1,109.—Torteval is a rectory, united with that of Forest; rated at £5; gross income £82. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 72. Houses 78. Pop., in 1831, 378. Acres of the Forest 117. Houses 145. Pop., in 1831, 695.—St. Saviour is a rectory; rated at £10; gross income £90. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 201. Houses 225. Pop., in 1831, £1,073.—St. Peter of the Wood is a rectory; rated at £11; gross income £91. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 218. Houses 264. Pop., in 1831, 1,191.—St. Martin's is a rectory; rated at £11 13s. 4d.; gross income £138. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 270. Houses 366. Pop., in 1831, 1,652.—St. Mary de Castro is a rectory; rated at £10; gross income £106. In the patronage of the governor. Acres 287. Houses 351. Pop., in 1831, 1,937.—St. Andrews is a rectory; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; no return. Acres 169. Houses 196. Pop., in 1831, 1,011.

The old churches all partake of the pointed, English, or Gothic style; but the most ancient have been greatly altered, if not entirely renovated, since the date of their dedication. They were all consecrated between the years 1111 and 1312: that of St. Samson appears to be of the greatest antiquity. There are many dissenters in the island. The Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, especially the latter, are very numerous, and have chapels, or meeting-houses for their accommodation. The Roman Catholics are few. The Society of Friends, or Quakers, established themselves here about the year 1782, and are increasing in numbers. There are also Baptists, Independents, &c. In the Vale parish there was a small priory or monastery of Benedictines, founded about the year 962 by the monks of Mount St. Michael, Normandy; and in St. Saviour's parish was the priory of Libou, founded in 1114, on a small island of that name which communicates with the mainland at low water.

Town of St. Peter's.—St. Peter's Port, the seat of government, and the only town in Guernsey, is situated on the side of a hill nearly at the middle of the east coast in 49° 26' N. lat., and 2° 42' W. long.

It extends along the coast, and towards the interior for a considerable distance. The streets in the lower or old part of the town are narrow and inconvenient, but in the upper they are very superior. The town and suburbs have been much extended and improved. One work alone, namely, the opening of a new street into the town, the erection of a market-house in it, and the purchase of the neighbouring land, cost the local States £80,000. The profits of this undertaking have enabled the States to erect another market-house, for the sale of fish. This building is on a magnificent scale. There are towns in England containing four times the population of the whole island of Guernsey, that cannot boast of a market-house equal to it. The public buildings here are generally built on an extensive scale. A college for the education of the middle class of the island has been erected at an expense of £40,000. There is a National school in the town. The government house is a handsome and substantial edifice, occupied by the lieutenant-governor, to whom the executive duties are generally deputed by the military governor: both are appointed by the Crown. A spacious court of justice and a new prison have been built. In the outskirts of the town stands the town hospital, one of two peculiar and excellent establishments to be afterwards described. The town has a public library, assembly rooms, and theatre. There is an excellent harbour formed by a pier extending northwards 460 feet; southwards 757 feet. The entrance to it is defended by Castle-cornet, a fortress built upon a rock, and strongly defended by batteries on all sides. Its foundation has been ascribed to the Romans, and has also been attributed to Duke Robert, the father of William the Conqueror. It was repaired in Queen Mary's days by Sir Leonard Chamberlain, Knt., governor of the island, and was afterwards strengthened with new works in Queen Elizabeth's days by his successor Thomas Leighton. The governor formerly resided here, "and would not suffer any Frenchman or woman to enter it upon any pretence whatsoever."—Mag. Brit. 1738. It formerly consisted of a keep, now made into casemates, and an outer-wall of great thickness flanked by several machicolated towers; but in 1672 it was much injured during a thunder-storm by an explosion of the magazine; and it has been much altered by modern engineers. Within the barriers of the town there is but a small proportion of the total number of houses. Fort-George, at a short distance south of the town, occupies a commanding eminence. There is a pleasant promenade called the New ground.

Government of the island, &c.]—Guernsey is annexed to the crown of Great Britain; but it is contended that the authority of the sovereign is exercised only in virtue of the ancient claim to the duchy of Normandy; and, therefore, that the power of legislation is vested in the sovereign and council, not in parliament. Neither parliament nor council, however, interfere on ordinary occasions with the internal regulations of the island. Both the judicial and executive authorities are exercised by a convention of several different bodies, collectively designated the Assembly of the States. The whole consisted of a bailiff, 12 jurats, the procureur, or attorney-general of the royal court, the 8 rectors of the 10 parishes, 2 constables from each parish, and 132 douzainiers from the whole. But the task of raising money, to defray public expenses, is committed to what is called the States of Deliberation, a political body, composed of the bailiff, 12 jurats, and a procureur, the 8 rectors of the 10 parishes, and the united voice of the constables and douzainiers of each parish; the total number of voters being 32. Unless in cases of peculiar emergency, application must, however, be made to the sovereign, for permission to carry into effect the levies proposed by this convention. The revenue of the states amounts, it is said, to about £10,000 per annum, and consists in the general taxes, the harbour dues, the duties levied yearly upon licensed victuallers, or retailers of liquors in general, and the produce of lotteries, &c.; which, without overburdening the people by excessive taxation, afford ample provision for every necessity. The royal court consists of a bailiff, named by the king, and 12 jurats, chosen by the members of the states, who serve for life, unless discharged by the sovereign in council. The officers belonging to this court are the procureur, or attorney-general, the comptroller, the provost, or crown sheriff, the greffier, or registrar, and the crown serjeant. The royal court dispenses justice in all the other islands except Jersey. The legal institutions are a mixture of English with Norman law, precedent, and custom, and, in criminal cases, with the judgment of the assessors themselves. It is thought by some that the code by which justice is thus administered is scanty and imperfect: by others, that the simple institutions of the island are perfectly competent to the task of its internal regulation. The following are striking peculiarities of legal custom:—the children of parents who may have lived for years in open adultery, but who afterwards marry, are considered legitimate, and are entitled to inheritance, as is the case in Scotland:—it is even said that "by a singular anomaly there is no law against bigamy, which, according to some authorities, is prevalent; so that, if the natives were not sober and economical, it would not be impossible for them to be as blest with wives as a true believer."—an insolvent person is exonerated from his debts, on delivering, upon oath, the whole of his property, except his clothes, bed, and arms, and promising to make good the deficiency, if he should in future possess the power. Formerly, the insolvent claiming benefit under this law was compelled to wear a green cap, and to divest himself of his girdle; but these badges of humiliation have been discontinued.

Customs, condition, &c.]—The inhabitants of Guernsey are distinguished by several peculiarities from those of the rest of the British dominions. The old Norman French is generally spoken by all ranks; but there is usually a sufficient acquaintance with the English language among the upper classes. Most of the natives have a greater resemblance to the French than to the English nation; and, indeed, from continued intermarriage, some of these islanders are purer Normans than those on the continent. All their domestic utensils and implements of husbandry are after the French fashion, as also their dresses and mode of living. These, however, among the higher ranks, have been greatly modified by their increasing intercourse with England. The dwellings of the peasantry are considered by some to be very mean: by others to be remarkably neat and comfortable. One article of rural furniture appears to require notice for its peculiarity:—in the corner of the ordinary sitting-room of every cottage, is what the inmates call the 'lit de veille,' a wide bed-frame, raised about 18 inches from the ground, and covered with dry fern, or potatoe straw, on which the young men and women of the house or neighbourhood occasionally lounge, as on a common couch or sofa, only they are seated feet to feet in a circle. All classes are fond of dancing, especially at festivals. Riding in parties in the month of August, through the island,—a custom supposed to be derived from an ancient procession of the abbot of St. Michael,—is a favourite amusement among the country people; most of the females being, it is said, mounted after the fashion of men. The common people still retain those characteristics of temperance and sobriety, for which their ancestors were distinguished, in the 12th century, as we are informed by honest old William of Malmesbury. An ordinary article of food amongst the farmers and peasantry, is a kind of soup made of cabbages, fat, flour, and dry bacon; and this seemingly uninviting dish, improved with a little beef, is not only said to be a favourite holiday fare, but has also been found at the tables of the gentry. Popular superstitions are fast disappearing, though it has been set forth, in prejudice to the worthy islanders in general, that because, not many years since, the royal court found it necessary, on one occasion, to interpose its influence in discouraging witchfinders, "the natives of this island still entertain some absurd superstitions:" it has even been rather ineptly and ultra-censoriously recorded, that, more recently still, attempts were made to revive the apparition of the Bete latwa, an imaginary spectre, supposed to perambulate the town of St. Peter's Port at Christmas:—with equal significance might even more recent attempts of a somewhat similar, but much less harmless, description, which occurred in England itself, be recorded as a general accusation of "absurd superstitions" amongst the natives there. The social interchanges of life are said to be "much embarrassed among those who dwell in the principal town, by an attention to the different classes or gradations of rank, in preference to a selection of company founded on the claims of merit and good fellowship. This pertinacity of adherence to degree," it is added, "is truly ridiculous, as well as troublesome, when it descends even to the retail traders of a small island possessing no native nobility." It has also been stated that "mediocrity, rather bordering on poverty, seems to prevail throughout the country; and a rigid economy is consequently practised:—on the whole, however, a totally different, although, it may be, somewhat too exclusively favourable an aspect, on the other hand, has recently been given to the general condition of Guernsey by a highly intelligent observer, whose comprehensive and rather interesting statements are as follow:—

"The happiest community which it has ever been my lot to fall in with is to be found in the little island of Guernsey.* The pictures of want, filth, and crime, which so frequently shock the eye of humanity in our own country, and which appear to a still greater extent in Ireland, and many parts of France, are not to be met with in Guernsey; but in their stead are to be seen the happy signs of abundance, comfort, and contentment. The poor man has his neat little house, is surrounded by his cheerful family, and is under no apprehension that he shall not be able, with moderate labour, to provide a full meal and a comfortable lodging for all who are dependent upon him. What are the causes of this superior state of things in Guernsey? Why is it, that, within so short a distance of places where the pining labourer is but half fed and half clad, the man of Guernsey should have a well-stored board and abundance of clothing? The climate is not peculiar; the land is not remarkably fertile. The southern parts of England are quite equal to Guernsey in both these particulars. How is it then that Guernsey should be so much ahead in the career of happiness?

—Guernsey has superior laws—superior institutions. And the state of things in Guernsey is one among the thousand proofs that have been given, that the prosperity and happiness of a people are much more dependent on its laws, institutions, and the manner in which its government is carried on, than on climate and fertility of the soil. I have twice visited the island of Guernsey under circumstances favourable for becoming acquainted with its condition: and in the hopes of directing general attention to a model from which much might with advantage be adopted, I will give a brief account of what fell under my observation.

"One of the most striking changes which the visiter, whether from England or France, meets with on his landing in Guernsey, is the entire absence of beggars. That miserable compound of imposture and real distress—the wandering mendicant—is there unknown. A tradesman who has been established at St. Peter's Port for upwards of thirty years, assured me that during the whole period of his residence in the island he had never once seen a beggar. For myself, I neither saw nor heard of one: and I was satisfied, from all I learnt, that a beggar is in Guernsey a being of a past age—a creation of history—a fit subject for the speculations of the antiquary—but too completely covered with the dust of ancient times, for those of the present day to examine. Not only is the island free from beggars, but it is free also from those debasing but unfortunate creatures whom the twilight of evening brings forth from their hiding-places, like swarms of moths, to join the giddy dance round the flame that is soon to destroy them. Prostitution proceeds from the same sources as mendicancy—want and ignorance; and where the latter is not found, the former will rarely be met with. Be that as it may, however, the fact is, that the streets and roads of Guernsey are not disgraced by the appearance either of the prostitute or the beggar.

"Two establishments, called the Town and Country hospitals, exist in the island, to which all persons are sent, who, for any reasons whatever, are unable to obtain an honest livelihood. In these establishments are to be found females who would otherwise be living by prostitution—the habitual drunkard—the lunatic—the destitute orphan—all have here an asylum, and are removed from the temptation and misery to which they would otherwise be exposed. I visited the town hospital, situated, not in the town itself, but in the outskirts, and I was very much gratified with what I saw. The scene was a busy one. The men were occupied, some in weaving cloth, some as tailors, others as shoemakers, &c. The women were engaged principally in washing. In addition to the washing for the hospital, a great deal is taken in from families living in the neighbourhood; and by this means the women do much towards paying the expense of their maintenance. The greater part of the cloth, shoes, &c., which the men manufacture, is sold. The men are also employed as scavengers. By thus employing the men and women at profitable labour instead of setting them to turn a great stone, as is done in some of our parishes, the expense of the maintenance of the inmates of the hospital is greatly reduced. The average yearly expense of each inmate is not more than seven pounds, notwithstanding that at least half of those in the hospitals are boys and girls who produce but little, being the greater part of the day in school; and, notwithstanding, also, that there are many lunatics and infirm people, who are of course unable to do any thing towards their own support. The number of inmates in the town and country hospitals together is about three hundred, and their expense to the island is about £2,000 a-year. The arrangements of the hospitals, and the discipline maintained in them, are excellent; at the same time, the inmates are treated with great kindness, are allowed an abundance of good wholesome food, and are well clothed and lodged. Those whose conduct deserves reward are frequently allowed to visit their friends for a day or so: but if the privilege is abused, and, for instance, if any one returns to the hospital in a state of intoxication, he is not allowed to leave the hospital again for several months. On the whole, whether we regard these hospitals as asylums from misery, or as schools of morality, I must say that I have never yet seen any institutions in this country that would bear comparison with them.

* "I have in most cases confined the following observations to Guernsey, because I can speak of what relates to that island from my own observation. The other islands I have not had an opportunity of examining. Much, however, which I may say respecting Guernsey, would apply equally to Jersey and the other Norman isles."

"There are many causes which co-operate in preventing any numerous class of the people of Guernsey from sinking into that state of poverty which leads to crime and misery. In the first place, all the necessities of life are exceedingly cheap. Wheat during the last twenty years has been about two-thirds of the price at which it has been sold in England. In the summer of 1830, when I last visited Guernsey, wheat was twenty shillings (Guernsey money) per quarter, in the measure of the island. This price is the same as forty-six shillings English money for an English quarter. The price of wheat in England, at the same time, was sixty or seventy shillings per quarter. I need scarcely say, after mentioning the price of wheat, that our corn laws do not extend to Guernsey. Wheat, as indeed every thing else, with the single exception of tea, can be freely imported into Guernsey. In the year 1815, when the rigour of the English corn laws was greatly increased, it was intended to extend the corn laws to Guernsey, and the other Norman isles; but the inhabitants bestirred themselves, and succeeded in warding off this terrible blow to their prosperity. For their success in this struggle they were in a great measure indebted to the exertions of Mr. Brock, the judge or bailiff, as he was termed, of Guernsey—a gentleman who appears on all occasions to have been the good genius of the island. The inhabitants of each of the islands presented Mr. Brock with a piece of plate as a token of gratitude for his services on the occasion in question. The people of the Norman isles are not only allowed to import corn for their own use from wheresoever they choose, but they are permitted to export all the corn they themselves can grow to England. This being the case, the people, of course, consume but very little of the wheat their own islands produce. This latter supply is kept for the English market; so that there is the singular anomaly constantly going on of corn from the Baltic actually sailing by the coasts of England to supply the people of the Norman isles, and to enable them to send to England the wheat which is growing at their own doors.

"Provisions of other kinds are at prices proportionately low with those of wheat. The ordinary price of good meat is fourpence per pound; that of moist sugar, from threepence to fourpence a pound; potatoes sell for threepence a peck; the price of butter varies from sevenpence to tenpence per pound. Tea, though cheap compared with the price in England, [the price of the best black tea is from half-a-crown to three shillings a pound,] is dearer than it otherwise would be, did not the monopoly of the East India company extend to the Norman isles.* The tea consumed in these islands is not subject to a farthing of king's tax, so that the sole cause which keeps up the price of tea in these islands, is, that the East India company have a monopoly of the supply. So much dearer, however, does this make the tea, that it is a constant article of smuggling from France. With the exception of tea, of which I have just spoken, and spirits, on which there is an import duty of one shilling a gallon, a perfectly free and untaxed importation is allowed of every species of food, and, indeed, of produce of every kind. The consequence is, that as far as their limited demand will command a market, the inhabitants of the Norman islands can select, from the whole world, the produce which each country is best able to furnish. Instead of using dear and bad Canadian timber, they employ good and cheap Baltic timber. Christiana deals, twelve feet long, nine inches broad, and three inches thick, sell for £15 15s. 6d. per 120, or rather more than half-a-crown each deal.

"Among other things which are cheap in Guernsey, in consequence of their being free from taxes, I may mention newspapers. With a population of only twenty thousand people, the inhabitants of Guernsey support five weekly newspapers.† The usual price of a newspaper is sometimes a penny, sometimes twopence. The charge for a short advertisement is sixpence. The taxes collected in the islands are very light. A tax of a shilling per gallon on imported spirits is the only indirect tax of any kind whatever. The principal tax is a direct one, of a very fair kind. It is a property tax, averaging about sixpence in the pound, upon all existing property. Thus, a man pays this property tax, not only for his land and houses, but for money which he may have in the funds, for money lent on mortgage, &c. The produce of this tax is appropriated to the support of the two hospitals, and the paving and lighting of the town. In addition to this property tax, and the tax on spirits, the church receives a tithe on all kinds of corn, on fish, and on a few kinds of agricultural produce of small importance, but not upon hay. This tithe completes the list of taxes in the Norman isles. If it should be a matter of surprise that these islands should have been so highly favoured by those who have had the framing of laws, and imposing taxes, the explanation is readily given. The Norman isles are so much nearer to the coast of France than to that of England, that it would not be a difficult matter for the inhabitants to transfer their allegiance from England to France. This would be a serious loss to England, as the islands are of great use as an asylum for English vessels, especially in time of war. The importance which has been attached to the possession of these islands, and their peculiar situation, has no doubt been the principal reason for the considerate manner in which they have been treated.

"Next to the blessings of light, taxes, and unrestricted importation of food, I may mention the state of the laws of inheritance as being very favourable to the happiness of the people living in the Norman isles. In our own country, when a man dies, his estate, if consisting of freehold land, goes altogether to his eldest son, the other children being left to do as well as they can; at least this is the case if the man has not left a will to direct that his property shall be divided, which is seldom done. But in Guernsey and the other Norman isles, a much fairer arrangement is adopted. Two-thirds of the estate are divided equally among the sons, however many there may be, and one-third among the daughters. This plan of division, though only an approach to perfect justice, is evidently much better than the one followed in this country. In order to prevent an unnecessary splitting up of estates, it is provided that the eldest son shall, if he has it in his power, be allowed to pay to each of his brothers and sisters the value of their share of the property, and then retain possession of the whole himself. The consequence of this state of the law of inheritance is, that instead of the property of the islands being held in huge masses, each acre of which is but of insignificant value to the owner, the islands are covered over with clusters of small estates of from four or five to forty or fifty acres, so that every person has a little plot of land which he can call his own. We all know how men's hearts are set upon this, and what a powerful stimulus it is to greater exertions, superior economy, and a love of independence.

* Even this poor little grievance must be now removed, and with it any thing regarding the really unobjectionable duty on spirits which the most consummate grumbler ranked among the favourites of the monk of Malmesbury could, on any feasible pretence, construe into a hardship. Spirits are distilled on the island.—Ed. P. G.

† Three of which are printed in the French language and two in the English: though unstamped they may be sent by post, free of charge, throughout the united kingdom, and to various foreign ports. The motto or maxim borne on the front of one which we have seen, viz., 'The Comet,' is—"To be steadfast in our attachments; to bear good will to our enemies; to fear no man."—Ed. P. G.

"Next to the equal division of property, which prevents waste and extravagance on the one hand, and extreme poverty on the other, I may mention the abundance of paper money in the island of Guernsey, as a great cause of the prosperity of the island. The paper money is issued by the government of the island, and in the following way:—When any great undertaking has been determined on by the states, such, for instance, as the opening of new roads, there is, immediately, an issue of one pound notes by the government. These notes are sent out as the work proceeds, and as money is wanted. When the undertaking is completed, and begins to yield an income, the notes are gradually brought in again, and new undertakings are commenced. The notes are not payable on demand: indeed the government has not even an office at which the notes can be presented. Nevertheless, the notes are never refused. The people find, by experience, that their representatives 'the states' do not issue the notes in greater abundance than the demand for them justifies, and consequently no depreciation in their value is to be feared. Moreover, the purposes for which the notes are issued are of advantage to every man in the island; so that every one looks upon them as coming from the bank to which he is a partner. Here, then, in the little island of Guernsey, we have perhaps the only instance in the world of a really national bank; a bank in which the whole property of the state is the security, and the profit of which is shared by the people at large. By means of this truly 'healthy' currency, undertakings of great magnitude (considering the size of the island) have been executed during the last few years."

History.—Guernsey and the other channel islands appear to have been known to the Romans. Guernsey is thought to be the Sarnia of Antoninus; and perhaps it is the same with Granona, mentioned by the Notitia in Armorica. It is difficult, however, to identify each island, respectively, even with the names used by Antoninus; and none of his contemporaries are decidedly known to have treated of them at all. Guernsey and the other islands in this vicinity, "belonged formerly to Normandy, being given to Rollo, and his Normans, together with it, by Charles IV., surnamed the Simple, king of France. From Rollo, after five successions, they came to William the Conqueror, who gave the command of them to his son Robert, but after King Henry I. had defeated his brother Robert, in 1108, he annexed Normandy and the islands to the crown of England, to which they ever after steadfastly adhered, till King John being found guilty of the death of his nephew, Arthur, duke of Britain, by the parliament of Paris, called together by Philip, King of France, to examine into it, was deprived of Normandy, which province revolted wholly from him, and never was since recovered; for King Henry III. being taken up with the barons' wars, was forced to neglect its recovery, and at length quit his title wholly to it, to rid himself of them. From that time they have continued firm in their allegiance, and are the only places that were William the Conqueror's inheritance, that remain in this crown. The French have made divers attempts to reunite them to that kingdom with Normandy, but in vain. In the reign of Philip de Valois, Hugh Quiriel, admiral of France, made a descent upon Guernsey, and having taken the castle, held it 3 years, but it was again recovered by the English fleet in 1342. So also Evan, a Welshman, descended from the princes of Wales, but then serving the French king, surprised Guernsey in the time of King Edward III., but lost it again soon after. In Edward IV.'s days, while he was contending with King Henry VI. for the crown, they got possession of Guernsey, but were beat off by the valour of Richard Harleston, vadelect of the crown, as he was then called, for which the king rewarded him with the government, both of the island and castle. Again, in the minority of King Edward VI., 1549, the kingdom being embroiled with wars, Leo Strozzi, commander of the French galleys, invaded that isle, but was repulsed with loss." —Mag. Brit. 1738. See also article JERSEY. "I finde in Galfride," says Lambard, "that Cadwallon, being embarked and under saile to have gone to Kinge Solomon of Brytaine in Fraunce, was dryven by tempest of winde into Gernsey; wheare he rested a fewe days. Kinge Jhon likewise comyng with his private familie out of Normannie, (for his souldiers departed for want of gould) reposed himselfe at Gernsey also."

GUESTINGTHORPE. See GESTINGTHORPE. GUESTLING, a parish in the hund. of Guestling, rape and union of Hastings, county of Sussex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Winchelsea, near the coast of the English channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £12 Os. 7½d.; gross income £401. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Ashburnham, Bart. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £30 per annum. A fair for cattle and pedlery, is held on May 23d. Acres 3,180. Houses 134. A. P. £2,571. Pop., in 1801, 496; in 1831, 768. Poor rates, in 1838, £953 3s.

GUESTLING HUNDRED, in the rape of Hastings, county of Sussex, near the south-eastern corner of the county. Area 11,430 acres. Houses 365. Pop., in 1831, 2,202.

GUESTWICK, a parish in the hund. of Eynesford, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by east of Foulsham, and south of the river Bure. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 Os. 10d.; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, W. E. L. Bulwer, Esq. The Independents have here a place of worship. The celebrated William Godwin, author of the 'Adventures of Caleb Williams,' and many other works, including political and economical treatises of a very novel description, was the son of an Independent minister, and a native of this parish. Acres 1,660. Houses 37. A. P. £1,519. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 1s.

GULDEN-MORDEN, a parish in the hund. of Armingford, union of Royston, county of Cambridge; 6 miles east by south of Biggleswade. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £7 3s. 6d.; gross income £190. Tithes commuted in 1799–1800. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus' college, Cambridge. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, upwards of £65 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 19s. Acres 2,506. Houses 136. A. P. £2,614. Pop., in 1801, 428; in 1831, 675.

GULDEN-SUTTON, a parish in the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Boughton, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles east-north-east of Chester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £12; gross income £50. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. T. Stanley. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,130. Houses 27. A. P. £2,111. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 132. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 12s.

GUILDFORD,

A borough and market-town, comprising the parishes of St. Mary, St. Nicholas, and St. Trinity, union of Guildford, county of Surrey: it is distant 6 miles from Woking-common, on the Southampton railway, and 29 by railway from London. A branch railway has been projected to run from about the station at Woking-common to near Barn-field, Guildford. Between Guildford and Godalming is the commencement of the Surrey and Sussex canal, which opens a communication between the Wey and the Arun. Guildford is the county town of Surrey. Acres 210. Houses 630. A. P. £7,859. Pop., in 1801, 2,634; in 1831, 3,813.

General description.—Guildford is picturesquely seated on the declivity of a chalk hill on the east bank of the Wey, which was made navigable thus far, about the year 1658, and over which there is here a bridge of 5 arches, originally built of stone, but subsequently widened with brick-work. The town is large and well-built, and consists chiefly of an excellent and spacious street, which, from its declivity, has a particularly striking aspect. It is well paved, lighted with gas, and abundantly supplied with water from the river, by means of an engine which throws it into a reservoir, whence it is conveyed through the streets by pipes. The principal buildings,—an account of some of which will be afterwards given,—are the churches, chapels, hospital, and schools, with the guild-hall and council-chamber, an elegant county-hall, and a county-gaol, with a house of correction, and extensive barracks:—there is also a theatre. The town displays throughout an appearance of respectability, wealth, and commercial importance. The clothing trade, once so prosperous here, has been entirely abandoned. There are mills of various descriptions in the vicinity, and at the south-west side of the town are commodious wharfs on the river, where much business is done with London in coals, timber, &c. The market-day is Tuesday; and there are fairs for horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs, on May 4th and November 22d. Not far from the town is a race-course, where there are annual races which draw a highly fashionable company of visitors to the town.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The livings of the parishes are rectories in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated, St. Mary's, at £12 5s. 5d., united with Holy Trinity; rated at £11 11s. 0½d.; gross income £171. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. St. Nicholas is rated at £21 0s. 10d.; gross income £499. Patron, the dean of Salisbury. St. Nicholas church, erected here in 1837, is a Gothic building, with tower, crocketed pinnacles, &c., containing 1,100 sittings—cost £2,500. The other churches are ancient structures. St. Trinity's is situated on the top of the hill to the south of the High-street. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1802; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1827 or 1828; a place of worship for the Baptists; and a Friends' meetinghouse. There are 13 daily schools, one of which, the royal grammar-school, was endowed by Robert Beekingham in 1509, subsequently by others, and ultimately it was established by charter 6^o Edward VI. By the statutes the master is required to educate 100 boys as free scholars if required; but at the time of the charity inquiry there were only 6. The income of the school was £84 7s. 2d. per annum, exclusive of £39 per annum for an exhibition for 6 years, at either of the universities of Oxford or Cambridge. The Blue-coat school was founded by Thomas Baker, 21^o Elizabeth, and endowed by him and Caleb Lovejoy. Income, the profits of the market-house in the High-street, which were uncertain at the time of the inquiry. The premises were pulled down in 1758, and a new market-house for oats, &c., built on a more convenient site. This small building having become of little use as a market-house in consequence of the decline of the market for oats, malt, and rye, was subsequently converted into a repository for the water-engines belonging to the town. This school is principally supported by voluntary contributions. There are also two National schools. The hospital of the Blessed Trinity, for a master and 6 to 12 poor brethren, and 8 sisters, was founded 20^o James I., by George Abbot, Archbishop of Canterbury, and incorporated by letters patent. "If any brother or sister be convicted of incontinency, perjury, forgery, heresy, sorcery, charming, or witchcraft, or of any crime punishable by loss of life, limb, or ear," &c. &c., "such brother or sister shall be expelled; and if any brother or sister shall be convicted of being a blasphemous, gamester, drunkard, or scold," there is to be 1st, an admonition; 2d, a forfeiture of a month's allowance; and, 3d, expulsion. Various endowments were subsequently conferred on the hospital, and other 4 sisters were added. The income of this charity, in 1836, was £353 9s. per annum, besides occasional fines on renewal of leases, &c., to a considerable amount, and other sources of income. A moiety of the fines, amounting in 1835 to £250, was divided among the brethren and sisters. The 20 inmates on the original foundation receive weekly pensions of 5s. 6d. each, and the other four, of 4s. each, besides other emoluments. The hospital is a spacious quadrangle built of brick, having a handsome turreted gateway fronting the principal street of the town. The brethren reside on the west, the sisters on the east side of the court: the chapel occupies the principal part of the northern side. There is a walled-garden consisting of about half an acre, stocked with fruit trees and vegetables for the use of the establishment. There are other charities possessed by this town, the principal of which is Henry Smith's charity to the poor, founded in 1643: income in 1825, £850 10s. 8d. It is principally expended in money-payments, as occasion requires. Other minor charities produce nearly £100 per annum. On 12th January, 1837, there were 15 trustees appointed to manage the charities previously under the control of the corporation. The amount of income derived from these in 1838, was £369 16s. 4d., to which should have been added about £150 to complete the full year's income. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,818 19s.—A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Guildford, by the poor-law commissioners; the Guildford poor-law union comprehends 21 parishes, embracing an area of 101 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 22,147. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £21 346. Expenditure, in 1838, £11,621; in 1839, £10,883 3s.

Municipal affairs.—Guildford is a borough by prescription, the date of its original incorporation being unknown. It was incorporated by charter 11^o Edward III., which continued to be the governing charter previous to 1835. Under this charter it was governed by a high-steward, mayor, recorder, two justices, bailiff, two coroners, &c. The magistrates held quarter-sessions for the trial of such offences as are usually tried by sessions; but not felonies the punishment of which affects life or limb. They occasionally held petty-sessions, and their jurisdiction by charters of Charles I. and James II., extended throughout the parish of Stoke; but it was seldom acted on. The jurisdiction was not exclusive; the justices of the county of Surrey having a concurrent jurisdiction. The court of record was held every third Monday; its jurisdiction being unlimited in amount. The title of the corporation was 'the mayor and approved men of the town of Guildford, in the county of Surrey.' Under the new municipal act, the borough is governed by 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. The style of the corporation is 'the mayor and burgesses of the town of Guildford, in the county of Surrey.' It is included in schedule A, amongst boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed. There is no jail for the reception of criminals belonging to the corporation: the borough magistrates are allowed to commit to the county prison. The midsummer quarter-sessions for the county are held here, and the midsummer assizes alternately here, and at Croydon. The prison, which is built of brick, and was completed in 1822, stands on extra-parochial ground, on the declivity of a hill, within a quarter of a mile of the town. It commands from its upper galleries a fine view of the river Wey, and the surrounding scenery. It is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and 12 visiting justices. With the exception of the chapel, and one small day-room, the whole prison is divided into separate cells, of which there are altogether 89. They are in single ranges, and approached by a corridor in each gallery, extending from one extremity of the building to the other. There are 7 wards, with airing-yards. The hard labour is the tread-wheel, which is productive, corn being ground for customers. The number of prisoners in 1836, was 552. The income of this borough in 1839, was £1,393 8s. 10d., arising principally from tolls, dues, and borough rates: expenditure £1,277 13s. 10d., the chief items of which are—

Police and Constables, . . .	£367	5	0
Salaries, &c., to municipal officers, . . .	344	2	8
Lighting and cleansing, . . .	161	0	0
Law expenses, . . .	131	8	8
Jail, maintenance, &c., of prisoners, . . .	107	2	0

The town has sent two members to parliament since 23^o Edward I., a privilege which it still enjoys. The right of voting was in the freeholders and freemen resident in the town paying scot and lot. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1831, was 170 in 1807. The boundaries did not include all the town, and were extended by the reform act so as to comprehend the 3 parishes belonging to the town. The municipal and parliamentary boundaries coincide. The number of electors registered for 1837, was 425. The number who polled at the general election in 1837 was 350, of whom 10 were freeholders and 12 freemen. This is a polling-place, and the chief place of election, for the members for the western division of the county.

Antiquities, &c.—Guildford is of some antiquarian and historical interest. On the declivity of the hill here are the remains of an extensive palace, where many of our sovereigns resided. "After the solem death of Hardicanute, at Lambhythe," says Lambard, "the nobility of this realme agreed to restore to the royal dignitie the issue of Etheldred, which he in his lyfe-tyme had sent into Normandie for feare of the Danes; and for that purpose they dispatched embassadours to Richard, duke of Normandie, requyring him to send over Alfred and Edward, the sonnes of Etheldred, late kinge of England, promising to doe their endeavour to restore Alfred to his enheritance. The young princes having receyved succour theare, thought it fittinge to bring over with them dyvers younge gentlemen for their own avauncement and their comfort. But when they came to Gildford, Godwyn, perceyving that he could not make a matche betwene Alfred, beinge thelder of yeares, and greater in courage, and his daughter, and havinge hope to bringe it to effect with Edward the younger, if he could bringe to passe that he might weare the garlonde, he quarreled at their companie, pretendinge that Alfred ment (so some as he should be put in possession of the crowne) to place the Norman nobilitie, and displace his own countrymen; and by spreadinge of this suspition, so styrred the nobilitye against him, that first they killed at this place nyne throughout the hole number of his companie, reservinge on lyve the tenth; and afterward thinkinge the tythe to greate, they tythed that number also. As for Alfred, they sent him to Ely, where became of him, as appeareth before in that tittle—[see ELY]. Edward (feared with this crueltie) fled againe into Normandie; but Godwyn procured his retourne, and gyvinge to him his daughter in maryage, put on his head the crowne of this realme. This was the cause that Harold, Godwynes son (beinge (as he would have gone into Flanders) dryven by tempest to Pountiu) was brought to William, the duke of Normandie, who made him swear to be true to him, as touchinge the crowne, after the death of Edward; upon breache of which othe, followed the conquest. While Hen. II. lay at this house, [Guildford palace,] the prior of St. Swythines, at Wynchester, and his covent, exhibited before him a heavye complaint against one More, then byshop of Wynchester; for that he had abridged them of thre dishes at every meale allowed by their beneficial founders: The kinge asked them how many remayned; they answered, but ten: By the eyes of God, (quoth the kinge),—for that was his accustomed othe,—I had thought theyr house had bene on fyre, or that some worse chaunce had befallen them. Well, saythe he, if this be al the matter, I pitie them not; yea, rather, I would the byshop weare hanged if he bringe them not to thre, as I have alrede done in the court. Then sayed the monks, this petition of ours is chiefly for the care that we have to releive the poore. Nay, quoth the kinge, it is to fede your selves withal, for the poore may be by some other way better provided for. Kinge John kept a stately Christmas at this house; and amongst other acts of great magnificence, bestowed costly lyveries upon his men. Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, seinge that, and thinkinge that it became his spiritual honour to compare, in cost, with the kinge, was at the lyke charge with his servants also. But he therewith offended the kinge no less than he contented himselfe, as, by sundry tastes of his displeasure, was after made manifest. Kinge Henry III. used this house also; for when Edward his son had fought hand to hand with Adam Gurdon, and had partlye by trial of his vertue, and partly by promise of restitution, perswaded him to yeld, he broughte him to the quene at this house, and desyred her to be the meane of his reconciliation." "Edward III. held his Christmas here, and, within the octaves of the same feast, sent the earls of Salisbury, Gloucester, Darby, and Angus, with the lords Piercy, Nevill, and Stafford, to besiege the castle of Dunbar, but without success."—Mag. Brit. 1738. Not far from the Wey are the ruins of an ancient castle. The principal remnant is a square tower of great strength built of flints, ragstone, and Roman bricks. In the year 1216, Louis, the dauphin of France, who had been invited, by the discontented barons, to take the crown of England, took this castle. From the time of Edward I. to the reign of Henry VIII., when a new one was erected, it was used as the county jail. In the chalk cliff, on which this castle stands, is a large cavern with several chambers, possibly excavated by the chalk diggers, but supposed by some to have formerly had a subterranean communication with the castle. Here were two monastic institutions, one of which was founded for Dominican friars by Queen Eleanor, consort of Henry III. The remains of one have served the judges at the time of the assizes. Sutton-place, near Guildford, erected in 1521 by Sir Richard Weston, presents the finest specimens perhaps extant of the stamped and baked clay of the 15th century, formed into large bricks 14 inches long by 9 wide, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches thick, also into coins, mullions, weatherings, &c. The colour of this brick, or artificial stone,—a light warm ochre, resembling caenstone,—is excellent. The material is of a close texture, and rendered extremely hard by the fire of the kiln. The noble mansion which they constituted was quadrangular: 3 of the sides now remain. The ancient family of Weston of Sutton has been characterized by a steady adherence to the faith of the Romish church. The south-eastern gallery, at Sutton-place, is at this day a popish chapel. Guildford abounds in reminiscences of George, Archbishop Abbot, the founder of Trinity hospital, in Guildford, of which he was a native. "It has been said erroneously," observes the talented author of the 'Thames and its tributaries,' "that the archbishop erected this hospital as an atonement for the involuntary homicide which he committed while hunting, and which proved a source of great sorrow and discomfort to him during the rest of his life. The accident happened in 1621, two years after the foundation of the hospital. Being invited by Lord Zouch to hunt in Bramshill Park, he took up a cross-bow to make a shot at a buck; but unfortunately hit the keeper, who had run in among the herd of deer to bring them up to a fairer mark. The arrow pierced the left arm; and dividing the large axillary vessels, caused almost instantaneous death. The archbishop was in the deepest affliction: the event caused quite a commotion in the church; for by the canon law he was tainted, and rendered incapable of performing any sacred function; and by the common law, his personal estate was forfeited to the king. The doctors of ecclesiastical law were consulted upon the course to be adopted; and after some delay, it was finally agreed that the king should grant him a full pardon for the homicide, under the broad seal, and restore him to all his ecclesiastical authority. A commission of eight bishops, instituted for the purpose, at the same time granted him a dispensation in full form. The archbishop retired to his native Guildford during the progress of these debates, and passed his time in prayer and fasting. He instituted a monthly fast in memory of the accident, which he religiously observed during the remainder of his life, and settled an annuity of £20 upon the widow of the deceased." Robert Abbot, bishop of Salisbury, brother to the archbishop, was another distinguished native of Guildford. Sir Francis North was created Baron Guildford by Charles II., in 1683, on the death, without issue male, of John, duke of Lauderdale, in Scotland, on whom this title was also conferred by the same sovereign. Guildford has ever since given the title to the North family.

GUILSBOROUGH HUNDRED, in the county of Northampton. It lies in the north-west part of the county, bordering on the county of Leicester, from which it is separated by the Avon. Area 43,260 acres. Houses 2,032. Pop., in 1831, 9,719.

GUILSBOROUGH, a parish in the above hundred, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 10 miles north-west by north of Northampton, near the source of the river Avon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17 3s. 4d.; gross income £265. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of the late Rev. T. Sikes. Improper and vicarial tithes commuted in 1774. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is a free grammar-school, endowed with £80 per annum, for the education of boys belonging to Guilsborough and adjacent parishes. A writing-school is also endowed with £60 per annum. There are 4 infant and 3 boarding schools. This parish gives name to the hundred, and is supposed to derive its own name from an extensive Roman encampment which lay between the sources of the Avon and Ness. The form is a parallelogram 600 feet by 300. The whole is encompassed by a single foss and vallum, comprising an area of about 8 acres. It is now called Borough-hill. Acres 3,080. Houses 200. A. P. £6,333. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlet of Hollowell, 758; in 1831, 1,069. Poor rates, in 1838, £649 8s.

GUILSBOROUGH. See GUISBOROUGH.

GUILSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Pool, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 3 miles north of Welshpool, and west of the Severn. It includes the townships of Garth Gungrog-fechan, Llanerchrochwell, Tirymynech, Trelydan, and Varchael, Lower and Upper Bronyarth, Hendrehene, and Llan-Trowscoed. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; gross income £193. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. There are 8 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a National school, endowed with a rent-charge of £10, originally belonging to Stephen Thomas's charity school, which was founded in 1735. The National school, however, is chiefly supported by voluntary contributions. Other charities, in 1836, about £50 per annum, besides an occasional sum of about £20 derived from Hester Farmer's charity. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,088 19s. The manufacture of flannel is carried on here to a considerable extent. Houses 453. A. P. £12,044. Pop., in 1801, 1,510; in 1831, 2,323.

GUILTCROSS HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk. It lies in the south side of the county, bordering with Suffolk, from which it is divided by the Ouse. Area 29,900 acres. Houses 1,009. Pop., in 1831, 6,761.—The union of Guiltcross, for which a workhouse has been erected, capable of accommodating 300 persons, comprehends 21 parishes, embracing an area of 72 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,873. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,833. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,542; in 1839, £7,666 7s.

GUISBOROUGH, or GUILSBOROUGH, a parish and market-town in the east division of the liberty of Lanbaurgh, union of Guisborough, north riding of Yorkshire; 45 miles north of York, and 245 north-north-west of London, north of the Cleveland hills, and about 5 miles from the German ocean. Acres 12,000. Houses 490. A. P. £12,039. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Commondale, Guisborough, Hutton-Locras, Pinchingthorpe, and Tocketts, 2,003; in 1831, 2,210. Acres of the township, 6,120. Houses 449. A. P. £8,445. Pop., in 1801, 1,719; in 1831, 1,988. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, not in charge; returned at £100; gross income 72. Patron, the archbishop of York. Besides the established church, there are here two Independent churches, formed in 1798, and 1811; and places of worship belonging to the Society of Friends, and the Wesleyan Methodists. There are 3 daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools: one of the former is a free grammar-school, and the two latter are chiefly supported by the interest of an endowment of £2,900, vested in the three per cents. Connected with the free-school, first alluded to, there is an almshouse for 6 men and 6 women. The school and hospital premises consist of a small house for the master of the school, with a garden and stable; and 6 apartments for the alms-people. The schoolmaster's stipend is £50. The alms-people have each 5s. a-week, besides other emoluments. The income of this charity, in 1821, was £329 4s. 4½d. Other charities, £166 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £848 6s.; of the township, £653 17s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Guisborough, capable of accommodating 130 persons. The Guisborough poor-law union comprehends 27 parishes, embracing an area of 113 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,038. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £3,321 13s.

Guisborough, says Camden, is really beautiful: it resembles Puteoli in Italy, he adds, but exceeds it in healthfulness. The town consists chiefly of one main street, running nearly east and west through a narrow but fertile vale extending along the Tees. This street is very wide, and many of the houses being built in a modern style, the town has a neat and pleasant appearance. A handsome town-hall of freestone was built, in 1821, on the site of the ancient tolbooth in the market-place. It was erected on projecting pillars and arches, with four cast-iron pillars in the centre: the lower part or area serves as shambles, &c., for the market-people, and the magistrates hold their meetings in the upper story. The markets are well-attended: they are held on Tuesday; and there are fairs or special market-days on the last Tuesdays in March and April, the third Tuesdays of August and September, and the second Tuesday in November. There is a branch of the Darlington District Joint Stock banking company here. In Guisborough, Sir Thomas Chaloner, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, established the first alum works in England. The pope honoured Sir Thomas by fulminating anathemas against him. A mineral spring, discovered here in 1822, has rapidly risen into notice, and is much frequented by rheumatic, scorbutic, and bilious patients. The water was analyzed by the celebrated Mr. Faraday of London, and the result showed that the specific gravity is 1,000·7. A pint contains 3 grains nearly of pure salts: the salts are muriate and carbonate of soda, carbonate of lime and magnesia, carbonic acid, and sulphates the smallest quantity. "Robert de Brus founded and amply endowed—A. D. 1129—a priory of canons, of the order of St. Austin, here, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Its yearly revenues at the dissolution were worth £628 3s. 4d. Dugd.; £712 6s. 6d. Speed. The site was granted, 4° Edw. VI., to Sir Thomas Chaloner."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The ruins of this monastery are at the east end of the town. Some idea may be formed of the extent of this establishment when it was in the acme of its prosperity, from a manuscript in the Cottonian library, in which it is said,—“That the prior kept a most pompous house, insomuch that the towne, consytinge of 500 householders, had no land, but lived in the abbey.”

GUISLEY, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Skyrack, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south of Otley. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £26; gross income £801. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £152 10s. Patrons, in 1835, G. L. Fox, Esq., two turns, and the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge, one turn. Tithes of the township of Carlton commuted in 1772. Here is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. There are 13 daily, 5 infant, and 7 boarding schools. Two of the first are endowed: one is situated at Rawdon, and the other at Guisley. The endowments, in 1825, amounted to about £60 to the latter, and £10 to the former. Other charities upwards of £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £2,247 16s.; of the township, £425 2s.—Guisley is now included in the second division of a district throughout which a court of requests, established by act passed 24th August, 1839, has jurisdiction for all debts not exceeding £15, except in such parts of the jurisdiction of this court, as are also within the limits of the court of the honour of Pontefract, in which case no greater sum than £7 10s. shall be recoverable under this act. Guisley is an extensive clothing parish, in the district of Leeds, from which it is 9 miles distant. In 1833, 11 woollen mills here employed 717 hands: there were also hand-loom in the trade:—

At the village of Guisley, . . .	340
Yeaden, . . .	551
Rawden, . . .	317
Horsforth, . . .	360

In all, 1,568 looms.

Acres 8,890. Houses 1,921. A. P. £15,453. Pop., in 1801, returned under the chapelries of Horsforth, and Rawdon, with the townships of Carlton, Guisley, and Yeaden, 5,849; in 1831, 10,028. Acres of the township 1,580. Houses 305. A. P. £2,356. Pop., in 1801, 825; in 1831, 1,604.

GUIST, a parish in the hund. of Eynesford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 1½ mile north-west of Foulsham, bounded on the west by the river Wensum. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 15s. 5d.; gross income £160. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Norris. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,190. Houses 78. A. P. £1,395. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 363. Poor rates, in 1838, £401 1s.

GULDEFORD (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Goldspur, rape of Hastings, union of Rye, county of Sussex; 1½ mile north-east of Rye, on the eastern bank of the river Rother. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Playden, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8 4s. 7d.; gross income £450. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. A. Lambe. Acres 2,430. Houses 16. A. P. £4,329. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 10s.

GULVAL, a parish in the hund. of Penwith, union of Penzance, county of Cornwall; 1½ mile north-east of Penzance. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £6 11s. 0½d.; gross income £400. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 3 daily schools. Near Moddem in this parish is a spring called Gultwell, or 'the Hebrew brook,' at one time much resorted to by the credulous who desired to inquire for absent friends. As to the form of this superstition, it is related by Hale, that "an old woman attended to show the well; before whom, on their approach, the question was to be asked aloud: if the person inquired after were in health, the water was instantly to bubble; if sick, to be suddenly discoloured; and if dead, to remain in its natural state." Borlase, who wrote in 1749, seems to speak of this woman as if she had not long been dead. "She was supposed," says he, "to be so conversant with the mysteries of the well, that she was daily resorted to by numbers of persons who wished to consult its oracular waters, and have their curiosity satisfied, particularly as to goods or cattle lost or stolen." Acres 3,280. Houses 287. A. P. £5,170. Pop., in 1801, 1,076; in 1831, 1,467. Poor rates, in 1838, £413 7s.

GUMECESTER. See GODMANCHESTER.

GUMFRESTON, a parish in the hund. of Narbeth, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 2 miles west by north of Tenby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £117 4s. 3d.; gross income £141. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £146 4s. Patron, in 1835, T. Meyrick, Esq. Houses 21. A. P. £964. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 2s.

GUMLEY, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market-Harborough, county of Leicester; 4½ miles north-west by west of Market-Harborough, intersected by the Union canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £16 2s. 6d.; gross income £390. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1772. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £2 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 3s. Gumley has long been celebrated for its fox earths. There is a mineral spring here containing iron, a small quantity of magnesia, and a very slight portion of salt: the water resembles that of Tonbridge. Acres 1,550. Houses 54. A. P. £2,217. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 272.

GUNBY, a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 2 miles south-west by south of Colsterworth. Living, a rectory united to that of Stainby. Acres 930. Houses 30. A. P. £1,125. Pop., in 1801, 113; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 5s.

GUNBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 5 miles east of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3 10s. 2½d.; gross income £175. Tithes commuted in 1774; aggregate amount fixed by tithe commissioners in 1839, at £143 15s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. The family of Massingberd, of Gunby, possess a curious document, a patent of baronetcy, granted by Cromwell, when protector, in 1658, to Captain Massingberd. The preamble states the honour to be conferred "as well for his faithfulness and good affection to us and his country, as for his descent, patrimony, ample estate, and ingenious education every way answerable; who, out of a liberal mind, hath undertaken to maintain 30 foot soldiers in our dominion of Ireland, for three whole years." The patent bears the initials of Oliver's name, encircling a good likeness of him in a robe of ermine. Acres 600. Houses 8. A. P. £1,157. Pop., in 1801, 38; in 1831, 75. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 13s.

GUNHOUSE. See HALTON WEST WITH GUNHOUSE.

GUNNERTON AND CHIPCHASE, a township in the parish of Chollerton, Northumberland; 7½ miles north-north-west of Hexham, on the eastern bank of the river Tyne. Near the village are distinct traces of a Roman intrenchment and a large barrow, now called Money-hill,—coins having been often found there. Houses 73. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 422. Other returns with the parish.

GUNTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Holt, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 6 miles west-south-west of Holt. Living, a rectory with that of Bale, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13; gross income £546. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. H. Sparke. Tithes commuted. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £1 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £319 3s. Acres 1,420. Houses 70. A. P. £1,124. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 316.

GUNTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Lowdham, county of Nottingham; 7½ miles east-north-east of Nottingham, on the northern bank of the Trent. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship; and there is a daily school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 82. A. P. £1,764. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 383. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 6s.

GUNTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Belton, county of Rutland; 2½ miles south-south-east of Oakham. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £604. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 4s. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 8s.

GUNTHWAIT, a township in the parish of Penistone, west riding of Yorkshire; 7½ miles west of Barnesley, and near the Sheffield railway. The inhabitants of this township have the privilege of sending all male children, when able to read the Testament, to the free grammar-school; and five female children to the National school, in Penistone. Acres 1,080. Houses 14. A. P. £887. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 99. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 14s.

GUNTUN, a parish in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-west of North Walsham. Living, a rectory with the vicarage of Hanworth, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8; gross income £242. Patron, in 1835, Lord Suffield. This parish is all comprised in the park and extensive plantation of Guntun-house, the seat of the Suffield family. The house is built of white brick, and stands on an eminence commanding a delightful view of the undulated park, and its judiciously arranged plantations. Acres 1,060. Houses 15. A. P. £736. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 84. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 15s.

GUNTUN, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 1½ mile north-north-west of Lowestoft, on the coast of the North sea. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £149. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £145 14s. 4d. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of T. Fowler. Acres 560. Houses 13. A. P. £1,306. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 63. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 10s.

GUNVILLE-TARRANT, a parish in the hund. of Cranborne, union of Blandford, Shaston division of the county of Dorset; 5 miles north-east by north of Blandford-Forum. This parish lies upon the small river Tarrant, whence, along with six other parishes, it takes its appellative—Tarrant. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19 7s. 11d.; gross income £542. Patrons, the master and fellows of University college, Oxford. Acres 2,660. Houses 99. A. P. £1,451. Pop., in 1801, 408; in 1831, 502. Poor rates, in 1838, £313 15s.

GUNWALLOW, a parish in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Helstone, county of Cornwall; 5 miles south of Helstone, on the coast of the English channel. Living, a curacy united to the rectory of St. Breage. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1836, £2 15s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 15s. Acres 1,440. Houses 39. A. P. £1,405. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 284.

GUSSAGE (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hund. of Knowlton, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Cranborne. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; ated at £6 3s. 9d.; gross income £85. Patron, the archdeacon of Dorset. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Acres 1,400. Houses 68. A. P. £1,903. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 373. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 18s.

GUSSAGE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish in the hund. of Badbury, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; 5 miles west by south of Cranborne. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £20 0s. 2½d.; gross income £408. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Portman, Esq. Acres 2,650. Houses 42. A. P. £2,065. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 233. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 19s.

GUSTON, a parish in the hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Dover, county of Kent; 2 miles north-north-east of Dover. Living, a curacy exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Canterbury; valued at £14; gross income £76. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Acres 1,550. Houses 35. A. P. £1,253. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 197. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 7s.

GUTHLAXTON HUNDRED, in the county of Leicester. It occupies the southern extremity of the county, bordering on Warwickshire. Area 63,980 acres. Houses 4,734. Pop., in 1831, 22,591.

GUY'S-CLIFF, in the parish of Lock-Wootton, county of Warwick; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Kenilworth, a little to the north of Warwick, and of the Birmingham and Warwick canal. It is a romantic spot, standing on the south side of the Avon. "This place," says Camden, "is the seat of pleasure itself. Here is a shady grove, crystal springs, mossy caves, meadows ever green, a soft and murmuring fall of waters under the rocks, and to crown all, solitude and quiet, the greatest darlings of the muses." Its peculiar adaptation for lonely contemplation rendered it a favourite haunt of the religious recluse of early days. It is reported on the authority of Rous, a monkish antiquary who formerly resided at a cell in this vicinity, that there were here an oratory and hermitage in the earliest Saxon times. It is celebrated, however, as the spot to which the renowned Guy, Earl of Warwick, after his duel with Colebrand the Danish giant, retired from worldly strife, to contemplate and adore his Creator in the still solitude of nature. He "hewed with his own hands" a cave wherein to pursue his devotions, and to end his days in holy peace. This cave wherein he not only lived and died, but was also buried by his Countess Felicia, is still shown: on one side of it is a Saxon inscription now almost illegible. The well at which the warrior-hermit quenched his thirst is likewise pointed out, together with a walk called Phillis' walk, where Phillis or Felicia took her daily ramble. Another, though less celebrated hermit, dwelt here in the reigns of Edward III. and Henry IV. When Henry V. was at Warwick, he visited 'Guy's cliff,' the name which this locality had then obtained, and being greatly enchanted with the aspect of the spot, and the legend of Guy's history connected with it, he resolved to found here a chantry for two priests; which resolution, however, was frustrated in consequence of his subsequent wars and early death. In the succeeding reign, Richard de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, carried the intention of his former sovereign into full effect, and founded a chapel here in which two priests were appointed to celebrate mass daily for the earl and his countess during their lives, and, after their deaths, for the welfare of their souls. This chapel has been much renovated and considerably altered since its erection: the rooms appropriated to the use of the two priests, however, still remain in their ancient state. "In the chapel is a colossal statue of Guy, measuring 9 feet in height, carved from the solid rock, on which the chapel abuts. This figure, although greatly mutilated, retains obvious traces of the gold and other embellishments with which it was formerly ornamented. The hands are both lopped off; and a few years since a leg was also deficient. This latter member of anatomy, so necessary to the understanding of the statue, was, however, supplied by a female statuary of rank and celebrity whilst on a visit at Guy's Cliff."

—Wild's Lond. and Birm. Railway Guide. This statue was also erected, or rather cut out, by Richard de Beauchamp, to perpetuate the memory of his ancestor Guy's exploits. The stables and other convenient out-houses belonging to a mansion erected about the middle of the 18th century, are formed here by excavations from the solid rock. The grounds surrounding this mansion are not extensive, but yet rich in all the natural luxuriance of picturesque beauty. The attractions of this interesting vicinity are multiplied and heightened by the winding banks of the Avon, which here meanders in all the freedom of serpentine grace, adorned on one side with luxuriant pastures and flowery meadows; and, on the other, with steep and wood-crowned rocks. This delightful part of the country may be reached from the London and Birmingham railway, at the Coventry station, a few miles to the north of Kenilworth.

GUYSON or GUYZANCE, a township in the parish of Shilbottle, Northumberland; 7 miles south of Alnwick. Here is a neat village with a daily school. About a mile north of the village is Bank-house, an elegant mansion imbosomed in rich and beautiful plantations. A priory was founded here in the 12th century by Richard Tyson. It was afterwards annexed to the abbey of Alnwick by Eustace Fitz-John. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 39. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 197. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 19s.

GUYTING-POWER, or LOWER GUYTING, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Winchcombe. It includes the chapelry of Farmcote or Framcote. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Farmcote, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £14 19s. 5d.; gross income £129. Patron, in 1835, J. Walker, Esq. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1821, upwards of £12 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £382. Acres 3,380. Houses 155. A. P. £2,208. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 792.

GUYTING-TEMPLE, or UPPER GUYTING, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Winchcombe. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £20, returned at £80; gross income £94. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ's-church, Oxford. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1821, £8 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £212 3s. Acres 6,180. Houses 110. A. P. £4,479. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 520.

GUYZANCE. See GUYSON.

GWAENYSGOR, a parish in the hund. of Pres-tatyn, union of Holywell, county of Flint, North Wales; 8 miles north-west by west of Holywell. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £144 19s. 4d.; gross income £193. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. The church is remarkable for its ancient register. Here is an infant school. The vicinity abounds with lead and coal. Houses 52. A. P. £699. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 247. Poor rates, in 1838, £82 15s.

GWARAVOG, a hamlet in the parish of Llan-Lleonoel, county of Brecon, South Wales; 7 miles west of Builth. Houses 13. A. P. £246. Pop., in 1811, 61; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 5s.

GWASTEDDYN-FAWR, a township in the parish of Nantmel, county of Radnor, South Wales; 7½ miles north-north-west of Builth, near Lly Gwyn and Dulas river. On the summit of Gwasteddyn hill there is a large cairn. Houses 81. Pop., in 1811, 346; in 1831, 423. Other returns with the parish.

GWEHELLOG, a hamlet in the parish of Usk, county of Monmouth. Acres 2,590. Houses 69. A. P. £2,232. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 418. Poor rates, in 1838, £152 19s.

GWENDALE (GREAT). See GIVENDALE.

GWENDDWR (NORTH and SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Talgarth, union of Builth, county of Brecon, South Wales; 4½ miles south of Builth. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the dio. of St. David's; rated at £65 5s.; gross income £143. Patron, in 1835, J. P. Pontywall. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1700. There are 2 daily schools. Houses 86. A. P. £1,810. Pop., in 1801, 516; in 1831, 460. Poor rates, in 1838, £223 9s.

GWENNAP, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Kerrier, union of Redruth, county of Cornwall; 3 miles east-south-east of Redruth. Acres 7,940. Houses 1,640. A. P. £18,273. Pop., in 1801, 4,594; in 1831, 8,539. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16 18s. 11½d.; gross income £527; nett income £482. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter. Besides the church, a chapel has been erected in the parish; and there are places of worship for the Baptists and the Wesleyan Methodists. Here are 24 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £18 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,890 19s.

Here are some highly productive mines,—chiefly copper,—the Gwennap district being generally cupriferous; and, indeed, being termed 'the great cupriferous parish of Cornwall.' De la Beche, the celebrated geologist, states, that, in part of the Gwennap district, "the country can be considered as little else than a mass of huge fragments cemented together by various mineral substances; the great dislocations having been produced at two different times, at least; the last cutting off the continuity of numerous fissures previously filled in part by the ores of the useful metals,—in this case chiefly by those of copper." Poldice mine in this parish, however, was one of the most productive tin mines of early date: according to Hals, it employed, for 40 years together, 800 to 1,000 men. Borlase says, that the greatest and most sudden gain from mines ever heard of in his time was in 1757, from Wheal Virgin mine in this parish:—the first fortnight produced £5,700: in the next 3 weeks and 2 days as much as sold for £9,600. Several of the Gwennap mines, however, afterwards became still more productive. In the year 1806, when, on account of the high price of copper, the quantity raised considerably exceeded the average, the copper raised from Wheal Virgin mine was 252 tons; from Wheal Fortune, about 293; Treskerby, 335; Poldice, 402; Wheal Unity, 496; and Wheal Damsel, 539. The total produce of the Gwennap mines, that year was 2,962 tons. The most productive copper mines in Cornwall, within 20 years previous to the publication of the 'Mag. Brit.' by the Messrs. Lysons, in 1814, were considered to be Wheal Unity, Wheal Damsel, Wheal Virgin, United mines, and Treskerby, in this parish, followed up by a few more from Gwinnear and other parishes. In 1800, out of 45 copper mines in Cornwall,—exclusive of tin mines,—11 were situated in this parish. There were four of the Gwennap mines producing tin and copper, and one, silver and copper. At the time the Lysons wrote, the Wheal Unity, United mines, Wheal Damsel, and Treskerby, were still among the richest in the country. Wheal Unity was also one of the most productive tin mines. In 1817, the United mines here were those which afforded the largest sum (£63,116) for their ores: in 1818, the value of the ores raised from these mines was £88,541. In 1822 the Consolidated mines, consisting of Wheal Virgin and the two adjoining mines, became those whence the copper ores raised afforded the greatest amount of money, being in that year £80,311; and they have continued to occupy the chief position in this respect, throughout Cornwall, to the present time. In 1838, these mines produced 19,459 tons of ore, worth £126,211. "During about 20 years underground operations in the consolidated mines in sinking and driving, mostly in the solid rock for the sole purpose of discovery, have been executed to the extent of more than 55,000 fathoms, or about 63 miles; at an expense which cannot have fallen short of £300,000."—De la Beche's Geolog. Report. The following account of the receipts and expenditure for 1836, of the Consolidated and the United Mines here, while under the same management, will afford some insight into the money transactions of one of the largest copper-adventures in Cornwall. The accounts were obtained by M. De la Beche, from Mr. John Taylor:—

Produce in 1836.		Tons.	Value.		Lord's Dues.
			£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
Quantity of ores raised in the Consolidated Mines.	Copper 18,498½		143,039	12	5	5,959	19	5
	Tin . . . —		2,533	0	10	105	10	9
	Arsenic . . . —		144	7	10	6	0	4
			145,717	1	1	6,071	10	6
Quantity of ores raised in the United Mines.	Copper 2,874		26,272	6	1	10,094	13	4
	Tin . . . —		106	11	0	4	8	8
			26,378	17	10	1,099	2	0
<hr/>
Amount of Ore-money, deducting Dues			Consolidated Mines		£139,645		10		7
			United Mines		26,279		16		10
					£164,925		7		5
Total Expense for the Year.	Consols	£102,007	12	17
	United Mines	35,960	16	0			137,968		8	1
					£164,925		7		5
							137,968		8	1

Materials, consisting of Gunpowder, Picks, Ropes, Timber, &c., &c.	15,008	6	4	5,222	9	0
Engine or Water-cost (including rent of Water, £405 13s.)	15,415	7	4	4,967	19	8
Expenses on Ores	7,803	8	7	767	17	5
Tribute Subsidy, and Balances	25,030	17	0	9,219	12	3
Sundry Payments	1,872	3	1	339	19	4
Doctor and Club (half to each)	795	9	6	323	7	6
	£102,007	12	1	£35,960	16	0

The following is a list of the numbers and descriptions of persons employed in these mines in 1836:—

	Consolidated.	United.	Total.
Agents	28	9	37
Tutwork-men	441	198	639
Tributers	392	217	609
Surface-men	335	110	445
Boys underground	109	138	247
“ surface	327	23	350
Females	755	114	869
	2,387	809	3,196

The following was the rate of wages paid in this year:*

	Per Month.		Per Month.
£ s. d.		£ s. d.
Tutwork-men	3 11 6	Girls from 12 to 14	0 12 0
Tributers	4 5 0	Girls from 9 to 12	0 8 0
Surface-labourers	2 6 0	Boys above 12	0 13 0
Women and Girls above 17	0 18 0	Boys below 12	0 9 0
Girls from 14 to 17	0 15 0

For a detailed account of these most extensive mines—see Mr. Burr's description of them in the English Mining Review, No. VII. July 1835, p. 17. The same author has given, in his 'Elements of Practical Geology,' a very elegant small mining section of the Consolidated mines, which affords an excellent general view of the chief lode with its levels, adit, and shafts, as also of the great extent of these mines, which are nearly two miles long, and, in their greatest depth, nearly 1,800 feet.

The Great adit, as it is termed, through which the waters of numerous mines in Gwennap, and near Redruth, are discharged, measures, (according to Mr. Thomas, who has laid it down in his map of the mining district from Chacewater to Camborne,) about 26,000 fathoms, or nearly 30 miles in length, the various branches being included. "The greatest length to which any branch appears to have been extended from the adit mouth is at Cardrew mine, measuring about 4,800 fathoms, nearly 5½ miles. The highest ground it has penetrated is at Wheal Hope, where the adit is 70 fathoms deep, at Chilcot's shaft, and is deeper in the branches extending from thence."—Thomas's Report. This adit is 39 feet above the level of the sea at high-water in Restronger creek, into which the waters discharged from it flow; its mouth being near Nangiles, in a valley communicating with the creek.†

GWERNESNEY, a parish in the hund. of Usk, union of Pont-y-pool, county of Monmouth, South Wales; 2½ miles east by north of Usk. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £2 18s. 6½d.; gross income £124. Patron, in 1825, the duke of Beaufort. Acres 630. Houses 10. A. P. £794. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 62. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 19s.

GWERN-Y-BWLCH, a township in the parish of Cemmaes, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 6 miles south-west of Dinas-Mowddu. Houses 99. Pop., in 1801, 483; in 1831, 522. Other returns with the parish.

GWERN-HOWEL, an extra-parochial district in the hund. of Isaled, county of Denbigh, North Wales. It is situated on the great road from Shrewsbury to Holyhead, nearly 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. Houses 16. Pop., in 1811, 97; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £27.

GWERSYLT, WITH ERTHIG, PARLAS AND BORRAS, a township in the parish of Gresford, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 3 miles north-north-west of Wrexham. Houses 173. Pop., in 1801, 761; in 1831, 834. Other returns with the parish.

GWESTYDD, a township in the parish of Llanllwchaarn, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 3 miles north of Newtown. The manufacture of flannel is carried on here.

GWINNAR, a parish in the hund. of Penwith, union of Redruth, county of Cornwall; 7½ miles south-west by west of Redruth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £12; gross income £362. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are 3 daily schools. There are several valuable copper mines in this parish. Between 1718 and 1758, Borlase enumerates Herland mine here, as one of the most profitable in Cornwall. Previous to 1814, when the Lysons wrote, this mine was one of the 3 principal mines for silver in Cornwall. Wheal Alfred was one of the most productive mines for copper. Wheal Hope is another valuable mine in this parish. Acres 4,400. Houses 500. A. P. £5,185. Pop., in 1801, 1,654; in 1831, 2,728. Poor rates, in 1838, £611 6s.

GWITHIAN, a parish in the hund. of Penwith, union of Redruth, county of Cornwall; 7½ miles west of Redruth, on the coast of the Bristol channel, and south of the small river Gwithian, which falls into St. Ives bay. Living, a rectory united with that of Phillack. Here are 2 daily schools. The church and a great part of the parish were long ago totally overwhelmed with sea-sand, drifted by the winds from the shore. The village itself has escaped the same fate only by the timely planting of the sea-rush around it, which has arrested the progress of the sand. Acres 2,070. Houses 104. A. P. £1,110. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 539. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 10s.

GWNNWS, a parish in the hund. of Ilar, union of Tregaron, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 3 miles west of Tregaron, and west of the river Teifi. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Cardigan and dio. of St. David's; rated at £36 0s. 4d.; gross income £113. Patron, in 1835, T. P. B. Chichester. Here is a daily school. Houses 185. A. P. £2,015. Pop., in 1801, 551; in 1831, 919. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 16s.

GWYDELWERN, a parish in the hund. o. Edernion, union of Corwen, county of Merioneth, North Wales; 3½ miles north-west by west of Corwen, on the eastern bank of the river Alwen. It includes the hamlets of Cwm, Uwchmynydd, and Uwchafon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; rated at £30; gross income £138. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £632 14s. 2d. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Houses 302. A. P. £4,857. Pop., in

* As the wages in this year were higher than usual in consequence of the great demand for miners, so that it was difficult to procure agricultural labourers in the mining districts during 1836, the usual rate should be estimated somewhat lower.

† The variable heights of other adits in the same district will be seen by the following table, by Mr. Thomas, of those of other adit-mouths above the same level:—

Carn Marth Cove Water shoot	413 feet
Adit at Laity Mill	52 —
New Wheal Virgin Adit	374 —
Padden Andrea	287 —
Tresavean	208 —
Wheal Harmony	171 —
Wheal Mary	81 —
Wheal Sparagou	315 —

1801, 1,143; in 1831, 1,577. Poor rates, in 1838, £548 10s.

GWYDIR, a township in the parish of Llanrwst, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 1 mile south-west of Llanrwst. This township lies on the banks of the Conwy, and contains Upper and Lower Gwydir, the ancient residences of the Wynnes. A. P. £1,063. Pop., in 1801, 316; in 1831, 376.

GWYNEDD (THE), a river in North Wales, which rises in the southern quarter of Snowdon, and passes with great rapidity through that wild district by the hamlet of Beddgelart: clearing its way between the stupendous rocks and mountains which separate the counties of Carnarvon and Merioneth, it precipitates itself in a succession of falls at the singular bridge called Port-Aberglaslyn, which crosses it, and over which is the only road practicable in this rough district: issuing through an estuary it falls into Cardigan bay.

GWYNFE, a hamlet in the parish of Llangadock, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 5 miles south-west of Llandovery. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Carmarthen and dio. of St. David's; returned at £56; gross income £107. Patron, the vicar of Llangadock. Here is a daily school. Houses 158. A. P. £1,972. Pop., in 1821, 857; in 1831, 845.

GWNFIL, a township in the parish of Llanddewi-Brefi, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 5 miles south-west of Tregaron. Here is a daily school. Houses 75. Pop., in 1811, 239; in 1831, 315. Poor rates, in 1838, £74 13s.

GWYTHERIN, a parish in the hund. of Isaled, union of Llanrwst, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 6 miles east of Llanrwst. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; rated at £126 3s.; gross income £133. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here is a place of worship for the Calvinistic Methodists. A fair for cattle is held on May 6th. Houses 91. A. P. £1,415. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 463. Poor rates, in 1838, £176 12s.

GWYFFYLLIOG, a parish in the hund. and union of Ruthin, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 5 miles west of Ruthin. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Llanyynis. Here is a daily school. Houses 122. A. P. £2,117. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 636. Poor rates, in 1838, £368 18s.

GYFFIN, a parish in the hund. of Isaf, union of Conwy, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; about a mile south of Aber-Conwy. The living is a stipendiary curacy to the living of Conwy, the tithes being uplifted by the dean of Bangor. It is in the archd. and dio. of Bangor, and returned at £50; gross income £115. Here is a daily school, endowed with £5 per annum. Houses 110. A. P. £2,048. Pop., in 1801, 472; in 1831, 641. Poor rates, in 1838, £302.

GYHERNE, a chapelry in the parish of St.-Mary-Wisbeach, county of Cambridge; 5 miles south-west of Wisbeach. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of St.-Mary-Wisbeach, in the archd. and dio. of Ely; not in charge, returned at £75; gross income £80. Patron, the vicar of Wisbeach.

H

HABBERLEY, a parish in the hund. of Ford, union of Aitcham, county of Salop; 9 miles south-west of Shrewsbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 0s. 2½d., returned at £130; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, John Mytton, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £1 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 11s. Acres 1,110. Houses 19. A. P. £766. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 128.

HABERGHAM-EAVES, a township in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-west of Burnley, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Here are 10 daily schools. A new church has been built in this township, by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with tower, at an expense of £2,750. Sittings 1,056. Barracks were erected here in 1819. Burnley and Habbergham-Eaves formerly constituted one entire town or township; but since the year 1791 they have been disunited for parochial purposes. This town, by its great facility of land and water carriage, and its mines and quarries of coal, stone, slate, &c., has become a place of considerable trade and manufacture, and contains large and extensive cotton and woollen mills, and calico printing works—see BURNLEY and WHALLEY. Acres 3,910. Houses 1,131. A. P. £7,351. Pop., in 1801, 1,919; in 1831, 5,817. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,598 5s.

HABROUGH, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 8 miles north-west of Great Grimsby, and west of the river Humber. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Killingholme. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and there are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,570. Houses 53. A. P. £1,289. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 313. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 13s.

HABTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Kirkby-Misperton, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-west by north of New Malton, on the northern bank of the river Rye. Acres 990. Houses 23. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 12s.

HABTON (LITTLE), a township in the above parish and county; 4 miles north-west of New Malton, bounded on the west by the river Rye. Acres 490. Houses 7. A. P., including Great Habton, £1,215. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 10s.

HACCOMBE, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Wonford, county of Devon; 3 miles east-south-east of Abbot's-Newton, near the English channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Devon and dio. of Exeter; rated at £25; gross income £253. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. P. Carew, Bart. The church contains several interesting monuments. "In the church of St. Blaize here, was a college, or large chantry, of 5 priests, under the government of an archipresbyter, in the time of King Edw. III." —Tanner's Not. Mon. An exemption from parochial assessments was granted to Haccombe by the crown, in return for some important services rendered by an ancestor of the Carews, to which family this place for many years belonged. Acres 290. Houses 2. A. P. with the parish of Combintinhead. Pop., in 1821, 27; in 1831, 13.

HACCONBY, a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Bourn. Living, a discharged vicarage, united to that of Morton. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 3,220. Houses 67. A. P. £2,966. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlet of Stainfield, 260; in 1831, 381. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 9s.

HACEBY, a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Grantham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 2s. 11d., returned at £97 11s. 3d.; gross income £227. Patrons, in 1835, Earl Brownlow and Sir W. Welby. Near the village of Hacey, on the side of a hill commanding a view of the coast at Boston-haven, rather extensive remains of ancient buildings, tessellated pavements, and other interesting vestiges of a fixed Roman military station, were discovered in 1818. The roof of one of the buildings appeared to have been covered with coarse blue slates, and the interior of the walls lined with tiles of various colours, and in some places with fine cement painted in imitation of stone. Some fragments of glass also were discovered: one piece was stained of a beautiful blue colour. Acres 730. Houses 13. A. P. £1,039. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1838, £22 15s.

HACHESTON, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north of Wickham-Market, on the western bank of the river Alde. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Parham. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £236 10s. 3d. impropriate, and £154 13s. 1d. vicarial. A fair for boots, shoes, upholstery, and joinery, is held here on November 12th. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum for educating 12 children. Other charities, in 1829, £12 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £268 8s. Acres 1,780. Houses 110. A. P. £2,327. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 549.

HACKERSALL. See PREESALL WITH HACKERSALL.

HACKFORD BY REEPHAM, a parish in the hund. of Eynesford, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 7 miles west-south-west of Aylsham. Living, a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Whitwell, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 10s. 5d.; gross income £365. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £232 4s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, G. H. Holley, Esq. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £26 11s. 8d. per annum besides a workhouse. Poor rates, in 1838, £297 14s. Acres 820. Houses 153. A. P. £3,231. Pop., in 1801, 467; in 1831, 698.

HACKFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 4 miles west by north of Wymondham, on the western bank of the river Yare, near one of its sources. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 15s. 10d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Gardon, Esq. Charities, in 1834, £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £119 3s. Acres 820. Houses 52. A. P. £1,144. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 229.

HACKFORTH, a township in the parish of Hornby, north riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles south of Catterick. Here is a daily school. This was the native place of Cuthbert Tunstall, bishop of Durham, who concurred in most of the proceedings instituted by Henry VIII. for the reformation of the church, but died in confinement for denying the supremacy of Queen Elizabeth. Acreage with the parish. Houses 29. A. P. £1,735. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 142. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 12s.

HACKINGTON, or ST. STEPHEN'S, a parish in the hund. of Westgate, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Blean, county of Kent; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Canterbury, and north-west of the river Stour. The Canterbury and Whitstable railway runs through this parish. Acres 1,190. Houses 64. A. P. £3,611. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 436. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 2s. 3d.; gross income £547. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £611. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The church is a beautiful model of a village church. It is cruciform, with a tower surmounted by a low spire at the west end. The principal part was erected about the close of the 12th century. The entrance at the west end is in the Norman style, and displays the zigzag moulding in a state of good preservation. The south cross was rebuilt by Sir Roger Manwood, lord of the manor, who lies buried here in a large vault made during his lifetime. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Sir Roger Manwood's hospital, locally situated in this parish, though more particularly belonging to Canterbury, was founded previous to 1592. It consists of 6 tenements or almshouses under one roof, with gardens behind, and a small court in front. It is inhabited by 6 alms-people who are not maintained, but derive various benefits from the small endowments of the hospital. Other charities, in 1836, £17 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £213 6s. Hales-place, belonging to the Hales family, is a noble and majestic mansion erected, in 1768, on the summit of a rising lawn, and surrounded with tall poplars and firs in all the variety of forest scenery. "In the churchyard here, A. D. 1187, Baldwin, archbishop of Canterbury, began a chapel in honour of St. Stephen and St. Thomas of Canterbury, wherein he proposed to found a noble college of 40 secular priests, and that the king and every one of his suffragan bishops should have a prebend, every one to be worth 40 marks per ann.; but the prior and monks of Christ-church made such vigorous opposition to this design in the court of Rome, that after the archbishop had, in the next year, settled some secular canons here, he was forced to desist, and the chapel was, by the pope's command, levelled with the ground, A. D. 1191."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

HACKLESTON, a hamlet in the parish of Piddington, county of Northampton; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Northampton, in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway. Here is a place of worship belonging to the Particular Baptists: the church was formed in 1781. There is also a Sunday school, with a lending library attached. Acreage with the parish. Houses 93. A. P. £1,387. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 425. Poor rates, in 1838, £192 2s.

HACKLESTONE, a tything in the parish of Fittleton, county of Wilts; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Ludgershall. The General and the Particular Baptists have places of worship here. Pop. returned with the parish.

HACKNESS, a parish in the liberty of Whitby-Strand, union of Scarborough, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Scarborough, comprising the townships of Broxa, Hackness, and Sufileld with Everley, and the chapelry of Harwood-Dale with Silpho. The river Derwent flows through the parish. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the north riding and dio. of York; valued at £21; gross income £53. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. V. B. Johnstone, Bart., M.P. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. The small village of Hackness stands in a highly romantic valley, whence others branch forth in different directions. They are for the most part profusely adorned with the richest foliage to the very summit of the heights by which they are surrounded. Springs of water bursting from the sides of the hills in natural cascades, or falling with gentle murmurs, contribute to enliven the scenery, and the Derwent, which has its source in the mountainous country to the north, glides with a gentle stream past the village, to the westward of which the bleak and barren moors form a striking contrast with the luxuriant scenes of Hackness. To this delightful spot, St. Hilda, foundress of Whitby abbey, gave the name of Hactenus, whence Hackness, and "built a monastery a little before her death, A. D. 680, which, probably by the wars and devastations of the country, was demolished long before the Conquest. In the time of King William Rufus, the pirates having sacked Whitby, and driven away the monks from thence, William de Percy gave them this place, where they continued some time, and then returned to Whitby, but left some of their number here in the church of St. Peter, as a cell subordinate to their abbey."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Here is the elegant mansion built by Sir J. V. B. Johnstone, Bart. Acres 12,730. Houses 101. A. P. £5,089. Pop., in 1801, 504; in 1831, 749. Poor rates, in 1838, £291 1s. Acres of the township 1,940. Houses 22. A. P. £1,286. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 215. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 14s.

HACKNEY, a parish in the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Hackney, county of Middlesex; 3 miles north-east by north of St. Paul's cathedral, London. The Lea navigation and the Regent's canal intersect the parish. It is divided into three districts: viz., Hackney-St. John, South Hackney, and West Hackney; and contains the hamlets or villages of Hackney,—including Mare-street and Church-street,—Homerton, Lower and Upper, Clapton, Dalston, Stamford-hill, Shacklewell, part of Stoke-Newington, and most part of Kingsland. Acres 3,300. Houses 5,220. A. P., in 1823, £144,581. Pop., in 1801, 12,730; in 1831, 31,047.

The living of the central parish is a rectory; gross income £1,150. Patron, in 1835, F. J. D. Tyssen. The church is a handsome brick edifice, with a cupola and dome of stone, and contains several ancient monuments, among which is that of Christopher Urswick, almoner to Henry VII., and rector of this parish. West Hackney is a rectory; gross income £465. The church, a handsome structure, was opened in 1824. South Hackney is also a rectory; gross income £443. Patron, in 1835, F. J. D. Tyssen. The church was built in 1810 as a chapel-of-ease. There are here 3 Independent churches, formed in 1672, 1800, and 1803; a Presbyterian, in 1715; a Unitarian chapel in which the celebrated Dr. Joseph Priestley, Dr. Richard Price, and Thomas Belsham, acted as pastors. Among the Independent ministers were Matthew Henry, the learned Commentator on the Bible, and Dr. William Bates. There are 4 infant schools here, one of which is endowed; and 59 daily schools, including 2 National and 2 daily schools. Amongst the daily schools are several supported by endowment, or subscription, or both. The London Orphan asylum situated at Clapton, is a very valuable institution. Here 300 children are educated, clothed, and boarded. The income of this establishment arises from voluntary contributions. The hospital is a handsome building. The parochial school originated in voluntary subscription, and has since derived its chief support from the same source, with the aid of legacies and other occasional donations and collections made at church. Between 1809 and 1818, this establishment was endowed with property, producing a permanent income of £37 2s. per annum. This is one of the National schools. The endowments of other educational establishments here at the time of the inquiry were as follows:—the Ram's chapel schools for boys and girls, at Homerton, endowed, the former with £60, and the latter with £35 16s. per annum; Norris's school in Grove-street, endowed with £10 per annum; the free-school belonging to Wells-street chapel, endowed with £46 6s. per annum. The Homerton academy or college for the education of Congregational or Independent ministers, originated in 1769. About 18 students have generally enjoyed the benefits of this institution: of these, 12 are sent under the auspices of the King's Head society, and 6 under those of the Congregational Fund Board. They are instructed in the Greek, Latin, and Hebrew languages, and in theology, &c. They have the benefit of an extensive library which has arisen from subscriptions, &c. The funds annually applied in support of this establishment, at the time of the charity inquiry, were about £1,500, besides which, upwards of £500 per annum were applied to several purposes not connected with education here, and to a school at Llan Brynmar in Montgomeryshire. Besides numerous minor benefactions, amounting in all to upwards of £500 per annum, there are various almshouses in Hackney, endowed with from £50 to £100 per annum, or upwards, each, and other valuable charitable institutions, including the Cumberland benevolent institution, a School of industry, the Metropolitan asylum for females, and a Savings bank. Poor rates, in 1838, £12,505.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Hackney. The Hackney poor-law union comprehends 2 parishes, embracing an area of 6 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 34,527. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £10,378 4s.

By the rapid increase of modern buildings around the metropolis, Hackney has become so connected with it as almost to form a part of its north-eastern suburb. This was one of the earliest favourite country residences for the citizens; and it is supposed to have given name to hackney coaches, by such as these having been first established for the purpose of accommodating the residents at Hackney. There were nearly 100 of these coaches kept here even in the first quarter of the 18th century. Over the river Lea here there is a handsome iron-bridge of one arch. To the south of this bridge are the Temple mills, originally belonging to the Knights Templars, who had a palace here. These mills were some years ago used for the manufacture of sheet-lead. The chief branches of manufactures carried on here are the preparation of colours, dyeing, calico-printing, and calendering, and the making of optical glasses. The lands in this vicinity are occupied by brick-makers, dairymen, and nurserymen. At Hackney there are splendid nurseries, green-houses, hot-houses, &c., with one of the finest collections of exotic plants in England. In 1838, 2 woollen mills here employed 10 hands. Silk was at one time extensively manufactured. In the reign of Charles II., a water-mill was erected on Hackney-marsh for practising a method of boring guns, discovered by Prince Rupert; but on his death the establishment was broken up, as he did not explain his invention. "At the bottom of Hackney-Marsh, through which the river Lea runs, between Old-Ford and the Wyck, there have been discovered, within these few years, [previous to 1751,] the remains of a great stone-causey, which, by the Roman coins, &c., found there, was no doubt one of the famous highways made by the Romans."—Old Eng. Gaz. The Knights Hospitallers, or Knights of St. John, as well as the Templars, anciently had property here. In Wells-street was a building, now destroyed, called St. John's palace, where the prior of the Knights Hospitallers resided. The principal historical event connected with Hackney, was the assembly of the duke of Gloucester and his adherents in arms against Richard II.: here they remained to await the return of a deputation sent to lay their grievances before the king. Howard, 'the philanthropist,' is supposed to have been born here, though no authentic record of his birth has been discovered. His father had a house in the parish, whither he retired after having made a fortune as an upholsterer and carpet-warehouseman in London. Sir Ralph Sadler, knight, a distinguished statesman and diplomatist, who died in 1587, and Dr. Robert South, an eminent divine, who was born in 1634, were natives of Hackney. Sir Ralph Sadler—say the editors of the Mag. Brit., 1738—"was first a servant to the Lord Cromwell, by whom being commended to King Henry VIII.'s favour, he was made secretary of state to that prince. He was as eminent for the sword as the pen, for in the battle of Muscledorburgh in Scotland, where the English were almost routed, he brought up our scattered troops, and invited them to fight by his example: which piece of valour so pleased the general, that he created him a knight banneret. He was small in stature, but tall in performances."

HACKTHORNE, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Aslaoke, union and county of Lincoln; 7 miles north of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4; gross income £139. Patron, in 1835, R. Cracroft, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,890. Houses 31. A. P. £2,614. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 244.

HACKWELL, or HAWKWELL, a parish in the hund. and union of Rochford, county of Essex; 1½ mile north-west of Rochford, and south of the river Crouch. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £392. Patron, in 1835, R. Bristow, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,250. Houses 55. A. P. £1,824. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 19s.

HADDENHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 6½ miles south-west by south of Aylesbury. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Cuddington, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 17s. 1d.; gross income £370. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1810, and 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1832, £45 5s. 9d., besides wheat and barley out of tithes for bread to poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £934 4s. Haddenham was formerly a market-town, but the market has long since fallen to decay. Acres 3,150. Houses 322. A. P. £4,293. Pop., in 1801, 964; in 1831, 1,477.

HADDENHAM, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Witchford, Isle of Ely, union of Ely, county of Cambridge; 6 miles south-west by south of Ely, and north of the old West river. Living, a perpetual curacy, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Ely; gross income £235. Patron, the archdeacon of Ely. Here are a Baptist chapel and 14 daily schools, one of which is endowed with property producing, in 1836, £74 2s. per annum, and another with about £26 per annum as schoolmaster's salary. Other charities possessed by this parish yield about £187 15s. per annum, arising chiefly from town lands. £20 per annum are applied to educational purposes, and the remainder principally given to the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £775 11s. Acres 9,530. Houses 289. A. P. £13,236. Pop., in 1801, 1,090; in 1831, 1,929.

HADDINGTON, a township in the parish of Awbourn, county of Lincoln; 7½ miles south-south-west of Lincoln, on the western bank of the river Witham. Acres 910. Houses 16. A. P. £955. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 123. Poor rates, in 1838, £17 11s.

HADDISCOE, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-north-east of Beccles, and west of the river Waveney. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Monk's-Toft, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £794; in the patronage of King's college, Cambridge. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1834, £29 16s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1833, £202 7s. In the reign of Henry III. here was a preceptory of Knights Templars. Acres 2,180. Houses 71. A. P. £2,957. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 333.

HADDLESEY-CHAPEL, a chapelry in the parish of Birkin, west riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles south-south-west of Selby, near the junction of the Selby canal with the river Aire. In consequence of the formation of a new and shorter north road from Doncaster to York, a cast-iron bridge of 3 arches has been here erected by the Butterley company over the Aire. Living, a curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Birkin. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,140. Houses 39. A. P. £1,245. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 196. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 5s.

HADDLESLEY (WEST), a township in the parish of Birkin, west riding of Yorkshire; 4¼ miles south-west of Selby. Acres 1,160. Houses 44. A. P. £1,617. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 293. Poor rates, in 1838, £178 2s.

HADDON, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, union of Peterborough, county of Huntingdon; 3 miles north-west by north of Stilton, and east of Billingbrook. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 5s.; gross income £385. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Aboyne. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 1,240. Houses 29. A. P. £1,818. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 130. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 8s.

HADDON (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 7½ miles north-west of Northampton, and in the line of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £15; gross income £152. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Smyth. Here are 5 daily schools. Charities, in 1825, £9 1s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £543 18s. Acres 2,990. Houses 153. A. P. £4,090. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 644.

HADDON (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Guisborough, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 8 miles north-north-east of Daventry. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, S. Spence, Esq. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1821; and a daily school supported by endowment. Charities, in 1825, £81 14s. per annum, of which £60

2s. 8d. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £620 13s. Acres 2,900. Houses 133. A. P. £4,737. Pop., in 1801, 806; in 1831, 909.

HADDON (OVER). See BAKEWELL.

HADDON HALL, or HADDON GRANGE, in the parish of Bakewell, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby, is a very venerable relic of the baronial period. It is situated about 2 miles south-west of Chatsworth house, 10 miles west-south-west of Chesterfield, and 10 west of the North Midland railway, at Clay Cross tunnel, where it is joined by a zigzag coal railroad. The following general account is chiefly taken from the Peak Guides of Glover and Rhodes, the Archæologia of King, &c.,—which see for a more particular detail. Haddon hall stands on an eminence of limestone rock, which is curiously imbedded with other strata, on the east bank of the river Wye; and overlooks the romantic dale of Haddon. This castellated mansion is considered to be one of the most complete residences of the feudal lords of England now remaining, and presents an interesting study to the historian and antiquary. It is uninhabited and partially dilapidated, but it contains enough to show the arrangements of the domestic economy of the great in the middle ages. We trace in it, their festive entertainments and their profuse hospitality, and obtain considerable insight into the rude magnificence of their general mode of living :—

Haddon, within thy silent halls,
Deserted courts, and turrets high,
How mournfully on memory falls
Past scenes of antique pageantry.
A holy spell pervades thy gloom,
A silent charm breathes all around,
And the dread stillness of the tomb
Reigns o'er thy hallow'd, haunted ground.
King of the Peak! thy hearth is lone,
No sword-girt vassals gather there,
No minstrel's harp pours forth its tone
In praise of Maud or Margaret fair,
Where are the high and stately dames
Of princely Vernon's banner'd hall?
And where the knights, and what their names,
Who led them forth to festival?
They slumber low, and in the dust,
Prostrate and fallen the warrior lies,
His falchion's blade is dim with rust,
And quench'd the ray of beauty's eyes!
Those arms which once blazed through the field,
Their brightness never shall resume;
O'er spear and helm, and broken shield,
Low droops the faded, sullied plume.
Arise! ye mighty dead, arise!
Can Vernon, Rutland, Stanley, sleep?
Whose gallant hearts and eagle eyes
Disdain'd alike to crouch or weep?
And ye who owned the orbs of light,
The golden tress—the pure fair brow—
In the cold sleep of endless night,
Say, do the Vernon's daughters bow?
No, no, they wake! a seraph guard,
To circle this their loved domain;
Which time has spared, nor man has marr'd
With sacrilegious hand profane.
Haddon! thy chivalry are fled!
The tilt and tourney's brave array,
Where knights in steel from heel to head,
Bore love's or honour's prize away.
No hunter's horn is heard to sound;
No dame, with swan-like mien glides by,
Accompanied by hawk and hound,
On her fair palfrey, jocosely.
Thy splendid sun has set in night:
But gentler, holier, more subdued,
Than earth's most brilliant dazzling light,
Thy moonlight garden's solitude.

H. B. in 'Bijou,' 1828.

There is a romantic grandeur in the position of Haddon hall, which produces an intense effect upon the mind of the beholder, independently of the recollections connected with its antiquity. The rocks in which it is based rise immediately from the banks of the Wye, and are enveloped in foliage. The lofty embattled turrets that present themselves above the trees impart to the scene a bold and magnificent character, and realize to the painter's eye many of those views which are seldom seen in England, except upon canvass. When Rhodes visited this interesting spot,—“The Wye, swollen by heavy rains, had overflowed its banks, and its windings, round the base of the wooded eminence on which Haddon stands, presented the appearance of a formidable river, which happily harmonized with the surrounding objects, and completed the composition of one of the sweetest pictures in the Peak of Derbyshire. The day was gloomy, and the sombre effect of the sky, together with the dark unvaried tone that prevailed, increased the solemnity of the scene. A transient ray of sunny light moved gently over Haddon as we beheld it, and gradually unfolded its architectural detail: it was a momentary gleam, at whose bright touch the landscape glowed with beauty: too soon it passed away! a thicker gloom succeeded, and again involved the whole in shadow.” Haddon hall is built in the castellated style, the elevations being embattled with lofty turrets, which give the whole edifice the appearance of a strong fortress, not only at a distance but also upon a nearer approach. The most ancient portion may have been intended for warlike purposes, but not even that or any other part could have been capable of any very effectual resistance. We are inclined, observes Mr. Glover to believe, with Gilpin, that there was a castle on the same site previous to the conquest; as vestiges of Saxon architecture are perceptible in the towers and in the chapel. It is generally said that the structure was not intended for warlike purposes, but this must have alluded entirely to the edifice as it now appears, and of which the origin cannot be traced higher than the fourteenth century, or rather the fifteenth and sixteenth. The great eastern tower may very probably have been the remains of an ancient fortress. One of the descendants of William Peveril is said to have resided here in the turbulent times of Stephen, when every baronial hall was a citadel. Early in the reign of Richard I. Haddon came into the possession of the Vernons, with whom it remained through a period of nearly four centuries, during which time it was invariably regarded not only as the seat of feudal splendour, but of the most sumptuous and munificent hospitality. Sir George Vernon, who died in the seventh year of the reign of Elizabeth, was distinguished by the appellation of the ‘King of the Peak.’ His wealth, and his influence in the neighbourhood where he resided, were alike unbounded: he was the lord of thirty manors, which at his death descended to his two daughters, Margaret and Dorothy, the latter of whom was married to Sir John Manners. Report says that this marriage was clandestine; and the apartment from which the lovers effected their escape through the gardens is still pointed out. Thus Haddon passed to the noble house of Rutland, and was the family residence until the beginning of the last century, when it was deserted for the more splendid castle and palace of Belvoir.

Grand and imposing as Haddon is without, but little attention has been paid to convenience in its interior construction. With the exception of the kitchen, the cellar, the dining-hall, and the gallery, it is a discordant mass of small and uncomfortable apartments, crowded together without order. The style of architecture that prevailed in England previous to the reign of Elizabeth, when it experienced considerable improvement, was but little adapted to domestic convenience, and some of its defects are exemplified at Haddon. Those portions of this old mansion which were appropriated to the purposes of good living, and essential to the princely hospitality by which it was distinguished in the days of the first duke of Rutland, when upwards of 140 servants were maintained within it, are sufficiently ample to justify all that tradition has told of the ancient festivities of the place. The very limited capacity of the chapel, says Rhodes, when contrasted with the magnitude of those apartments, shows, that though the good people of this establishment took up a large space in which to manage their temporal affairs, they contrived to arrange their spiritual concerns within very modest dimensions. Many of the rooms in the hall are hung with loose tapestry. "The doors," observes Mr. King in the Archæologia, "were concealed everywhere behind the hangings, so that the tapestry was to be lifted up to pass in and out; only, for convenience, there were great iron hooks (many of which are still in their places) by means whereof it might occasionally be held back. The doors being thus concealed, nothing can be conceived more ill-fashioned than their workmanship; few of these fit at all close; and wooden bolts, rude bars, and iron hasps are in general their best and only fastenings." The gloomy apartments and general appearance of this antique edifice, are said to have suggested to Mrs. Radcliffe some of the traits she has introduced in her terrific descriptions of castles in the Mysteries of Udolpho. "Nothing," says King, "can convey a more complete idea of the ancient mode of living than is to be obtained on this spot. Many great dwellings, which formerly helped to preserve the same ideas, are now quite razed and gone; and others are only heaps of ruins, so far maimed, that it requires much attention to make out or comprehend what they once were, or to understand any thing of their original plan; and it is much to be wished by every lover of antiquities, that this princely habitation may never come so far into favour as to be modernized, lest the traces of ancient times and manners, which are now so rarely preserved in this country, should be utterly lost."

As an object of antiquarian attention Haddon hall will have its attraction as long as it exists, while the beauty of the country around it will ever excite the admiration of the traveller. The magnitude of this venerable pile of buildings—its castellated form—and its embattled turrets rising above the trees that adorn and encompass it, have a magnificent effect, especially when seen from the vale between Haddon and Rowsley, where the best and the most imposing view of this fine old mansion is obtained. From this situation its richest and most ample front is displayed, its towers rise more majestically, and its groves assume a considerable portion of grandeur. The romantic Wye meanders here in so devious a course that the distance along its banks is double of that by the road between Bakewell and Rowsley. Fuller, in his Worthies of England, asserts of "the fair pastures nigh Haddon, belonging to the duke of Rutland," that they are "so incredibly battenning (fattening) of cattle, that one proffered to surround it with shillings to purchase it, which because to be set sideways, not edgeways, were refused."—The rising grounds around the hall are covered with plantations of oak, lime, ash, and sycamore. The grove of lime trees is remarkably fine. The hall garden and summer-house are laid out and built in the style of the sixteenth century, with terraces, yew hedges, and stone ascents. They convey a striking image of the manners of those days, where we read of walks with stone balustrades, and much of the formality of art mingled with the luxuriant beauties of nature. The summer-house stands on an elevation, and commands an extensive view of the mountain scenery of this part of the county. The duke of Rutland established a bowling-green in these grounds for the accommodation of his tenantry and the visitors at Bakewell and the vicinity, but it is now totally neglected. The Wye falls into the Derwent near the village of Rowsley, at the distance of a mile and a half from Haddon. At Rowsley visitors find excellent accommodations at the Peacock Inn. Here, as at Bakewell, permission is obtained for fishing, and many gentlemen during the summer season make this inn their temporary residence.—The duke of Rutland's fishing and shooting seat in this neighbourhood is a romantic place called Stanton Woodhouse, embosomed in trees. Of this house, the elegant authoress of the Vignettes of Derbyshire, says it "might have been an appendage to Haddon. Its thick walls and iron-bound windows, circular stone stair-way and turreted chimneys accord with that ancient place. One spacious apartment has been modernized, perhaps sixty years ago, and the present domestic accommodations are well suited for the habits and residence of a gentleman's family. Fine old yews and hollies, that have almost attained the size of forest trees, grow beneath the terrace; and in a line with the house, elms that might vie with the horse-chestnut of a hundred years, spread their leafy arms around." There is a very extraordinary echo opposite to Haddon hall.

HADFIELD AND DINTING, a township in the parish of Glossop, county of Derby; 11 miles north-north-west of Chapel-in-le-Frith, bounded on the north and west by the river Etherow. The Manchester and Sheffield railway runs within $\frac{1}{4}$ mile of the village of Hadfield. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1808. This was at one time entirely an agricultural district, but cotton factories, &c., have been established—see GLOSSOP. Cattle fairs are held on the 9th of May and 15th of October. Acreage with the parish. Houses 225. Pop., in 1831, 1,270.

HADHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Edwinstree, union of Bishop-Stortford, county of Hertford; 4 miles west by south of Bishop-Stortford, on the western bank of the Ash river. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Little Hadham, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £66 13s. 4d.; gross income £1,654. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are a place of worship for Independents; and 3 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Charities, in 1834, nearly £90 per annum, besides a few almshouses. Poor rates, in 1838, £692 2s. A fair for toys is held on June 24th. The bishops of London once held the manor-house here. Acres 4,350. Houses 241. A. P. £5,728. Pop., in 1801, 900; in 1831, 1,288.

HADHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Edwinstree, union of Bishop-Stortford, county of Hertford; 3 miles north-west by west of Bishop-Stortford. Living, a curacy subordinate to the rectory of Great Hadham. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1804; and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1834, £17 7s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £699 10s. A fair for toys is held here on July 15th. Acres 3,070. Houses 123. A. P. £4,203. Pop., in 1801, 635; in 1831, 878.

HADLEIGH, a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Ipswich, and 64 north-east of London, pleasantly situated on the river Bret. Acres 3,440. Houses 662. A. P. £7,605. Pop., in 1801, 2,332; in 1831, 3,425. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £45 2s. 1d.; gross income £987. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The church constitutes a principal ornament to the town. It is a tasteful edifice with an elegant steeple. There is a tomb in this church said to be that of Guthrum, the Dane, who, after his defeat by Alfred, embraced Christianity and held the government of the East Angles. Here are an Independent church, formed about the beginning of the 18th century; a Baptist, in 1820; and other dissenting bodies. There are 6 daily schools here, one of which is supported by £34 5s. per annum, arising from three endowments, viz.: Dr. Pykenham's, Anne Beaumont's, and Alabaster's. There are also 2 day and Sunday National schools. The estates and property derived under sundry charitable donations for the poor of this parish have long been combined, and are vested in trustees called the Grand Feoffees for behoof of the poor, &c. The income arising from these in 1823, amounted to £771 0s. 6d. After deducting various necessary expenses, this income is applied in allowances of money, clothing, fuel, &c., to poor people, including the inmates of certain almshouses, 12 of which for 24 poor people were erected, together with a chapel, in Magdalene-street, by William Pykenham, LL.D., archdeacon of Suffolk, and rector of Hadleigh, and by his last will, dated in 1497, endowed with lands in Whatfield, Aldham, Hadleigh, &c., which now constitute part of the Grand Feoffment. Two additional almshouses for 4 poor people were attached by Dr. Good to those founded by Dr. Pykenham; and in 1540, John Raven erected and endowed 4 almshouses in Benton-street, for 8 poor inhabitants of Hadleigh. Of the residue of the charity income, £17 were paid as schoolmaster's salary. Other charities, about £90 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,254 19s. The town of Hadleigh was anciently governed by a mayor and corporation, but the charter was surrendered under a writ of quo warranto, in the reign of James II., and has never been restored. Hadleigh is one of the polling-places for the members for the western division of the county. The woolen trade was formerly carried on here to a great extent, but it has long since declined. In 1838 a silk mill here employed 295 hands. The market is on Monday; fairs are held on Whit-Monday, for toys; and on October 10th, for butter, cheese, and toys.

HADLEIGH, a parish in the hund. and union of Rochford, county of Essex; 2½ miles north-west of Leigh, and north of the mouth of the Thames. It stands on high ground near South Benfleet, and is separated from Canvey island by a branch of the river named Hadleigh Ray. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £11 14s. 7d.; gross income £450. Patrons, the rector and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. Here are 2 daily schools. The Hadleigh Sunday school charity, in 1836, amounted to £23 8s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 12s. The ruins of Hadleigh castle, built here by Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, in the reign and by the leave of Henry II., are picturesquely situated on the summit of an eminence which commands a pleasing and extensive prospect over the broad estuary formed by the junction of the Medway with the Thames at the Nore. This castle appears to have been a grand structure of stone, strongly cemented together by mortar of extraordinary hardness mixed with shells. The north and south walls were strengthened with buttresses. The walls at the bottom of the towers which remain are 9 feet thick: elsewhere they are 5 feet. Though nearly covered with moss, these ruins exhibit traces of ancient magnificence, as well as strength. A fair for toys is held here on June 24th. Acres 4,480. Houses 82. A. P. £2,152. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 365.

HADLEIGH, a hamlet in the parish of Boxford, county of Suffolk. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 610. Houses 46. A. P. £446. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 214. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 11s.

HADLEY WITH BLAGRAVE, a tything in the parish of Lambourn, county of Berks; 3 miles south-west of Lambourn. Houses 84. A. P. £3,277. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 414. Other returns with the parish.

HADLEY-MONKEN, a parish in the hund. of Edmonton, union of Barnet, county of Middlesex; ¾ mile north-north-east of Chipping-Barnet. Living, a donative in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; returned at £65 2s. 2d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. R. Thackeray. The church is a handsome structure, exhibiting various styles of architecture. The steeple or tower is built of flint. On the top there is still preserved an iron pitch-pot, or fire-pan, anciently used as a beacon. Very few such beacons now exist. The views from this tower over Enfield-chase, the Thames, and the county of Kent, are uncommonly beautiful. There are 2 daily, and 2 day and Sunday schools in this parish. Charities, in 1822, £132 per annum, chiefly consisting of bequests by Sir R. and Lady Wilbraham and others, principally for the endowment of almshouses for 6 poor women. Poor rates, in 1838, £409 1s. The village of Hadley stands on higher ground than any other in the vicinity of London. The name is compounded of the Saxon words Heed-leagh, which signify a high place. The appendage of Monken occurs in ancient records, and probably originated in its having been connected with the abbey of Walden. The approach to the village from the high road is through an irregular avenue of trees, progressively opening to view a succession of rural retreats scattered about in pleasing irregularity. At a spot where the road divides, there is a column erected in commemoration of a battle fought there between the houses of York and Lancaster in 1741. Acres 2,530. Houses 164. A. P. £3,780. Pop., in 1801, 5,591; in 1831, 979.

HADLOW, a parish in the hund. of Tonbridge, lathe of Aylesford, union of Tonbridge, county of Kent; 3½ miles north-east of Tonbridge, and north-west of the river Medway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £13, gross income £974. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. P. Monypenny. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists; and 6 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,053. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 586½ acres of this parish were cultivated as hop-gardens: average of hops charged 645,828 lbs.: excise duty £5,381 18s. A fair for cutlery is held here on Wednesday. Acres 5,930. Houses 363. A. P. £6,365. Pop., in 1801, 1,115; in 1831, 1,853.

HADNAL-EASE, a chapelry in the parish of Middle, county of Salop; 5 miles north-north-east of Shrewsbury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £50 1s.; gross income £55. Patron, the rector of Middle. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1797; and a daily school, endowed by the late Lady Hill, with £15 per annum. Acres 430. Houses 77. A. P. £2,441. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 398. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 13s.

HADSOR, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; 1¼ mile south-east of Droitwich, intersected by the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and the Worcester and Birmingham canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £6 7s. 3½d.; gross income £254. Patron, in 1835, J. H. Gatton, Esq. The church is small and ancient, but of singularly beautiful architecture. This parish unites with Droitwich in returning a member to parliament. Acres 940. Houses 23. A. P. £1,602. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 11s.

HADSPEN, a tything in the parish of Pitcombe, county of Somerset. Pop., in 1821, 246. Other returns with the parish.

HADSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Freshwell, union of Linton, county of Essex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Linton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £19; gross income £269. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here is a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1836, £2 3s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £221 10s. A fair for horses, &c., is held here on June 28th. Acres 1,870. Houses 84. A. P. £2,070. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 424.

HADSTON, a township in the parish of Warkworth, Northumberland, near the river Coquet; 10 miles north-north-east of Morpeth. Tithes commuted in 1839: aggregate amount £22 11s. 3d. vicarial; and £154 1s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. the bishop of Carlisle's. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 97. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 13s.

HAFOD, or EGLWYS-NEWYDD, a township and parish in the hund. of Ilar, union of Aberystwith, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 14 miles south-east of Aberystwith. Living, a perpetual curacy to the parish of Llanfihangel-y-Creiddyn, in the archd. of Cardigan and dio. of St. David's; rated at £27 17s. 8d.; gross income £98. Patron, in 1835, T. Johnes, Esq. The name Hafod denotes 'the summer residence.' This place is known to the literary world as the demense of Thomas Johnes, Esq., editor of 'Froissart's Chronicles,' and lord-lieutenant, custos rotulorum, and member of parliament, for the county of Cardigan. The Rev. Richard Warner describes it as a deep and narrow valley, widening between mountains of towering height and fantastic shapes, thickly mantled with luxuriant woods, which fringe the precipitous sides of these enormous protuberances from their summits to their base. Through this valley, the river Ystwith, a truly Alpine stream, impetuous, foaming, and fierce, throws its crystalline waters; sometimes darting from an open rocky ledge into a deep and dark abyss below; at others, pouring through the gloomy recesses of an impenetrable wood, and discovering its course only by the roaring of its waters; increasing its current as it flows, by the addition of numberless little streams, which, leaping down the mountains in all directions, hurry to unite themselves with it. On a gentle rise of land, which swells gradually from the river, and backed by a noble wood, that sheltered it from the eastern blasts, stood the delightful mansion of Mr. Johnes, built in the modern Gothic style, uniting every possible convenience and comfort with an appearance of the greatest elegance, and the most correct taste. Around it, walks, varied and extensive, commanded views beautiful, romantic, and astonishing; woods and rocks; bridges and cataracts; the highly ornamented garden, and the rugged, uncultivated mountain. Indeed, the whole together formed a scene so striking, that while wandering through its ever changing beauties, we felt, says Warner, no inclination to tax Mr. Cumberland with enthusiasm, when he declared, that in 10 years travelling through the Alps, the Apennines, the Sabine hills, and the Tyrolese; the shores of the Adriatic; the Glaciers of Switzerland; and the banks of the Rhine; he never saw any thing so fine, never so many pictures concentrated in one spot. But what Hafod was most celebrated for, was its invaluable library, collected during a space of 40 years, by the indefatigable industry of the intelligent proprietor, and a gallery of paintings by the first masters. This magnificent accumulation was totally destroyed by fire on the 13th of March, 1807. A short time previous to this lamentable event, a printing-house had been erected in the demesne, where the translations of Froissart, Joinville, Brocquiere, and Monstrelet were printed. A new and equally elegant mansion was afterwards built, and another library accumulated. These, together with the furniture, wines, &c., and the estate itself, and the timber on it, were sold to the Duke of New castle, in 1833, for £62,000. In the vicinity of Hafod is 'the Devil's-bridge,' a single arch, 29 feet in span, thrown over the original one, which still remains;* while both surmount "a profound chasm, stretching nearly east and west for upwards of a mile, the almost perpendicular sides of which are completely covered with trees of different kinds; the elegant foliage of the mountain-ash, the mournful shade of the pensile birch, and the broad arms of the majestic oak. Through the bottom of this abyss the river Mynach pours its roaring tide, hidden from the eye by the deep shade of surrounding woods, but bursting upon the ear in the awful 'sound of many waters;' in the thunder of numerous cataracts, leaping from ledge to ledge, and lashing the hollows of excavated rocks, which reverberate and multiply the roar. Immediately above this rich but awful scene, rise the neighbouring hills of Cardiganshire, bleak, barren, and dark, assuming the most fantastic shapes, and thrown about in the wildest confusion. The horizon is bounded by the lofty summits of the more important mountains of Montgomeryshire and Merioneth, amongst which the broad huge head of Plinlimmon exalts itself to the skies."—Warner. Adjacent is the Hafod Arms inn, a neat and comfortable house built by Mr. Johnes.

HAFODRYNNOG, or HAVODDRYNNOG, a hamlet in the parish of Llanwanno, county of Glamorgan, South Wales, situated in an iron and coal district near the Rontha Vach; 8 miles west-south-west of Merthyr-Tydfil. Houses 118. A. P. £1,519. Pop., in 1831, 679.

HAFOD-Y-PORTH, a hamlet in the parish of Margam, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; about 6 miles south-east of Neath. Here was formerly a chapel. Returns with the parish.

HAGBORNE, a parish in the hund. of Moreton, union of Wallingford, county of Berks, including the liberties of East and West Hagborne; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Wallingford, in the vicinity of the Great Western railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £15 10s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and returned at £136; gross income £166. Patron, the Rev. R. Meredith. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, about £45 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £608 17s. Here is a small endowment for the education of children. Acres 2,830. Houses 155. A. P. £3,796. Pop., in 1801, 695; in 1831, 782.

HAGGERSTON, a parish—formerly a chapelry to St. Leonard's—in the Tower division of the hund. of Ossulstone, county of Middlesex. The Regent canal intersects the parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of London, not in charge; gross income £157. Patron, the archdeacon of London. The church is a neat stone edifice recently built. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Pop. with the parish of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch.

* The newer arch was built in 1758. The older about the conclusion of the 11th century by the monks of Secota Florida abbey, a religious house 10 miles distant, the picturesque ruins of which still remain. The old bridge is called in Welsh Pont-ar-Mynach, the bridge of the Mynach; and Pont-ar-Diawl, the bridge of the Devil, vulgar superstition asserting Satan to be the constructor of it.

HAGHMON-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty in Wellington division of the hund. of South Bradford, county of Salop; 8 miles east-south-east of Shrewsbury. Here are the ruins of an abbey, which Tanner informs us was "founded in 1110 by William Fitz Alan of Clun, for regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, which was dedicated to St. John the apostle and evangelist, and had at the dissolution, revenues yearly worth £259 13s. 7d. q. Dugd.; £294 12s. 9d. Speed. The site was granted to Edmund Lytlington, 32^o Hen. VIII."

HAGLEY, a parish in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Bromesgrove, county of Worcester; 2½ miles south-south-east of Stourbridge. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of Frankley and St. Kenelm, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £10 6s. 5½d.; gross income £834. Patron, in 1835, Lord Lyttleton. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1830, £16 6s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £324 11s. Near the village is Hagley Park, justly esteemed as one of the most elegant and delightful seats in England. As it was once the retreat of the accomplished Lord Lyttleton, and was frequently visited by Pope, Thomson, Hammond, and other eminent persons of first-rate genius and literary talent, it may now be truly considered British classical ground. Hagley-hall is beautifully situated on an undulated lawn. The interior is decorated with many exquisite and interesting productions of art. The grounds are full of natural and artificial objects of attraction—picturesque scenes and ornamental structures, with everywhere a profusion of timber, numerous lawns and vistas displaying the wildness of the forest or the desert, and the beauty of the garden. There are other elegant seats in this vicinity. Acres 2,830. Houses 135. A. P. £3,894. Pop., in 1801, 621; in 1831, 691.

HAGLOE. See AWRE.

HAGNABY, a parish in the west division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-west of Spilsby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8; gross income £82. Patron, in 1835, T. Coltman, Esq. Acres 640. Houses 14. A. P. £1,140. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1838, £9 15s.

HAGNABY WITH HANNAY, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Lowth, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-east of Alford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10; gross income £98. Patron, in 1835, J. Grant, Esq. "Herbert fil Alardi de Orreby, and the Lady Agnes his wife, built, A. D. 1175, a Premonstratensian abbey here, to the honour of the then new saint, Thomas of Canterbury; wherein a little before the suppression, were nine canons, whose possessions were then valued at £37 11s. 4d. per ann., as Dugd.; and at 98 7s. 4d. as Speed. The site was granted, 30^o Hen. VIII., to John Freeman of London."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Acres 1,010. Houses 18. A. P. £1,278. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 97. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 15s.

HAGWORTHINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-west by west of Spilsby. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 10s. 5d.; gross income £540. Patron, the bishop of Ely. The church contains an ancient and very curiously carved font. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Acres 2,430. Houses 124. A. P. £3,518. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 593. Poor rates, in 1838, £225 17s.

HAIGH, a township in the parish of Wigan, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-north-east of Wigan, near the Wigan and Preston railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £94. Patron, the rector of Wigan. The chapel is supposed to have been built in the reign of Edward II. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £49 12s. 9½d. per annum. "This is one of the most interesting amongst the numerous townships in the parish of Wigan, and the increase of its inhabitants is proceeding with a rapidity which sufficiently indicates its prosperity, for the influence of the moon is scarcely more certain upon the tides of the ocean, than the influence of prosperity is upon the tide of population. Haigh has long been celebrated for its cannel pits—a species of coal which takes that name probably because it serves for candle as well as for fire. It is found in beds about 3 feet in thickness, with a black bass below and above, and the declination or dip of the cannel is one yard in twenty. The fires made by it are cheerful and cleanly, and the coal itself of this kind is so clean, that at Haigh Hall, a summer-house is made of it, which the ladies, with their delicate drapery, visit with impunity. Toys of various kinds are also made from cannel, and when formed into plates, boxes, &c., it receives a polish as fine as black marble. On an eminence in this township stands Haigh Hall, the seat of the earl of Balcarres, an ancient edifice, built at several times, and inhabited, through a long succession of ages, by a family of Saxon origin. The chapel is supposed to be of the age of Edward II., and in front are the Stanley arms, with those of the Bradshaighs. The hall stands delightfully, and is considered one of the best situations in Lancashire, in the vicinity of a manufacturing town. From a large mount in the park are seen, on a clear day, thirteen counties of England and Wales, together with the Isle of Man; and yet, so well are the gardens and pleasure-grounds sheltered, that vegetation here puts on her richest and most luxuriant garb."—Baines' Hist. &c., of Lancashire. Acres 2,050. Houses 212. A. P. £5,653. Pop., in 1801, 798; in 1831, 1,271. Poor rates, in 1838, £334 18s.

HAIGHAM, or HOUGHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-north-west of Grantham, on the river Witham. Living, a rectory with that of Marston, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £33 8s. 6½d.; gross income £644. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. C. Thorold. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,590. Houses 57. A. P. £3,479. Pop., in 1801, 175; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 16s.

HAIGHTON, a township in the parish of Preston, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles east-south-east of Preston. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £4 6s. property of the vicar of Preston. The children of this township are eligible for the endowed school at Broughton. Acres 1,050. Houses 36. A. P. £1,799. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 4s.

HAILES, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Winchcomb, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north-east of Winchcomb. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Didbrook. "Richard, earl of Cornwall, and afterwards king of the Romans and emperor of Germany, began here, A. D. 1246, and finished, at the expense of 10,000 marks, A. D. 1251, an abbey for monks of the Cistercian order brought from Beaulieu in Hampshire. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints, and valued, 25^o Hen. VIII., at £337 7s. 8d. per annum. ob. Dugd. The site was granted, 1^o Edw. VI., to Sir Thomas Seymour, and after his attainder to William, marquess of Northampton, 4^o Edw. VI.—Tanner's Not. Mon. Acres 1,520. Houses 21. A. P. £2,607. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 123.

HAILEY, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Witney, county of Oxford; 1½ mile north of Witney, and north of the river Wye. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; returned at £44; gross income £153. Patron, in 1835, the rector of Witney. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Acres 2,120. Houses 242. A. P. £5,689. Pop., in 1801, 993; in 1831, 1,236. Poor rates, in 1838, £668 14s.

HAILSHAM, a market-town and parish, partly in the hund. of Dill, and partly in the liberty of the corporation of Pevensey, union of Hailsham, rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex; 11 miles east by south of Lewes, pleasantly situated in a fertile vale between the rivers Ashbourn and Cuckmere, about 3 miles from the sea. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £16 6s. 8d.; gross income £364. Patron, in 1835, E. Mitchell, Esq. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1794; and a Primitive Methodist chapel; besides 4 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school, having a small endowment. At Michaelham, in this vicinity, there was a priory of Black canons founded by Henry III. There are a few acres of hop ground in this parish. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on April 5th, and June 14th, for horned cattle and pedlery. Acres 6,350. Houses 260. A. P. £3,863. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 1,445. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,371 3s.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Hailsham, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Hailsham poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing 78 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,825. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £18,349. Expenditure, in 1838, £8,979; in 1839, £10,950 18s.

HAINAULT: see EPPING. Amusements were formerly carried on here annually, on the first sabbath in July, whereat multitudes from the metropolis and the surrounding country assembled. In 1839 a committee of the Religious Tract society appointed 20 missionaries to distribute tracts during the Sunday,—which they did to the number of 43,000;—and two of them who stood for half-an-hour at Barking-side gate, on the return of the people, counted 344 vehicles, principally vans, containing an average of 10 persons. Pedestrians were passing at the same time in crowds; and the number present was estimated, in all, at upwards of 60,000. Amongst the booths one missionary counted 108 places where drink was sold; and many vans were supplied with beer from the booths by men who went with jars into the wood to sell it. There were numerous shows; and gambling was practised in the most open and impudent manner. The missionaries counted 72 gambling-tables, each attended by about 4 conspirators. They also observed that temporary places were erected in the wood for the filthiest crimes. These proceedings are now, as far as possible, suppressed; and the fair which was held for two days has been limited to one.

The following account of this celebrated fair, as it took place on Friday, 3d July, 1840, has been abridged from a periodical of the day: it may prove interesting as a record of one of the most prominent amusements and curious practices of the citizens of London during the 18th and 19th centuries:—"The beautiful forest of Hainault, twelve miles from London, was the scene yesterday of great rejoicing and gaiety, in consequence of the fair being allowed to continue but for one day only on the old spot; and we are sure that if those who are ill-natured enough to wish to restrict the amusements of the people had seen the orderly conduct, cheerfulness, and good humour of the countless thousands assembled on Hainault forest yesterday, they would repent having restricted Fairlop fair to one day, instead of two, although the propriety of suppressing the amusements on the first Sunday in July cannot be questioned, and has given much satisfaction to all classes. The roads leading to Ilford, and thence to the fair, presented a scene of animation and bustle from morn to night, with the East-enders proceeding to and from the fair. Vehicles of every description were in requisition, and numberless vans, each drawn by two horses, covered with awnings, and gaily decorated, followed each other in rapid succession along the Lea bridge and Mile-end-roads. Great confusion sometimes prevailed at the turnpike-gates from the number of vans, gigs, omnibuses, carts, &c., waiting to pass. The police had an arduous duty to perform at the gates, but they pleased everybody with their mildness and forbearance, and the jokes levelled at them they took in good part. The impositions of some of the turnpike-men were loudly complained of, and they would have been greater but for the attendance of the police. The great attraction of the day were those amphibious vehicles, the watermen and blockmakers' boats, mounted on carriages, and each drawn by six post-horses, with postillions superbly dressed. The watermen's boat, which is called the Unity, had been repainted for the occasion, and great pains had been taken in decorating her. She has three masts, and was rigged out exactly like a ship; the sides of the boat were painted a bright yellow, with false ports, and a gilt streak all round. The boats, masts, and rigging, were covered with streamers and flags, and the horses attached to the carriage which supports the boat were decorated with ribbons. The Wapping watermen, a set of jolly fellows, who prided themselves on a good turn out on this day, were dressed in their best clothes. At half-past seven the Unity got under weigh, from Green Bank, Wapping; the band who accompanied the watermen playing 'God save the Queen' as she started, amidst the cheers of the spectators. The Unity proceeded along in fine style, and being unable to pass under the arches of the Blackwall railway, in consequence of the height of the masts, passed over Old Gravel-lane, Ratchiff-highway, Upper East Smithfield, the Minories, and Whitechapel-road. The wives of the watermen followed in an open landau, and the rear was brought up by a large van, covered with an awning, containing about 50 persons and a band of musicians. The van was drawn by six horses, and was very neatly adorned with ribbons, nosegays, and colours. In the Mile-end-road the procession was joined by 'the Maggot,' the blockmakers' boat, also drawn by six grey horses. The masts and rigging of the Maggot were decorated similar to the Unity, and was followed by open barouches, each drawn by two horses containing the blockmakers' wives. The procession was a very imposing one, and attracted a vast number of spectators who lined the roads. As the boats passed along the green lanes leading from Ilford to the forest, their appearance with the flags and banners waving in the breeze was singularly interesting, while the music re-echoed through the woods and fields. The watermen remained in the fair about an hour and a half, and then proceeded to Chadwell-heath to hold their bean feast. The blockmakers remained in the fair about the same time, and then went to Woodford to dine, and play at cricket and trap, bat, and ball. They did not return until a late hour in the evening. The forest presented a verdant and beautiful appearance, and malgré the boisterous state of the weather and the rain which occasionally fell during the day, the people seemed highly delighted with the place, an enjoyment which many of them only realize once a-year. Gipsy parties were formed in all quarters of the vast forest, which, until the establishment of the fair, had been wild, dangerous, and almost unexplored. There was a large assemblage of the Essex farmers and country people at the fair, to whom the shows and booths, and the antics of the mountebanks afforded great delight. The fair is held in a very pretty spot, in the heart of the forest. Richardson's theatre, conducted by Nelson, Lee, and Johnson, was the most prominent exhibition. There were smaller shows, for gingerbread stalls, swings, roundabouts, and refreshment booths in profusion; and the gipsies mustered in considerable numbers to impose on the credulous lads and lasses with their predictions and idle tales. The thimble and pea-rig cheats were not so plentiful as they were at Egham and Ascot, and seemed to do very little business. Before sunset the Londoners began to return to town, and the road presented the appearance of a moving forest, for every vehicle and every horse was decorated with oak boughs, cut from the forest trees. All the booths and shows were to be cleared away by midnight, and the multitudes who will, according to annual custom, probably visit Hainault forest on Sunday, must take their own refreshments with them, for they will find no booths there. A numerous body of the K division of police were on the ground, who afforded great protection to the visitors, and prevented robberies. There were not less than 200,000 persons in the fair and about the forest during the day, and but few robberies and fewer outrages occurred; indeed, in this respect, Fairlop fair presents a favourable contrast to the many scenes of ruffianism, outrage, and robbery, which yearly take place at Epsom on the Derby day. Fairlop oak, the pride of Hainault Forest, which for so many years overshadowed with its verdant foliage the thousands who crowded under it, and the antiquity of which the tradition of the country traces half-way up to the Christian era, was partly destroyed by fire in the month of June, 1805, and the high winds of February, 1820, stretched its massive trunk and limbs on that turf which it had for so many years shaded. Under this oak Daniel Day, an eccentric and wealthy block and pump-maker, of Wapping, commonly called 'Good Day,' who died on the 19th of July, 1767, aged 84, was in the habit of repairing on the first Friday in July, having previously invited a party of his neighbours to accompany him, and here under the shade of its thickest branches and leaves the party dined on beans and bacon. This attracted public curiosity to the spot, and the fair, which has ever since been a place of great resort, was established."

HAINFORD, or HAYNFORD, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith, county of Norfolk; 7 miles north of Norwich. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 2s. 1d.; gross income £415. Patron, in 1835, R. Marsham, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is a National school, chiefly supported by subscription. Charities, in 1832, £118 4s. 1d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £175 17s. Acres 1,600. Houses 74. A. P. £1,470. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 605.

HAINTON, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Wraggöe, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-east of Wraggöe. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 10s. 10d.; gross income £240. Patrons, the dean and chapter or Lincoln. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel. There is also a daily school. Acres 2,780. Houses 49. A. P. £2,447. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 263. Poor rates, in 1838, £190 8s.

HAKIN, a small sea-port in the parish of Hubberston, county of Pembroke, South Wales; about 2 miles west-south-west of Milford, situated on a creek running inwards from Milford-haven. The packets for Ireland sail from this station.

HALAM, a parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 1½ mile west-north-west of Southwell. Living, a perpetual curacy and peculiar of the collegiate church of Southwell, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; valued at 7s., but returned at £80; gross income £85. Charities, in 1825, £8 3s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 1s. Acres 1,310. Houses 82. A. P. £1,803. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 371.

HALBERTON HUNDRED, on the eastern side of the northern division of the county of Devon, bounded on the north and east by Rimpleton hundred; on the south by Haybridge and Clyston hundreds; and on the west by Tiverton hundred. Area 10,090. acres. Houses 525. Pop., in 1831, 2,866.

HALBERTON, a parish in the above hund., union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 3 miles east of Tiverton, intersected by the Western canal, and in the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £31; gross income £625. Formerly in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Bristol. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, in 1819, £47 6s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,044 5s. In 1838 a woollen-mill here employed 12 hands. Acres 5,960. Houses 306. A. P. £10,223. Pop., in 1801, 1,436; in 1831, 1,636.

HALDEN (HIGH), a parish in the hund. of Blackbourne, lathe of Scray, union of Tenterden, county of Kent; 3¼ miles north-north-east of Tenterden, and in the line of the South-eastern railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £19 4s. 7d.; gross income £362. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which, the free-school, was founded and endowed by James Tylden, under his will bearing date 30th October, 1725. Other charities, in 1836, £5 2s. 6d. per annum, besides a distribution of bread to the poor, and 7 half-crowns to lying-in women, from a Tenterden charity. Poor rates, in 1838, £399 6s. On an average of 7 years to 1835, there were 71½ acres of hop-grounds cultivated in this parish: lbs. of hops charged 44,764; amount of excise duty £373 0s. 8d. Acres 3,340. Houses 99. A. P. £3,634. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 649.

HALDENBY AND EASTOFT, a township in the parish of Adlingfleet, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-east of Howden, and west of the river Trent. Tithes of Eastoft commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £42 6s. vicarial, and £16 16s. impropriate. Haldenby-park is a handsome seat, 9½ miles from Howden. Acres 1,490. Houses 25. A. P. £3,360. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 157. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 14s.

HALDON, a hamlet in the parish of Kenne, county of Devon; 4½ miles south-south-west of Exeter, and east of the river Teign. It is remarkable for a mountainous ridge, called Haldon-hill, extending 7 miles from north-west to south-east, on which are several tumuli. Haldon-hall is a noble edifice, erected in 1735. It is surrounded by fine grounds, commanding a view of the Exe in its course from Exeter to the sea, the Quantock-hills, and the English channel.

HALE, a township in the parish of Bowden, co-palatine of Chester; 2 miles south-east of Altringham, and north of the river Bollin. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 3,540. Houses 167. A. P. £6,368. Pop., in 1801, 783; in 1831, 945. Poor rates, in 1838, £425 10s.

HALE WITH WILTON, a parish in Allerdale-ward above Derwent, union of Whitehaven, county of Cumberland; 2½ miles south-east of Egremont, near Copeland forest, and east of the river Ehen. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £7; gross income £82. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lonsdale. Here is a daily school. Acres 3,220. Houses 45. A. P. £1,858. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 19s.

HALE, a township in the parish of Wrotham, county of Kent. Pop., in 1811, 388. Other returns with the parish.

HALE, a chapelry in the parish of Childwall, co-palatine of Lancaster; 6½ miles south of Prescott, on the northern bank of the river Mersey. Living, a donative in the archd. and dio. of Chester, of the certified value of £17 17s., but returned at £140; gross income £105. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Blackburn, Esq. Here is a daily school with a small endowment. Other charities, in 1828, £10 13s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 12s. Hale-hall, the seat of J. Blackburn, Esq., is an ancient structure, commanding a view of the river Mersey. John Middleton, the celebrated giant of the reign of James I., was born here in 1578. His height was 9 feet 3. Acres 1,410. Houses 117. A. P. £2,561. Pop., in 1801, 537; in 1831, 572.

HALE, formerly a township in the hund. of Willybrook, county of Northampton; 3 miles south of Kingscliffe, and west of the river Nen. In the year 1352, it was designated 'Hale near Nassington,' and had a church dedicated to St. Nicholas. Nothing remains of this town but the vestiges of 3 streets and the old manor-house, now included in Lord Westmoreland's park. The adjoining fields are called 'Hale fields.'

HALE, a parish in the hund. and union of Fording-bridge, New Forest, west division of the county of Southampton; 3½ miles north-north-east of Fording-bridge on the river Avon. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; returned at £92; gross income £122. Patron, in 1835, Captain Burgoyne. Acres 1,210. Houses 34. A. P. £796. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 5s.

HALE (GREAT), a parish in the wapentake of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 8 miles north-north-east of Fellingham. It includes the township of Little Hale. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 6s.; gross income £393. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a daily, a day and boarding, and 3 infant schools. Acres 5,110. Houses 168. A. P. £7,902. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 966. Poor rates, in 1838, £582 13s.

HALE (LITTLE), a township in the above parish and county; about a mile south of Great Hale. Here is an infant school. Acres 2,480. Houses 42. A. P. £2,742. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 299. Poor rates, in 1838, £221 3s.

HALES, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Loding and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-west of Beccles. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, of the certified value of £10; gross income £32.

Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Smith, Bart. Acres 1,120. Houses 37. A. P. £1,392. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 14s.

HALES, a township in the parish of Drayton-in-Hales, county of Stafford; 2½ miles east of Market-Drayton. Pop., in 1821, 252. Other returns with the township of Blore.

HALES (NORTH). See COVE-HYTHE.

HALES-OWEN, a market-town and parish, partly in the hund. of Brimstree, union of Stour-bridge, county of Salop, and partly in that of Halfshire, county of Worcester, but of which the isolated portion has now been annexed to the latter county. It is distant 118 miles north-north-west of London, and 22 north-north-east of Worcester, in a valley watered by the river Stour. The Dudley extension canal on the east side of the town of Hales-Owen, runs through Lapal tunnel, which is 3,776 yards in length, and terminates in the Worcester and Birmingham canal. The parish of Hales-Owen includes the chapelry of Cradley, and the hamlets of Luttley and Warley-Wigorn. Acres 11,290. Houses 2,411. A. P. £13,988. Pop., in 1801, 9,308; in 1831, 11,839. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £15 8s. 11½d.; gross income £686. Patron, in 1835, Lord Lytton. The church is remarkable for its beautiful spire. "King John," Tanner says, "ann. reg. 16, gave the manor and advowson of the church here to Peter de Rupibus, bishop of Winchester, for the endowment of an abbey for canons of the Premonstratensian order, which seems to have been begun and finished at the charges of the crown, though the bishops of Winchester had the patronage. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and was possessed, at the dissolution, of yearly revenues to the value of £280 13s. 2d., ob. Dugd.; £337 15s. 6d., ob. Speed. The site, and most of the lands belonging to the monastery, were granted 30° Hen. VIII., to Sir John Dudley." Part of the abbey walls are yet standing, but they are over-grown with bushes and weeds. Here is a chapel supposed to have been erected by the Saxons. An Independent church was formed here in 1804; and there are places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists: there are also 2 day and Sunday and 9 daily schools, one of which, the free grammar-school, was founded in 1652, and affords instruction to 40 boys: income in 1821, £105 4s. 1d. Other charities, £11 14s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £809 10s. The market is on Monday. Fairs are held on the Monday in Easter-week for horses, toys, &c.; and on the Monday in Whitsun-week for horses, cattle, sheep, and cheese. Hales-Owen is celebrated as the birth-place of the poet Shenstone, whose paternal estate, the Leasowes, has been justly praised for its natural beauty, as well as for the taste and elegance with which the grounds were laid out in landscape-gardening, by the proprietor.

HALESWORTH, a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 101 miles north-east of London, and 33 north-north-east of Ipswich. It is pleasantly situated in a valley on the banks of the river Blyth, which is navigable for small craft to the town. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Chediston, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £20; gross income £481. Patron, in 1835, R. P. Ward, Esq. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1794; and places of worship for Baptists and Unitarians. There are 10 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1828, about £420 per annum, of which £193 2s. 9d., arising from the town-estate charity, were applied to parochial purposes; and £133 14s. 6d. arising from the charities of Keble and others, were expended, one-half among 20 poor widows, principally residing in almshouses also possessed by this parish, and the other half in the apprenticeship of poor boys. Poor rates, in 1838, £700 15s. Halesworth is a place of great antiquity, and chiefly consists of one principal street about half-a-mile long: it is one of the polling-places for the eastern division of the county. The inhabitants of this town have been chiefly employed in spinning linen-yarn, and converting it into cloth. Hemp is cultivated in the adjacent country. An iron-foundry was erected in the town some years ago. Its principal trade is in corn, malt, lime, and hemp. The market is on Tuesday. Fairs for Scotch cattle are held on Easter-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and October 29th. Near the town is a mineral spring successfully employed in topical inflammations, particularly those of the eye. Acres 1,070. Houses 491. A. P. £3,894. Pop., in 1801, 1,676; in 1831, 2,473.

HALE-WESTON, a parish in the hund. of Toseland, union of St. Neot's, county of Huntingdon; 2 miles north-west of St. Neot's, on the southern bank of the river Kym, and west of the Ouse. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Southoe. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,860. Houses 74. A. P. £1,881. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 346. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 10s.

HALEWOOD, a township in the parish of Childwall, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles south of Prescott, and north-west of the river Mersey. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £332 4s. 3d., the property of the bishop of Chester, and £64 18s. 8d. of the vicar of Childwall, and the incumbent of the chapel of Hall. Here is a daily school. Acres 3,450. Houses 162. A. P. £6,190. Pop., in 1801, 777; in 1831, 930. Poor rates, in 1838, £352 13s.

HALFORD, or HALFORD BRIDGE, a parish in the hund. of Kingston, union of Shipston-on-Stour, county of Warwick; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Shipston-on-Stour. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £10 9s. 9½d.; gross income £218. Patron, the bishop of Worcester. Here is a daily school. Charities, in 1826, £1 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 16s. This place was originally named Aldford, from the Old Ford which it had over the river Stour. Acres 1,010. Houses 67. A. P. £1,220. Pop., in 1801, 285; in 1831, 315.

HALFORD, a chapelry in the parish of Bromfield, county of Salop; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Ludlow, on the eastern bank of the river Onney. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bromfield. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 25. Pop., in 1821, 51. Poor rates, in 1838, £68.

HALFESHIRE HUNDRED, in the northern quarter of the county of Worcester. It is bounded on the north by Warwickshire, and parts of Salop and Stafford shires; on the east by Pershore hundred, and part of Warwickshire; on the south and west by the hund. of Oswaldslow, and on the west also by Doddington hundred. Area 112,180 acres. Houses 14,841. Pop., in 1831, 76,787.

HALGAVER-MOOR, near Bodmin, in the county of Cornwall, is celebrated for an annual carnival which is supposed to have originated with the Saxons. One of the sports on this occasion is to draw the unwary into a quagmire; another is to try persons for some small offence,—the delinquent is brought before one who assumes the title of mayor of Halgaver, who is sure to inflict some harmless but ludicrous punishment. Slovens are threatened to be sent to Halgaver court. King Charles II., when on his way to Scilly, touched at this place, and was so much amused with the sports of the day that he became a brother of this jovial society.

HALGH. See TONGE WITH HAUGH.

HALGHTON, a township in the parish of Hammer, county of Flint, North Wales, on the turnpike-road between Wrexham and Whitechurch; 5 miles north-east of Ellesmere, and in the vicinity of the Ellesmere canal. Here is a daily school. Houses 93. A. P. £2,933. Pop., in 1801, 413; in 1831, 491. Poor rates, in 1838, £233 13s.

HALIFAX,

A parish, township, and market-town in the wapentake of Morley, union of Halifax, west riding of Yorkshire. The parish is one of the largest and most populous in England. It is larger than the whole county of Rutland, and comprises 19 townships; namely, Barkisland, Erringden, Fixby, Halifax, Hipperholme with Brig-house, Langfield, Midgley, Norland, Ovenden, North Oram, South Oram, Rishworth, Shelf, Skircoat, Soyland, Stainland, Stansfield, Wadsworth, and Warley; with the chapelries of Coley, Elland with Greetland, Heptonstall, Raistrick, and Sowerby. "From the boundary of Lancashire to the valley which separates the townships of Halifax and Ovenden from North Oram, the whole basis of the parish is gritstone. Immediately to the east of this valley, argillaceous strata, with their general concomitants, stone and iron, once more appear; and to this cause, together with the abundant supply of fuel, and the rapid descent of its numerous brooks, so important in manufacture before the introduction of the steam-engine, the parish of Halifax is greatly indebted for its wealth and population. The land in the vicinity of the town of Halifax is naturally sterile and unproductive: it is, however, in a good state of cultivation; and this township, more perhaps than any other in the country, serves to prove how completely the wealth and industry of man can triumph over the most stubborn indispositions of nature."—Baines. The parish is 17 miles in length, and averages 11 in breadth. Acres 75,740. Houses 2,115. A. P. £63,374. Pop., in 1801, 57,526; in 1831, 109,899. Acres of the township 990. Houses 3,244. A. P. £38,337. Pop., in 1801, 8,886; in 1831, 15,382.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The living is a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £34 13s. 6½d.; gross income £1,804; nett income £1,678. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church stands near the south-east end of the town of Halifax; the chancel directly fronting the entrance from Wakefield. It is a large edifice in the pointed style: its length is 192 feet: breadth, within the walls, 60. The precise era of its erection cannot be ascertained. It appears evident that there was no church here at the time of the Conqueror's survey; for the Domesday book states, that in the manor of Wakefield, of which Halifax formed a part, there were only two churches;—and it is clear that these were at Wakefield and Sandal. Internal as well as external evidence fixes the erection of Halifax church in the reign of Henry VI.; but it has since been frequently re-edified, and the chancel seems to have been an addition to the original fabric. The steeple, which was built by the munificence of the Lacy and Saville families, the founders of the parish itself, was begun in the year 1450; and the tower, which is well-proportioned, is said to be 117 feet in height from the ground to the summit of the pinnacles. In the interior of the church are two chapels; and there are several splendid monuments by Westmacott. The font is an octagonal basin, with a beautiful spiral cove, 16 feet in height, richly carved, with crockets, &c. Near this is the full-length effigy of a man holding the poor-box in his hands. The Holy Trinity is a perpetual curacy; gross income £130. Patron, in 1835, J. Whitacre, Esq. The church was erected by Dr. Coulthurst, vicar of Halifax, in 1798, under the sanction of an act of parliament. It stands at the upper part of the town of Halifax, and displays some excellent and elaborate workmanship. The burial-ground is laid out with neatness and good taste. St. James's is a perpetual curacy; gross income £260; in the patronage of the vicar of Halifax. St. John's-in-the-Wilderness is also a perpetual curacy; gross income £76; in the patronage of the vicar. In all there are 12 chapels in the parish to which the vicar appoints the curates. There are 4 Independent churches, formed in 1761, 1763, 1817, and 1823; a Baptist, in 1763; a Presbyterian, in 1709; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1776; a Primitive, in 1823; one of the New Connexion, in 1806; a Friends' Meeting-house, and a Unitarian chapel. A Roman Catholic chapel has been recently erected.

This parish possesses 108 daily and 40 infant schools; besides several day and boarding, a Lancasterian, and two National, schools. The free grammar-school, at Skircoat, was founded by letters patent of Queen Elizabeth, in 1585. It is superintended by 12 governors chosen from the most respectable inhabitants of the parish. At the time of the charity inquiry, in 1827, the income of this school was £189 0s. 6d., of which only £80 were paid as salary to the schoolmaster, the residue being allowed to accumulate. The free grammar-school, at Kipperholme with Bridgehouse, was originally founded under the will of Matthew Broadley, dated in 1647: income £111 10s. 8d. per annum, paid to the master; besides a house and grounds occupied by him, and valued at £90 per annum. About 20 scholars received gratuitous instruction in the classics. There are also endowed schools at Elland, Heptonstall, Barkisland, North Oram, &c., with incomes varying from £83 to £13 per annum. In 1642, Nathaniel Waterhouse, by will, founded a Blue-coat hospital for 20 poor children, and an almshouse for 12 poor widows. He also bequeathed £60 per annum among the curates of the several chapels within the vicarage; and other sums for charitable purposes. The income arising from these bequests, according to returns published by order of parliament made in 1786, amounted to £475 16s. 6d. per annum; and at the time of the inquiry, in 1827, to £1,181 3s. 4d. per annum, of which about £600 were applied to parochial purposes, and about £80, besides clothing, to the maintenance and education of the children in the Blue-coat hospital. There are numerous other charities possessed by this parish, including almshouses in the townships of Halifax, Sowerby, &c. The total revenue arising from charities coming under the cognizance of the charity commissioners, including the school endowments, &c., already particularized, amounted to about £2,565 per annum. Besides these there are several charitable institutions principally supported by voluntary subscriptions, particularly a most respectable institution called the Halifax Infirmary and General Dispensary, in the town of Halifax; where, amongst others, there is also a Benevolent society which distributes money and clothing to the sick and destitute, &c. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £19,155 8s.; of the township, £4,108 9s.—The Halifax poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, embracing an area of 81 square miles, with a population returned, in 1831, at 89,739. Expenditure on the poor of this district, in 1839, £12,191 7s.

Town of Halifax.—This celebrated commercial town is situated on the western declivity of a gentle eminence; but being surrounded by hills of considerable elevation, it appears, on approaching it, to stand in a deep valley. On every side, the town and its environs have a picturesque and somewhat singular appearance. The mixture of brick and stone buildings in the town* forms a variegated picture; and the numerous small enclosures, surrounded with stone walls, in the valleys, and on the declivities of the hills, resemble an assemblage of gardens; but the landscape is almost entirely destitute of hedges and wood. The town is about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile in length from east to west; but the breadth is narrow and irregular: it contains many handsome buildings, the principal of which, besides the churches and chapels, are the cloth or piece-hall, the assembly-rooms, theatre, &c. There are here a literary and philosophical society, a mechanics' institution, a horticultural and floral society, &c. Some of the streets in this town are very narrow, with ancient timber mansions on each side. Crown-street is a tolerable specimen of the early style of street architecture.

Franchise and Municipal affairs.—The fidelity of Halifax to the parliamentary cause was rewarded by the privilege of sending members to the house of commons, both under the parliament and the protectorate. This privilege was withdrawn at the restoration; and the town continued without representatives till the provisions of the reform bill entitled it to return two members. The parliamentary boundary includes the whole township of Halifax, together with small parts of those of North and South Oram, into which the town extends across the Hebble brook, which divides the township of Halifax from the two latter townships. The number of electors registered for 1837, was 970: the number polled at the general election, in 1837, 793. The returning officer is such person as the sheriff of the county may appoint.

Petty-sessions are held here; and a court of requests for the Halifax and Huddersfield districts was established by act of parliament, 33rd Geo. III. c. 15, for all debts not exceeding 40s. The jail or court of requests prison, belonging to the Halifax court, stands in a retired spot about a mile from the town. It was erected in 1828 in conjunction with, and on a similar plan to, the one at Bradford. The jail for the liberty of Wakefield is situated in Jail lane, and is the property of the duke of Leeds, as lord of the manor and liberty, the jurisdiction extending over a population of 200,000. It consists of an ancient public house, where the court-leets have been held for upwards of a century and a half; and has a wine licence. It has fallen into such disuse since the introduction of the non-omittas clause into writs upon mesne process, that a portion of the old building has been let off for a police-office. Debtors are still, however, sent here in execution.—The town lock-ups have been recently built, and consist of police-office, apartments for the keeper and 2 rooms for prisoners, who are lodged here while under examination, and upon committal are sent to Wakefield.

The Gibbet law.—For many centuries a peculiar mode of trial and execution existed in the forest of

* The use of brick here, as a material in building, was introduced about the middle of the last century; the use of stone being attended with great expense. But as stone is extremely plentiful in the environs of the town, and several quarries within a short distance produce an excellent sort for building, it is difficult to conceive how brick can be the cheaper material. The inhabitants of Settle, Skipton, Keighley, Bradford, &c., seem to make a different calculation; for these towns are almost entirely built of stone; and in the villages scarcely any brick is seen, either in the most elegant mansions or the humblest cottages. Whatever be their reason, however, the people of Halifax, though living in a land of stone, seem to have a strong predilection for brick.—Beauties of England and Wales.

Hardwick, which was co-extensive with the parish of Halifax. This custom, which has been noticed by every historian and antiquary who has treated of the town and parish of Halifax, has obtained the distinguishing appellation of 'Gibbet law,' or 'Halifax law.' It attracted the attention of Camden and his commentators, and is amply explained by Bentley, Wright, and Watson. Bentley, in his 'Halifax and its gibbet law,' p. 24, gives the following account of it:—"The inhabitants within the forest of Hardwick had a custom, from time immemorial, that if a felon were taken within their liberty, with goods stolen out, or within the liberty of the said forest, either hand-habend, back-berand, or confessand, any commodity of the value of thirteen pence halfpenny, he should, after three markets, or meeting days, within the town of Halifax, next after such his apprehension, and being condemned, be taken to the gibbet, and have his head cut off from his body." But the felon was to be publicly and deliberately tried by the frith-burghers within the said liberty. The process of the gibbet law was this:—When the felon was apprehended, he was immediately brought before the lord's bailiff, at Halifax, who kept the common gaol in the town, had the custody of the axe, and was the legal executioner. The bailiff then issued his summons to the constables of four several townships within the liberty, to require four frith-burghers within each, to appear before him on a certain day, to examine into the truth of the charge. At the trial, the accuser and the accused were confronted before the jury, and the goods stolen were produced. If the party accused was acquitted, he was instantly liberated; if condemned, he was either executed immediately, if that was the principal market-day, or set in the stocks on the other meeting days with the stolen goods on his back, if portable, or if not, they were placed before him. The jurors were not sworn, and bishop Hall insinuates that they were not impartial—

"Or some more strait-laced juror of the rest Impannelled on a Halifax inquest."

But it is not easy to perceive how justice could be perverted by a tribunal of this nature: there were no niceties of evidence to balance, no doubtful points to clear; the whole duty of the court consisted in identifying the goods alleged to be stolen, in ascertaining their value, so as to bring them within the custom; and in proving that they were either hand-habend, or back-berand, or confessand, that is, that the offender was taken with them, in his hand, or having them on his back, or that he had confessed to have stolen them. Dr. Grey supposes that thirteen-pence halfpenny may have been called hangman's wages, in allusion to Halifax law; and Mr. Watson supposes that this sum was given at Halifax as a gratuity to the executioner. The execution always took place on the great market-day, in order to strike the more terror into the neighbourhood. When the criminal was brought to the gibbet, which stood a little way out of the town, on the West end, the execution was performed by means of an engine, called a gibbet, which was raised upon a platform four feet high, and thirteen feet square, faced on every side with stone, and ascended by a flight of steps. In the middle of this platform were placed two upright pieces of timber, fifteen feet high, joined at the top by a transverse beam. Within these was a square block of wood, four feet and a half long, which moved up and down by means of grooves made for that purpose; to the lower part of this sliding block was fastened an iron axe, of the weight of 7 lb. 12 oz. The axe thus fixed was drawn up to the top by a cord and pulley. At the end of the cord was a pin, which being fixed to the block, kept it suspended till the moment of execution, when, the culprit having placed his head on the block, the pin was withdrawn, and his head was instantly severed from his body. If the offender was condemned for stealing an ox, a sheep, or a horse, the end of the rope was fastened to the beast, which, being driven, pulled out the pin, and thus became the executioner. In other cases, the bailiff or his servant cut the rope, and allowed the axe to descend. From this description of the Halifax gibbet, it appears, that it was an engine similar to the guillotine erected in France soon after the breaking out of the revolution, and by which fatal machine so much blood was shed. The Gibbet-law at Halifax seems to have been nearly coeval with the town itself, but its origin is unknown. It began about the time that the manor of Wakefield, (which includes the present parish of Halifax,) was bestowed upon the earl of Warren, and it may be traced to as early a date as 1280. Records of the executions are brought down to the year 1650, about which time it ceased, on an intimation to the bailiff, that if these executions were repeated, he would be called to public account for his conduct. The earl of Morton, regent of Scotland, in passing through Halifax, about the middle of the 16th century, witnessed one of the executions by the gibbet, and ordered a model to be taken of the machine, which he carried into Scotland, and had one of similar construction made from it. This instrument remained long unused, and hence obtained the name of 'the Maiden;' but in the year 1581, that nobleman himself was brought to the block, and suffered by the machine which he had caused to be erected. Remains of these fatal instruments may still be seen both at Halifax and Edinburgh. The number of persons executed in Halifax, under the operation of the gibbet, during little more than a century, namely, between 1541 and 1650, amount to no less than 49. And Mr. Watson observes, that this list of executions, combined with the strict discipline observed by the police of Hull, probably gave rise to the proverbial petition of thieves and vagabonds, "From Hull, Hell, and Halifax, good Lord deliver us!"

The felon being liable to suffer under the Halifax law, if he was taken within the liberty or precincts of Hardwick, this refers us directly to the privileges of infangtheft, and outfangtheft, the origin of which is of great antiquity. These privileges are mentioned in the laws of Edward the Confessor, which William the Norman afterwards confirmed, in the 21st chapter "De Baronibus, qui suas habent curias et consuetudines," "concerning the barons who have their courts of law and customs." In this article there is an express mention of "infangtheft and outfangtheft," which is thus explained, "Justitia cognoscens latronis sua est, de homine suo, si captus fuerit super terram suam." "He has the right of taking cognizance of felony, in respect of his own vassals, if the felon be taken within his own manor." But here is nothing said "de homine extraneo," or such as did not belong to the manor whom the lord had power to execute by the privilege of outfangtheft if taken as a thief within his manor, let the robbery have been committed wherever it might. This power, however, was undoubtedly exercised at Halifax, as appears in the following entries in the register: "Quedam extraneus capitalem subiit sententiam, 1^o Jan. 1542." A certain stranger suffered capital punishment, Jan. 1. 1542, and "Richard Sharp, and John Learoyd, beheaded the 5th day of March, 1563, for a robbery done in Lancashire." But there is such a variety of opinions brought forward by different writers concerning the power of infangtheft and outfangtheft, that the recital of these would be tedious, and Spelman very justly observes, that the true signification must be sought in the customs of particular places. At Halifax it appears that the felon was to be taken within the liberty, and that if he escaped out of the liberty, even after condemnation, he could not be brought back to be executed; but if ever he returned into it again, and were taken, he was liable to suffer, as was the case of a person named Lacy, who, after escaping, remained seven years out of the liberty, but, venturing to come back, was beheaded on the former verdict, in the year 1623. It is a circumstance particularly worthy of remark, that this power of the barons to inflict capital punishment was kept up at Halifax a considerable time after it had ceased in every other part of the kingdom. This, however, seems to have been merely accidental. The privilege was not taken away from any place by act of parliament, but fell by degrees, in consequence of the alteration of circumstances; for as the "tenures in capite" ceased, the liberties annexed to them became extinct. But as Halifax was a place of so much trade, this custom, which was calculated to strike terror into thieves, was found to be so great a safeguard to the property of the manufacturers, that they kept it up as long as they dared.

Commercial importance, &c.—Before the art of manufacturing cloth was introduced into England, the staple trade of the nation was the exportation of wool into foreign countries, especially to Flanders. This defect in the system of English commerce attracted the attention of King Edward III. who invited cloth-workers from foreign parts, assigned them proper places for their residence, of which York was one of the principal, and granted them very considerable privileges. The exportation of wool was also prohibited; but as the cloth manufacture was not sufficiently established to work up the great quantities of wool produced in the kingdom, it was necessary that the raw material should continue to be an article of foreign trade. But in order to support and encourage the home manufacture, a tax of fifty shillings per pack was imposed. Notwithstanding these restrictions, so much wool still continued to be exported that the customs amounted to the sum of £250,000 per annum. By degrees, however, the art of clothing-making became more generally known and practised, and the extension of the manufactures diminished the export of wool more effectually than could have been done by prohibitions or imposts. The cloth manufacture could no longer be confined to the places first assigned to its conductors, but extended itself to such situations as seemed most favourable for carrying it on with success. Among these, the parish of Halifax being situated in the vicinity of the great wool districts of Yorkshire, in the midst of excellent water power, presented advantages for a seat of extensive manufacture too obvious to escape notice. But at what time or from what place this branch of manufacture was introduced here is uncertain. There are some notices of cloth being woven at Halifax so early as 1414, in the 2d year of Henry V.; but it must have been very inconsiderable, as, in 1443, the site was only occupied by a village of thirteen houses. In the reign of Henry VII., however, many Flemish manufacturers settled in this country, to which they were the more easily persuaded to resort by the distress they suffered in their own. The influence which this improvement had on the prosperity of Halifax is indicated by the fact that, in 1540, the number of houses had increased to 520. Many of the Flemings are conjectured to have settled at Halifax; and this supposition is strengthened by the similarity which exists in the dialect of the labouring classes there and in the low countries, particularly in Friesland, and hence the following distich:—

"Goid brade, botter, and cheese, Is Goid Halifax, and goid Friese."

Camden, who visited this vicinity about the year 1574, thus describes the state of Halifax at that time:—"It is remarkable for the unusual extent of the parish, which has under it 11 chapels, two whereof are parochial, and about 12,000 men in it: so that the parishioners are wont to say, they can reckon more men in their parish than any kind of animal whatever; whereas, in the most populous and fruitful places of England, elsewhere, one shall find thousands of sheep, but so few men in proportion, that one would think they had given place to sheep and oxen, or were devoured by them. But of all others, nothing is so admirable in this town as the industry of the inhabitants, who, notwithstanding an unprofitable, barren soil, not fit to live in, have so flourished by the cloth trade, which within these seventy years they first fell to, that they are both very rich, and have gained a reputation for it above their neighbours, which confirms the truth of that old observation, that a barren country is a great whet to the industry of the natives, by which we alone find Norinberg in Germany, Venice and Genoa in Italy, and, lastly, Limoges in France, have ever been flourishing cities." The population has since that time rapidly increased. In the year 1764, the parish was found to contain 8,244 families, which, on the calculation of five persons to a family, will amount to 41,220 inhabitants. During the latter part of the 18th, and beginning of the 19th century, the number rapidly increased, in consequence of the flourishing state of the trade, which extended itself into the most remote and sequestered parts of the parish, and planted new colonies in places formerly uninhabited, and regarded as almost uninhabitable:—

"The echoing hills repeat
The stroke of axe and hammer; scaffolds rise
And growing edifices; heaps of stone
Beneath the chisel, beauteous shapes assume
Of frieze and column. Some with even line
New streets are marking in the neighbouring fields,
And sacred domes of worship."—DYER'S FLEECE.

The prosperity of this thriving parish having been sustained on the general adaptation of the steam-engine to manufactures, by its vicinity to an abundant supply of coal, and facilities of transport being afforded by the Calder navigation,—which passes quite through the parish, and within a mile-and-a-half of the town of Halifax, joining the Rochdale and the Duke of Bridgewater's canal near Sowerby-bridge, and thus opening to this manufacturing district a communication by water both with the eastern and western coasts,—it has become one of the principal seats of manufacture,—especially of cloth,—in England. Its manifold advantages have, moreover, been recently further increased to an incalculable extent, by the Manchester and York railway, which intersects the parish, passing within a mile of the town, and thus opens up an unlimited field of commercial intercourse throughout the whole country.

The articles chiefly manufactured in the woollen trade are shalloons, camlets, taminets, duroys, everlasting, calimancoes, moreens, shags, serges, baizes, coatings, and carpets, with narrow and broad cloths, and kerseymeres both for domestic use and for the army. Ten thousand pieces of shalloon are said to have been annually made in this parish several years ago: considerable quantities, of a scarlet colour, and chiefly used for turbans, &c., are sent to Turkey and the Levant. The various processes of carding, spinning, weaving, dressing, and dyeing the several kinds of cloth, and other articles of commerce, are all extensively carried on. Excellent wool and cotton cards are also manufactured. In 1838 there were 80 worsted, and 63 woollen-mills in this parish besides 71 cotton and 7 silk mills. Collectively they employed 13,579 hands. There are also numerous hand-loom weavers in the trade. A weekly market is held on Saturdays, chiefly for the sale of woollen cloth. The Cloth or Piece hall was erected by the manufacturers for the convenience of trade, at an expense of £12,000. It is a handsome quadrangular edifice of freestone, situated in the lower part of the town, and occupying a space of 10,000 yards, with a rustic basement story, or square cippi, at the lower side, and above, two other stories, fronted by two entire colonnades within, which are spacious walks leading to arched rooms where the goods of the respective manufacturers in the unfinished state are deposited, and exhibited for sale to the merchants, every Saturday, from 10 o'clock till 12. This structure, which unites elegance, convenience, and security, contains 315 separate rooms, and has the merit of being proof both against fire and thieves. The bank establishments here are the Halifax Joint stock banking company, formed in November, 1829; the Halifax Commercial banking company, in June, 1836; and the Halifax and Huddersfield Union banking company, about the same time. There is likewise a branch of the Northern and Central bank of England; and also of the Yorkshire District bank. A fair for horses is held on 24th June.

History and antiquities.—The town of Halifax cannot boast of great antiquity; its name is not found in Domesday book, nor is it mentioned in any ancient record, before a grant of its church was made by the lord of the manor, Earl Warren, to the priory of Lewes, in Sussex, probably in the early part of the 12th century. The origin of the name has been variously given. Dr. Whitaker supposes it to be half Saxon, half Norman: and states, that formerly, in the deep valley where the church now stands, there was a hermitage dedicated to St. John the Baptist, the reputed sanctity of which attracted a great concourse of persons in every direction; and that there were four roads by which the pilgrims entered,—hence the name of Halifax, or Holyways; for fax in Norman French is an old plural noun denoting highways. Another conjecture is, that the name originated in a tradition regarding St. John's hermitage, where it was pretended that the face of this saint was kept, and that from thence the name Halifax or Holyface was derived—the English word face having been expressed by fax in the Anglo-Saxon, which, with a mixture of Danish, was undoubtedly the popular language of Yorkshire for some time after the Conquest. The idea of the existence of such a hermitage is supported by the circumstance, that the present church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. "If indeed this was formerly a hermitage, it must be acknowledged that a more proper place could not have been chosen for that purpose. The traveller who looks down on the situation of Halifax from the adjacent heights, and by the aid of imagination takes a retrospective view of times long since past, will readily form in his mind the idea of a deep and lonesome valley, where almost impenetrable woods, and rugged sterility, forbade the herdsman to enter with his flocks; and will contemplate with equal delight and astonishment the effects of manufacture and commerce, which have so wonderfully changed the scene, and overspread the dreary desert with wealth and population."—Beauties of Eng. and Wales.

Being situated in a rugged and mountainous country, and out of the ordinary range of hostile armies, Halifax does not appear from any records to have suffered much from the calamities of war. In the civil wars in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned by the parliamentarians, and seems to have been strongly attached to their cause. Clarendon, speaking of the strength which the parliament had in the north, enumerates "Leeds, Halifax, and Bradford, three very populous and rich towns, which depending wholly upon clothiers, too much maligned by the gentry, were wholly at their disposal." The same historian also relates, that when Lord Fairfax was obliged to quit Selby, Cawood, and Tadcaster, he retreated to Pontefract and Halifax. Archbishop Tillotson was born here in 1630; and among other eminent natives of this parish were Sir H. Saville and Dr. D. Hartley. Sir William Herschel and Daniel Defoe resided here.

In different quarters of the parish there are remains of intrenchments, but there are few vestiges of antiquity. End of last century, however, a workman digging peat on Mixenden-moor, near the town of Halifax, "struck his spade through a black polished stone, resembling a hone or whet-stone: adjoining to this was a most beautiful brass celt, in excellent preservation. These remains were accompanied by 4 arrow heads of black flint; by a light battle-axe head of a beautiful green pebble; and lastly, by a hollow gouge, or scoop, of hard grey stone, evidently intended for the excavation of canoes and other wooden vessels. The last is unique, no implement for this purpose having ever been discovered before. Together they seem to have formed the imperishable part of the arms of a British soldier, who, by some other means than in battle, had perished, perhaps two thousand years ago, amongst these wastes, where all remains of the body, together with the handles of the weapons, had long been decomposed, and mixed with the common earth."—Whitaker.

HALING, an island near Gosport, county of Southampton, containing 3 villages. It is of a triangular form, and is separated from the coast by a channel 1 mile in breadth.

HALKIN, a parish in the hund. of Coleshill, union of Holywell, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles south-west of Flint. It includes the townships of Hendrefigitt, Lygan-y-lan, and Lygan-y-wern. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; gross income £318. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £367 10s. 5d. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here are a place of worship for the Calvinistic Methodists; and 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, about £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £488 5s. On the north-east stands Moel-y-Gaer, 1,020 feet high; on its summit there is a British fortress, surrounded by a dyke and fosse. Halkin mountain rises 992 feet above sea-level. The vicinity is abundant in minerals, lead, and calamine, with limestone, chert, &c. Here is one of the magnificent seats of Earl Grosvenor, called Halkin-hall. Houses 331. A. P. £2,496. Pop., in 1801, 1,152; in 1831, 1,538.

HALLAM (KIRK), a parish in the hund. of Morleston, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; 7½ miles east-north-east of Derby, intersected by a branch of the Erwash canal. It includes the township of Mapperley. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £4 9s. 7d.; gross income £313. Patron, in 1835 F. Newdigate, Esq. Charities, in 1826, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 9s. Acres 1,620. Houses 87. A. P. £2,058. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 486.

HALLAM (NETHER), a township in the parish of Sheffield, west riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile west of Sheffield. There are 15 daily schools here, 2 of which are endowed. Acres 5,480. Houses 905. A. P. £6,995. Pop., in 1801, 1,974; in 1831, 4,658. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,252 6s.

HALLAM (UPPER), a township in the parish of Sheffield, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Sheffield. There is an endowed daily school here. Acres 5,870. Houses 189. A. P. £3,693. Pop., in 1801, 794; in 1831, 1,035. Poor rates, in 1838, £498 1s.

HALLAM (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Derby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £8; gross income £284. Patron, in 1835, F. Newdigate. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel. There are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £169 13s. 4d. per annum. Other charities, in 1826, £40 14s. 11d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 13s. There is a branch to the Ervash canal, with railroads from coal-pits, east of Hallam. Hops are cultivated to some extent in this vicinity. Acres 1,280. Houses 124. A. P. £2,923. Pop., in 1801, 584; in 1831, 710.

HALLAMSHIRE, a district composed of the two parishes of Sheffield and Ecclesfield, in the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of the county of York. The superficies of these two parishes forms no inconsiderable portion of the whole extent of the deanery of Doncaster; and in point of population, such is the power of manufactures to attract and retain the inhabitants of a country within narrow bounds, that these two parishes contained, in 1821, a number of people greater than the whole united force of the other parishes which compose the deanery. The centre of the population is the town of Sheffield, which is seated in the fork of the Don and the Sheaf, but which has now extended itself beyond those streams, and in all directions, into the adjacent townships. Yet the remote parts of Hallamshire are but thinly peopled. The great tract of Upper Hallam, called Fulwood, retains something of its pristine forest character, and Bradfield, which in extent is more than half of Hallamshire, lying between the Kireling and the Don, and extending to the hills which separate the counties of York and Derby, has for the most part been only lately redeemed from its unenclosed state, and there are not less than 20,000 acres over which no plough has yet passed, and where scarcely a human habitation is to be found. These, together with lands of the same character in Peniston, and in the Derbyshire parishes of Dronfield, Hathersedge, Castleton, Hope, and Glossop, form what are called the moors, the great scene of grouse-shooting in this part of the country. One common character pervades these lands. The surface is covered with grass, heath, fern, and similar plants, among which lurk the wires of the bilberry, the cowberry, and the more richly-flavoured cranberry. In this bed the grouse make their nests, and are little disturbed in their solitary abode, till the day arrives when their fears, their flutter, and their death, is to make sport for man.

It is an unsettled question among those who have attended to this department of our popular antiquities, when shooting the wild fowl flying was first practised in England. By a warrant of the time of James I. for the preservation of the game in these regions, it has been found that it was then the practice to take them either by nets or with hawks; and, in a memorandum made by Wilson of Broomhead, the antiquary of Bradfield, that the first person who shot grouse on the wing on these moors, was a member of his own family, who died in 1687, at the age of 61. Much of this part of Hallamshire was, however, chase in forest land, and particularly the sides of the deep valleys in which the rivers of Hallamshire have their beds. There were fertile spots, islands, or promontories, jutting into the waste, which had been redeemed in the earliest times, and on which a race of yeomen had been seated, whose lines may be traced in the court rolls of Sheffield, and in existing evidences, to a very remote period. Pasturage was the chief husbandry; and it has been found in the wills of ancient inhabitants of this part of Hallamshire, that the keeping of bees was an occupation of importance with the husbandmen borderers on the moors. Hives of bees are no unfrequent subject of bequest; and there must have been large establishments of this kind belonging to one Nicholas Broomhead of Thornssett, who, in 1638, left one-sixth of his whole apparatus of bee-hives to each of 3 nephews, whom he names.

After rain, the ground on these moors is swampish and spongy. There are instances of persons being lost and buried in the soil, and their bodies being discovered, little changed, many years afterwards. Fir-trees are also sometimes found in an undecayed state in these beds of turf. Still it is not, like the turf of Hatfield, used for fuel, and we hear nothing in our early charters of the rights of turfing in Hallamshire, though much of the rights of herbage and windfall. In dry summers the inhabitants are sometimes alarmed by the firing of the dry vegetable matter on the surface. The summer of 1826 was one of this kind, when several thousand acres in the tract of Bradfield, which is called Broomhead-moor, and extends to Hobson-moss, lost all its herbage, and for some time bore the appearance of a scorched desert.

HALLATON, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Gartree, union of Uppingham, county of Leicester; 7 miles north-north-east of Market-Harborough, and 90 north-north-west of London, on a branch of the river Welland. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Blaston, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £36; gross income £650. Patrons, in 1835, the Rev. C. J. Bewicke and the Rev. G. Fenwicke. The church is an elegant and spacious edifice. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with 68 acres of land. There are also Parker's endowed almshouses inhabited by 3 widows. Charities, in 1836, nearly £200 per annum; besides other bequests for the relief of the poor. The market is on Thursday; and fairs for horses, horned cattle, pewter, brass, and cloth, are held on Holy Thursday, and Thursday three weeks after. A singular custom is said to be practised here, according to the will of a person who bequeathed a piece of land to the rector, on condition that he should provide two large pies, a quantity of ale in wooden bottles, and two dozen of small loaves, to be scrambled for by the poor of the parish. There is no trace, however, in the charity reports, of any bequest for so foolish a purpose. Goodman's charity to 'the most indigent, poorest, aged, decrepit, miserablest paupers' in this and other parishes, was declared to be void as a gift to these parishes, and 'the money to be employed for the redemption of Turkish captives,' should any part of it be 'employed for easing town levies, or not according to the intent of the testator.' Poor rates, in 1838, £157 15s. Hallaton was noted in the 18th century "for its poverty in the midst of a rich soil." About 1 mile west of the town, are the remains of an ancient encampment called Hallaton-castle-hill: it consists of a conical eminence, on which stood a keep, surrounded by banks and ditches. Acres 2,360.

Houses 159. A. P. £4,924. Pop., in 1801, 548; in 1831, 653.

HALLGARTH, a township in the parish of Pittington, co.-palatine of Durham; 4 miles east-north-east of Durham, on a branch of the river Wear, and in the vicinity of the Great North of England railway. Here is a colliery, the property of the marquess of Londonderry, whence a line of railroad is formed to the Wear at Painshaw, a distance of about 8 miles. Acres 2,750. Houses 296. Pop., in 1811, 277; in 1831, 1,632.

HALLIKELD WAPENTAKE, on the south side of the north riding of Yorkshire, lies between the rivers Ure and Swale. It is bounded on the north by Hang-East wapentake; on the east by Gilling-East, Birdforth, and Bulmer wapentakes; on the south and west by Claro wapentake, and on the west also by Hang-East. Area 33,850 acres. Houses 1,368. Pop., in 1831, 6,424.

HALLING, a parish in the hund. of Shamwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; 4 miles south-south-west of Rochester, situated near a ridge of hills on the river Medway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £7 13s. 4d.; gross income £171. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. Here are 2 daily schools; and the inhabitants are entitled to have 10 children gratuitously educated at a charity school in Snodland parish. Other charities, in 1836, £3 15s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £204 8s. A few acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. The town and manor anciently belonged to the bishop of Rochester. Here "Richard, archbishop of Canterbury, ended his life in the house of the byshop of Rochester that then was."—Lambard. Acres 1,690. Houses 80. A. P. £1,231. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 431.

HALLINGBURY (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Harlow, union of Bishop Stortford, county of Essex; 2½ miles east-south-east of Bishop Stortford, east of the river Stort, and in the vicinity of the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £22; gross income £646. Patron, in 1835, J. A. Houlblon, Esq. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,390. Houses 134. A. P. £3,815. Pop., in 1801, 549; in 1831, 695. Poor rates, in 1838, £409 19s.

HALLINGBURY (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Harlow, union of Bishop Stortford, county of Essex; 10 miles east-north-east of Ware. Living, a rectory in the jurisdiction of the commissary of Essex and Herts, and in the dio. of London; rated at £15; gross income £430; nett income £289. Patrons, the governors of the Charter-house. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 2,610. Houses 74. A. P. £2,242. Pop., in 1801, 408; in 1831, 483. Poor rates, in 1838, £184 4s.

HALLINGTON, a parish in the Wold division, hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 2 miles south-west of Louth. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Raithby. Acres 860. Houses 14. A. P. £705. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 15s.

HALLINGTON, a township in the parish of St. John Lee, county of Northumberland; 8½ miles north-north-east of Hexham. This is supposed to be the same place as Hefen felth, i. e., Heaven field, so called from a famous battle won there by King Oswald in 675. A mile and a half east of Hallington is a hill, called the Mote Law, having a small intrenchment upon it, in the middle of which is a hearthstone for kindling alarm fires on. At a little distance, south-west from St. Oswald's chapel, is a curious hill called Hangingshaws, with several gradations of artificial terraces on its sides. Cockby tower was a strong old fortress, now in ruins, though the dungeons and rooms in its turrets are nearly perfect, and traces of painting are still observable on the walls. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 24. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 10s.

HALLIWELL, a township in the parish of Dean, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles west-north-west of Bolton-le-Moors. A neat little church, capable of containing 600 persons, has been recently built here by subscription, and the endowment has been considerably augmented by the liberality of the Diocesan Church Building society. Here are 5 daily schools, one of which, called the Jubilee school, is endowed with £10 per annum, under the will of the late Richard Ainsworth, Esq. Smithells-hall, an ancient structure, beside a rocky glen, in this vicinity, contains near the dining-room, a natural cavity resembling a man's foot, said to have been miraculously impressed by George Marsh, the martyr, in 1555. Smithells is subject to the lordship of Sharples; and has been successively possessed by the Radcliffes, Bartons, Fauconbergs, Byrons, and Ainsworths. Halliwell-hall was the seat of the late R. Ainsworth, Esq. Doffcocker and Mort Field are villages. Acres 2,320. Houses 522. A. P. £4,139. Pop., in 1801, 1,385; in 1831, 2,963. Poor rates, in 1838, £829 14s.

HALLLOUGHTON, a parish in the liberty of Southwell and Scredoby, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 1¼ mile south-south-west of Southwell, and west of the river Trent. Living, a perpetual curacy, and peculiar of Southwell, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; valued at £10; gross income £46. Patron, the prebendary of Halloughton. Acres 800. Houses 19. A. P. £1,006. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 1s.

HALLOW, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 3 miles north-north-west of Worcester, on the banks of the Severn. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Grimley. Here are 2 daily schools, endowed with £60 per annum. Hops are cultivated in this parish to the extent of about 36½ acres. Acres 3,550. Houses 252. A. P. £6,227. Pop., in 1801, 878; in 1831, 1,227. Poor rates, in 1838, £287 12s.

HALLYSTONE, a parish in the west division of Coquetdale ward, union of Rothbury, Northumberland; 6 miles west-north-west of Rothbury, on the northern bank of the river Coquet. It comprises the townships of Barrow, Dueshill, Hallystone, Harbottle, and Linsheeles. Living, a curacy united to that of Allenton. There is a daily school in this parish. On the first introduction of Christianity into Northumbria, according to the venerable Bede, no fewer than 3,000 persons were baptized here by Paulinus, so that this must have anciently been a place of great consequence. The village of Hallystone is situated between and near the confluence of the Dove, Crag-bourn, and Coquet. "Here was a small priory for seven or eight Benedictine nuns, founded by — Humfravill of Harbottle castle, whose yearly revenues are certified 26° Hen. VIII., not to exceed £11 5s. 7d. Dugd.; and £15 10s. 8d. Speed."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Lady's well, supposed to have belonged to the nunnery, is a fine basin of water, the bottom of which is variegated with a mixture of green and white sand. It was enclosed with a hewn freestone wall, part of which is still standing, romantically shaded with trees and shrubs. At Harbottle are the ruins of an ancient castle, in which it is said an ancestress of the present royal family was born. The rugged, frowning crags of Harbottle heighten the sublimity of the scenery in this vicinity. The celebrated Drake stone, near the Loughs, rivals the Bowder-stone in Westmoreland. At Dueshill, is Harehaugh, the site of a strong Saxon fortified camp. Acres 19,900. Houses 82. A. P. with Allenton. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 462. Poor rates, in 1838, £182 2s.

HALMER-END, a liberty in the parish of Audley, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Newcastle-under-Lyme. Houses 118. Pop., in 1821, 553; in 1831, 681. Other returns with the parish.

HALMOND'S FROME, or FROME HALMOND'S, a township in the parish of Bishop's Frome, county of Hereford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Bromyard, on the western bank of the river Frome. Acreage with the parish. Houses 79. Pop., in 1831, with that of Leadon, 368.

HALSALL, a parish in the hund. of West Derby, union of Ormskirk, co.-palatine of Lancaster, comprising the townships of Halsall, Down-Holland, and Lydiate, with the chapelries of Maghull and Melling. The parish is intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £24 11s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £3,095; in the patronage, in 1835, of A. and B. Blundell. There are 11 daily schools here, several of which are endowed. Charities, in 1827, including school endowments, about £200 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,311 1s.; of the township, £504 2s. Acres 15,540. Houses 613. A. P. £24,378. Pop., in 1801, 2,701; in 1831, 4,159. Acres of the township 6,320. Houses 160. A. P. £8,340. Pop., in 1801, 751; in 1831, 1,169.

HALSE, or HALSE-PRIORS, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemaners, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 4 miles east of Wiveliscombe, in the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 19s. 7d.; gross income £208. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Langham, Bart. There are 3 daily schools here. Charities, in 1825, £42 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £227 4s. Acres 1,340. Houses 79. A. P. £2,467. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 444.

HALSHAM, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Holderness, union of Patrington, east riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Hedon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £639. Patron, in 1835, J. Dyneley, Esq. There are 4 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum to the schoolmaster, and £24 as pensions amongst 8 free scholars. Connected with the charity whence these endowments proceed, is an hospital for 8 poor men and 2 poor women, endowed with £36 per annum. From another source there is a rent charge for an exhibition of £10 for 7 years at Trinity college, Oxford, from Halsham school; and £6 13s. 4d. per annum for apprenticing a scholar. The rent charge, however, had never been either paid or demanded at the time of the inquiry. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 14s. In the churchyard here is a handsome cemetery belonging to the Constable family. Acres 2,800. Houses 37. A. P. £4,795. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 302.

HALSTEAD, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Halstead, county of Essex; 18 miles north-north-east of Chelmsford, and 46 north-east by north of London, on the river Colne. Acres 6,230. Houses 989. A. P. £8,140. Pop., in 1801, 3,380; in 1831, 4,637. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £17; gross income £392. Patron, the bishop of London. The spire of Halstead church is of wood: it is the third that has been erected on the present tower, the two former having been destroyed by lightning. The second spire was raised in 1717, at the expense of Mr. S. Firke, an apothecary of the town; on which occasion Prior wrote the following lines:—

"View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands;
That fabric rises high as Heaven,
Whose basis on devotion stands.

While yet we draw this vital breath,
We can our hope and faith declare;
But charity, beyond our death,
Will ever in our works appear.

Blest be he call'd among good men,
Who to his God this column rais'd!
Tho' lightning shake the spire again,
The man who built it shall be prais'd.

Yet spires and towers in dust shall lie,
The weak efforts of human pains;
And Faith and Hope themselves shall die,
While deathless Charity remains."

Tanner informs us that "a college was begun here by Robert de Bouchier, lord-chancellor of England, 14^o Edw. III., and intended for eight priests, but had never probably so many in it. For the endowment of this society was rated, 26^o Hen. VIII., at no more than £26 5s. 8d. in the whole, and £23 16s. 5d. ob. clear. The site was granted, 5^o Edw. VI., to William, marquess of Northampton." Here are two independent churches, formed in 1711, and 1832; and places of worship for the Baptists, and Society of Friends. There are 4 daily and 10 infant schools in the parish, one of which is Lady Ramsay's free grammar-school, founded in 1594, for 40 free scholars, 'the sons of the poorest people at Halstead,' or within 8 miles of it. The founndress directed that the instruction should be limited "to such authors and poets as did write when the Latin tongue was the most pure and of the greatest perfection;" but the course of education now pursued is English reading, writing, and arithmetic, being considered better suited for the class of scholars intended to be benefited. In 1836 there were 25 scholars on the foundation. The school-house was repaired, in 1835-6, at an expense of about £1,000. It is capable of accommodating at least 100 scholars; and the master has a large and excellent house, but a salary of £20 per annum only. Other charities, in 1836, amounted to upwards of £500 per annum, principally consisting of Martin's charity, vested in feoffees, and producing £281 10s. 2d. per annum, expended in linen, clothing, shoes, bread, &c., to the poor, and Manistree's bread money, consisting of the dividends of £2,666 13s. 4d. three per cent. consols. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,112 18s.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Halstead, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Halstead poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 62 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 15,901. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,821. Expenditure, in 1838, £8,795; in 1839, £8,472 11s. The town of Halstead is pleasantly situated on the acclivity of an eminence near the Colne. It is large and irregular, and consists chiefly of one wide and spacious street on the high road from London to Sudbury, Norwich, and Yarmouth; the road from Colchester to Cambridge also passes through it. The town contains many very good houses. The petty-sessions for South Hinckford division are held here. The house of correction is appropriated chiefly to offenders summarily convicted, vagrants, and persons under examination. It is an old building, on an irregular plan; having been erected in 1782. It stands very low upon the bank of a stream running into the Colne, and faces the public street of the town. The boundary wall is from 8 to 10 feet high, and the inner wall surrounding the wards varies from 12 to 20 feet. The wards are 8 in number, and contain 5 day-rooms, and 35 cells. There are 2 tread-wheels and crank-wheels for labour in solitude. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 257. About 50 acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. Besides the occupations of agriculture, the labouring population are engaged in the straw-plat manufacture; and the silk trade, introduced here since the failure of the bay trade, gives employment to a considerable number. In 1838 there were 390 hands, nearly all female, employed at the power looms, in a silk mill, which has been erected; and there is also soft silk weaving by the hand-loom: in 1838 there were about 180 looms, 30 of which were employed in weaving velvet, 5 or 6 at figured goods; but there were 50 weavers capable of doing this work, and the rest were at plain work. A few crape looms were also at work by hand. The market, which is chiefly for corn, is held on Friday; and fairs for cattle are held on May 6th, and October 29th. The market was probably established in Saxon times, as a hill at the upper end of the town on which it was held for several centuries after the Conquest has the name of Cheping-hill. It is now held near the middle of the town. Halstead derives its name from two Saxon words, signifying a healthy place. In Edward the Confessor's time it was held by Earl Godwin; but, on the Conquest, it appears to have been divided among several Norman chiefs.

HALSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Codsheath, union of Seven-Oaks, county of Kent; 5½ miles north-west by north of Seven-Oaks, on the post-road from London to Tunbridge. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 17s. 11d.; gross income £214. Patron, the bishop of London. Tithes commuted in 1839. Here are places of worship for Independents and Baptists; and a day and Sunday National school. Acres 1,010. Houses 45. A. P. £928. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 242. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 12s.

HALSTEAD, a township in the parish of Tilton, county of Leicester; 11 miles east of Leicester. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. Acreage with the parish. Houses 37. A. P. £2,678. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 162. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 1s.

HALSTOCK, a parish and liberty in Sherborne division, union of Beaminster, county of Dorset; 6 miles north-east by north of Beaminster. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury; nett income £84. Patron, in 1835, John Disney, Esq. Here is a day and boarding school. Charities, church lands £10 5s. per annum, besides two cottages used by the parish in 1836, as a poor's house. Acres 1,970. Houses 107. A. P. £3,986. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 554. Poor rates, in 1838, £195 1s.

HALSTON, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Oswestry, county of Salop; 4 miles east-north-east of Oswestry. Here was formerly a preceptory, which Tanner says, "belonged first to the knights templars, and afterwards to the hospitaliers. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £160 14s. 10d. per ann. This house among other old estates was re-granted to the prior and brethren of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, 4th and 5th Philip and Mary; and 5th Elizabeth to William Horne." Acres 800. Houses 2. Pop., in 1821, 39; in 1831, 17.

HALSTOW (HICH), a parish in the hund. and union of Hoo, lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent; 5½ miles north-north-east of Rochester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £14 5s. 7½d.; gross income £602. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. S. Burt. Charities, in 1836, £24 6s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £248 14s. Acres 2,730. Houses 51. A. P. £2,489. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 351.

HALSTOW (Low), a parish in the hund. and union of Milton, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; situated between the Swale and the river Medway, at the upper end of Standgate Creek, and 6½ miles east of Chatham. It is a place of quarantine. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £8 2s.; gross income £245. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Canterbury. There is an infant school here. The poor of this parish have the privilege of sending their children to an endowed daily school in the parish of Hartlip. Charities, in 1836, £13 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 9s. Acres 1,320. Houses 48. A. P. £1,573. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 221.

HALTCLIFFE, a township with Caldbeck, in the parish of Caldbeck, Cumberland; 9½ miles north-north-east of Keswick. Houses 106. Pop., in 1801, 427; in 1831, 573. Other returns with the parish.

HALTEMPRICE, in the parish of Cottingham, east riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west-north-west of Kingston-upon-Hull. "Thomas, Lord Wake of Lyddel, 15th Edw. II., began to build a religious house in his manor of Cottingham, which he furnished with canons of the order of St. Augustine from the abbey of Brunne in Lincolnshire; but because a perpetual title could not be made to this site, the monastery was removed, about A.D. 1324, by licence from the pope, to a hamlet in the neighbourhood then called Newton, and there dedicated in honour of the nativity of our Blessed Saviour, the annunciation of the Virgin Mary, and the exaltation of the Holy Cross, though generally distinguished by the latter. Herein were, about the time of the dissolution, a prior and 11 or 12 Black canons, who were endowed with £178 0s. 10d. ob. per ann., as Speed. The site was granted 32nd Hen. VIII., to Thomas Culpepper."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

HALTHAM-UPON-BAIN, a parish in the soke and union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-south-west of Horncastle, intersected by the Horncastle canal. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Roughton. Acres 2,610. Houses 34. A. P. £1,739. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 8s.

HALTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 1¼ mile north-north-east of Wendover, intersected by the Wendover canal. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. D. King, Bart. Charities, in 1832, about £16 6s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £93. Acres 1,390. Houses 34. A. P. £1,064. Pop., in 1801, 159; in 1831, 209.

HALTON, or HAULTON, a chapelry in the parish of Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north-north-east of Frodsham, in the vicinity of the Warrington and Newton railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £157. Patron, in 1835, J. Collins, Esq. Here are 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Halton constitutes a considerable part of the Duchy of Lancaster, having round it an extensive jurisdiction, called the Honour of Halton. A modern building, used as an inn, contains a court-house, and is called a prison, though now never used as such.

On the brow of a hill are the remains of a castle which was erected about the time of the Conquest, and reduced to its present dilapidated condition during the civil wars, when it was garrisoned first for the king and afterwards for the parliament. The prospects from the castle site are highly picturesque and interesting. Northwards, the river Mersey, winding through a fertile plain, may be distinctly traced from the vicinity of Warrington, where its breadth is little more than 100 yards; to its expansion into a wide channel, contracting at Runcorn-gap, and again dilating into an estuary which extends to the sea. Beyond this river, Lancashire appears like a vast forest, from the numerous hedge-rows of its enclosures. To the west the view comprehends a large circuit of Cheshire bounded by the Welsh mountains, and broken at intermediate distances by scattered hamlets and cultivated grounds. Halton manor has had considerable privileges bestowed on it, and the town was constituted a borough and market-town. The market day is Saturday; and fairs are held on April 5th, and September 19th. Acres 1,930. Houses 231. A. P. £3,422. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 1,322. Poor rates, in 1838, £376 16s.

HALTON, a parish in the hund. of Lonsdale, county of Lancaster; 4 miles north-north-east of Lancaster, on the northern bank of the river Lun. It includes the chapelry of Aughton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £20 0s. 7½d.; gross income £542. Patron, in 1835, R. F. Bradshaw, Esq. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which, Aughton school, is endowed with £68 per annum. Other charities, in 1825, £15 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £331 14s. In 1838, 2 cotton-mills here employed 65 hands. Acres 3,830. Houses 143. A. P. £6,981. Pop., in 1801, 823; in 1831, 834.

HALTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Corbridge, county of Northumberland; 5 miles north-east by east of Hexham. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Corbridge. Near the chapel is Halton tower, a strong oblong structure with 4 turrets. There are some remains of a much larger edifice on the northern side of this town. It was long the seat of the family of Halton, from whom it passed to the Lowthers and Carnabys, the latter of whom fortified their estates in the reign of Charles I. Wallis gives the following anecdote of one of the Carnaby family, who, at the time this country was infested by those thieves the "Moss Troopers," had a commission to apprehend and try them. "Whilst he was deeply engaged on the trial of some of these, a very notorious and desperate villain was seized by his son, who asked his father what he should do with him. 'Do with him,' said the father, 'why, hang him.' As soon as the trial was ended, he ordered the man to be brought before him, but was told he was hanged instantly, according to his order. On complaint being made to the town, a fine of £4 per annum was laid on the Halton estate, which is still paid." Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 4s.

HALTON (EAST), a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Yarborough, union of Glanford-Brigg, county of Lincoln; 11 miles north-west of Great Grimsby, on the western bank of the river Humber. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 18s. 4d.; gross income £164. Patron, in 1835, Lord Yarborough. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 3,920. Houses 99. A. P. £2,846. Pop., in 1801, 350; in 1831, 515. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 11s.

HALTON (EAST) WITH BOLTON, a township in the parish of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north-east of Skipton. Acres 3,440. Houses 26. A. P. £1,289. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 144. Poor rates, in 1838, £97 16s.

HALTON (WEST), WITH GUNHOUSE, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Manley, union of Glanford-Brigg, county of Lincoln; 8 miles west of Barton-upon-Humber, and east of the river Trent. Living, a rectory with that of Gunhouse, in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £16; gross income £386. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £51 10s. 6d. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. There is a small daily school here. Acres 4,870. Houses 75. A. P. £3,216. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 359. Poor rates, in 1838, £237 12s.

HALTON (WEST), a township in the parish of Arncliffe, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west of Kettlewell. Acres 2,220. Houses 34. A. P. £2,075. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 171. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 9s.

HALTON-GIL, a chapelry in the above parish and county; 10½ miles north-north-east of Settle, at the source of the river Warfe. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £12 1s. 2d.; gross income £67. Patron, the vicar of Arncliffe. A school was erected here in 1630, by W. Fawcett. It is endowed with £28 2s. 9d. per annum. Acres 5,650. Houses 18. A. P. £2,545. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 88. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 6s.

HALTON-HOLEGATE, a parish in the east division of the soke of Bolingbroke, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 1½ mile east-south-east of Spilsby, on the western bank of the Steeping river. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 17s. 11d.; gross income £352. Patron, in 1835, Lord Willoughby D'Eresby. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 1,320. Houses 92. A. P. £2,446. Pop., in 1801, 410; in 1831, 520. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 16s.

HALTON-SHIELDS, a township in the parish of Corbridge, east division of Tindale ward, Northumberland; 4½ miles north-east by east of Hexham. It stands on the site of a Roman station called Hunnum. Here is a daily school. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 8s.

HALTWHISTLE, a parish and market-town in the west division of Tindale ward, union of Haltwhistle, Northumberland, comprising the townships of Bellester, Blinkinsop, Coanwood (East), Featherstone, Haltwhistle, Hartley-burn, Henshaw, Melkridge, Plainmellor, Ridley, Thirlwall, Thorngrafton, and Wall-Town. The parish is situated on the banks of the South Tyne river, and intersected by the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, on which there is here a station. Acres 52,930. Houses 736. A. P. £23,709. Pop., in 1801, 3,355; in 1831, 4,119. Houses of the township 178. Pop., in 1801, 453; in 1831, 1,018. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £12 3s. 1½d.; gross income £727; nett income £593. Patron, the bishop of Durham. Here are a Presbyterian church, formed in 1745; and 12 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £37 10s. per annum, by the will of Lady Capell. Other charities, in 1830, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,178 7s.; of the township, £272 13s. The Haltwhistle poor-law union comprehends 17 parishes, embracing an area of 108 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 5,634. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £1,977. Expenditure, in 1838,

£1,464; in 1839, £1,316 16s. The South Tyne intersects this extensive parish from Featherstone castle, to the mouth of the river Allen. It is crossed by a good wooden-bridge at the town of Haltwhistle, and by a stone-bridge at Featherstone about 3 miles above the town. The winding vale of the South Tyne, for 10 miles in extent, presents some of the most beautiful, rich, and picturesque scenery in the north of England. The vale of the Tippal, extending from Glenwhelt to the Tyne, also affords several pleasing views; and the scenes on the Allen, though contracted, are peculiarly romantic, displaying many beautiful curvatures, formed by the winding stream, and bounded by rocks and hanging woods. Extensive moors constitute a great portion of this parish, and form a striking contrast with its rich haughs and cultivated lands, the moors being uncommonly cold, naked, and cheerless. The castles of Bellester, Blenkinsop, and Willimoteswike, are in this parish. The great Roman wall passed through Wall-Town. The town of Haltwhistle is indifferently built. There are here two turretted buildings; and at the east end of the town is an eminence called Castle-banks: it is of an oval form with a fine spring in the centre. At the east and west ends four distinct terraces are raised one above another: the crown of the hill is defended by a breast-work of earth towards the town, and on the south by an inaccessible precipice rising abruptly from the river, and forming a sort of amphitheatre. Near to the river, and defended on 3 sides by steep rugged glens, is a place called Whitechester, where the Romans had a military post. Haltwhistle is one of the polling-places for the members for the south division of the county. It is distant 14 miles west of Hexham. Various trades are carried on; but the only manufacture is that of a coarse kind of baize. The market is on Tuesday. Fairs, chiefly for horned cattle, a few horses and sheep, and linen, woollen, and Scotch cloth, are held on May 14th, and November 22d.

HALVERGATE, a parish in the hund. of Wals-ham, union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Loddon, and north of the river Yare. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9; gross income £330. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1832, £5 per annum, besides the poor's allotment, cut for fuel, or used as pasture, by the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £358 7s. Acres 2,630. Houses 84. A. P. £3,505. Pop., in 1801, 397; in 1831, 465.

HALVERSTEAD, or HULVERSTREET, a hamlet in the parish of Henstead, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Beccles. Acres 490. Houses 62. Pop., in 1821, 241; in 1831, 297.

HALWELL, a parish in the hund. of Coleridge, union of Totness, county of Devon; $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Totness. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Harborton. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,720. Houses 69. A. P. £3,287. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 474. Poor rates, in 1838, £256.

HALWELL, a parish in the hund. of Black-Torrington, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; 6 miles south-east by east of Holsworthy. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £12 3s. 9d.; gross income £210. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £366 13s. 3d. to the dean and chapter of St. Peter. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 5,830. Houses 36. A. P. £825. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 230. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 15s.

HALYWELL, in the county of Suffolk. "Here was a cell or chantry of Black canons, belonging to the abbey of Roucester in Staffordshire, which, on account of its solitary and dangerous situation, was, 19th Edw. II., removed to the conventual church of the abbey."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

HAM HUNDRED, in the lathe of Shepway, county of Kent. Area 3,860 acres. Houses 124. Pop., in 1831, 664.

HAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Eastry, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 2 miles south-south-west of Sandwich. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 6s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £181. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The interest arising from a small benefaction left to the poor of this parish, is applied to the National school at Eastry. Acres 260. Houses 5. A. P. with Betteshanger. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 33. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 15s.

HAM, an ancient and depopulated ville in the parish of Marston-Bigott, county of Somerset. It formerly belonged to the monks of Witham.

HAM WITH HATCH, a hamlet in the parish of Kingston-upon-Thames, county of Surrey; 11 miles west-south-west of St. Paul's, London, and east of the Thames. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; gross income £116; in the patronage of the vicar of Kingston. Here are a daily and an infant school. Ham-house was the retreat of James II. before he escaped to France. A fair for pedlery is held on May 29th. Acreage with the parish. Houses 187. A. P. £4,651. Pop., in 1801, 557; in 1831, 1,079. Poor rates, in 1838, £320 4s.

HAM, a parish in the hund. of Elstub and Everley, union of Hungerford, county of Wilts; 4 miles south-south-west of Hungerford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £12 6s. 8d.; gross income £457. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,620. Houses 39. A. P. £1,863. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 205. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 18s.

HAM (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Becontree, union of West Ham, county of Essex; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of London, and north of the Thames. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £14 3s. 9d.; gross income £1,081; nett income £904. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; an infant school, with a daily school attached, and 3 other daily schools. Greenstead-house in this parish is said to have been built for Anne Boleyn. Acres 2,800. Houses 260. A. P. £10,245. Pop., in 1801, 1,165; in 1831, 1,543. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,114 17s.

HAM (WEST), a parish divided into four wards in the hund. of Becontree, union of West Ham, county of Essex; 5 miles east-north-east of London, on the eastern bank of the river Lea, about 2 miles from its confluence with the Thames, and intersected by the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £39 8s. 4d.; gross income £1,026; nett income £875. Patron, the Crown. There are 15 daily schools here, one of which contains 140 boys, 40 of whom are clothed; and another, 37 girls: these 2 schools are partly supported by the interest of £2,310 Old South sea stock, and £500 3 per cent. consols. About one mile from the church are the ruins of an ancient abbey, founded by William Gernon, or de Montfichet, in 1135; its revenue at the time of the dissolution was £650. Acres 5,160. Houses 1,984. A. P. £40,650. Pop., in 1801, 6,485; in 1831, 11,580. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,007 6s.

HAM (HIGH), a parish in the hund. of Whitley, union of Langport, county of Somerset; 3 miles north of Langport, and north of the Parret river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £38 9s. 2d.; gross income £607. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £10 10s. per annum. Acres 3,840. Houses 201. A. P. £4,478. Pop., in 1801, 713; in 1831, 1,027. Poor rates, in 1838, £240 15s.

HAMBLE (THE), a river which has its source near Bishop's-Waltham in Hants, and passing by Botley and Bursledon, falls into the Southampton water at Hamble.

HAMBLE-EN-LE-RICE, a parish in the hund. of Mansbridge, union of South Stoneham, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-east of Southampton. It is bounded on the east by the river Hamble, and on the south-west by Southampton water, which affords a convenient retreat for shipping, as it always has depth of water sufficient for putting to sea. The scenery in this vicinity is exceedingly fine. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £8 6s. 8d.; nett income £36; in the patronage of Winchester college. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £108 10s. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. "Here," says Tanner, "was an alien priory of Cistercian monks, cell to the abbey of Tirone in France, dedicated to St. Andrew. These monks were settled here in the time of Henry Blois, bishop of Winchester; and, after the foreign houses were suppressed, this came to New college, Oxford." Acres 440. Houses 70. A. P. £981. Pop., in 1801, 327; in 1831, 318. Poor rates, in 1838, £119 19s.

HAMBLEDON, a parish in the hund. of Desborough, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; 3 miles north-north-east of Henley-upon-Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £35; gross income £1,200. Patron, in 1835, N. W. R. Colbourne. Here are an independent church, formed in 1807; and 4 daily, and 3 infant schools. Charities, in 1832, £21 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £352. Charles I. took refuge in an ancient manor-house in this place when he fled from Oxford. Acres 6,620. Houses 246. A. P. £6,393. Pop., in 1801, 1,074; in 1831, 1,357.

HAMBLEDON, a parish in the hund. of Hambleton, union of Droxford, Portsdown division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles east-south-east of Bishop's-Waltham. It comprises the tythings of Hambleton, Chidden, Denmead, Earvils, and Glidden. Living, a vicarage and peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £26 19s. 2d.; gross income £550. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1827, and 8 daily schools. Charities, in 1826, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,331 11s. The market-day is Tuesday; and fairs are held, on February 13th, for horses; May 7th, for toys; and October 2d, for horses. Acres 9,630. Houses 340. A. P. £6,744. Pop., in 1801, 1,358; in 1831, 2,026.

HAMBLEDON, a parish in the hund. of Godalming, union of Hambleton, county of Surrey; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south of Godalming. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 7s. 11d.; gross income £231. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Radnor. Here is a day and Sunday school. Acres 2,020. Houses 70. A. P. £1,371. Pop., in 1801, 459; in 1831, 437. Poor rates, in 1838, £213 8s.—The Hambleton poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 92 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,882. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,217. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,090; in 1839, £5,769 8s.

HAMBLETON, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkham, co-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles west-south-west of Garstang, and west of the Wyre water. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £11 5s.; gross income £102. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £180 4s. due the dean and chapter of Christ's church, Oxford, and £34 15s. 7d. to the vicar and parish clerk of Kirkham. Patron, the vicar of Kirkham. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with the interest of £100. Acres 1,230. Houses 73. A. P. £2,086. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 334. Poor rates, in 1838, £224 13s.

HAMBLETON, a parish in the hund. of Martinsley, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 6 miles north-north-east of Oakham. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Braunston, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 17s. 1d.; gross income £197. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. Charities, in 1821, upwards of £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £237 16s. Acres 1,360. Houses 62. A. P. £4,760. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 297.

HAMBLETON, a township in the parish of Brayton, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Selby, and near the Leeds and Selby railway. There is a daily school here, endowed with five and a half acres of land. Acres 2,120. Houses 92. A. P. £2,873. Pop., in 1801, 386; in 1831, 494. Poor rates, in 1838, £190 17s.

HAMBROOK, a hamlet in the parish of Winterbourne, county of Gloucester; 5 miles north-north-east of Bristol. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 190. Pop., in 1811, 764; in 1831, 950.

HAMERINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Horncastle. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 14s. 2d.; gross income £224. Patrons, in 1835, J. Coltman, and T. Coltman, Esqs. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,370. Houses 33. A. P. £864. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 14s.

HAMERTON, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; 7 miles south-south-west of Stilton. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 15s. 5d.; gross income £460. Patron, in 1835, J. S. Barry, Esq. Acres 2,090. Houses 30. A. P. £2,955. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 14s.

HAMERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Slaidburn, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north of Clitheroe. It is held of the crown as of the duchy of Lancaster by fealty and service, at the court of Bowland. This manor belonged to Stephen de Hamerton, who founded a Roman Catholic chapel here A. D. 1332.

HAMFOLLOW, a hamlet in the parish of Berkeley, county of Gloucester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Berkeley, on the eastern bank of the Severn. Acreage with the parish. Houses 108. A. P. £8,069. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 645. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 16s.

HAMFORDSHOE HUNDRED, on the east of the county of Northampton, bounded by the hundreds of Orlingford on the north, Huxlow and Higham-Ferrers on the east, Wimersley on the south, and Spothoe on the west. Area 16,530 acres. Houses 1,637. Pop., in 1831, 8,178.

HAMINIOG, a township in the parish of Llanrhydydd, county of Cardigan South Wales, near the shore of Cardigan bay; 14 miles north of Lampeter. There is a daily school here. Houses 153. A. P. £1,070. Pop., in 1811, 575; in 1831, 785. Poor rates, in 1838, £219 1s.

HAMME, or HAM-HOUSE, in the parish of Wantage, county of Berks; 1 mile south of Wantage. "Mr. Speed mentions at a place of this name, a monastery of Black nuns, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, which he had out of the catalogue of religious houses, ascribed to Gervase of Canterbury, and if so, must be as old as King John's reign. But this is the only information on record."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

HAMMERSMITH, a chapelry in the parish of Fulham, county of Middlesex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of London, on the great west road by Brentford, and north of the river Thames. Acres 2,140. Houses 1,712. A. P. £30,349. Pop., in 1801, 5,600; in 1831, 10,222. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £310. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are the chapel of St. Paul, erected in 1631, and the church of St. Peter, a Doric edifice, recently built. There are 2 independent churches, formed in 1650 and 1773; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1809; a Baptist church, a Friends' meeting-house, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are 35 daily and 18 boarding-schools. A convent of English Benedictines was established here in the reign of Charles II., as a boarding-school for young ladies of the Roman Catholic persuasion. This school had been previously established in St. Martin's lane, and was removed to Hammersmith on account of the retired situation and the salubrity of the air. Soon after its institution the governesses and teachers having voluntarily obliged themselves to the observance of monastic rules, it obtained the name of a nunnery, which it still keeps up; many devotees having from time to time taken the veil, and doomed themselves to voluntary seclusion. This institution maintained a high degree of reputation throughout the 18th century, and many ladies of distinction were educated. It was also an asylum for female devotees whom political disturbances had driven from their native country. There are about 40 young ladies educated here at present. The building stands in King-street, near the Broadway. It is of considerable magnitude, and is approached from the entrance by an arcade, in imitation of cloisters. Behind the chief building is a large garden, and a burial-ground containing an ancient wooden cross, on which the passion of our Saviour is represented in 24 compartments. This relic was brought from France, and is held in great veneration by the inmates. At the eastern extremity of the nunnery is the chapel, which was rebuilt in 1811, at an expense of £1,600; defrayed by voluntary subscription. It is a handsome edifice, with 8 windows tastefully bordered with stained glass. There are several charitable foundations at Hammersmith—see FULHAM. Poor rates, in 1838, £4,332.

Hammersmith forms one of the most populous districts at the west end of London, and comprises the hamlets of Brook-Green, Stanbrook-Green or Pallenswick, and Shepherd's-Bush. Although its streets, with the exception of that which extends along the turnpike road, are narrow, great improvements have been effected. Many new buildings have been erected, including elegant villas and seats in the vicinity. The upper and lower malls of Hammersmith which range along the banks of the Thames, to which the district extends, contain many substantial and commodious buildings which command a fine view of the Surrey side. Queen Katherine, Dowager of Charles II., resided many years at the Upper-mall, in a house which was some years ago taken down. Hammersmith terrace is a pleasant row of houses, and has been selected by several eminent characters as their place of residence. Across the Thames, in this vicinity, there is a very elegant suspension-bridge, erected in 1827 at an expense of about £80,000. It consists of a horizontal roadway suspended from iron chains, which are carried over archways and stone-piers on each side of the river, and secured to substantial abutments. The roadway is 822 feet long and 20 feet wide, with 5 additional feet in width of footpath. The West Middlesex Water-works, by which Hammersmith and the neighbouring places are supplied with water from the Thames, were established in 1806. The reservoirs are situated at the back of Theresaterrace, and occupy about 3 acres of land. To these reservoirs the water was conducted by a brick tunnel. By act of parliament the company were empowered to extend their works to several of the western parishes of the metropolis. Brandenburg-House, a villa erected by Sir Nicholas Crispe in the 17th century; and at one time the property of the celebrated Bubb Doddington; afterwards the residence of her serene Highness the Margravine of Anspach; and ultimately the house in which the unfortunate Queen Caroline, wife of George IV., died, was situated on the bank of the Thames in this vicinity. It has been recently pulled down. Dove coffee-house, a small house of public entertainment, claims notice from its having been a favourite resort of the poet Thomson, who is said to have here written the greatest part of his 'Winter.' The house commands some fine views of the river. There are extensive nursery grounds, and also clay works in this district. Hammersmith is one of the polling-places for the county members; and the petty-sessions for the Kensington division are held here.

HAMMERTON (GREEN), a township in the parish of Whitley, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-north-east of Wetherby. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1797; and 2 daily schools. Acres 1,070. Houses 71. A. P. £1,816. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 330. Poor rates, in 1838, £178 3s.

HAMMERTON-KIRK. See KIRK-HAMMERTON.

HAMMERWICK, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Oflow, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; 3 miles west-south-west of Lichfield. The Wyrley and Essington canal intersects the parish. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the dean of Lichfield, of the certified value of £3 6s. 8d.; gross income £45. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. Acres 2,330. Houses 48. A. P. £1,180. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 218. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 3s.

HAMMOON, a parish in the hund. of Pimperne, union of Sturminster, North Blandford division of the county of Dorset; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Shaftesbury, on the river Stour. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 4s. 2d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Giles Meech. Acres 870. Houses 11. A. P. £1,101. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 54. Poor rates, in 1838, £86 6s.

HAMPALL, a township in the parish of Adwick-in-the-Street, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-west of Doncaster. There is an infant school in this township. "Here," says Tanner, "was a priory of fourteen Cistercian nuns, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, built by William de Clarefai, and Avicia de Tany his wife, about A. D. 1170. They had, 26th Hen. VIII., of yearly income, £85 6s. 11d. Speed. The site and demesnes of this house were granted, 6^o Ewd. VI., to Francis Aisla-by." Acres 1,420. Houses 24. A. P. including the township of Stubs, £1,427. Pop., in 1831, 128. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 ls.

HAMPDEN (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Aylesbury, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Chesham. Acres 1,820. Houses 45. A. P. £1,148. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 286. Poor rates, in 1838, £157. Living, a rectory annexed in 1729 to the vicarage of Great Kimble, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 9s. 7d.; gross income £361. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £290 18s. 11d. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Buckinghamshire. Here are a daily and a day and Sunday school. This was the birth-place of the immortal patriot John Hampden. Hampden house, the manorial residence of the ancient but now extinct family of Hampden, is situated in this parish, at some distance from each of the two principal roads which pass through the county, at the back of a chalky range of the Chiltern hills which bounds one side of the vale of Aylesbury. The surrounding scenery is altogether of a very beautiful and picturesque character, though, from its seclusion, little known. From a neighbouring ridge there is a fine prospect extending over several counties, and agreeably diversified by dells and the natural and luxuriant growth of box, juniper, and beech. The woods of Hampden terminate at the brow of a lofty hill called "Green Haly," on the side of which is a very curious and interesting vestige of antiquity. It is a cross cut in the chalk, of immense size, and consequently visible from great distances in every direction. It is called the "White-Leaf Cross," and has been supposed by one antiquarian, Mr. Wise, to have been designed in commemoration of a victory gained here in the tenth century by Edmund, king of the West Saxons, over the Danes. Lord Nugent, in his memorial of Hampden, however, states that it is much more probable that the cross was intended to commemorate the last battle fought between Hengist and Horsa with the Britons. The scene of this engagement was the extensive neighbouring plain of Risborough and Saunderton. Upon the hill of Green Haly, and on the adjoining Bledlow ridge, the Saxon princes planted their victorious standard to recall their troops from pursuit. Near Hampden house, a little to the south of the avenue, is the land for which Hampden was assessed £20 ship-money, the payment of which being refused, caused the trial to take place so memorable in English history for the excitement it caused, and for its connection with the great events then impending. The walls of the mansion exhibit different styles of architecture, varying from the early Norman, and the Tudor, down to the "alterations" of a recent date, which Lord Nugent seems to think are anything but improvements. In the interior are some good paintings, principally family portraits. There is a whole-length of Hampden's cousin and great fellow-labourer in the early business of the Revolution, Oliver Cromwell, standing with a truncheon in his right hand, and with his left resting on a helmet. His hair is grey. In the middle distance is seen a corps of cavalry, and in the background a seaport with shipping. There are also two sets of copies of some of Raphael's cartoons; one set in chalk, the other painted. The church of Great Hampden is situated immediately behind the mansion, and contains various memorials of the Hampden family. During the period that Hampden spent in the privacy of his residence here, when disgusted with the aspect of affairs he withdrew awhile from public life before the dissolution of parliament in 1628-9, and whilst he was doubtless preparing himself for the more arduous contest that was yet to be fought, his first wife died. She lies in the chancel of the church; a beautiful epitaph on a plain black marble stone records her virtues and her husband's regret, in his own affectionate language. Here, too, his own ashes repose. By his will he directed a stone to be laid over his grave, with the figures of himself, his wife, and his children engraved upon it. But neither Lysons nor Britton, in their accounts of Great Hampden, notice the existence of any such memorial.

HAMPDEN (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Aylesbury, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; 7 miles east-south-east of Cheltenham. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Hartwell. There is a small school here, in which 12 children are taught lace-making. Acres 620. Houses 19. A. P. £195. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 105. Poor rates, in 1838, £34.

HAMPNETT, a parish in the hund. of Bradley, union of North-Leach, county of Gloucester; 1 mile north-north-west of North-Leach. Living, a rectory united to that of Stowell, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10; gross income £458. Patron, in 1835, Lord Stowell. Acres 1,190. Houses 23. A. P. £1,660. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 187. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 18s.

HAMPNETT (WEST), or WESTHAMPNETT, a parish in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, union of Westhampnett, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Chichester, and in the line of the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. The Lavant flows in a beautiful clear stream through part of the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 4s. 4d.; gross income £52. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church is a small low building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and aisle, with a diminutive square tower, the upper half of which is of wood covered with shingles. Some parts of the interior exhibit the early style of Norman architecture, though it has been much altered at different periods. Here is an infant school. The parish is chiefly cultivated for wheat. Acres 1,850. Houses 63. A. P. £2,526. Pop., in 1801, 400; in 1831, 499. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 ls. The Westhampnett poor-law union comprehends 37 parishes, embracing an area of 92 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 15,017. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,457. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,657; in 1839, £6,261 12s.

HAMPRESTON, a parish in the hund. of Cranbourne, union of Wimbourne and Cranbourne, county of Dorset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Wimbourne-Minster, bounded on the south-west by the river Stour. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 10s.; gross income £290. Patron, in 1835, E. Greathead, Esq. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Charities, in 1836, £15 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £491 9s. Acres 5,090. Houses 181. A. P. £2,520. Pop., in 1801, 683; in 1831, 883.

HAMPESHIRE. See SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE.

HAMPSTEAD, a parish in the Holborn division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Edmonton, county of Middlesex; 3 miles north-west of London. Acres 2,070. Houses 1,180. A. P. in 1815, £37,421; in 1828, £72,490. Pop., in 1801, 4,343; in 1831, 8,588. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £947. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. M. Wilson. The church contains several handsome monuments. Here are places of worship for Dissenters; and there are 12 daily and 15 boarding schools. Charities, in 1824, £401 6s. per annum, £128 of which consisted of the Well charity, for the apprenticement of poor children, or placing them out to service. It is anticipated that, in 1850, when the lease of certain premises belonging to this charity expires, the revenues will be much increased, as it is estimated that these premises are now worth £800 per annum. About £70 per annum of the charity income were applied in educating, clothing, and apprenticing children, and the residue chiefly expended for behoof of the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £4,358 8s. The village of Hampstead is delightfully situated on the side of a hill, on the summit of which is an extensive heath elevated about 400 feet above sea-level. Its situation has been celebrated as highly salubrious. In the reign of Henry VIII. the village was chiefly inhabited by washerwomen. It became, however, the occasional resort of families of distinction in the 17th century; and, from that period, it gradually rose to the notice of the fashionable world. In the commencement of the 18th century it acquired great celebrity as a watering-place, there being several medicinal springs in the vicinity of the village, one of which is situated on the property belonging to 'the Well charity.' These waters were first recommended by Dr. Gibbons, and every accommodation was provided to attract the votaries of fashion. But the Hampstead wells were soon converted into haunts of dissipation and idleness, and gradually lost their reputation, till at length they sank into total neglect. On Hampstead heath are several large reservoirs used for supplying Camden town and the vicinity with water. A well recently sunk is worked by steam power by the water company established at Hampstead. In consequence of the convenient distance of this well from the metropolis, and the great cheapness of the situation for mining operations, an opinion was entertained that this company might, upon the supposition that the supplies were inexhaustible, form a number of similar wells in the same locality, and thus supply the whole water required for the metropolis. This opinion, however, has been proved fallacious, by a knowledge of the capabilities of the well, with its effects upon the neighbouring springs,—recent observations most distinctly proving, not only that the water underneath the London clay is not inexhaustible, but that considerable derangement and loss, with regard to the buildings, steam-engines, and other appurtenances of the London breweries and manufactories, would be experienced, by the total exhaustion of the water, should the sinking of wells on a great scale be continued; for the well upon the heath at Hampstead is found to be lowered at least forty feet in the course of twelve hours, at a rate of extraction of 135 gallons per minute, or about 8,000 gallons an hour, which forms not quite one-fortieth part of the 20,000,000 of gallons which form the daily supply required for the whole of the metropolis. Yet the extraction of 8,000 gallons per hour from the Hampstead well is found to lower in a very considerable degree the whole of the wells within a mile of the spot, and the more adjacent ones have been drawn dry. After the steam-engine has been in operation for a short time in each day, and the water in the well has been lowered a few feet, it becomes very rapidly disturbed. This is evidently attributable to the rush of the water to the common level of the well, with the consequent disturbance of the quicksand beneath by the motion of the stream. The deposit which appears in the water from the Hampstead well is such as to give it the appearance of ditch water, being chiefly composed of the oxide of iron, which forms an impregnation of so very little more specific gravity than the water itself, that the utmost difficulty is found in procuring its precipitation. It is for this purpose filtered through a bed of gravel. Medicinally, however, the impregnation is of little consequence.

Hampstead-heath comprises a large extent of common land more interesting to the lover of the picturesque and the naturalist than the farmer. Several ineffectual attempts, however, have been recently made to obtain an act of parliament for enclosing it; the ground being valuable from its proximity to London, and the purity of the air. A number of handsome villas are already scattered over it. Many rare plants are found in this district; and the views from the heath are more striking and of greater extent than any that can be pointed out in the immediate vicinity of the metropolis. From a mount in the garden of a house of entertainment, called the Spaniards, are to be seen the following distant objects:—Hanslop-steeple, in Northamptonshire; Langdon-hill, in Essex, sixty miles east; Banstead-downs, in Surrey; Shooter's-hill, Kent, south-east; Red-hill, Bucks, south-west; Windsor-castle, Berks, west. The distant scenery is fine and various. The immense tract of country to the south and west is thrown into wavy lines; and both hill and vale are covered with verdure and garnished with wood. The Roman road, called Watling-street, is supposed to have passed through Hampstead. This conjecture is strengthened by the circumstance of a Roman sepulchral urn having been dug up near the medicinal wells; as it is well known that the Romans selected the border of a military way for the burial-place of their warriors. A telegraph formerly on this heath was the first on the line of communication between Chelsea hospital and Yarmouth. The parish is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests, held in Holborn, within the limits of the new police act.

HAMPSTEAD (EAST). See EASTHAMPSTEAD. HAMPSTEAD (MARSHALL), a parish in the hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, union of Newbury, county of Berks; 4 miles west-south-west of Newbury, on the river Kennet, and intersected by the Kennet and Avon canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 14s. 4½d.; gross income £269. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Craven. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school in this parish. Acres 1,810. Houses 64. A. P. £1,793. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 313. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 6s.

HAMPSTEAD (NORRIS), a parish in the hund. of Faircross, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 3½ miles south-east by south of East Islsey, situated at the source of a large branch of the Thames. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 18s. 11½d.; gross income £401. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Downshire. There are 5 daily schools here. Charities, in 1836, about £16 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £547 15s. Acres 6,280. Houses 232. A. P. £5,807. Pop., in 1801, 855; in 1831, 1,179.

HAMPSTHWAITHE, a parish in the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles west of Knaresborough, on the river Nidd. It comprises the townships of Birstwith, Felliscliffe, Hampsthwaiite, Menwith, and Darley, and the chapelry of Thornthwaite with Padsley. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £263. Patrons, in 1835, heirs of the late T. Sham, Esq. There are 4 daily schools here, three of which are endowed. Charities, in 1820, £113 3s. per annum Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £870 8s.; of the township, £181 15s. In 1838 a cotton and a flax mill, within this parish, employed together 112 hands. Acres 9,600. Houses 528. A. P. £7,355. Pop., in 1801, 2,076; in 1831, 2,589. Acres of the township 1,170. Houses 110. A. P. £1,133. Pop., in 1801, 439; in 1831, 445.

HAMPTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-east of Malpas. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,290. Houses 50. A. P. £1,839. Pop., in 1801, 159; in 1831, 273. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 13s.

HAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Spelthorne, union of Kingston, county of Middlesex; 2½ miles west of Kingston-upon-Thames. It includes the hamlet of Hampton-wick. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £357. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a place of worship for Independents; and there are 9 daily and 7 boarding schools. Charities, in 1822, £570 10s. 2d. per annum, £291 10s. of which constituted the income of a free-school endowment, and £142 9s. 2d. were derived from consolidated charities and Queen Anne's gift for charitable uses or parochial purposes. The residue of the charity income was applied principally for relief of the poor, and apprenticeship of their children. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,222 3s. The village of Hampton is pleasantly situated north of the Thames, opposite the river Mole. It is 3 miles distant from Ditton Marsh on the Southampton railway, and 15 by railway from London. It contains many elegant villas, particularly Hampton house, which belonged to the celebrated David Garrick, who here erected a temple in honour of Shakespeare. Acres 3,190. Houses 700. A. P. £12,465. Pop., in 1801, 2,515; in 1831, 3,992.

HAMPTON-COURT is a royal palace situated about a mile from the village of Hampton, on the northern border of the Thames. This palace was founded, though not wholly erected, by Cardinal Wolsey, who had procured a lease of the manor from the Knights Hospitallers. Being ambitious to employ a portion of his great wealth in raising a structure more polished in character, and more splendid in arrangement, than had, at any previous period, adorned his country, this magnificent prelate, though a subject, reared a palace so much more splendid and capacious than the royal seat of his master Henry VIII. at Hamworth, in its close vicinity, that it is probable he excited the jealousy and discontent of the king: if so, however, he averted farther danger by the politic presentation of it to the king himself. "In recompense whereof," says Stowe, "the king licensed him to lie in his manor of Richmond at his pleasure, and so he lay there at certain times." But although the cardinal thus relinquished the right of possession, he occasionally inhabited Hampton-Court at a subsequent period. This palace is said by Hentynor to have comprised "five ample courts," and is traditionally believed to have extended farther towards the east than it now does; but it does not appear to have really been, in its original state, much more extensive than it is at present. After the various alterations which it has undergone, it now consists of three large principal quadrangles, with several minor courts appertaining to parts of the original structure. The usual approach is from the west. This front is of low proportions, though it comprises three stories. The material is brick embellished with stone, a mode of construction which prevails throughout the whole edifice. Over the portal is a bay window, adorned with the royal arms, and divided by mullioned compartments into two series of lights. This central division of the west front is flanked by towers. An embattled parapet ranges along the whole line of the building, with the exception of the part immediately over the bay window and portal, where the parapet is perforated and finished in a more ornamental style. The entrance court forms a quadrangle of 167 feet from north to south, and 141 feet from east to west. On the turrets are placed the initials E. R. The east side is more highly finished. Over the portal, in the centre, is a bay window of considerable beauty, with an octangular tower on each side; and on the face of the towers which flank the gateway are introduced busts of the Roman emperors. Through a groined archway, finely ornamented, is the entrance into the second or middle quadrangle, which measures 133 feet 6 inches from north to south, and 91 feet 10 inches from east to west. The eastern side comprises a third portal, flanked with octangular turrets, and is of a superior character to that of the preceding flanks. On the face of each turret are again introduced busts of the Cæsars. Some repairs took place in this division in the reign of George II. The south side is disfigured by a colonnade, supported by Ionic columns, executed under the direction of Sir Christopher Wren, to suit the taste, it is believed, of William III. Immediately over the entrance passage are the arms of Henry VIII., and on the face of the embattled towers which flank the gateway are busts of the Cæsars. On the front of the third story is a large and curious astronomical clock, made by Tompion. The remaining division of this court is entirely occupied by the southern side of the great hall, the exterior walls and embellishments of which must be ascribed to Wolsey. The parapet of the hall is embattled, and the walls are strengthened by buttresses. The "Third great quadrangle," is usually termed the Fountain-court, and consists chiefly of buildings constructed by Sir Christopher Wren, when the palace underwent important alterations in the time of King William. The south and east sides were then entirely taken down, and the present apartments in those divisions were erected. The dimensions of this quadrangle are 110 feet, by 117. In the area is a fountain, in the basin of which are shoals of gold and silver fish, and on each side of the court is a beautiful colonnade, of the Ionic order, with duplicated columns. The elevations of this quadrangle correspond in architectural character with the grand exterior front. The great eastern facade, or grand front of the palace, was begun in 1690, and completed in 1694, after designs by Sir Christopher Wren, and is about 330 feet in extent. The materials consist chiefly of brick, of a bright red hue; but the numerous decorations are of stone. This front, together with that towards the south, is terminated by a handsome balustrade. The central compartment, in which is the state apartment to the palace, is of stone, and is adorned with considerable splendour. An angular pediment, supported by four fluted three-quarter columns of the Corinthian order, exhibits, in bas-relief, the triumphs of Hercules over Envy. On each side are two pilasters of the same order, supporting a continuation of the entablature. The southern front is 323 feet in length, and has a central compartment of stone, but the embellishments are less numerous than those of the eastern front. On the entablature, which is sustained by four columns, is inscribed Gulielmus et Maria, R. R. E. On the parapet are placed two statues. This front looks towards the privy-garden, and the ground was here sunk ten feet for the purpose of obtaining from the lower apartments a view of the Thames. Though an air of splendour and magnificence reigns throughout the whole structure, sufficiently imposing on a slight review, yet when we proceed to form our judgment by the rules of art, our admiration is considerably diminished. That uniformity of character, which must ever be looked for in a perfect structure, is not to be found here. This defect must be attributed to its having been erected at different periods, and to the different tastes of the monarchs by whom the additions were made; all of whom departed, in a greater or less degree, from the original plan of Wolsey.

It has been generally imagined that the subordinate parts only of the ancient edifice are now remaining; yet, certainly, the "great hall and the chapel" are parts of the original structure. The former occupies the north side of the middle quadrangle, and its lofty battlements constitute a prominent feature in the general view of the palace. Its fine west end, comprising a large mullioned window, with a turret at each extremity, and a curious perforated parapet, surmounted by a vane, assumes the aspect of an ecclesiastical building, and aids in imparting a venerable air to the whole vast pile. The dimensions of this hall are 106 feet by 40. The flooring was formerly of large square paving bricks, but at present it is of stone. The east end is elevated by a step above the other parts of the room. On the south side of this division is an oval window of great beauty, divided into numerous compartments by stone mullions. The ceiling of the oriel is of stone, groined and adorned with fan-work and pendants, delicately executed. At the west end, beneath the spacious pointed and mullioned window before noticed, is a screen, which formerly supported the minstrel's gallery. The sides of the hall are covered with cement, in imitation of stone. The roofing is open work, and has a grand effect. This ceil-work consists of oak, free from paint or gold leaf. The arms of Henry VIII. occur in many parts of this fine carving. The initials of that king, and of Jane Seymour, joined by a true-lover's-knot, are also introduced among the decorations. In this hall Henry had his royal banquets. On one occasion, when he entertained Francis Gonzago, the Viceroy of Sicily, the hall was illuminated with 1,000 lamps, curiously disposed. In the year 1718, the hall was fitted up as a theatre, by direction of George I. The chapel is situated to the north of the Fountain-court, and forms the south side of a small quadrangle. The exterior exhibits little to attract notice. Previously to the civil war, the windows were ornamented with stained glass, and the altar and walls adorned with pictures. Of these decorations the building was stripped by the zeal of the puritans, who had the ascendancy in the 17th century, and an act of parliament proscribed them, as superstitious works of art. The interior of the chapel was fitted up in its present state by Queen Anne. The original roof remains, and is ornamented with ranges of large pendants, each pendant being formed into the representation of a balcony, in which are placed winged angels with musical instruments. In opposition to the Gothic character of the roof, the altar-piece is Grecian, and adorned with Corinthian columns. The floor is of black and white marble, and the pews are formed of Norway oak. At the west end is a gallery, containing the royal pew, the ceiling of which is painted with a group of cherubim sustaining the British crown, and waving over it an olive branch. The State apartments are approached from the Fountain-court, by the king's staircase, which is painted, by Antonio Verrio, with representations of different parts of the heathen mythology, &c. The first room is the grand chamber, which is 60 feet long, 37 feet wide, and 30 feet high. The sides are fitted with arms, arranged in various ornamental forms, and here are portraits of distinguished admirals. The king's first presence chamber is hung with rich tapestry. Opposite the entrance is the chair of state. Towards the left, facing the canopy, is a portrait of William III., by Sir Godfrey Kneller. The second presence chamber is hung with tapestry. The canopy is furnished with crimson damask. There are valuable paintings in different parts of the room. From the centre is suspended a silver chandelier of 16 branches. Here is likewise a state chair, the furniture of which is of crimson damask, with gold fringe, and other decorations. The king's drawing-room is of fine proportions adorned with pictures. The tapestry is interwoven with gold. Here is also a chair of state. The state bed-chamber is furnished with a bed of crimson velvet, enriched with gold, and decorated with plumes of feathers. The room is hung with tapestry. The ceiling is painted by Verrio, and represents Endymion sleeping in the lap of Morpheus; and the figure of Somnus with his attributes. The King's dressing-room is adorned with paintings, which possess considerable interest. The ceiling is painted by Verrio, and represents Mars reposing in the lap of Venus. Queen Mary's closet is hung with delicate needle-work, said to be the production of that queen, with the assistance of the ladies of her court. Here are five chairs and a screen, supposed to have been adorned by the needle of King William's consort. On the east side of the southern division are rooms, appropriated to purposes of state: these are the queen's gallery, drawing-room, and state audience room, all somewhat similarly finished and adorned. The dining-room is a spacious apartment in which George I. and George II. frequently dined in public. Here are several excellent paintings. The apartments termed the Prince of Wales's drawing-room, &c., and those named the King's private bed-chamber, &c., are all fitted up in elegant style. In an apartment called the Cartoon gallery are part of Raphael's cartoons, which constitute the chief treasure of the palace, though, besides the works of Raphael, there are here most valuable paintings of Titian, Correggio, Lely, Vandyke, Kneller, Rembrandt, Rubens, Ricci, Giulio, Romana, and many other masters of the sublime and beautiful. The apartment immediately beneath the King's guard-chamber is usually termed the beauty-room, and contains the portraits of Queen Mary, consort of William III., and those of eight distinguished ladies of her court.

The pleasure-gardens attached to the palace comprise about 45 acres. The gardens were laid out by William III.; but the formal and studied manner in which they are arranged by no means accords with the modern taste in gardening. The lawns are shaped with mathematical precision, and bordered with meagre evergreens, placed at equal distances. These are intersected by broad gravel walks; and statues and vases are placed at measured points in formal opposition to each other. In each of the four principal parterres is placed a large bronze statue. The privy-garden is ornamented with terrace-walks and a fountain. On this side of the palace is a grape-house, the dimensions of which are 70 feet by 14, and the whole interior is occupied by one vine of the black Hamburgh kind. This vine was planted in 1769, and produced in one year 2,200 bunches of grapes, weighing, on an average, one pound each. The court-park extends from the borders of the palace-gardens to Hampton-wick, and is bounded on the south by the Thames, and on the north by the high road to Kingston. This park is well stocked with deer. It is divided from the river, in one part, by a broad gravel walk, and an extensive range of massive and highly ornamented iron-rails. His late Royal Highness, the Duke of Kent, was ranger of the park; and occupied, by virtue of his office, an agreeable residence called the Pavilion,—a building erected under the superintendence of Sir Christopher Wren. Bushey-park comprises all the enclosures belonging to the palace at Hampton, except the Home-park. These enclosures contain about 1,100 acres, and are adorned by long avenues of chestnut and elm-trees. The former are of noble growth, and add much to the beauty of the park; but, upon the whole, the domain is deficient in timber. The office of ranger of Bushey-park has usually been held by the same persons who have been chief-stewards of the honour of Hampton, and keepers of the chase. The lodge was the residence of William IV., when duke of Clarence; and now belongs to Adelaide, Queen-dowager, for life. Hampton-court was the occasional residence of the royal family from the time of Henry VIII. until the 10th year of the reign of George II., when it ceased to be a place of the actual personal residence of the Crown. Here Edward VI. was born; and here his mother, Jane Seymour, died. Hampton-court was the scene of the celebrated conference of 1603-4, between the Presbyterian and the Episcopal clergy, at which James I. was moderator, and the lords-of-council were auditors. Charles I. was imprisoned here; and here Oliver Cromwell occasionally resided. The palace contains a suite of rooms called the state-apartments, throughout which is scattered a fine collection of pictures, the property of the Crown, to which the public under certain regulations are permitted to have access; a room called by the name of the Board of Green Cloth, and a gallery, which the public are not permitted to enter, and which are used as a depository for lumber. A guard-of-honour is always on duty at the palace, and divine service is regularly performed therein by a chaplain appointed and paid by the Crown. The palace, as well as the gardens which surround it, is maintained and kept in order by the Crown, and the produce of the gardens is applied to Her Majesty's use. Sentinels are posted at the various entrances, and those entrances are opened and closed at the pleasure of the Crown. The housekeeper of the palace (who is the only officer of the royal establishment resident in the palace) formerly employed servants to show the pictures, and received a fee or gratuity for such view as a perquisite of office. Upon the decease of Lady Emily Montagu—the late housekeeper—the state-apartments were thrown open for the gratuitous admission and view of the public under the superintendence of persons in the dress of police-constables, but appointed and paid by the Crown.

In 1838, about 50,000 persons paid a discretionary fee.
 1839, — 115,971 visitors entered free.
 1840, — 122,339 ditto.

There are several other apartments in the palace which are in the occupation of private individuals; some consist of spacious drawing-rooms, dining-rooms, bed-rooms, servants' rooms, kitchens, and other domestic offices suitable for the residence and accommodation of persons with considerable household establishments, and are now, and always have been, occupied by persons of rank and distinction; others, also, are occupied by persons of respectable station. The occupiers of these suites of apartments provide at their own expense any kind of household-furniture and fixtures requisite for the furnishing and fitting-up of such apartments. Previously to occupiers taking possession of the apartments, such repairs as may be considered by the officers of the Crown as necessary to be done to such apartments are done at the expense of the Crown; but in some instances where the repairs desired for the accommodation of such occupiers have been of such a nature as to require a considerable outlay, such repairs have been effected at the joint expense of the Crown and occupier, but all alterations or additional works required by the occupiers are done at their own expense, and in some instances such additional works and alterations have amounted to £1,000 and upwards. Afterwards the occupiers themselves are bound at their own expense to do whatever internal works, alterations, and repairs may be found necessary for keeping up and preserving the apartments in a proper and tenable condition, or which they may consider essential to their greater convenience and enjoyment; but no works, alterations, and repairs, are done except under the directions of the officers of Her Majesty's Office of Woods, &c., and the Government contracting tradesmen are employed and paid by the occupiers of the apartments. A periodical survey is made of the apartments every second year by the officers of the Crown, and a report made of the repairs necessary for placing them respectively in tenable repair; and notices are given by the Crown to the occupiers, to have such repairs done.

HAMPTON AND CLAVERTON HUNDRED, at the north-eastern extremity of the county of Somerset, consists of two portions surrounded by Bath-Forum. Area 2,610 acres. Houses 100. Pop., in 1831, 587.

HAMPTON-IN-ARDEN, a parish in the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden, county of Warwick. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway here joins the London and Birmingham railway at a station 9½ miles distant from Birmingham, and 102¾ miles from London; and the projected line of the Hampton-in-Arden, Leamington, and Warwick railway commences by a junction with the Birmingham and Derby Junction railway in this parish. A branch railway runs from Hampton-in-Arden to the line of the Birmingham and Warwick canal in the parish of Solihull, whence also a junction with the London and Birmingham railway has been projected. The London and Birmingham railway, in its course through this parish, is carried through a tunnel 300 yards in length. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Nuthurst, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £606. Patrons, the trustees of Leicester's hospital in Warwick. Here are 14 daily including 3 endowed schools. There are numerous charities. The most valuable of these is 'The Hospital of Lady Katherine Leveson,' in the chapelry of Balsall. The revenue of this charity now amounts to about £1,745 per annum.—see BALSALL. Other charities, in 1827, about £330 11s. per annum, of which £194 3s. consisted of Fentham's charity for the education and apprenticeship of poor children, and relief of 10 poor families. Of the residue about £100 were more particularly applicable to charitable purposes in the chapelry of Knowle.—This parish comprises the chapelry of Balsall, with the hamlets of Kinwalsey, Knowle, and Nuthurst. Acres 12,910. Houses 603. A. P. £19,652. Pop., in 1801, 2,107; in 1831, 2,894. Poor rates, in 1838, of Hampton-in-Arden exclusively, £184 3s.; of the entire parish £951 4s. Balsall, Knowle, and Nuthurst are included in Solihull poor-law union.

HAMPTON (BISHOP'S), a parish in the hund. of Grimswoth, union and county of Hereford; 4 miles south-east by east of Hereford, situated between the rivers Wye and Lug, both of which are here navigable for vessels of 30 tons burden. It includes the township of Tupsley. Living, a rectory and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Hereford; rated at £13 13s. 9d.; gross income £375. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Charities, in 1836, about £12 6s. per annum, besides 40 loaves and 5 tons of coals annually given to the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £425 9s. A few acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 2,980. Houses 159. A. P. £5,407. Pop., in 1801, 471; in 1831, 783.

HAMPTON (CHARLES), a hamlet in the parish of Bockleton, county of Hereford. On an average of 7 years, ending in 1835, hops were cultivated to the extent of 18½ acres in this hamlet. Acres 510. Houses 19. A. P. £443. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 91.

HAMPTON-GAY, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; 2¾ miles east of Woodstock, on the river Cherwell, and intersected by the Oxford canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; returned at £20 10s.; gross income £20. Patron, in 1835, W. Wilson, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 620. Houses 20. A. P. £1,356. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 86.

HAMPTON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Blackenhurst, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; about a mile south-west of Evesham, on the southern bank of the river Avon. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7 12s. 3½d.; gross income £81. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. There is an infant school here. The children of this parish have liberty to attend the National school at Evesham. Charities, in 1832, £110 per annum, subject to certain deductions. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 10s. Acres 1,670. Houses 75. A. P. £3,081. Pop., in 1801, including the township of Little Hampton, 276; in 1831, 290.

HAMPTON (HIGH), a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Okehampton, county of Devon; 3½ miles west of Hatherleigh, and south of the Torridge river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 19s. 4½d.; gross income £212. Patron, in 1835, J. M. Woolcombe, Esq. Acres 2,220. Houses 67. A. P. £1,264. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 364. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 12s.

HAMPTON-HILL, a hamlet in the parish of Martley, county of Worcester; 4 miles south-east of Stockton, and east of the river Terme. Acreage with the parish. Houses 30. A. P. £1,456. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 165. Poor rates, in 1838, £81 11s.

HAMPTON (LITTLE), a parish and small seaport on the eastern bank and at the mouth of the river Arun, in the hund. of Poling, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 11 miles east-south-east of Chichester, and near the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £16, returned at £125; gross income £123. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. There are 8 daily schools here, one of which is supported by endowment, amounting, in 1819, to £17 16s. 2d. The village of Little Hampton, situated on the coast of the English channel, is now a fashionable sea-bathing place. Acres 760. Houses 292. A. P. £4,067. Pop., in 1801, 584; in 1831, 1,625. Poor rates, in 1838, £476 2s.

HAMPTON-LOVETT, a parish in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; 1¼ mile north-north-west of Droitwich. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £9 16s. 1½d.; gross income £300; in the patronage, in 1835, of A. and J. S. Packington. This parish unites with Droitwich in returning a member to parliament. Acres 1,580. Houses 27. A. P. £4,135. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £144 6s.

HAMPTON-LUCY, or BISHOP'S-HAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Barlichway, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Warwick; 4 miles east-north-east of Stratford, on the river Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £51 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,147. Patron, in 1835, George Lucy, Esq. The present church, begun in 1822, from the designs of Rickman and Hutchinson, architects, Birmingham, was built under their superintendence, and opened in autumn, 1826. The funds applied to the purpose arose from a bequest of Mrs. Alice Hammond, widow of the Rev. George Hamond, rector of the parish, considerably augmented by the Rev. John Lucy, A. M., afterwards the incumbent. It is one of the most beautiful works erected since the revival of pointed architecture; the most elegant and florid style having been adopted without the ordinary limitation of expense. The most magnificent window in stained glass that has been produced, in modern times, in imitation of the ancient style, has recently been erected in this church at the expense of the Rev. Mr. Lucy. It was designed and executed by Mr. Thomas Willement, of London, F.S.A. In the compartments of the tracery, within the arched head of the window, are introduced the A. Ω, I. H. S., and the Dove, as indicative of the three persons of the Blessed Trinity, and also the Angel, Lion, Calf, and Eagle, as the emblems of the holy Evangelists. The remaining divisions are occupied by foliage ornaments. In the centre opening of the lower part of the window, under a rich Gothic canopy, stands the whole length figure of St. Peter, to whom the church is dedicated, the pedestal being inscribed with his name. Immediately beneath this figure are placed the impaled arms of King Philip and Queen Mary, by whom the advowson of the rectory was given to Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, Esq., afterwards knighted by Queen Elizabeth. Below these, beneath a mitre, are the arms of the diocese of Worcester. The 3 openings on the right, and the 3 on the left, are occupied by 18 compartments each beneath a Gothic arch, the upper 6 having pedimental canopies containing the principal events in the history of the patron saint. In a lower range, below these subjects, are 6 compartments, each containing the figure of an angel holding a shield of arms, principally of the Hammond and the Lucy families; and, at the bottom of the whole window is an appropriate inscription. There is a daily school here, supported by endowment, amounting, in 1825, to £109 10s. per annum. The Rev. William Lucy, D.D., by will, dated in 1723, gave to St. Mary Magdalen Hall, Oxford, the sum of £2,000, the interest of which to constitute exhibitions for 4 scholars from Hampton Lucy school for 8 years. There was also another scholarship at Hertford college, Oxford, founded by the Rev. William Rogers, of Warwick, in 1749, for a boy from the same school; but upon the dissolution of that college this endowment escheated to the crown. Other charities, in 1825, £45 2s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £212 3s. Acres 3,130. Houses 103. A. P. £6,378. Pop., in 1801, 514; in 1831, 540.

HAMPTON-MAISEY, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 2½ miles west by south of Fairford. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £26 17s. 3½d.; gross income £665. Patrons, Corpus Christi college, Oxford. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. The market-day is Tuesday; and fairs for cattle, horses, pigs, and cheese, are held on Trinity Monday, and October 29th. Acres 1,920. Houses 80. A. P. £2,626. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 364. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 3s.

HAMPTON (NETHER), a parish in the hund. of Cawdon and Cadworth, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 1 mile south of Wilton. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Wilton. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed by Mrs. P. Grove with £14 per annum. Acres 800. Houses 33. A. P. £1,161. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 19s.

HAMPTON-POYLE, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Woodstock. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £6 2s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £250. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 830. Houses 30. A. P. £1,498. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 18s.

HAMPTON-WELCH, a parish in the hund. of Pimhill, union of Ellesmere, county of Salop; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Ellesmere, and near the Ellesmere canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £6; gross income £138. Patron, in 1835, C. K. Mainwaring, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,970. Houses 106. A. P. £2,434. Pop., in 1801, 373; in 1831, 532. Poor rates, in 1838, £140 7s.

HAMPTON-WICK, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Hampton, county of Middlesex; about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Kingston, on the river Thames. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Hampton, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; gross income £102. Patron, the vicar of Hampton. There are 3 daily schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 268. A. P. £3,909. Pop., in 1801, 793; in 1831, 1,463. Poor rates, in 1838, £372 3s.

HAMSEY, a parish in the hund. of Barcombe, union of Chailey, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Lewes, on the river Ouse. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £16 12s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £613. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Shiffner, Bart. There is a daily school here, endowed, in 1836, with £4 14s. 10d., and otherwise supported by the voluntary donations of the Shiffner family, and the subscriptions of the neighbouring gentry and farmers. Poor rates, in 1838, £412 8s. Acres 2,530. Houses 97. A. P. £3,646. Pop., in 1801, 367; in 1831, 608.

HAMSTALL-RIDWARE, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; 4 miles east by north of Rugeley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £6 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £273. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £249 18s. 9d. Patron, in 1835, Chandos Leigh, Esq. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Charities, in 1821, £30 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 13s. Acres 2,630. Houses 87. A. P. £3,424. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 443.

HAMSTEELS. See BURNOP and HAMSTEELS.

HAMSTERLEY, a chapelry in the parish of St. Andrew Auckland, north-west division of Darlington ward, county of Durham; 6 miles west by north of Bishop-Auckland, west of the river Wear, and in the vicinity of the Auckland and Weardale railway. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £18 6s.; gross income £96. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Chaytor. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1665; places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and 3 daily schools. The village of Hamsterley is pleasantly situated on the summit of a steep hill. Acres 2,820. Houses 103. A. P. £2,309. Pop., in 1801, 491; in 1831, 503. Poor rates, in 1838, £187 9s.

HAMWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Cogdean, union of Poole, county of Dorset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west by north of Poole, at Holes bay. The original chapel was destroyed during the parliamentary war, but a new one has lately been erected, containing 453 free sittings. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1804, and a daily school. The chapelry is divided into Higher and Lower Ham. The latter adjoins Poole harbour. This parish unites with Poole in the election of two members. A fair is held here in October 18th. Acres 1,270. Houses 61. A. P. £793. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 308. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 1s.

HANBURY, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; 6 miles north-west by west of Burton-upon-Trent, and south of the river Dove. It comprises the townships of Cotton, Fauld, Hanbury, Hanbury-Woodend, and Marchington-Woodlands; the chapelries of Newborough and Marchington, with the hamlet of Stubby-lane. Living, a vicarage not in charge, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £455. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. There are 8 daily schools in this parish; 3 of which are endowed. Charities, in 1823, £147 16s. 7d. per annum, of which £35 13s. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £316 3s. "Here was an ancient nunnery, founded about the year 680 by Ethelred, king of Mercia, and by him put under the government of his sister, St. Werburgh, who was buried and enshrined here; but upon the taking of Ripton by the Danes, A. D. 875, her body was removed to Chester; and this monastery, being forsaken of the religious, was then destroyed by the Danes."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Acres 12,380. Houses 411. A. P. £21,056. Pop., in 1801, 1,284; in 1831, 2,160. Acres of the township, 1,580. Houses 29. Pop., in 1811, 113; in 1831, 154.

HANBURY, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Droitwich, in the line of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and the Birmingham and Worcester canal. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Worcester, exempt from visitation; rated at £29 16s.; gross income £1,188. Patron, in 1835, J. J. Vernon, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1832, £180 10s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £589 9s. This parish unites with Droitwich in returning a member to parliament. Acres 7,260. Houses 214. A. P. £10,073. Pop., in 1801, 933; in 1831, 1,073.

HANBY, a hamlet in the parish of Lavington, county of Lincoln. Acres 830. Houses and A. P. with the parish. Pop., in 1821, 32.

HANCHURCH, a township in the parish of Trentham, county of Stafford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Stoke. Acres 720. Houses 32. Pop., in 1811, 249; in 1831, 169. Other returns with the parish.

HANDALE, a hamlet in the parish of Lofthouse, north riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Guisborough. Tanner says, "Here William Percy the third founded, A. D. 1133, a small priory for Benedictine nuns, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin. About the time of the dissolution, herein were eight religious, though they had revenues, valued only at £20 7s. 8d. per annum. The site was granted 35^o Henry VIII., to Ambrose Beckwith."

HANDBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Witney. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £11 6s. 0½d.; gross income £382. Patron, St. John's college, Oxford. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Charities, in 1823, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £559 16s. This place is noted for producing a variety of gypsum, or sulphate of lime. Acres 2,820. Houses 196. A. P. £3,126. Pop., in 1801, 655; in 1831, 883.

HANDFORD, a chapelry in the parish of Trent-ham, county of Stafford; 2 miles south of Stoke, and in the line of the Grand Trunk canal. Acres 290. Houses 126. Pop., in 1811, 393; in 1831, 607.

HANDFORTH WITH BOSDEN, or BOXTEN, a township in the parish of Cheadle, co.-palatine of Chester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Stockport. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,020. Houses 354. A. P. £3,658. Pop., in 1801, 1,034; in 1831, 1,980. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 1s.

HANDLEY, a parish and township in the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Boughton, co.-palatine of Chester; $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east by south of Chester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 0s. 5d.; gross income £296. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chester. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities, in 1836, £4 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838;—of the parish, £195 4s.; of the township, £155 10s. Acres 1,890. Houses 69. A. P. £2,785. Pop., in 1801, including the township of Golborn David, 265; in 1831, 389. Acres of the township 1,340. Houses 54. A. P. £1,952. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 309.

HANDLEY, a parish in the hund. of Sixpenny-Handley, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; 5 miles north-west of Cranborne. It includes Gussage, St. Andrew, with Minchinton and Woodcots tythings. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Iwerne Minster. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 5,670. Houses 196. A. P. £5,640. Pop., in 1801, 757; in 1831, 889. Poor rates, in 1838, £611 13s.

HANDSACRE. See ARMITAGE.

HANDSWORTH, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, union of West Bromwich, county of Stafford, containing the hamlets of Soho and Perry-Barr; 5 miles south-east of Wednesbury, and close upon the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £13 9s. 2d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Peel, Bart. In 1838 a new church was erected here in the Gothic style, at an expense of £3,000. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1788; and 9 daily schools. Charities, in 1822, about £211 1s. 7d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,050 14s. Acres 7,720. Houses 937. A. P. £16,874. Pop., in 1801, 2,719; in 1831, 4,944.

HANDSWORTH, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Sheffield, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east-south-east of Sheffield; intersected by the York and Derby, or North Midland railway. Living, a rectory in the dio. of York, a peculiar; rated at £12 4s. 7d.; gross income £654. Patron, the Duke of Norfolk. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1836; and 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum. Acres 3,510. Houses 473. A. P. £9,960. Pop., in 1801, 1,424; in 1831, 2,338. Poor rates, in 1838, £560.

HANFORD, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Red-lane, county of Dorset. Acres 460. Houses 1. Pop., in 1801, 11; in 1831, 10.

HANG (EAST), and HANG (WEST), two wapentakes in the north riding of the county of York. Area of the former 63,780 acres. Houses 2,184. Pop., in 1831, 10,831: area of the latter, 164,610 acres. Houses 2,992. Pop., in 1831, 15,186.

HANGLETON, a parish in the hund. of Fishergate, union of Steyning, county of Sussex; 4 miles north-west by west of Brighton; in the line of the London and Brighton railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £11 14s. 2d.; gross income £220. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Plymouth. Acres 1,000. Houses 4. A. P. £1,788. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 64.

HANHAM (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Bitton, county of Gloucester; 5 miles east-south-east of Bristol; south-east of the river Avon, and in the line of the Great Western railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bitton. There are two infant schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 244. A. P. £3,467. Pop., in 1801, 795; in 1831, 1,212. Poor rates, in 1838, £451 9s.

HANINGFIELD (EAST), a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; 6 miles south-east of Chelmsford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £13 15s. 7½d.; gross income £419. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Nottidge. There are 4 daily schools here. Charities, in 1836, £13 5s. per annum, of which £12 are applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £261. Acres 3,770. Houses 56. A. P. £3,545. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 447.

HANINGFIELD (SOUTH), a parish in the above hund., union and county; 6 miles south-east by south of Chelmsford. Living, a rectory with that of West Haningfield annexed, in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £938. Patrons, in 1835, executors of the late T. Lawton. Charities, in 1836, £2 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £83 12s. Acres 1,620. Houses 37. A. P. £1,684. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 214.

HANINGFIELD (WEST), a parish in the above hund., union and county; 2 miles west of East Haningfield. Living, a rectory annexed to South Haningfield. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1836, £15 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £284 10s. Acres 2,800. Houses 98. A. P. £3,826. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 480.

HANKELow, a township in the parish of Audlem, county of Chester; 4 miles south-south-east of Nantwich. Acres 800. Houses 36. A. P. £1,340. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 289. Poor rates, in 1838, £109 8s.

HANKERTON, a parish including the tything of Cloatley, in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Malmesbury. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 10s.; gross income £269. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Wigget. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities, in 1835, £2 15s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £225 18s. Acres 2,130. Houses 82. A. P. £2,895. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 413.

HANLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne; intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and the Grand Trunk canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £220. Patrons, the trustees of the chapel. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1784; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1818; also a Roman Catholic chapel, and a National and several Sunday schools. The populous town of Hanley extends into the adjoining township, and is united with the village of Shelton.

Situated in the centre of the district called the Potteries, a great seat of the china and earthenware manufacture, it is chiefly inhabited by persons employed in that branch of industry, and like the other villages and hamlets in the district, has thus been raised from comparative insignificance to a state of decided importance. See articles POTTERIES, ETRURIA, BURSLEM, &c. The township of Hanley is included within the boundaries of the borough of Stoke-upon-Trent. Houses 1,321. Pop., in 1811, 4,481; in 1831, 7,121. Other returns with the parish.

HANLEY-CASTLE, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Upton-on-Severn, county of Worcester, opposite to Malvern-hills; $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-west of Upton-upon-Severn, and west of the river Severn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £12 15s.; gross income £650. Patron, in 1835, Sir A. Lechmere, Bart. There are 4 daily schools here, 2 of which are supported by endowment, amounting, in 1829, to £165 9s. 2d. per annum. Other charities, £4 2s. per annum; besides a quantity of coals, wheat, and rye, charged on an estate. Poor rates, in 1838, £760. On an average of 7 years to 1835, $43\frac{3}{4}$ acres of hop-grounds have been annually cultivated in this parish. A castle belonging to the earls of Warwick formerly adorned this place. Malvern-wells, a great resort for invalids, are in this parish. Acres 5,630. Houses 286. A. P. £7,347. Pop., in 1801, 986; in 1831, 1,653.

HANLEY-CHILD, a chapelry in the parish of Eastham, county of Worcester; 4 miles east-south-east of Tenbury. Acres 1,110. Houses 39. A. P. £694. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 7s.

HANLEY-WILLIAM. See EASTHAM.

HANLEYS, a township in the parish of Brace-Meol, county of Salop. A chalybeate spring was discovered here in 1741.

HANLITH, a township in the parish of Kirby-in-Mallam-Dale, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east of Settle. Acres 880. Houses 9. A. P. £693. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 42. Poor rates, in 1838, £34 16s.

HANMER, a parish in the hund. of Maylor, union of Ellesmere, county of Flint, North Wales; 5 miles north-north-east of Ellesmere. It comprises the townships of Bettesfield, Brington, Haighton, Hanmer, Tybroughton, and Willington. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £428. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Hanmer, Bart. The church contains a magnificent monument of Lord-chief-justice Kenyon. There are 8 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £35 per annum. Other charities, in 1836, about £95 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £1,076 14s.; of the township, £219 1s. A market was established here in 1831; it is held on Wednesday. Davydd-ap-Edmund, a bard of the 15th century, was born in this parish. Houses 506. A. P. £12,550. Pop., in 1801, 2,220; in 1831, 2,731. Houses of the township 106. A. P. £2,352. Pop., in 1801, 474; in 1831, 546.

HANNAY. See HAGNABY WITH HANNAY.

HANNEY (EAST), a township in the parish of West Hanney, county of Berks. There is an endowed daily school here. Acres 1,390. Houses 133. A. P. £3,186. Pop., in 1801, 535; in 1831, 631. Poor rates, in 1838, £350 5s.

HANNEY (WEST), a parish in the hund. and union of Wantage, county of Berks; $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Wantage, on the eastern bank of the river Ock, and in the line of the Great Western railway, and the Berks and Wilts canal. It comprises the township of East Hanney, and the cha-pely of Lyford. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Lyford, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £22 12s. 6d.; gross income £210. The church is a handsome Norman edifice. There are 4 daily schools here, 2 of which are endowed. Charities, in 1836, about £614 16s. 2d. per annum, £585 9s. of which consisted of the proceeds of Oliver Ashcombe's endowment for 10 almshouses at Lyford, which are inhabited by 3 poor people from East Hanney, 3 from West Hanney, and 4 from Lyford. The annual expenditure from this charity, in 1836, amounted to £201 5s., and it was proposed to erect 8 new almshouses. Acres 3,060. Houses 231. A. P. £6,848. Pop., in 1801, 989; in 1831, 1,161. Poor rates, in 1838, £653 4s.

HANNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 6 miles north-west by west of Wellingborough. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Walgrave, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 11s. 3d. Patronage with Walgrave rectory. Acres 1,270. Houses 40. A. P. £1,495. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 196. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 1s.

HANNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Chuteley, union of Kingsclere, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; 2 miles south-south-east of Kingsclere. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Winchester, exempt from visitation; rated at £6 7s. 3d.; gross income £620. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £412 3s. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,220. Houses 49. A. P. £1,466. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 287. Poor rates, in 1838, £171.

HANNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, union of Highworth and Swindon, county of Wilts; 2 miles west by north of Highworth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 0s. 10d.; gross income £132. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £42 17s. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Montgomery. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1835, £83 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £403 12s. Acres 2,450. Houses 85. A. P. £4,067. Pop., in 1801, 363; in 1831, 415.

HANS (THE), a small river in Staffordshire which rises in the parish of Ilam, and after running under ground for some distance, falls, at Blore-Park, into the Manifold, another river which runs partly under ground.

HANSLOPE, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnell, county of Buckingham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Stoney-Stratford, east of the Tare, and in the line of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Castlethorpe, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £90. Patrons, the members of the corporation of Lincoln. The church is one of the most ancient Gothic edifices in the county. There is a daily school here, endowed with the interest of £200, bequeathed many years since by Lady Lucy Pierrepont. Other charities, in 1835, £169 6s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £701 2s. A fair for cattle is held on Holy Thursday. Acres 5,290. Houses 420. A. P. £6,652. Pop., in 1801, 1,289; in 1831, 1,623.

HANTHORPE, or HARNTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Morton, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Bourn, on the river Glen. Houses 29. Pop., in 1821, 254; in 1831, 166. Other returns with the parish.

HANTS. See SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE.

HANWELL, a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Brentford, Middlesex; bounded on the west by the Grand Junction canal, and intersected by the Great Western railway, which is here carried over the Brent by a viaduct of 8 arches of 70 feet span each, and 70 feet high from the river to the top of the parapet—see DRAYTON (WEST). The Hanwell railway station is distant 7 miles from Paddington, and 11 miles from Bristol. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £20; gross income £530. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are a place of worship for Independents; and 7 daily schools, one of which, a National school, is endowed. Acres 1,160. Houses 214. A. P. £5,350. Pop., in 1801, 817; in 1831, 1,213. Poor rates, in 1838, £206 2s.

HANWELL LUNATIC ASYLUM, or the Middlesex County Asylum for insane paupers within the limits of the county, stands upon an eminence at the extremity of the village of Hanwell, in the above parish, commanding a very extensive and beautiful view of the surrounding country. It is much larger in dimensions than any other similar institution in Europe—perhaps in the world. The number of inmates during 1838 and 1839, varied from 650 to 800. Ever since its establishment in 1831, it has been distinguished above all other similar institutions for the enlightened and successful treatment practised in the cases of the insane inmates. The building is a handsome edifice, having a stone arched entrance and lodge, immediately within which are extensive garden-grounds, tastefully laid out in gravel walks and shrubs. The exterior presents an air of comfort, cleanliness, and elegance, which well accords with the arrangements within. There is none of that dark, dreary, and prison-like aspect which characterizes asylums in general. The interior is fitted up with galleries, shops, and work-rooms. The shops contain all the implements and machinery belonging to the different trades, in which the members of the poor classes of society are usually engaged, so that within are supplied the means for habitual and agreeable occupation, to as many of the patients as choose, and where disease admits of employment: those who are not disposed, or whose state unfits them for work, range about the galleries and passages, which are roomy, exceedingly clean, and very comfortable. The windows are covered with a strong iron network, which provides for safety, without impressing a consciousness of confinement, and a sense of horror, which thick-barred windows are calculated to excite. Along these passages are placed, at considerable distances from each other, frame-works of wood, like chairs, having a strap and strait-waistcoat attached to them, and in which patients under strong excitement, and when very refractory, are confined. This is the utmost degree of restraint employed.

The arrangements without furnish occupation in gardening and agriculture. There are 53 acres of ground; a large portion of which is used for growing vegetables and fruit for home-consumption. The soil is prepared and sown, and the products are gathered, by the patients; so that a considerable number are constantly engaged in this species of healthful labour. The females, also, are fully supplied with suitable employment; and a large bake-house, kitchen, and wash-house, with steam-engine machinery to supply every want and convenience, form the theatre of action for this part of the establishment. All are busily and happily engaged; and such is the propriety and steadiness of conduct observed, that it would require some time to discover that the ladies of the laundry and bake-house are not in the perfect enjoyment of their mental faculties. Thus occupied by day, the mind receives that due proportion of fatigue which prepares it to seek and find enjoyment in repose. Disturbed rest and excitement are thus, in numerous instances, exchanged for healthful slumber, and a general calm, which greatly accelerates the progress of cure.

The bedrooms in this establishment are of moderate size, and contain from one to four beds in each. During the periods of excitement, and in the worst cases, the patient is placed on a bedstead, constructed like a wooden box, and containing straw, which receives the bedding. A strap is attached to the bedstead, and fastened to one of the patient's wrists, so as to prevent him turning upon his face, thereby endangering life by suffocation; a circumstance which formerly often happened, when the patient was seized with a fit during the night; but with this plan such an accident never occurs.

One of the greatest improvements in the system regards the superintendence of the insane. Hitherto the treatment adopted has been utterly barbarous and cruel. Consigned to the care of men whose coarse and illiterate minds could comprehend nothing but the infliction of stripes, chains, and imprisonment, the wretched maniac was doomed to drag on his existence in a state of torture, until the powers of nature sank under the influence of aggravated disease and ill-treatment. But reason and humanity have at last interposed to ameliorate this horrible condition; and their efforts not only promise, but are even now crowned with the most gratifying success. The medical superintendent conducts, with the greatest ability, zeal, and kindness, his arduous, but humane and successful duties. The advantages of the mild and merciful mode of discipline which is obtained at the Hanwell Institution, are exemplified every day.

A recent remarkable instance occurred in the case of a man, who, previously to admission into this asylum, had exhibited the most furious madness, and for which chains and solitary confinement were unsuccessfully prescribed. Such was the effect of the Hanwell Lunatic Asylum, that, in a very short time, he was occupied in the garden, and enjoying, quietly and inoffensively, the most perfect liberty. There is a resident surgeon, who is always on the spot. He conducts visitors over the Asylum, so that, besides special visits to the students, two or three times a-day, he may be said to be constantly moving among them. There is, moreover, a keeper in each ward, and a rule exists, that no keeper shall strike a patient, under any circumstances. Whoever departs from this rule is fined five shillings for the first blow; and if it be repeated, he is discharged. When a patient is admitted, he is placed in a room by himself, until the peculiar character of the disease is ascertained. It may be necessary to draw blood and use other means before he is allowed to range about and mix in the society of others. When the excitement has been thus partially subdued, liberty is given to him, and the two great remedies, kindness and occupation, are brought into full activity. Thus, the irritated feelings of the patient are soothed, and his mind is occupied on other and more agreeable objects than himself and his own misfortunes.

By this method of treatment, ninety out of every hundred cases, where disease has not existed longer than three months, are perfectly cured. Out of every hundred persons who have been affected not more than twelve months, fifty-eight are cured. And even in those cases where the disease has been established some years, so large a proportion as twenty per cent. are discharged cured. It should be remembered that, up to the time of introducing this system, insanity, whether of short or long duration, was viewed as an incurable disease—an opinion which the wretched system universally adopted with lunatics, only tended to confirm. The economy of labour enables the Institution to supply the patients with every requisite of food and clothing, at the rate of five shillings and threepence per week. In ordinary asylums the weekly payment is ten shillings, and clothes are supplied by the friends of the patients. The records of the establishment prove that the principal cause of insanity among this class of patients is the habit of "dram-drinking." A book is kept in the Institution for the insertion of testimonials by those who have visited the establishment, and choose to give their opinion on its general management. Among those who have expressed, in high terms, their approbation of the system, are many physicians of note in this country; but attention has been particularly attracted by the name of the eminent French naturalist, M. Geoffrey St. Hilaire, who has added the following to his high encomium on the merits of the establishment—"Would that the same admirable arrangements existed in La Salpetriere"—a benevolent aspiration well worthy of remark, as Salpetriere is the hospital in which the experiment was first tried, of treating insanity upon the principle now described. The principle is still continued, but we apprehend the arrangements are not brought to that degree of perfection attained at the Hanwell Asylum.

In October, 1839, the number of patients in this Asylum was 791. The inmates necessarily embrace both a town and a country population, the far greater part of the metropolis being in the county of Middlesex. The statistics, therefore, of the causes and developments of insanity, as exhibited in this most important institution, may be regarded as fair specimens of the causes and developments of insanity in general, and as such, the following, from a recent report of its visiting justices, are not only curious in themselves as statistical facts, but full of deep and universal interest as conducive to the extirpation of this dreadful malady.

Dr. Conolly, who, in the month of June, 1839, succeeded Sir William Ellis, as resident physician of the asylum, made it one of his first duties, on commencing his arduous and responsible labours, to ascertain the nature of the numerous cases confided to his care. He found the task to be one of great difficulty, even though personally examining and questioning every patient in the house; and therefore he wishes the result to be regarded only as the nearest approximation to the truth, which, under the circumstances, could be made. Between the number of patients in the Asylum when he commenced the examination, and those which were received into it during the three months throughout which that examination lasted, the total number of cases brought before Dr. Conolly, was 805. Of this number 148 were found to be labouring under mania; 50, melancholia; 4, monomania; 4, hypochondriasis; 237, incoherence; 171, imbecility; 147, dementia; and 14, idiocy. These are the several forms which insanity assumes. Perhaps the only terms made use of here which may require explanation for the sake of the general reader, are "imbecility," and "dementia." The first of these terms is intended to characterize all the degrees of impairment of mental power which do not belong to any of the other kinds of insanity, and have not existed from the birth. "Dementia" is meant to denote that state of the mental faculties in which, though they were more or less exercised for several years, they have become obscured by disease or accident.

It is worthy of observation that out of the 148 cases in which the disease developed itself in the form of mania, there was not, in the case of a single patient, a disposition to commit suicide; while among the fifty inmates whose disease manifested itself in the form of melancholia, the number suicidally disposed was 8. Among the four who were monomaniac, and the 4 who laboured under hypochondriasis, none exhibited a desire to commit self-destruction. Out of the 277 whose disease showed itself in the condition of incoherence, there were only 2 who manifested a tendency to suicide: while among the 171 whose insanity exhibited itself in the form of imbecility, only 1 was ascertained to be disposed to commit self-destruction. The same remark also applies to the patients classed under the head "dementia." Among the 14 absolutely idiotic, there were none suicidally inclined; so that out of the entire 805 patients, there were only 12 whose conduct afforded any ground for the apprehension that they would, provided they had an opportunity, commit self-destruction.

Another important point to which Dr. Conolly directed his inquiries, was the duration of the disorder. In 780 cases, he found that no fewer than 105 patients had been insane for a period of seven years. In the cases of 59 persons, the disease had lasted from fifteen to twenty years. There were 35 patients who had laboured under a deprivation of reason from twenty to twenty-five years. In the cases of 6 persons, the disorder had an existence of from thirty-five to forty years; and one inmate had been insane for half a century.

It is a singular fact in connexion with lunacy, that the patients, almost without exception, profess themselves religious persons. Thus, out of 445 cases of insanity in the Hanwell Asylum, there were only two persons who avowed themselves infidels. One of these professed infidelity, according to the general acceptance of the term; the other avowed his predilections for it, as embodied in the system of Socialism. It is also remarkable, that the vast majority of lunatics professing religion, represent themselves as belonging to the Church of England. Thus, out of the above 445 cases, no fewer than 327 persons represented themselves as attached to the Church of England; many of them, especially females, did so with great vehemence of manner. Of the remainder, 42 were Roman Catholics; 24 Wesleyan Methodists; 12 Independents; 10 Presbyterians; 9 Baptists; 5 Jews; 4 admitted no more distinctive appellation than that of Calvinists; 3 professed Unitarianism; 2 the system of Lutheranism; 2 confessed themselves the followers of the late Mr. Edward Irving; and 2 belonged to a class of Dissenters, whose doctrinal peculiarities could not be ascertained. There was 1 Ranter, and the remaining 2 were, as before stated, Infidels.

The relative proportion of the married to the single, and of widows to widowers, was found by Dr. Conolly, in 696 cases, to be as follows:—Married women, 122; single women, 263; widows, 30; married men, 99; single, 157; widowers, 25. It will thus be seen, that a life of celibacy very considerably increases the risk of disorders of the mind. In the case of the single females, especially those of them who had received a fair education, disappointed affections had, in almost every instance, more or less to do in producing insanity. Out of eight governesses, Dr. Conolly thinks there was not one whose mental aberration was not, in some degree, to be ascribed to this cause. The proportion of the well-educated to those who had only received the plainest rudiments of education was found to be very small. In 494 cases which were examined, only 18 persons were found to be well-educated, 263 could simply read and write; 178 could read; but not write; and 35 could neither read nor write.

In 281 cases which were examined, with a view to ascertain the causes of the disorder, it was found that, in the instance of the female inmates, 112 became insane from the operation of moral causes. Of this number, the insanity of 34 was to be traced principally, if not exclusively, to disappointed affections. The next most powerful cause of the disease was found to be domestic unhappiness, there being 20 instances of its having been produced by that agency. Physical causes of insanity among the females were found prevalent only in 45 cases; and in 13 cases the disorder was hereditary. Among the men, on the other hand, the physical causes of lunacy were found to preponderate over the moral causes; 75 of the patients having suffered a deprivation of their reason from physical causes, while the disease could only be traced in 61 cases to moral causes. Reverses were assigned as the moral cause in 13 of these cases, poverty in 12, and grief in 10. Among the physical causes of the disease with the men, intemperance is the most prominent; not fewer than 26 patients having owed their insanity to excessive indulgence in inebriating liquors. Hereditary disposition to the disease was ascertained to be its cause in the same number of instances in the case of the men, as in that of the women, namely, 13. In 24 cases among the men, the disorder was to be ascribed to the conjoint operation of both moral and physical causes; in the case of the women, there were only 13 instances of this description.

Since Dr. Conolly's appointment to the situation of resident physician, the principle of systematical employment amongst the patients has been carried out to a much greater extent than formerly. The nature of the occupation assigned to the various patients is regulated by their previous pursuits, and other circumstances. The occupation most general among the males is that of gardening and agriculture—59 persons being so employed. Carpentering, shoemaking, bricklaying, painting, &c., &c., are among the trades regularly practised in the asylum. Among the female inmates, needle-work is the most common occupation—no fewer than 119 being so engaged. Out of 791 patients, 453 are employed in various ways, during a longer or shorter period, every day. The remainder are incapacitated, either by the degree of their lunacy, or by sickness, or some other accidental cause, from occupying themselves with any sort of employment. Their labour, as may easily be believed, is not very productive in a pecuniary point of view; but it is of incalculable advantage in facilitating the recovery of their rational powers. Even where the patient is incurable, the wretchedness of his situation is often greatly diminished by employment, inasmuch as it tends to divert his thoughts from the unhappy channel in which they are accustomed to run.

One of the most prominent features which have always characterized the regulation of the affairs of Hanwell Asylum, namely, that of a classification of the patients, has not only been improved, but the principle is now applied to a much greater extent than before. For example, the noisy and refractory inmates have wards allotted to themselves; so have the epileptic and imbecile; the moderately tranquil; the quiet and the orderly; the feeble and infirm. For the sick, one ward is assigned: another is allotted to persons of superior education. But, perhaps, the most important regulation which has been introduced into this institution by the resident physician, is that already alluded to of entirely doing away with physical coercion or restraint. Dr. Conolly does not deny that cases may occur in which restraint may be necessary; but he holds that such cases are exceedingly rare; and he has furnished a practical proof of this in the fact of his having dispensed with all restraint in the case of the females, since the middle of August, 1839, and in the case of the males, since the 21st of September; and this, too, be it remembered, in an institution, in which the number of inmates is close on 800. There can be no question that many insane persons, who, with a mild course of treatment, would have recovered in the space of a few months, have been confirmed or rendered incurable in their lunacy, by being put in chains, or otherwise subjected to severe personal restraint; to say nothing of the disposition which physical coercion creates to commit self-destruction.

In the dietary of the institution some alterations have been introduced, the results of which have proved to be highly advantageous. These alterations consist in the more frequent allowance of animal food than formerly; an increase in the proportion of solid food as compared with fluid food; and in the substitution, in the case of the female patients, of tea for gruel to breakfast. How far alterations in diet may have immediately affected the mental maladies of the patients, it would, perhaps, be difficult to say; but there can be no question that the article of diet must have a very powerful, though perhaps indirect effect in those cases—and they are numerous—in which the disease is closely connected with the physical organization. Dr. Conolly has observed a marked improvement in the physical health of the patients since he introduced the new dietary regimen.

Most of the patients regularly attend divine service in the Asylum. Dr. Conolly's remarks on this point are so interesting, that we give them in his own words. He says, "Since the commencement of August, the morning service has been read at 11 o'clock every Sunday, and the evening service read, and a sermon preached, at half-past three. Each service occupies about one hour. Some of the officers of the establishment invariably attend, and generally about 200 of the patients. A psalm and hymn are usually sung by the congregation, accompanied by the organ; and the responses to the commandments are chaunted, by which means the service is so varied as to obviate fatigue or restlessness. The demeanour of the patients on these occasions is, for the most part, admirable. Few spectacles can be more interesting, or more affecting, than that of so many lunatic persons, many of whom are at other times violent, noisy, agitated, and talkative, exercising so remarkable a degree of control over their behaviour for such a length of time. The practice of this control is, unquestionably, the principal advantage which many of the patients are capable of deriving from attendance on these services. Care is taken that they appear decently dressed; several of those who can read are supplied with prayer-books; and they evidently look forward to Sunday with pleasure, and are mortified when any accident interferes with their attendance in chapel."

HANWELL, a parish in the hund. of Bloxham, union of Banbury, county of Oxford; 3 miles north-west by north of Banbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £17 16s.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, Earl Delawarr. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,240. Houses 64. A. P. £2,813. Pop., in 1801, 264; in 1831, 288. Poor rates, in 1838, £137 3s.

HANWOOD (GREAT), a parish in the liberty of the town of Shrewsbury, union of Atcham, county of Salop; 4 miles south-west of Shrewsbury, on a branch of the Severn. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £3; gross income £237. Patron, in 1835, H. D. Warter, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 130. Houses 32. A. P. £801. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 14s HANWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Spelthorne, union of Staines, county of Middlesex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Kingston-upon-Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £11 13s. 4d.; gross income £471. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. P. P. Bastard. There is a daily school here, supported by endowment. Charities, in 1822, £32 7s. Poor rates, in 1838, £300 19s. The manor-house of Hanworth was occasionally occupied by Henry VIII., and by Elizabeth, prior to her accession. Acres 1,390. Houses 80. A. P. £3,963. Pop., in 1801, 334; in 1831, 671.

HANWORTH, a parish in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Aylsham. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Gunton. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £91 17s. 5d. vicarial, £2 due the rector of Alby, and £197 13s. impropriate. There is a daily school here. Hanworth hall, a handsome modern mansion of brick, stands pleasantly in a verdant and finely wooded park, broken into bold undulations, and laid out with much taste. Acres 1,480. Houses 54. A. P. £1,293. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 12s.

HANWORTH-COLD, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 10s., and in the parliamentary returns at £99 8s. 5d.; gross income £141. Patron, in 1835, R. Cracroft, Esq. The church is a small ruinous building. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,090. Houses 9. A. P. £966. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 63. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 16s.

HAPPING HUNDRED, on the east coast of the county of Norfolk; bounded on the east by the German ocean; on the south by West Flegg and Walsingham hundreds; and on the west and north by Tunstead hundred. Area 30,240 acres. Houses 1,198. Pop., in 1831, 6,446.

HAPPISBURGH, or HAISBOROUGH, a parish in the above hund., union of Tunstead and Happing, county of Norfolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of North Walsham, on the coast. Acres 1,760. Houses 133. A. P. £2,234. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 582. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £177. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. The church is a lofty pile with a fine embattled tower, 150 feet high, standing on an elevated point of land within a short distance of the sea-cliff which, rising perpendicularly, and having an under stratum of sand and gravel, is so continually washed by the agitation of the tides and storms, that it is calculated the church will be engulfed in the ocean before the middle of the ensuing century; the sea having encroached upwards of 170 yards during the last sixty years. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which, the National school, chiefly supported by subscription, is endowed with £10 per annum, for teaching 7 children of the parishes of Happisburgh and Lessingham. Other charities, in 1834, £19 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £342 1s. In 1821, prolific oyster beds were discovered in the offing here. Within a mile south-east of the village, and in $52^{\circ} 49'$ N. lat., $1^{\circ} 31'$ E. long., are two lighthouses erected in 1791. Both are lit with patent lamps and reflectors. The lights are fixed and of a red colour. The height of the lantern in one is 137 feet above high water; the height of the building being 77 feet: the light is seen to a distance of 17 miles in clear weather. In the other the lantern is 100 feet above high water; the height of the building is 63 feet, and the light is seen to a distance of 15 miles in clear weather. They are leading lights through Happisburgh or Haisborough Gat. The Newarp floating light vessel, at the north end of the Newarp sand, is in $52^{\circ} 44'$ N. lat., $1^{\circ} 52'$ E. long. It carries 3 lights and a flag. The main-mast is 37 feet, the others 22 feet high. It is moored in 21 fathoms. A gong is sounded during fogs every ten minutes. "Newarp" is painted on its sides. The lights are seen to a distance of 9 miles in clear weather. The gross amount of light duties received in 1838, for the Haisbro' lighthouses and the Newarp floating light, was £4,277 12s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.: charges of maintenance £5,393 9s. 10d. At the north end of Haisborough sand, off the coast here, in $52^{\circ} 57'$ N. lat., $1^{\circ} 38'$ E. long., is a floating light vessel with two fixed lights, and carrying a flag. It is moored in 13 fathoms. During fogs a gong is sounded every ten minutes. "Haisbro' light" is painted on the vessel's sides. The height of the lantern above high water is 37 feet: the light is seen to a distance of 9 miles in clear weather. It was erected in 1831. The gross amount of light duties received in 1838, for this light, was £4,281 8s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.: charges of maintenance £1,198 16s. 8d.

HAPSFORD, a township in the parish of Thornton, co-palatine of Chester; about 2 miles north-east of Great-Neston. Acres 700. Houses 13. A. P. £759. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 7s.

HAPTON, a township in the parish of Whalley, county of Lancaster; 5 miles north of Blackburn. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,570. Houses 106. A. P. £3,057. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 583. Poor rates, in 1838, £187 17s.

HAPTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 8 miles east of Attleborough. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; gross income £40; in the patronage of Christ college, Cambridge. Here is a Presbyterian church, formed in 1741. Acres 670. Houses 30. A. P. £1,012. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 200. Poor rates, in 1838, £99 13s.

HARAM, a township in the parish of Helmsley, north riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Helmsley. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Helmsley. There are a daily and an infant school here. Acres 1,920. Houses 89. A. P. £3,666. Pop., in 1801, 373; in 1831, 445. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 7s.

HARBERTON, a parish in the hund. of Cole-ridge, union of Totness, county of Devon; 2 miles south-west of Totness, and west of the river Dart. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Halwell, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £49 2s. 1d.; gross income £752. Patron, the dean and chapter of Exeter. Here are a place of worship for Baptists, and 8 daily schools, one of which is a National school. Charities, in 1821, £64 9s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £720 4s. In 1838 a woollen-mill here employing 91 hands. Acres 5,800. Houses 304. A. P. £10,720. Pop., in 1801, 1,138; in 1831, 1,584.

HARBLEDOWN-ST.-MICHAEL, a parish in the hund. of Westgate, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 1 mile west of Canterbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 2s. 6d; gross income £400. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The church is situated on the north side of the high-road to London. It consists of one aisle and a chancel. Harbledown is celebrated for containing one of the oldest hospitals now existing in England: though locally situated within this parish, however, it has no other connection with it, but belongs to Canterbury. "About a mile from the west gate of Canterbury," says Tanner, "in the wood of Blean, for the relief of poor infected leprous persons, Archbishop Lanfranc erected an endowed hospital to the honour of St. Nicholas, the possessions of which were valued, 26^o Hen. VIII., at £109 7s. 2d. It was not suppressed temp. Edward VI. A. D. 1574 it consisted of fifteen in-brothers, and as many in-sisters, who had £4 a-piece yearly, besides two loads of wood; out-brothers and out-sisters in like number, who had £1 14s. a-piece: the whole revenue £160. The governor was sometimes called the dean, sometimes prior, and now the master.—It is now used as an almshouse. The church of St. Nicholas, attached to this hospital, is an ancient structure, and consists of a nave, two aisles, and a chancel with a square tower. The windows are ornamented with painted glass. The church contains a very curious and antique font. "In the orchard of it, on the west side, is a well of excellent water," says Halstead, "called the Prince's well, but how it gained that name is not known, though the inhabitants of the hospital have nevertheless certain traditional tales relating to it. Before the Reformation there was the upper part of the leather of a shoe set in copper and crystal, formerly belonging to Archbishop Becket, which was usually brought out by one of the members of this hospital, and with much reverence offered to the better sort of passengers passing along the road for them to kiss devoutly as a sacred relic." Erasmus has given a ludicrous account of it in his 'Peregrinatio Religionis Ergo.' Harbledown—formerly Herballdown—derived its name from the fertility of its soil. The situation is exceedingly picturesque and delightful: situated on the brow of a hill, it commands a beautiful view of the city of Canterbury, and is remarkable for the salubrity of its air. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 102½ acres of this parish were cultivated as hop-grounds. Hops charged 73,752 lbs. per annum; amount of duty £614 12s. Acres 1,470. Houses 172. A. P. £3,904. Pop., in 1801, 473; in 1831, 819. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 9s.

HARBORNE, or HARBURN, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, union of King's Norton, co. of Stafford; 3¾ miles south-west of Birmingham, in the line of the Birmingham canal. Living, a vicarage and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lichfield; rated at £4; gross income £624. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £461 14s. vicarial, and £266 2s. 6d. due the dean and chapter of Lichfield. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lichfield. Here are 4 daily and 5 infant schools, besides a day and Sunday National school. Charities, in 1822, £188 5s. 9d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £453 12s. There are several celebrated strawberry gardens in the delightful village of Harborne, much frequented in the summer by visitors from Birmingham. The cottagers are principally employed in making nails. Acres 4,000. Houses 735. A. P. £4,316. Pop., in 1801, including the chapelry of Smethwick, 2,275; in 1831, 4,227.

HARBOROUGH-MAGNA, a parish in the Kirkby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, co. of Warwick; 3¼ miles north-north-west of Rugby, near the Oxford canal, and the Midland Counties railway to Leicester. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £14 13s. 4d.; gross income £298. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Boughton. There are 2 day and Sunday schools here. Charities, in 1835, £47 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 6s. Acres 1,580. Houses 72. A. P. £2,202. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 365.

HARBOROUGH-MARKET. See MARKET-HARBOROUGH.

HARBOTTLE, a small market-town and township in the chapelry of Hallystone, co. of Northumberland; 20 miles west-south-west of Alnwick, on the river Coquet. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £9 2s. 9d. Harbottle castle stands at the east end of the village, close upon the margin of the river Coquet. It is a handsome modern built mansion, surrounded by tastefully ornamented pleasure-grounds, and thriving plantations. The extensive ruins of the old castle stand near the north side of the village, on a bold commanding eminence above the Coquet. The walls of the great tower have a most singular appearance; part of them being rent asunder from their foundations, and overhanging their base; whilst other parts have slid in large masses half-way down the hill, and fixed themselves deeply in the earth. A great portion of this ancient structure was removed by the Widdringtons, and used in the erection of the present mansion-house. In the reign of Edward I. this castle was a formidable fortress; for, in 1296, it sustained the desperate, reiterated, but unavailing attacks of a numerous army of Scots for two days. In 1515 Margaret, Queen Dowager of Scotland, retired hither after her marriage with the Earl of Angus, pursuant to the appointment of her brother Henry VIII.; and in this recess was born, in 1518, her daughter, Lady Mary Douglas, who was espoused by Earl Lennox, in 1544. The market is on Tuesday. A fair for cattle, and great quantities of linen, woollen, and Scotch cloth, is held on September 19th. Acreage with the parish. Houses 32. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 165. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 4s.

HARBURIDGE, a parish in the hund. and union of Ringwood, co. of Southampton; 3½ miles north by west of Ringwood, on the western bank of the river Avon, which is here navigable. It includes the tything of Efford. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Ringwood. There are three daily schools in this parish. Acres 2,910. Houses 66. A. P. £1,930. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 322. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 11s.

HARBURY, or HERBERBERY, a parish in the hund. of Knightlow, union of Southam, co. of Warwick; 3 miles west-south-west of Southam. The river Ichen flows through the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £5; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Newsham. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum, payable out of the great tithes. Other charities, in 1826, £65 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £337 5s. This place is named after a female possessor who held it at the time of the Saxons. Acres 2,060. Houses 222. A. P. £5,049. Pop., in 1801, 857; in 1831, 997.

HARBY, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, co. of Leicester; 8 miles north of Melton-Mowbray, and intersected by the Nottingham and Grantham canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £20; gross income £497. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Rutland. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1836, £13 16s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £196 10s. Acres 2,800. Houses 96. A. P. £2,566. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 488.

HARBY, a hamlet in the parish of North Clifton, co. of Nottingham; 4 miles south-south-west of Nottingham, and east of the Trent. There are 2 daily schools ere. Acreage with the parish. Houses

46. A. P. £863. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 17s.

HARCOURT, a township in the parish of Stanton-upon-Hine-Heath, co. of Salop; 4 miles south-east of Wem. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £4 10s. vicarial, and £51 8s. 1d. impropriate. Houses 5. Pop., in 1821, 34; in 1831, 35. Other returns with the parish.

HARDEN-HUISH, a parish in the hund. and union of Chippenham, co. of Wilts; 1½ mile north-west of Chippenham, west of the river Avon, and near the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge; returned at £90; gross income £85. Patron, in 1838, F. Clatterbuck. This parish unites with that of Chippenham in the election of two members of Parliament. Acres 540. Houses 20. A. P. £1,097. Pop., in 1801, 55; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £49.

HARDHAM, a parish in the hund. of Bury, rape of Arundel, union of Thakeham, co. of Sussex; 5 miles south-east by east of Petworth, bounded on the east by the river Arun. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £5 5s. 10d., and in the parliamentary returns at £32 14s. 4d.; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. F. Goring, Bart. "Here," according to Tanner, "was an ancient priory of Black canons. Who the original founder was, has not yet occurred. But Sir William Dautree, knt., was accounted founder by some, as one of the family of Gorings was by others. It was dedicated to the Holy Cross, or as some, to St. George." Acres 680. Houses 14. A. P. £1,173. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 134. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 6s.

HARDHORN with NEWTON, a township in the parish of Poulton, co. of Lancaster; 5½ miles north west of Kirkham, intersected by the Wyre and Preston railway. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed, and free to all the children of the township. Acres 2,220. Houses 65. A. P. £5,970. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 409. Poor rates, in 1838, £245.

HARDINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, co. of Norfolk; 5½ miles north-west by west of Wymondham, and south of the Blackwater river. It comprises the hamlets of Flockthorpe and Low-street. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 3s. 4d.; gross income £577. Patrons, the master and fellows of Clare-hall, Cambridge. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1834, £12 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 16s. Acres 2,500. Houses 110. A. P. £3,319. Pop., in 1801, 444; in 1831, 560.

HARDINGSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Wymersley, union of Hardingstone, co. of Northampton; 2 miles south-south-east of Northampton. It contains the hamlets of Cotton-End, Farcotton with Paper-Mills, and Delapree-Abbey. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 5s.; gross income £255. Patron, the lord-chancellor. In the church are monuments of the family of Hervey, one of whom is celebrated as the author of 'Meditations,' &c. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Charities, in 1830, £101 0s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £385 3s.—The Hardingstone poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, embracing an area of 51 square miles, with a population returned, in 1831, at 8,019. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,616. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,536; in 1839, £3,602 1s. Acres of the parish 3,060. Houses 208. A. P. £6,190. Pop., in 1801, 712; in 1831, 1,036.

HARDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Kilmersdon, union of Frome, co. of Somerset; 3½ miles north-west by north of Frome. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Hemington. Acres 1,180. Houses 4. A. P. £769. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 28. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 11s.

HARDINGTON-MANDEVILLE, a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Berwick, and Coker, union of Yeovil, co. of Somerset; 4 miles south-west of Yeovil. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 15s. 7½d.; gross income £517. Patron, in 1835, W. Helyar, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,010. Houses 122. A. P. £2,033. Pop., in 1801, 489; in 1831, 603. Poor rates, in 1838, £238 13s.

HARDLEY, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, co. of Norfolk; 12 miles east-south-east of Norwich, in the vale of the river Yare. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £40; no return. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £327 14s. 3d. Patrons, the corporation of Norwich. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1830, £11 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £177 11s. Acres 1,400. Houses 37. A. P. £1,789. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 211.

HARDMEAD, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 4½ miles north-east of Newport Pagnell. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 6s. 10½d.; gross income £200. Patrons, in 1835, the executors of Robert Shedden, Esq. Acres 1,290. Houses 15. A. P. £1,222. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 2s.

HARDRES (LOWER), a parish in the hund. of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 3 miles south of Canterbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £7 19s. 9½d.; gross income £379. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £416 9s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 1,050. Houses 37. A. P. £1,271. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 259. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 14s.

HARDRES (UPPER), CUM-STELLING, a parish in the hund. of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 4½ miles south of Canterbury. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Stelling, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £19 13s. 1½d.; gross income £797; in the patronage of the incumbent and Lady Hardres' heirs. Tithes commuted in 1839. Here are 2 endowed day and Sunday National schools for the united parishes of Upper Hardres and Stelling. Denward school is endowed with £36 9s. 4d. per annum, for the education of 20 boys and 12 girls, and £89 9s. 6d. for repairing the school-room and for the general purpose of education at this school. Other charities, in 1836, £18 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £180 4s. On an average of 7 years to 1835, 169½ acres of land in Upper and Lower Hardres, were cultivated as hop-ground: annual average of hops charged, 94,421 lbs.: amount of duty, £786 16s. 10d. Acres 1,670. Houses 58. A. P. £2,096. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 311.

HARDROW, a chapelry in the parish of Aysgarth, north riding of Yorkshire; 18½ miles west by north of Middleham. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £65; gross income £109. Patron, in 1835, Lord Wharncliffe. Here is a waterfall called Hardrow force, of a very striking character;—the water falling in one vast sheet from a ledge of rocks, 99 feet in perpendicular height. The ravine or chasm, which extends below the fall, is bounded on each side by huge masses of rock, and is about 300 yards in length. Behind the fall is a deep recess or cavern, whence a good view of it may be safely obtained. During the hard frost in 1741, a prodigious icicle is recorded to have been found here, of the whole height of the fall, and nearly equal in circumference. Pop. with the parish.

HARDWICK, a parish in the hund. of Long-Stowe, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 4 miles east of Caxton. Living, a rectory, exempt from visitation, and in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 14s. 2d.; gross income £224. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Hardwick gives the title of Earl to the family of Yorke. Acres 1,010. Houses 10. A. P. £681. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 90. Poor rates, in 1833, £155 1s.

HARDWICK, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatenhurst, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Gloucester; intersected by the Gloucester and Berkeley Ship canal. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Standish. The chapel is a neat building with an embattled tower. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,030. Houses 87. A. P. £4,866. Pop., in 1801, 341; in 1831, 459. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 2s.

HARDWICK, a hamlet in the parish of Abergavenny, county of Monmouth; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Abergavenny, on the eastern bank of the river Usk. Acres 530. Houses 19. Pop., in 1811, 121; in 1831, 127. Other returns with the parish.

HARDWICK, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Bungay; in the line of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Shelton. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, and a daily school. Acres 740. Houses 36. A. P. £1,453. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 224. Poor rates, in 1838, £160 7s.

HARDWICK, a hamlet in the parish of Runc-ton, county of Norfolk; 4 miles north of Downham Market. "At the Dam or Bank here was an hospital for leprous persons, dedicated to St. Lawrence, the advowson whereof was in Matthias Herlewin, 12^o Edward III." Tanner. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

HARDWICK, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 5 miles north of Bicester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £5; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, — Ramsay, Esq. Area, including the parish of Tusmore, 990 acres. Houses 14. A. P. £391. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 80. Poor rates, in 1838, £20 16s.

HARDWICK, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 2 miles south of Bury-St.-Edmunds. Here is an almshouse for six poor single women, who are each allowed £5 per annum. Pop. returned with the parish of Hawstead, in which this liberty is locally situated.

HARDWICK, a hamlet in the parish of Bredon, county of Worcester. Pop. included with that of the parish.

HARDWICK (EAST), a township in the parish of Pontefract, west riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Pontefract. Acres 500. Houses 27. A. P. £810. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 18s.

HARDWICKE, a hamlet in the parish of Ault-Hucknall, county of Derby; 5 miles west-north-west of Mansfield. Here is Hardwicke-hall, a noble mansion belonging to the duke of Devonshire, which has long been celebrated for its antique furniture and other internal decoration. Its external features are remarkably plain, the grand aim of the designer having been general loftiness, with windows as large as possible. The exterior ornaments are confined to an open parapet pierced with scroll-work, and the frequently repeated initials of E. S. beneath a countess's coronet, to commemorate Elizabeth, countess of Shrewsbury, the founder of the edifice, and one of the most remarkable characters in the whole female peerage. Besides the actual curiosity of the apartments of this hall, as undisturbed specimens of antique splendour which afford the liveliest visions of the past, a factitious interest has been imparted to them as having been deemed the dwelling-place and prison of Mary, queen of Scotland. Traditional history, though almost always, perhaps, founded on some portion of truth, is seldom accurate, and of this Hardwicke is a memorable instance. It is first stated to have been visited by Wolsey, but that visit is found to have been to another Hardwicke; and as to the tradition regarding Mary, the fact is, that the present mansion was not commenced until 1590, that is, 3 years after Mary's execution; and the apartment which now goes by the name of her room was fitted up in 1599. It is true, however, that the furniture was brought from Chatsworth, where Mary did sojourn during several summers under the custody of the earl and countess of Shrewsbury, and a carving of the arms of Scotland sanctions the idea that the furniture of that room is actually the same which was employed in her service. Pop. with the parish; which see.

HARDWICK-PRIORS, a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Southam, county of Warwick; 5 miles south-east by south of Southam, and near the Oxford canal. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Marston-Priors, and Shuckburgh Superior, in the archd. of Coventry, formerly in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £23 16s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. Acres 1,600. Houses 52. A. P. £2,348. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 296. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 5s.

HARDWICK (WEST), a township in the parish of Wragby, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-west of Pontefract. Acreage with the parish. Houses 17. A. P. £728. Pop., in 1811, 99; in 1831, 85. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 15s.

HARDWICKE, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Aylesbury. It includes the hamlet of Weedon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £39 9s. 7d.; gross income £735. Patrons, the wardens and fellows of New college, Oxford. Here are three daily schools, two of which were founded and endowed in 1781, by the Rev. Dr. Bridle. Other charities, in 1833, £14 14s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £690 3s. Acres 3,200. Houses 141. A. P. £5,287. Pop., in 1801, 563; in 1831, 640.

HARDWICKE, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; 3 miles west-north-west of Wellingborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £6 17s. 6d.; gross income £280. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £230 2s. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of E. Hughes. Acres 1,780. Houses 14. A. P. £1,263. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 3s.

HARDY. See CHORLTON, Lancaster.

HAREBY, a parish in the west division of the soke of Bolingbroke, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 4 miles west of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Bolingbroke. Acres 750. Houses 14. A. P. £879. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 81. Poor rates, in 1838, £82.

HAREFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Uxbridge, county of Middlesex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Uxbridge, bounded on the west by the river Colne, and intersected by the Grand Junction canal. Living, a donative in the archd. and dio. of London; returned at £25; gross income £64. Patron, in 1835, C. N. Newdigate, Esq. The church contains an elegant monument to the countess of Derby, who, in 1637, founded and endowed an almshouse here for 6 widows. Other charities, in 1824, £72 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £665 5s. There are 3 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday school. Acres 4,510. Houses 263. A. P. £8,358. Pop., in 1801, 951; in 1831, 1,285.

HARESCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Dudstone and King's-Barton, union of Wheatonhurst, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Painswick. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Pitchcombe, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £5 8s., and returned at £140; gross income £170. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £22 7s. 3d. inappropriate, and £86 9s. 3d. rectorial. Patron, in 1835, R. Parnell, Esq. Acres 700. Houses 26. A. P. £843. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 121. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 6s.

HARESFIELD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Whitstone, union of Wheatonhurst, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Stroud. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £17, and returned at £13 13s. 9d.; gross income £221. Patron, in 1835, D. J. Niblett, Esq. The church is supposed to have been built by the prior of Llanthony abbey. There is a daily school here, containing 20 children, 5 of whom are instructed from the interest of £100 bequeathed by Mr. D. Niblett. Other charities, in 1826, £15 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £259 17s. Acres 1,980. Houses 122. A. P. £4,698. Pop., in 1801, 553; in 1831, 611.

HARESTON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Grantham, county of Leicester; 11 miles north-east by north of Melton-Mowbray, and intersected by the river Deven. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 1s. 8d.; gross income £290. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is an evening school here. Acres 630. Houses 31. A. P. £1,323. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 182. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 13s.

HAREUP, or HAREHOPE, a township in the parish of Eglingham, county of Northumberland; 6 miles north-west of Alnwick. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £32 17s. 7d. inappropriate, and £24 3s. vicarial. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 50. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 1s.

HAREWOOD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Ross, county of Hereford; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Ross, and west of the river Wye. This parish formerly belonged to the forest of Harewood, in which Earl Ethelwold is supposed to have been assassinated by King Edgar for his misconduct towards the fair Elfrida. Acres 860. Houses 17. A. P. £1,414. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 85. Poor rates, in 1838, £52.

HAREWOOD, a parish in the wapentake of Claro and Skyrack, west riding of Yorkshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Wetherby, south of the river Wharfe. The parish comprises the townships of Alwoodley, Dunkswith, Harewood, Keswick (East), Weardley, Weeton, Wigton, and Wike. Acres 12,180. Houses 457. A. P. £12,850. Pop., in 1801, 2,172; in 1831, 2,463. Acres of the township, 3,850. Houses 157. A. P. £3,837. Pop., in 1801, 707; in 1831, 894. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £14 1s. 10d.; gross income £448. Patrons, in 1835, the parishioners, and the heirs of Lady B. Hastings, alternately. The church is of great antiquity; it is surrounded by a thick grove of trees which, by their embowering shade, give to it a peculiar air of solemnity: the west end is beautifully mantled with ivy. It contains several splendid monuments of former lords of the manor, also one of Lord-chief-justice Gascoigne, who had the firmness on one occasion to commit the prince of Wales—afterwards Henry V.—to prison for contempt of court; and on another, the integrity as well as resolution to refuse to try Archbishop Scrope for high treason, an office which another judge, who was not so scrupulous, assumed and pursued to a termination fatal for that prelate. There are 9 daily schools here. Charities, in 1825, £47 0s. 3d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £748 1s.; of the township £213 16s. Formerly there was a market here. Statute fairs are held on the last Monday in April, and the second Monday in October. The village of Harewood is one of the neatest in the county: the houses are uniformly and handsomely built of stone. There are two streets, one running north and south, the other east and west: the latter forms a regular approach to the gateway leading to Harewood-house, a splendid mansion belonging to the earl of Harewood's family, which is said to be the principal ornament in this part of Yorkshire. It is situated on an eminence rising from the river Wharfe, fronting the south, and commanding a rich home-view over fields and woods, nearly all the property of the Harewood family. "This," says Whitaker, "is a fortunate place, blessed with much natural beauty and fertility." On the declivity of the hill rising from the vale of the Wharfe stands the dilapidated castle of Harewood, a singular edifice, which may be considered more properly a very strong tower-built house than a castle strictly so termed. It has never had a keep, a bailey, or outer gate, but has been left to the single defence of its own walls. It was originally built about the time of the Conquest. Sir William de Aldborough appears to have been the rebuilder in the time of Edward Balliol, and it remained entire till the civil wars in 1645.

HARFORD, a parish in the hund. of Ermington, union of Plympton St. Mary, county of Devon; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Modbury, on the river Erne, which has its source in this parish. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11 14s. 4½d.; gross income £170. Patrons, in 1835, Sir J. L. Rogers, Bart., and the heirs of the Rev. H. Julian, alternately. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,680. Houses 27. A. P. £1,498. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 12s.

HARGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Shropham, union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Kinninghall. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Wilby. Acres 1,010. Houses 15. A. P. £1,283. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 1s.

HARGRAVE, a chapelry in the parish of Tarvin, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles east-south-east of Chester, in the line of the Chester railway and the Chester and Nantwich canal. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £40 5s.; gross income £100. Patrons, trustees nominated by the parishioners. Pop. returned with the parish.

HARGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Higham-Ferrers, union of Thrapston, county of Northampton; 5 miles east by north of Higham-Ferrers. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £220. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. L. Baker. Acres 2,400. Houses 43. A. P. £1,402. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 7s.

HARGRAVE, a parish in the hund. and union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles south-west of Bury St. Edmund's. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £4 11s. 8d.; gross income £198. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. White. There are 2 daily schools in the parish. Acres 1870. Houses 69. A. P. £2,159. Pop., in 1801, including Southwell-Park, 324; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £259 14s.

HARKSTEAD, a parish in the hund. and union of Sampford, county of Suffolk; 6½ miles south-east by south of Ipswich, and north of the river Stour, near its mouth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11 3s. 9d.; gross income £520. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £473 11s. 10½d. Patron, in 1835, R. Berners, Esq. There are a day and boarding and a daily school here. Acres 1,250. Houses 38. A. P. £1,909. Pop., in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 9s.

HARLSTON, a chapelry in the parish of Clifton-Campville, county of Stafford; 4 miles north of Tamworth, south of the river Muse, and in the line of the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Clifton-Campville. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,120. Houses 42. A. P. £2,186. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 218. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 14s.

HARLAXTON, a parish in the soke and union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 3½ miles south-west of Grantham, in the line of the Nottingham and Grantham canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £25 6s. 10½d.; gross income £760. Patron, the prebend of South Grantham in Salisbury cathedral. The church has an elegant spire. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,530. Houses 84. A. P. £3,772. Pop., in 1801, 297; in 1831, 390. Poor rates, in 1838, £99 3s.

HARLE-KIRK, a parish in the north-east division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, county of Northumberland; 12½ miles north-north-east of Hexham, and near the source of the river Wansbeck. It comprises the townships of Hawick and Harle-Kirk, with the chapelry of Kirkheaton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £3 8s. 4d.; gross income £197. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. Loraine, Bart. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 5,010. Houses 63. A. P. £2,449. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 367. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 16s. Acres of the township 2,140. Houses 25. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £81 9s.

HARLE (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Kirkwhelpington, county of Northumberland; 3 miles west of Kirk-Harle. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £12 16s. 8d. vicarial, and £1 8s. impropriate. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 14s.

HARLE (WEST), a township in the above parish and county. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £16 7s. 5d. impropriate, and £8 11s. 8d. vicarial. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 55. Poor rates, in 1838, £12 13s.

HARLECH, an ancient free burgh in the parish of Llandanwg, county of Merioneth, North Wales; 6½ miles south-south-east of Tremadoc, on the coast of the Irish sea. This town was originally one of the principal places in the county, but has long since been reduced to a small village; but tourists, and visitors of its antiquities, are accommodated at an excellent inn, with post-horses and every other requisite. Pop. with the parish. The town has a corporation governed by a mayor. It is one of the polling-places for the county members. There is a market on Saturday; and fairs for cattle are held on March 4th, April 19th, Thursday after Trinity, June 30th, August 21st, and December 11th. The view from the hill above Harlech is stupendous. On the right, are wild mountains, heaped one upon another; on the left, far below, the sea: in front the yet loftier mountains of Caernarvonshire, with Snowdon at their head, enclosing a vast bay, and the estuaries of two rivers, Traeth-mawr and Traeth-bychan, and under one's feet, as it were, the town of Harlech, and its noble castle founded by Maelgwyn Gwynedd, prince of Wales, and rebuilt by Edward I. In 1404, this fortress was seized by Owen Glendwr. During the civil wars it was the last fortress which held out for the king. This castle is a strong square building, with a round tower at each angle, and one on each side the entrance. Besides these are four turrets, smaller and higher, which rise above the towers at the angles, and are in a more ruinous state. The entrance is a pointed arch, which formerly contained six gates, one behind the other. Though the castle is everywhere unroofed, undoored, and unwindowed, it has not a dilapidated appearance. There are broken stone staircases in every tower, which led to the top of each; and there is one still entire, in the area, which now leads only to the top of the walls. Pointed arched fire-places are visible in all the rooms, though the rooms are no longer divided from each other. Window-places also remain; those in the state apartment three in a row, and spacious; the others a tolerable size within, but narrowing to a chink without. Harlech castle stands on a rock, which rises abruptly, not from the sea, but from a marsh, called the Gamlas, nearly a mile in breadth, which lies between it and the sea, and is so level that it probably was once covered with the water. On this side, the rock is almost perpendicular; at either end, it is extremely steep; in front, it is on an equal height with the town, from which it is separated by a deep ditch, and the mountains within land soar high above it. The castle occupies the whole platform of the rock, except a space of about four or five feet in breadth, which forms a beautiful verdant path round it, on the brink of an abyss.

HARLESTON, a small market-town in the parish of Redenhall, county of Norfolk; 7 miles south-west of Bungay, on the river Waveney, over which it has a bridge on the road from Bungay to Dis. Living, a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Redenhall. Here are several chapels for dissenters, and a National school. A horticultural society has been recently established here. Harleston is one of those places to which work is sent by the manufacturers of Norwich. The principal fabric manufactured is bombazeens. The number of weavers in 1838 was about 60, of whom 57 were women, nearly all unmarried. They worked in a factory, or large shop with looms; but, as observed by the hand-loom weavers' commissioner, J. Mitchell, Esq., they were not prohibited from talking, nor from going and coming as they pleased. Work is also distributed to be done in the cottages in the neighbouring villages. The market is on Wednesday. Fairs are held on July 5th and September 9th, for horses, cattle, sheep, and pedlery; and on November 28th, and during the ensuing month, for Scotch cattle, &c. The pop. is included with Redenhall.

HARLESTON, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 4 miles north-west of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £20 9s. 7d.; gross income £600. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. There is a daily school here, endowed with £30 per annum. Other charities, in 1832, £37 per annum, besides the poor's heath land. Poor rates, in 1838, £282 8s. Acres 2,530. Houses 122. A. P. £3,543. Pop., in 1801, 437; in 1831, 645.

HARLESTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles north-west of Market-Stow. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £2; nett income £175. Patron, in 1835, R. Pettward, Esq. Acres 730. Houses 17. A. P. £763. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 89. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 3s.

HARLTHORPE, a township in the parish of Bubwith, east riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north by west of Howden, and east of the Derwent. Acres 520. Houses 21. A. P. £438. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 105. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 2s.

HARLTON, or HARLESTON, a parish in the hund. of Wetherley, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 6½ miles south-west of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £14 9s. 7d.; gross income £313. Patron, Jesus college, Cambridge. There is a Sunday school here, endowed with £17 10s. Other charities, in 1836, £17 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 15s. Acres 1,100. Houses 32. A. P. £1,244. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 223.

HARLEY, a parish in the hund. of Condovery, union of Aitcham, county of Salop; 2 miles north-west of Much-Wenlock, and south of the river Severn. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop, and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5 12s. 1d.; gross income £290. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Cleveland. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 560. Houses 46. A. P. £2,471. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 257. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 6s.

HARLING (EAST), or MARKET HARLING, a small market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Giltcross, county of Norfolk; 89½ miles north-north-east of London, and 22 south-west of Norwich, on the banks of a stream between Thetford and Kinninghall. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £525. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Wilkinson. The Friends, Baptists, and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, have each a chapel here. There are 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £90 per annum, besides fuel to the poor. Poor rates, in 1838, £566 13s. Petty-sessions for the hund. of Giltcross and Shropham are held here on the first Tuesday of every month. The manufacture of linen-yarn and cloth was formerly the chief business carried on here. The market-day is Tuesday: it is well-supplied with corn. There are fairs on May 4th, for cattle and toys; on Tuesday after September 13th, and on October 24th, for sheep and toys. Acres 2,990. Houses 133. A. P. £3,748. Pop., in 1801, 674; in 1831, 1,031.

HARLING (WEST), a parish in the above hund., union, and county; 2 miles south-west of East Harling. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9 18s. 4d.; gross income £185. Patron, in 1835, N. W. Colborne, Esq. Charities, in 1835, £19 2s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 10s. Acres 2,980. Houses 15. A. P. £1,177. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 107.

HARLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Woburn, county of Bedford; 5½ miles south of Ampthill. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11, returned at £130; gross income £171. Patron, in 1835, W. D. C. Cooper, Esq. Charities, in 1823, £8 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £358 15s. Acres 1,815. Houses 89. A. P. £2,676. Pop., in 1801, 344; in 1831, 481.

HARLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Staines, county of Middlesex; 4 miles west by north of Hounslow, near the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £24; gross income £500. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £740. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Davison. The entrance to the church is through a very beautiful Saxon archway. In the churchyard there is a fine old yew-tree, measuring 20 feet in circumference. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Charities, in 1830, £70 11s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £379 16s. Harlington gives the title of baron and earl to the family of Bennet. Acres 1,340. Houses 134. A. P. £3,427. Pop., in 1801, 363; in 1831, 648.

HARLINGTON, a township in the parish of Burnsall, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north by east of Skipton, on the banks of the river Warfe. Acres 1,320. Houses 22. A. P. £917. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 115. Poor rates, in 1838, £99 18s.

HARLOW, a parish in the hund. of Harlow, union of Epping, county of Essex; 17 miles west by north of Chelmsford, east of the river Stort, and intersected by the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £15 7s. 11d.; gross income £393. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Bute. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1668; 2 daily schools, and a day and Sunday school, besides well-endowed alms-houses for 6 widows. Fairs are held on May 13th, for wool; and on September 9th, and November 28th, for horses and cattle; that in September is called Harlow Bush fair, and is held on a common about 2 miles from the village. Petty sessions for the division are held here every Monday. Acres 4,490. Houses 372. A. P. £8,157. Pop., in 1801, 1,514; in 1831, 2,101. Poor rates, in 1838, £739 6s.

HARLOWE-HILL, a township in the parish of Ovingham, county of Northumberland; 10 miles east-north-east of Hexham. There is a daily school here. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 28. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 149. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 7s.

HARLOW HUNDRED, in the county of Essex; bounded on the north by Uttlesford hundred; on the east by Dunmow and Ongar hundreds; on the south by Waltham hundred; and on the west by part of the county of Hertford, from which it is divided by the river Lea. Area 28,660 acres. Houses 1,365. Pop., in 1831, 7,796.

HARMBY, a township in the parish of Spennithorne, north riding of Yorkshire; 1 mile north of Middleham. Acres 860. Houses 47. A. P. £2,141.

Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 233. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 11s.

HARMON (ST.), a parish in the hund. and union of Rhayadar, county of Radnor, South Wales; 3 miles north by east of Rhayadargwy. It comprises the townships of Glaiscannon with Rhurworried, and Kennarth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £97 10s. 2d.; gross income £179. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £305. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Here are a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1817; and 2 daily schools. Houses 150. A. P. £1,931. Pop., in 1801, 661; in 1831, 828. Poor rates, in 1838, £202 10s.

HARMONDSWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Elthorpe, union of Staines, county of Middlesex; 2 miles east by north of Colnbrook, and east of the river Colne. Living, a vicarage with that of West Drayton, in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £12; gross income £530. Patron, in 1835, H. de Burgh, Esq. The church has a fine Norman door-way. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Charities, in 1822, £138 18s. 8d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £665 1s. Tanner says there was "an ancient priory of Benedictine monks to the abbey of the Holy Trinity, on the hill of St. Catherine, near Roan. The king—A. D. 1391—gave the abbot there leave to alienate and sell this manor to William Wickham, bishop of Winchester, who made it part of the endowment of his college near Winchester, from which, by way of exchange, it came to the crown, 35th Hen. VIII., and was granted, 1st Edw. VI., to Sir W. Paget." Acres 3,480. Houses 232. A. P. £6,076. Pop., in 1801, 879; in 1831, 1,276.

HARMSTON, a parish in the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, union and county of Lincoln; 6 miles south of Lincoln, and east of the river Brant. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 6s. 8d.; gross income £108. Patrons, in 1835, B. Thorold, and Mrs. A. Thorold. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 2,690. Houses 75. A. P. £3,896. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 405. Poor rates, in 1838, £170 9s.

HARNHAM, a township in the parish of Bolam, county of Northumberland; 8 miles south-west of Morpeth. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £18 11s. 2d. impropriate, and £10 3s. 5d. vicarial. There is a daily school here. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £11 11s.

HARNHAM (EAST). See BRITFORD.

HARNHAM (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Cawden and Cadworth, union of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 1½ mile south-west by west of Salisbury, and west of the river Avon. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Combe-Bisset. Charities, in 1832, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £137 15s. In 1838, a woollen mill here employed 15 hands. Acres 1,200. Houses 50. A. P. £2,189. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 256.

HARNHILL, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 4 miles east-south-east of Cirencester. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £5 16s. 5½d., returned at £140; gross income £155. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Ashe. There is no school here; but the children have the liberty of attending the endowed school at Driffield. Acres 830. Houses 14. A. P. £1,127. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 12s.

HAROM. See HARAM, north riding of Yorkshire.

HARPENDEN, a parish in the hund. of Dacorum, union of St. Alban's, county of Hertford; 2¼ miles north-east of Redburn, and west of the river Lea. Living, a curacy united to the rectory of Wheathampstead. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £439 6s. 6d. Here are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a daily school. Charities, in 1832, £8 15s. 4d. per annum, besides £92 7s. 6d. included in Wheathampstead charities, and £230 9s. 10d., accumulations on personal security to be placed in savings bank. Poor rates, in 1838, £892 17s. Acres 4,920. Houses 357. A. P. £6,211. Pop., in 1801, 1,112; in 1831, 1,972.

HARPFORD, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Budleigh, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 3½ miles north-west by west of Sidmouth, on the river Otter. Living, a vicarage with that of Ven-Otting, in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £18 11s. 3d., returned at £139 10s. 6d.; gross income £239. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rolle. Acres 1,240. Houses 54. A. P. £2,472. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 307. Poor rates, in 1838, £119 13s.

HARPHAM, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-east of Great-Driffield. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Burton-Agnes. There is a daily school in this parish. Here are the ruins of a mansion belonging to the ancient family of St. Quinton, whose pedigree from 1080 to 1777 is represented in the stained-glass windows of the church. Acres 1,970. Houses 42. A. P. £2,728. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 240. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 17s.

HARPLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Freebridge-Lynn, county of Norfolk; 8½ miles east by north of Castle-Rising. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £22; gross income £511. Patron, in 1835, A. Hamond, Esq. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1833, £7 6s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £124 19s. The pleasant village of Harpley stands on the crown and declivities of a lofty eminence. A fair for horses, &c., is held on July 24th. Acres 2,180. Houses 70. A. P. £2,032. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 370.

HARPOLE, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union and county of Northampton; 5 miles west of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £18 13s. 4d.; gross income £554. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. Here are a place of worship for Baptists, and an endowed daily school. Charities, in 1825, £112 1s., per annum, of which £50 then constituted the endowment of the school. Poor rates, in 1838, £405 7s. Acres 1,560. Houses 148. A. P. £5,345. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 711.

HARPSDEN WITH BOLNEY, a parish in the hund. of Binfield, union of Henley, county of Oxford; 1¼ mile south of Henley-upon-Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 10s. 5d.; gross income £637. Patron, All-Souls' college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,460. Houses 42. A. P. £4,100. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 238. Poor rates, in 1838, £149 2s.

HARPSWELL, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 7¾ miles east of Gainsborough. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 9s.; gross income £41. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. Acres 2,180. Houses 15. A. P. £2,238. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1838, £77 8s.

HARPTON (LOWER), a township in the parish of Old Radnor, county of Radnor; 1½ mile south-south-east of New Radnor. Acres 900. Houses 14. A. P. £857. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 68. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 16s.

HARPTREE (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Wells, at the source of the river Yeo. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar in the dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 15s., and returned at £145; gross income £113. Patron, the prebendary of Wells cathedral. There are 2 daily, and 2 day and Sunday National, schools here. Charities, in 1824, £58 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £268 9s. On a hill at a short distance from the village there is a remarkable cavern, with a descent of 70 fathoms to the bottom, which extends 30 fathoms in length, and leads to other vaults of less magnitude. In this vicinity are vestiges of an ancient fortress, formerly the seat of the Harptree and Courney families. Acres 2,770. Houses 128. A. P. £3,589. Pop., in 1801, 467; in 1831, 695.

HARPTREE (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by east of Wells. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 14s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £150. Patron, the Crown. In 1673, Mr. J. Buckland left a fund for apprenticing poor children: income, in 1824, £14. Other charities, £62 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £230 4s. Acres 2,850. Houses 102. Pop., in 1801, 379; in 1831, 536.

HARPUR-HEY, a large village and township in the parish, and now comprised within the boundaries, of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles south of Middleton. Here is a Methodist chapel. Acres 270. Houses 75. A. P. £640. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 463.

HARRABY, a township in the parish of St. Cuthbert, county of Cumberland; 2 miles south-east of Carlisle, south of the river Eden, and intersected by the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. Houses 10. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 66. Other returns with the parish.

HARRATON, a township in the parish of Chester-le-street, co.-palatine of Durham; 7 miles north of Durham, west of the river Wear, and intersected by the Great North of England railway. Here are 2 daily schools, and in the vicinity are some valuable coal-mines. Acres 2,090. Houses 404. A. P. £8,961. Pop., in 1801, 1,607; in 1831, 2,171. Poor rates, in 1838, £730 17s.

HARRIETSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Eyborne, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingborne, county of Kent; 8 miles east by south of Maidstone. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £11 10s.; gross income £659. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £580 0s. 9d. rectorial. Patrons, the warden and fellows of All-Souls' college, Cambridge. There are 5 daily schools here, 2 of which are endowed with funds in the 3 per cent. consols, bequeathed by the late Sir Charles Booth, producing upwards of £67 per annum. Here are Quesed's almshouses, founded, in 1642, for 6 poor people of this parish, and 6 decayed members of the Fishmongers' company. Other charities, in 1836, about £37 1s. 6d., besides an interest in Sir William Stede's charity for apprenticing poor children of the parishes of Tonge, Harrietsham, and Milton-next-Sittingbourne. Poor rates, in 1838, £384 14s. A fair for horses, &c. is held on June 24th. On an average of 7 years to 1835, hops have been cultivated to the extent of 28 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres in this parish. Acres 2,520. Houses 123. A. P. £2,864. Pop., in 1801, 484; in 1831, 704.

HARRINGTON, a parish in Allerdale ward above Derwent, union of Whitehaven, county of Cumberland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Workington, on the coast of St. George's channel. It has been proposed to carry the projected West Cumberland railway across the upper end of Harrington by a bridge or viaduct. The committee appointed by the lords of the treasury to examine and report on the projected lines of railway communication with Scotland, remark, that as "the whole extent of this harbour is only 762 feet in length and 220 in breadth; and as it is used as well for a port of refuge as of lading, and there is an insufficiency of space for vessels to anchor and swing in, an artificial beach has been formed at the eastern or upper end, on which they are enabled to bring up. The proposed viaduct would cut off about a third of the harbour. This would not only be objectionable on account of its diminishing the capacity of the port, but also by its depriving the shipping of the artificial beach to which we have just alluded. The objection to curtailing the size of the harbour will be apparent, when we state, that the harbour-master supplied us with a return (verified by the customhouse officer), by which we find, that in the course of the last year [1839] no fewer than 510 vessels used this port, and that during gales of wind it was frequently so full, that they were in actual contact from side to side. After well considering this part of the subject, we are of opinion, that whatever expense or other inconvenience it might cause, it would be necessary to adopt some other mode of carrying the railway past Harrington than that proposed." Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 7s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, H. C. Curwen, Esq. There are 13 daily schools in this parish. The town of Harrington, though small, is a flourishing sea-port subordinate to Whitehaven. There are chemical works in the vicinity of the town. While there is 8 feet water in the harbour a light is exhibited at the pier-head, in 54° 38' N. lat., and 3° 36' W. long. The light is fixed: it is hoisted on a mast 44 feet in height above high water, and is seen to a distance of 10 miles in clear weather. This light was first exhibited in 1797. Iron-stone of a superior quality, and fire-clay, abound in this parish. Acres 2,380. Houses 431. A. P. £4,577. Pop., in 1801, 1,357; in 1831, 1,758. Poor rates, in 1838, £285 9s.

HARRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 16s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, R. Cracroft, Esq. Acres 1,070. Houses 15. A. P. £1,612. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 70.

HARRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 6 miles west by north of Kettering. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £15 9s. 7d.; gross income £441. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £453 9s. 8d. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Dysart. Charities, in 1832, £100, constituting the Countess of Dysart's charity, besides £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £89 14s. Harrington gives the titles of baron and earl to the family of Stanhope. Acres 2,000. Houses 37. A. P. £4,617. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 191.

HARRINGWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Uppingham, county of Northampton; 6 miles north-east by north of Rockingham, on the river Welland. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £11 15s., and returned at £133 8s.; gross income £174. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. There is a daily school here, endowed in 1832 with £35 per annum. Other charities, £29 5s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £357 3s. Acres 3,060. Houses 74. A. P. £6,340. Pop., in 1801, 404; in 1831, 358.

HARROGATE, a township in the parish of Knaresborough, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-west by west of Knaresborough, and west of the river Nidd. Returns with BILTON-AND-HARROGATE. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £49 18s. 8d.; nett income £96. Patron, the vicar of Knaresborough. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1818, a Wesleyan chapel, and an endowed school. A Bath hospital to enable the poor to benefit by the use of the Harrogate waters was established here in 1826. There are branches of the Knaresborough and Claro, and of the Leeds and West Riding, banking companies here.

Harrogate, though generally spoken of as a single place, consists in reality of two villages—High and Low Harrogate; but from the approximation of the two places by the yearly erection of new buildings, the popular has in some measure become the appropriate appellation. To this place, during the summer months, the nobility and gentry have long resorted from all parts of Great Britain and Ireland, to receive the benefit of the waters, for which it is so deservedly celebrated. High Harrogate commands a most extensive prospect of the surrounding country, finely varied by towns, villages, fields, and plantations. York cathedral is distinctly seen from it in a clear day, though at 20 miles distance. Harrogate is considered one of the principal watering-places in the North of England. There are numerous boarding and lodging houses, and an alphabetical list is kept at the promenade distinguishing those occupied and those unlet. This list is regulated daily, and is of great convenience to the visiting strangers. The recreations of Harrogate are those afforded by the promenade-rooms, news and billiard rooms, libraries, theatre, and races. The spas are highly celebrated. They are of two kinds, the chalybeate and the sulphur. Of the former, there are two springs at High Harrogate on the common near the race-ground. The most ancient of these is situate opposite the Granby inn, and is called the Old Spä. It was discovered, in the year 1571, by Captain William Slingsby, who made several trials of it, and, preferring it to the Saviniere, in Germany, ordered it to be enclosed and taken care of: after which it was much resorted to. Dr. Monro, speaking of this spring, says, “The water of the old spa strikes a light red purple, when six drops of tincture of galls are mixed with a glassful of it. As it sprung from the earth it was twelve grains in a pint lighter than common water. Evaporated, a gallon yielded at one time a scruple, and at another only eight grains, of which above one-half was earth.” The dome that now encloses the old spa spring was built at the expense of Alexander Lord Loughborough, in the year 1786, about which time his lordship ordered the plantation to be laid out on his estate here, consisting of oak, ash, sycamore, fir, beech, &c. This plantation now affords a very agreeable shade to a walk two miles long and eight feet wide. At the south end of the common is the Tewit Well. This also contains a chalybeate vitriolic spring, which differs very little from the former. It has a kind of milky taste, and is strengthening to the constitution, and particularly useful in cases of the gravel. Of the water of this well, when evaporated, a gallon yielded at one time thirteen grains, at another nineteen grains of sediment, of which three-fifths was a calcareous earth; the other two-fifths, set to crystallize, projected crystals of a calcareous glauber salt. Both these waters mix smooth with milk, but curdle soap. The sulphur wells are situate at Low Harrogate, each enclosed in a building of stone. This water was not known till many years after the discovery of the steel waters at High Harrogate, and, when known, was for a long time supposed either too offensive or too dangerous to be taken internally; and therefore, at first, only used as a wash in diseases of the skin: but time and experience have proved its virtues, and, before the year 1700, it was used with amazing success, both externally and internally, by all ranks of people, in scorbutic and other diseases. Dr. Monro, in treating of these sulphur waters, observes, that, in small quantities, they are good alteratives, and, when drunk in large quantities, are strongly purgative; they have been much used, and found extremely serviceable in cutaneous disorders and scrofulous cases, and amongst the best remedies for destroying and evacuating worms and their nidus: they are extremely useful where the digestion has been bad, and the bowels and intestines full of viscid slimy matter; they also assist in removing various chronic obstructions. Low Harrowgate, which is the principal, if not the exclusive seat of the sulphur wells, possesses also another valuable spring, discovered in 1783, called the Crescent water, which contains the principal ingredients of the sulphur water, in a weaker degree, with the addition of chalybeate. It is raised by a pump, over which stands a handsome cupola, in the garden of the Crescent. The spring next in reputation, though of recent discovery, is the Cheltenham water, which is exhilarating and restorative, and as it contains salt, generally acts as a gentle purgative. The Cheltenham spa and the Tewit well each contain a portion of the sulphate of lime, the former 9 and the latter 4 grains. Of the Cheltenham water it is usual to drink pretty copiously, before breakfast, and also in the middle of the day. Very near this, and in the same garden, is a spring of stronger chalybeate, but nearly destitute of salt. The following table shows the contents of a wine gallon of each of the Harrogate waters:—

Names of the waters.	Specific gravity.	Cubic Inches.			Grains.
		Carbonic acid gas.	Azotic gas.	Hepatic gas.	Muriate of soda.	Muriate of lime.	Muriate of magnesia.	Carbonate of lime.	Carbonate of magnesia.	Carbonate of iron.	Sulphate of magnesia.	Sulphate of soda.
Sulphur well . . .	1,0064	8	7	19	615,5	13	91	18,5	5,5		10,5
Crescent well . . .	1,002	20,8		13,6	137		45	3,1
Tewit well	1,00017	16	5
Old spa	1,00014	15,75	4,25 3,97
Cheltenham spa .	1,0075	6,32	Oxygen gas. 0,87		434	30	13	3
New chalybeate .	1,0012	16,5	4,2		2,5					10,5		8

HARROLD, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union and county of Bedford; 8 miles north-west of Bedford, on the river Ouse, over which there is here a bridge with a long causeway. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8, and returned at £144 8s.; gross income £208. Patron, in 1835, Earl de Grey. "Here was a small priory, built, temp. Steph., to the honour of St. Peter, first for canons and nuns, according to the institution of St. Nicholas of Arrouasia, but afterwards it consisted only of a prioress and three or four nuns of the order of St. Austin. Sampson le Forte is said to have been the founder of this religious house, whose lands were rated, 26^o Hen. VIII., at £47 3s. 2d. per ann. Speed. The site was granted, 35^o Hen. VIII., to William Lord Parr; and, 2^o Mary, to John Cheney and Rich. Duncombe."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1812; and 2 daily, and 3 infant schools. Charities, in 1834, £35 3s. per annum, of which £34 8s. constituted the endowment of Jolliffe's and Mead's almshouses in this parish. Poor rates, in 1838, £384 14s. The town of Harrold has a market on Thursday; and cattle fairs are held on the Tuesdays before May 13th, July 6th, and Oct. 11th. The petty-sessions for the hundreds of Barford, Stodden, and Willey, are principally held here. Acres 3,240. Houses 210. A. P. £2,757. Pop., in 1801, 763; in 1831, 995.

HARROLDSTON (ST. ISSELL'S), a parish in the hund. of Roose, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 1 mile south-east of Haverfordwest. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's, returned at £33 2s. 6d.; gross income £56. Patron, in 1835, James Higgon, Esq. Here are the ruins of a venerable mansion belonging to the Perrot family. Houses 66. A. P. £1,034. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 17s.

HARROLDSTON (WEST), a parish in the above hund., union, and county; 5½ miles west of Haverfordwest, at St. Bride's Bay. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's, returned at £100 17s. per annum; gross income £135. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £121 1s. 2d. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. Houses 26. A. P. £701. Pop., in 1801, 701; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1838, £87 2s.

HARROW-ON-THE-HILL

A parish and village in the hund. of Gore, union of Hendon, county of Middlesex. The London and Birmingham railway, and the Paddington canal, intersect the parish. Living, a vicarage and peculiar of the see of Canterbury; rated at £33 4s. 2d.; gross income £676. Patron, in 1835, Lord Northwick. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1812; and a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. There are 3 infant and 4 daily schools here. Charities, in 1822, £108 9s. 7d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,401. Acres 9,870. Houses 609. A. P., in 1815, £23,978; in 1828, £31,106. Pop., including that of the hamlet of Weald and Greenhill, in 1801, 2,485; in 1831, 3,861.

The chief interest of Harrow-on-the-Hill is derived from its celebrated school, in which many persons distinguished for genius and great attainments have received their education: but, even before the existence of this establishment, Harrow was a place of some consideration, having been formerly the occasional residence of the archbishop of Canterbury. In the year 1170, Thomas à Becket, being about to visit Woodstock, to pay his respects to the young Henry Plantagenet, then lately crowned, and associated with his father in the government of the kingdom, received a command, whilst on his journey thither, to give up his visit; upon which the prelate repaired to his manor of Harrow. It is not certain where the site of the archbishop's mansion was: but Archbishop Winchelsey dates from Harrow in 1300. During the occasional sojourn of the archbishops, this place received certain benefits and privileges.

The hill upon which the village is built, rises out of a wide-spread and fertile vale, and is in some degree of a remarkable form, as its brow is considerably depressed in the centre, and rises into two very conspicuous heights at the extremes. The approach from London, from which Harrow is ten miles distant, ascends the more southerly of these eminences: that towards the north is crowned by the church, at the west end of which, on a tower of great elevation, is erected a lofty spire, a prominent feature throughout the whole of Middlesex, and many of the adjoining counties, and a land-mark for the surrounding districts to a great extent. The prospects obtained at several points of this hill are various in their character; and, on a bright clear day, extremely beautiful. Towards the north the view is comparatively limited, as the high ground in the neighbourhood of Stanmore presents a kind of screen. Here, however, rich masses of wood, and frequent inequalities of surface, give a pleasing variety to the landscape. On the west and south-west, the prospect is very extensive, but the neighbouring country is flat. In the distance are Windsor castle, and parts of Berkshire and Buckinghamshire. The view towards the east is terminated by London. The London and Birmingham railway passes the town on the east, and the Paddington canal on the south. Harrow is 11½ miles distant by railway from London.

The free school of Harrow was established in 1571. The person to whose benevolence and care England is indebted for one of her best public schools, was John Lyon, a wealthy yeoman, who had previously spent a considerable sum in teaching poor children. In the year 1590, two years before his death, he drew up a set of statutes for the school, with full instructions for the disposal of the estates which he intended to appropriate to various charitable uses, at the same time appointing six trustees of his property; the election of successors to be made by themselves as a body. The revenues of Mr. Lyon's estates—to which it is remarkable that not the smallest additional endowment has ever been made—are now considerable. But it has happened, unfortunately for the interests of the foundation, that those portions of his property which have, from their situation, acquired the greatest increase of value, such as certain lands near London, at Kilburn, and in the parish of St. Mary-le-bone, were appropriated by him to other charitable purposes, especially the repairing of roads in the neighbourhood of his own house.—The rules to be observed in the management of the school were drawn up by Mr. Lyon. These are precise, and, in some particulars, extremely curious. The system of education is marked out as a classical one. The modes of correction are specified. The amusements of the scholars are limited to "driving a top, tossing a hand-ball, running, shooting, and no other." The twenty-second rule contains the provision "that no girls shall be received to be taught in the same school."—The practice of archery was common in the school from the period of its foundation. Every boy was entitled by the statutes to possess "bows, shafts, bow-strings, and a bracer, to exercise shooting." Archery was a sport formerly used at many schools. The name which a part of the play-grounds at Eton college retains—that of the shooting-fields—may be attributed to a similar custom; and the term, the Butts, will be found in the immediate neighbourhood of other schools besides Harrow. There is an instance of this in the college-school at Warwick, and at other places. The public exhibitions of archery at Harrow were annual, and can be traced back for more than a century. The last silver arrow was contended for in July 1771, when it was won by the late Earl Spencer, then Lord Althorpe. There were good and sufficient reasons for the abolition of this practice; and the more scholar-like and intellectual one of public speeches has taken its place. These are held every year in May, June, and July. In 1838 this school contained 247 boys, chiefly the sons of gentlemen, whose education was paid for by their parents. The house of the headmaster of this school was destroyed by fire on 22d October, 1838, when the governors adopted a plan for rebuilding it in the same style as the school building and the new chapel erected for the use of the school.

HARROWBY, a township in the parish of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 2 miles west of Grantham, and near the Grantham and Nottingham canal. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £187 7s. 5d. vicarial. Harrowby gives the titles of baron and earl to the family of Ryder. Acreage with the parish. Houses 8. A. P. £2,477. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 54. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 14s.

HARROWDEN, a township in the parish of Cardington, county of Bedford. Pop. included with the chapelry of East Cotts.

HARROWDEN (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; 2 miles north-north-west of Wellingborough. Living, a discharged vicarage united to that of Little Harrowden, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 3s. 8d.; gross income £322. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. The male children of this parish have the privilege of attending the endowed school at Little Harrowden. Charities, in 1832, £16 13s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 3s. Acres 1,160. Houses 25. A. P. £1,785. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 148.

HARROWDEN (LITTLE), a parish in the above hund., union, and county; 2½ miles north-north-west of Wellingborough. The living is subordinate to that of Great Harrowden. There are 2 infant schools here, and a daily school for the parishes of Great and Little Harrowden and Orlingbury. Charities, in 1832, £88 per annum, £55 of which were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £149 16s. Acres 1,450. Houses 114. A. P. £2,019. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 465.

HARSTON, a parish in the hund. of Thriplow, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 5½ miles south-south-west of Cambridge, on the river Cam. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £5 10s. 2½d.; gross income £244. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here are a place of worship for Baptists, and 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1806, £7 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 8s. Acres 1,480. Houses 90. A. P. £2,113. Pop., in 1801, 412; in 1831, 562.

HARSWELL, a parish in Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Hartbill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles west-south-west of Market-Weighton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £4, and returned at £103; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Slingsby, Bart. Acres 720. Houses 12. A. P.

£846. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 70. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 7s.

HART, a parish in the north-east division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, co.-palatine of Durham; 11 miles north by east of Stockton-upon-Tees, and intersected by the Hartlepool railway. The parish comprises the townships of Dalton-Piercy, Elwick, Hart, and Throston. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £11 17s. 1d.; gross income £247. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £33 2s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Charities, in 1830, £151 10s. per annum, of which £119 10s. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish £248 3s.; of the township £124 3s. Acres 7,250. Houses 124. A. P. £6,852. Pop., in 1801, 517; in 1831, 624. Acres of the township 3,300. Houses 46. A. P. £3,985. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 243.

HARTBURN, a township in the parish of Stockton-upon-Tees, co.-palatine of Durham; 1½ mile south-west of Stockton. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £58 3s. 2d. impropriate, and £4 12s. 9d. vicarial. Acres 940. Houses 35. A. P. £1,582. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 7s.

HARTBURN, a parish partly in the west division of Morpeth ward, and partly in the east division of Tindale ward, union of Morpeth, county of Northumberland; 8 miles west of Morpeth, on Hartburn. It comprises the townships of High and Low Angerton, Cambo, Corridge, Deanham, Farnlaws, Greenleighton, Hartburn, Hartburn-Grange, Hartington, Hartington-Hall, Harwood, Highlaws, Longwiton, North and South Middleton, Rothley, East and West Shafto, East and West Thornton, Todridge, Wallington-Demesne, and Whitridge. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Netherwitton, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £20 0s. 10d.; gross income £520. Patron, the bishop of Durham. The church is an ancient Gothic building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and three aisles. There is a daily school here, with a small endowment. Poor rates, in 1838, £543 8s. Acres 23,830. Houses 246. A. P. £20,137. Pop., in 1801, 1,185; in 1831, 1,440. Houses of the township, 4. Pop. in 1801, 25; in 1831, 17.

HARTBURN-GRANGE, a township in the above parish and county, about 2 miles west of Hartburn. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 16s.

HARTCLIFFE AND BEDMINSTER HUNDRED, in the north-west of the county of Somerset; bounded on the north by Portbury hund. and part of Gloucestershire; on the east by the hundreds of Keynsham and Chew; on the south by Winterstoke and Chewton hundred; and on the west by Brent and Wrington, and also by Winterstoke, hundreds. Area 19,440 acres. Houses 3,010. Pop., in 1831, 17,047.

HARTEST, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; 6¼ miles north-west of Clare. Living, a rectory with that of Boxted, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £29 14s. 2d.; gross income £663. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £620 17s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1829, £61 10s. per annum, besides Wright's almshouse. Poor rates, in 1838, £354 19s. A fair for cattle and toys is held here on April 23d. Acres 1,900. Houses 162. A. P. £2,905. Pop., in 1801, 646; in 1831, 761

HARTHILL WAPENTAKE, in the east riding of the county of York, consists of four divisions, —Bainton-Beacon, Holme-Beacon, Hunsley-Beacon, and Wilton-Beacon. Area 229,360 acres. Houses 9,333. Pop., in 1831, 47,659.

HARTFIELD HUNDRED is situated at the northern extremity of the rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex. Area 17,500 acres. Houses 519. Pop., in 1831, 3,065.

HARTFIELD (NORTH and SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Hartfield, union of East Grinstead, county of Sussex; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of East Grinstead, and intersected by the rivers Medway, Kent, and Bole. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £10; gross income £488. Patron, in 1835, Earl Delawarr. The church is in the early style of English architecture, with some portions of the decorated style. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. There are 7 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1836, about £65 per annum, besides 7 almshouses. Poor rates, in 1838, £767 16s. Hops are cultivated to the extent of $33\frac{3}{8}$ acres in this parish. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held here on Thursday after Whitsun-week. Acres 8,420. Houses 235. A. P. £4,970. Pop., in 1801, 1,050; in 1831, 1,455.

HARTFORD, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, hund. of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Norwich, on the western bank of the river Weaver, and intersected by the Newton and Birmingham railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £117; in the patronage of trustees. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Acres 1,030. Houses 185. A. P. £3,245. Pop., in 1801, 472; in 1831, 863. Poor rates, in 1838, £220 15s.

HARTFORD, a parish in the hund. of Hurstingstone, union and county of Huntingdon; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east-north-east of Huntingdon. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £4 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £123. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1832, £40 15s. per annum, besides 40 bushels of coals charged on lands. Poor rates, in 1838, £266 12s. Acres 1,720. Houses 70. A. P. £2,627. Pop., in 1801, 333; in 1831, 452.

HARTFORD (EAST), a township in the parochial chapelry of Horton, county of Northumberland; 5 miles south-south-west of Morpeth, on the northern bank of the river Blythe. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £35 5s. 10d. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 18; in 1831, 12. Other returns with the parish.

HARTFORD (WEST), a township in the above parish and county, near the river Blythe. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £86 15s. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 14. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 55. Poor rates, in 1838, £18 17s.

HARTGROVE, a tything in the parish of Fontnell-Magna, county of Dorset; 3 miles south-west by south of Shaftesbury. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Iwerne Minster. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 45. Pop., in 1811, 249; in 1831, 187.

HARTHILL, a parish in the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Broughton, co.-palatine of Chester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Tarporley. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £18, returned at £140; gross income £114. Patron, in 1835, F. T. Drake, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 500. Houses 31.

A. P. £739. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 166. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 3s.

HARTHILL, a township in the parish of Bakewell, county of Derby; 1 mile south of Bakewell. Acres 330. Houses 10. A. P. included with the parish of Youlgrave. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 65. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 18s.

HARTHILL WITH WOODALL, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Worksop, west riding of Yorkshire; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Rotherham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £18 11s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £703. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Leeds. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1836, upwards of £20 per annum. Poor rates in 1838, £242 2s. Acres 2,940. Houses 129. A. P. £4,976. Pop., in 1801, 660; in 1831, 632.

HARTING, a parish in the hund. of Dumpford, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; 4 miles east-south-east of Petersfield. Living, a sinecure rectory and vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £26 13s. 4d.; gross income of the latter £259. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Fetherstonhaugh. Here is a place of worship for the Independents. There are also 3 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £39 8s. 8d., besides an interest in Lady Puckering's charity to Sidlesham. Poor rates, in 1838, £522 16s. "Henry, Hoese, the founder of the priory of Dureford, founded here an hospital or house of lepers, temp. Hen. II., dedicated to St. John Baptist."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Acres 7,830. Houses 202. A. P. £8,144. Pop., in 1801, 863; in 1831, 1,290.

HARTINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Wirksworth, union of Bakewell, county of Derby; 8 miles south-west of Bakewell, bounded on the west by the river Dove, and in the vicinity of the Cromford and High Peak railway. It comprises the townships of Town-Quarter, Middle-Quarter with Earl-Stern-dale, Nether-Quarter, and Upper-Quarter. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £10; gross income £149. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. There are 7 daily schools here. Charities, in 1827, £36 13s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £555 10s. Acres 24,160. Houses 422. A. P. £12,424. Pop., in 1801, 1,822; in 1831, 2,103.

HARTINGTON, a township in the parish of Hartburn, Northumberland; 8 miles west by north of Morpeth. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 10. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 5s.

HARTINGTON-HALL, a township in the same parish. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £31 8s.

HARTISMERE HUNDRED, on the north side of the county of Suffolk, is bounded on the north by Norfolk; on the east by Hoxne hundred; on the south by the hundreds of Bosmere, with Claydon and Stow; and on the west by Blackbourne hundred. Area 55,240 acres. Houses 2,412. Pop., in 1831, 17,871.—The Hartismere poor-law union comprehends 32 parishes, embracing an area of 86 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 17,871. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £19,212. Expenditure, in 1838, £9,258; in 1839, £8,617 11s.

HARTLAND HUNDRED, on the north-west side of the county of Devon, forms Hartland-point in the Bristol channel. It is bounded on the west and north by the Bristol channel; on the east by Shebbear hundred; and on the south by Black Torrington hundred, and part of Cornwall. Area 30,360 acres. Houses 849. Pop., in 1831, 4,646.

HARTLAND, a parish, market-town, and seaport in the hund. of Hartland, union of Bideford, county of Devon, on the coast of the Bristol channel; 12 miles west by south of Bideford, and 215 miles west by south of London. Acres 11,030. Houses 393. A. P. £9,091. Pop., in 1801, 1,546; in 1831, 2,143. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; gross income £97; in the patronage of the governors of the Charter-house, London. The church, from its situation, serves as a land-mark for mariners. Tanner says, "Githa, wife to Earl Godwin, is said to have placed secular priests in the church of St. Nectan here, who enjoyed the prebends of it till the time of King Henry II., when Jeffrey de Dinham, by the authority of that king, and of Bartholomew bishop of Exeter, and by the assistance of Richard, archdeacon of Poitiers, changed the seculars into an abbot and convent of Black canons, whose revenues were rated, 26th Hen. VIII., at £306 13s. 2d. q. Speed per ann. And granted, 37th Hen. VIII., to William Abbot." Here are an Independent church, formed in 1815; and 7 daily schools. Charities, in 1822, £70 4s., of which £48 4s. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1838, £816 7s. The town of Hartland is situated in a very bleak district, terminated on the north by Hartland-point, a remarkable promontory on the coast, and bounded on the south by some heights, where the rivers Torridge and Tamar have their sources. It is governed by a portreeve. Hartland quay is much frequented, particularly by the fishermen of Barnstaple, Bideford, and other towns on the coast, who find good shelter under the rocky eminences skirting the shore. It is also noted for the many fine herrings caught in the season. There is a market on Saturday; and fairs for cattle are held on the Wednesday in Easter-week, and on 25th September.

HARTLAND-POINT, a promontory on the north-west coast of Devonshire, at the entrance to the Bristol channel. Lat. 57° N. Long. 4° 30' W.

HARTLEBURY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; 4 miles south-south-east of Kidderminster, east of the Severn, and in the line of the Stafford and Worcester canal. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Worcester, exempt from visitation; rated at £30; no return. Patron, the bishop of Worcester. The church is a handsome Gothic structure. A new church was founded in 1836. Here are 4 daily schools, and a free grammar-school which has existed since the year 1400, its income is upwards of £120 per annum. There are several almshouses with a small endowment. Other charities, in 1832, upwards of £60 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £498 12s. In 1838 a worsted mill here employed 20 hands. Hartlebury-castle has been for many years one of the residences of the bishops of Worcester: the present mansion was built about the time of the Restoration, and has been greatly improved by its successive proprietors: the ancient castle, erected by Bishop Cantelupe in the reign of Henry III., was taken possession of and destroyed by the parliamentary forces in 1646. Acres 5,500. Houses 403. A. P. £8,287. Pop., in 1801, including the hamlet of Milton-Upper, 1,681; in 1831 1,948.

HARTLEPOOL,

A sea-port, borough, and parish, in the north-eastern division of Stockton ward, union of Stockton, county of Durham. It is situated 18 miles east-south-east of Durham, and 19 south-south-east of Sunderland, on a bold and nearly insulated headland surrounded on all sides but the west by the German ocean. Acres 840. Houses 275. A. P. £738. Pop., in 1801, 993; in 1831, 1,330.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £11 17s. 1d., and returned at £110; gross income £149. Patron, the vicar of Hart. St. Hilda's church is a spacious edifice in the early English style, with portions of various other styles of architecture, evidently built at different periods. The tower and nave appear to have been erected towards the latter end of the 13th century. The side aisles, which have been built at a later period, are of a very mean character and unworthy of the older portion of the structure. The tower is supported on the north and west by large buttresses; and as the church stands on rather an elevated situation, it forms a conspicuous mark for vessels on approaching the harbour. "At or near this place was the ancient monastery called Heorthis, founded upon the first conversion of the Northumbrians to Christianity, about A. D. 640, by a religious woman named Hieu, or, as some copies have it, St. Bega, whereof St. Hilda was some time abbess.—A house of Grey friars, founded before A. D. 1275, and after the dissolution, viz., 37th Hen. VIII., granted to John Dryle and John Scudamore."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Ruins called the friarage are situated between the church and the sea, but they consist merely of the shell of the mansion built by the lay-proprietors after the suppression of the monastery. Some Runic grave-stones were found here in 1833 and 1838. Human skulls and other bones were also found, and under each skull a flat stone. Mr. Gage suggests that these are relics of the cemetery which was attached to the Saxon monastery of St. Hilda, the site of which has been hitherto undiscovered, although it has generally been supposed to be the same as that of the friary. The Wesleyans, Congregational dissenters, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here, and a new Presbyterian chapel was opened on 1st January, 1840. The site was granted at a reduced price, and the stone requisite for the building given, by the duke of Cleveland, on the representation of his agent, William Bolam, Esq. There are here five daily schools, two of which are endowed. Other charities, in 1827, about £140 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £284 7s.

Municipal affairs.—In 1201 King John granted a charter to Hartlepool, conferring upon the burgesses the same privileges as those of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and, in 1230, Richard Le Poor, bishop of Durham, granted another, appointing a mayor and other officers for its government. In 1593, Queen Elizabeth granted a new charter, under which the affairs of the borough have since been regulated.

Port, trade, &c.—We are not informed by any of our antiquaries when Hartlepool first rose into consequence as a port, or to whom it anciently belonged. The town was reduced to ashes by the Danes in 800, and was rebuilt, between 830 and 845, by Egfrid, bishop of Lindisfarne. Its importance as a port was soon observed by the Normans; and being capable of receiving ships and troops from the continent on every emergency when the northern borders were troubled, the family of Brus were induced to make it a place of strength. William de Brus, the grandson of Robert, obtained a grant from the Crown of a weekly market to be held here every Wednesday, which King John, in the 17th year of his reign, 1216, confirmed to Robert, the son of William Brus; and added the privilege of holding an annual fair for 3 days, to commence on the feast of St. Lawrence.

The market was ultimately held on Saturday; and fairs for toys and fish are held on May 14th, August 21st, October 9th, and November 27th. Robert Brus, son of the last mentioned Robert, "built the haven and wall about the town of Hartlepool, with ten towers on eche syde of the haven, and a chayne to be drawn between them near the haven, which haven would hold a C. sayle." The mode of fortification described as protecting this port prevailed for some centuries. Few places in England could give a more perfect idea of the fortifications of former times than the remains at Hartlepool, especially as they existed 60 years since, and consisting of a long wall, strengthened by demi-bastions; various gates and sally ports, secured by machicolations; and the portcullis, and some of the gates defended by angular and square turrets. From the reign of King John, to that of James I., this was the most considerable port in the county. When Hugh Pudsey purchased the earldom of Sadberge, in 1189, Hartlepool became annexed to the see of Durham and became the grand emporium of the diocese, whence the prelates sent forth their fleets, imported merchandise, and landed auxiliary forces. In 1680, Hartlepool became a dependent port on Stockton; and from 1725 to 1832, the commercial condition of Hartlepool gradually declined to that of a small fishing-town. It has now, however, all at once, become a renovated and flourishing port. Railway communications, projected and made [see DURHAM, Railways], are opening up a new source of trade, by connecting it with the inexhaustible coal-fields, and the lead-districts of Durham, and its progress as a sea-port town during the four years subsequent to 1835, is said to be so extraordinary that there seems great probability of its becoming in a few years one of the principal ports for the shipment of coals in the county of Durham. In 1835 there were only 3 sloops registered in the port. In 1839 there were 90 vessels, averaging about 245 tons each, and representing a capital of £208,800! The water surface of its new and magnificent wet dock is 20 acres, which is exactly equal to that of the Old London dock. It is inferior only in area to that of the two West India docks, and one of the Commercial docks in London, but exceeds the largest dock in Liverpool—the Brunswick dock—by $5\frac{1}{2}$ acres; and the largest dock in Hull—the Old dock—by 10 acres. Its depth of water will rarely be less than 20 feet, nor ever much exceed 25 feet, but will necessarily vary with the high water of the neap and spring tides. The new dock is separated from the outer dock, or tide harbour, by a quay of the length of 400 yards, forming the base of a vast wooden stage or platform raised to the level of the railway, to which, in fact, it forms the termination—the railway here dividing into a number of branches, and each branch leading to 'a drop,' a simple and beautiful contrivance upon the principle of a balance, for lowering the full coal-waggons from the platform into the ships moored for the purpose on each side of the quay. Eight drops are now at work in the tide harbour and one in the new dock; seven others are in progress, and a still larger number will probably be required to meet the rapidly increasing shipment of coals at Hartlepool, which already closely approaches to 50,000 tons per month, and will doubtless receive a new impulse from the great additional accommodation afforded by the new dock to the shipping frequenting the port.* The bay of Hartlepool has long been noted for the shelter it affords to shipping of no great burden, from the most formidable gales which prevail upon this coast, viz. from the north and north-east; and might be rendered a most capacious and invaluable harbour-of-refuge at all times of the tide for the largest class of merchant-vessels, by the formation of a breakwater, to extend in a curve from the south-east corner of the town-moor, towards the extremity of the ledge of rock, called 'the Long scar.' The entrance to the present harbour is in the north-west corner of the bay. It was almost completely land-locked by nature, but is now effectually protected by the restoration of the Old pier, and the erection of a jetty, from every wind and wave, and the harbour of Hartlepool must henceforth be considered as the most accessible and convenient upon the whole long line of coast between the straits of Dover and the Pentland frith. Its geological situation is in a trough or subsidence of the magnesian limestone strata, which rise to a considerable elevation on the mainland to the west,—a few yards above high water-mark on the north,—and form the promontory of the town and town-lands of Hartlepool on the east, but dip under a thick bed of clay to the south, forming the substratum of the docks, and of their entrance from the sea, which has been deepened by dredging to the depth of 6 or 8 feet at the lowest spring tides. Whilst the neighbouring limestone rocks have furnished a large portion of the building materials, in the shape of stone and lime, for the quays, the impervious character of this argillaceous bed has greatly facilitated the excavation of the docks when under the sea-level; but an accidental perforation through the clay at an early period of the works, produced a copious feeder of sea-water from the porous limestone strata below, which, we believe, has ever since required the aid of a steam-engine for pumping it from the works during the progress of the excavations. Numerous cases of shipwreck have occurred upon this coast, and the fishermen of Hartlepool, who are a primitive and rude, but expert, athletic, and courageous race, have been ever ready to brave the violence of the storm to rescue their fellow-creatures. A subscription life-boat was established here some years ago. There are branches here of the Darlington District, and of the Newcastle, Shields, and Sunderland Union, Joint Stock banking companies.

Hartlepool is now much resorted to as a bathing-place; and on the south side of the town is a chalybeate spring, which is covered by the sea at every tide. The chalybeate water, which rises very slowly, discovers a little sulphur, and a gallon of it yields

* The first act for the construction of the Hartlepool docks and railway was obtained in 1832, and a considerable portion of the railway has been constructed and at work for four or five years: the object of its promoters being to obtain the shipment of coals from the Thornley, Haswell, and South Hetton collieries, distant from 10½ to 12½ miles from the port, and which could produce a supply of coals amply sufficient to repay them for the advance of capital required for their undertaking. The extension of the working of these collieries having, however, furnished a strong presumption of the practicability of sinking to the coal strata at a much shorter distance from the port, the Wingate-Grange colliery has already been opened with complete success, and the Castle Eden colliery is opening, at the respective distance of 8 and 6 miles from the harbour (each being of the first magnitude and povers of machinery), the produce of both of which must be shipped at Hartlepool, together with that of several other collieries opened or opening in the higher part of the country. The passenger-traffic on the railway is considerable, though somewhat impeded by the slow motion and stoppages of the coal trains, and is found to be remunerative at the low charge of 1½d. per mile for the first class, and 1d. for the second class carriages. The maximum rate of railway dues, allowed by the act, for coals passing along the line, is three farthings per ton per mile, the coal-owners finding their own locomotive power—which, however, has been ascertained, upon careful investigation, not to cost one farthing per ton per mile. The recent half-yearly dividends to the shareholders have been paid at the rate of six per cent. per annum. See Durham Advertiser of Dec. 11th, 1840, to which we are indebted for the information in this note, as well as in the above text, respecting the new dock at Hartlepool.

120 grains of sediment, of which two parts are nitre, and the rest limestone. During the season many distinguished families are to be found here; the Earl of Darlington has a commodious house in the town, besides which here are many other handsome buildings. The coast to the north of the town is very rocky, and the shore has long extended shoals stretching out in spits of sand. The rocks are excavated by the violence of the waves, and are formed into caverns, grotesque arches, piazzas, &c., called 'the fairy coves,' which afford pleasant and romantic retreats at low water. The view from the churchyard, and from Moor-house, is peculiarly grand and interesting, embracing a vast extent of the ocean, together with the vale of Cleveland, the high lands of Yorkshire, surmounted by Roseberry Topping; the mouth of the Tees, and the villages of Redcar, Coatham, and Seaton Carew.

HARTLEY (THE), a river in Northumberland, which falls into the Tyne at Featherston-haugh.

HARTLEY, a parish in the hund. of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Dartford, county of Kent; 6 miles south-east of Dartford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £7; gross income £282. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Allen. Hops have been annually cultivated here to the extent of about 16 acres. Acres 1,110. Houses 34. A. P. £1,013. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 182. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 14s.

HARTLEY, a tything in the county of Dorset; returns made with the parish of Mintern-Magna.

HARTLEY, a township and sea-port in the parish of Earsdon, county of Northumberland; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of North Shields. Seaton-grove is a hamlet in Hartley township, and Hartley is a large village: there are chapels for Presbyterians, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; and 3 daily schools in this township. It is situated on the coast of the North sea, and has a safe and commodious harbour, named Hartley-pans, or Seaton-sluice, under Newcastle as a sea-port, and formed at great expense by Sir Ralph Delaval. This haven is situated at the mouth of the Seaton-burn rivulet, which rises near the Six-mile bridge, on the Newcastle and Morpeth road, and runs eastward to the sea, where it formerly discharged itself by a sudden turn due north, at the point where the bold and lofty sea-banks formed an angle, one side facing the north, and the other the east. At the point of this angle the haven was made, in the construction of which Sir Ralph found enough to exercise his skill and patience. The stone pier, which covered it from the north-east wind, was more than once carried away by the sea; and when this difficulty was overcome, the harbour filled up with sand, though a pretty sharp rill ran through it. In order to remove this mischief, a strong sluice, with flood-gates, was placed upon the brook, to retain the water from high tide till the ebb, when, being let off through the flood-gates, it scoured the bed of the haven, and carried away all the sand which collected there, every 12 hours. Charles II. as an encouragement to Sir Ralph, made him "collector and surveyor of his own port." The haven was afterwards greatly improved by the late Lord Delaval, who cut through a solid freestone rock, from the point where the river suddenly turned to the north, to the sea on the east side of the angle, so that the current now discharges itself into the ocean in a straight direction, and forms a harbour accessible with every wind, having two entrances from the sea, by which ships may sail in or out. The new entrance, which is crossed by a draw-bridge, is 52 feet deep, 30 feet broad, and 900 feet long. It was completed at the sole expense of Lord Delaval, from a plan by Thomas Delaval, Esq., who had resided some time in Hamburgh, where he obtained considerable wealth, and a passion for commerce. From 12 to 15 vessels of 200 or 300 tons burthen, can be accommodated in this haven, where they lie in perfect safety in every wind. The word sluice was added to the name of this place, from the sluice and flood-gates at the mouth of the port. Large quantities of coals, distinguished by the name of Delaval's Hartley Main coals, are sent hence to the London and other markets. A considerable number of the inhabitants are seamen, and many of them are employed at glass-bottle works, and at a colliery, brewery, and malt-kilns. During the last war the harbour was commanded by a block-house and battery upon a mound of ballast, where a party of soldiers performed duty. On Bates island, nearly opposite to Hartley, was anciently a small chapel and a hermitage. There were formerly extensive salt and copperas works here, but they have been discontinued. In 1765, a woodcock was shot in this township, and in its stomach was found a diamond of great value. In 1766 a whale, 17 yards long, was caught in the sea near the port of Hartley. Acreage with the parish. Houses 24. A. P. £2,246. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 1,639; in 1831, 1,850. Poor rates, in 1838, £851 2s.

HARTLEY, a township in the parish of Kirby-Stephen, county of Westmoreland; about a mile south-east of Kirby-Stephen. This is a mountainous district, containing several veins of lead and copper, and upon Hartley Fell a seam of coal which has been worked. Hartley or Harcla castle stood on an eminence above the village of Hartley. It was the seat of a family of the same name in the reign of Henry II. Andrew de Harcla was created earl of Carlisle in 1322, but being afterwards detected in a league with Robert the Bruce, king of Scotland, he was attainted and beheaded in 1323. The castle was granted to Ralph Neville, Baron of Raby. It was long afterwards inhabited by the Musgrave family, one of whom, Sir Christopher, demolished it previous to 1736. Acreage with the parish. Houses 24. A. P. £2,265. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 125. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 3s.

HARTLEY-BURN, a township in the parish of Haltwhistle, county of Northumberland; about 10 miles west of Hexham. There is a daily school here. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 25. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 161. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 10s.

HARTLEY-DAMMER, or DONNEX, a liberty in the parish of Shinfield, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Reading. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 440. Houses 56. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 331.

HARTLEY-MAUDIT, a parish in the north division of the hund. and union of Alton, county of Southampton; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Alton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £271. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Houston. About 11 acres of hops have been annually cultivated in this parish. Acres 1,550. Houses 8. A. P. £1,655. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 69. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 5s.

HARTLEY-ROW, a hamlet in the parish of Hartley-Wintney, hund. of Odiham, county of Southampton; 4 miles north-east of Odiham. Here is a place of worship for Baptists. Fairs for pedlery are held here on Shrove-Tuesday and June 29th. Pop. returned with the parish.

HARTLEY-WESTPALL, a parish in the hund. of Holdshott, Basingstoke division, union of Basingstoke, county of Southampton; 5 miles west of Hartford-bridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 16s. 3d.; gross income £325. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1825, £16 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £220 12s. Acres 1,450. Houses 45. A. P. £1,774. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 283.

HARTLEY-WINTNEY, a parish in the hund. of Odiham, union of Hartley-Wintney, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; 2 miles south-west of Hartford-bridge, and intersected by the Southampton and London railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £4 0s. 7½d.; gross income £115. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Mildmay. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Charities, in 1825, upwards of £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £325 10s.—The Hartley-Wintney poor-law union comprehends 13 parishes, embracing an area of 58 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 9,830. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £7,439. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,007; in 1839, £4,620 2s. A few acres of hops are cultivated in this parish. Acres 2,280. Houses 206. A. P. £3,868. Pop., in 1801, 761; in 1831, 1,139.

HARTLINGTON. See HARLINGTON.

HARTLIP, a parish in the hund. and union of Milton, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 5 miles east-south-east of Chatham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £9 10s. 10d.; gross income £185. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. There is a daily National school here, endowed with land and cottages producing £26 per annum. Other charities, in 1836, about £4 12s. 2d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £219 15s. Acres 1,350. Houses 65. A. P. £2,052. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 363.

HARTOFT, a township in the parish of Middleton, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles east-north-east of Richmond. There is a daily school here. Acres 4,740. Houses 27. A. P. £564. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 142. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 14s.

HARTON, a township in the parish of Jarrow, east division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 3½ miles south-south-west of South Shields. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,000. Houses 40. A. P. £3,139. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 217. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 12s.

HARTON, a township in the parish of Bossall, north riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-south-west of New Malton, on the western bank of the Derwent. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,620. Houses 24. A. P. £1,968. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 16s.

HARTPURY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Dudstone and King's-Barton, union of Newent, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles east-south-east of Newent, on the river Leadon, and near the Hereford and Gloucester railway. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £16 16s. 5½d.; gross income £197. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel; and there are 2 daily schools and a day and Sunday school. Charities, in 1832, about £52 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £437 7s. Acres 3,580. Houses 141. A. P. £5,208. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 880.

HARTSHEAD, a district in the parish of Ashton-under-Lyne, county of Lancaster; 3 miles north-east of Ashton, on the river Tame. On a high hill on the north side of Hartshead, are the remains of a beacon called 'the Pike.' The district is rich in coal. Scout-Mill, on the banks of the Tame, is celebrated for its romantic scenery. Hartshead is a part of the manor of Ashton. New roads have been cut through the division to Huddersfield. Pop., in 1821, 9,137. Other returns with the parish.

HARTSHEAD. See CLIFTON CUM HARTSHEAD.

HARTSHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Mancetter, county of Warwick; 3¼ miles north-west of Nuneaton, close upon the Coventry canal. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1808. A new Independent chapel for the congregation of Independent dissenters at Chapel-end near this place, has been erected since 23d July, 1839, when the foundation-stone was laid. There are here 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Hartshill is connected with Coventry in the ribbon manufacture. Michael Drayton the poet was born here in 1563. Acreage with the parish. Houses 201. A. P. £2,919. Pop., in 1801, 393; in 1831, 909. Poor rates, in 1838, £258 13s.

HARTSHILL, an extensive common in the parish of Huelsfield, county of Gloucester, not assessed in any way.

HARTSHORN, a parish in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, county of Derby; 3½ miles north-west of Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £3 2s. 1d.; gross income £540. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Chesterfield. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here; and there are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, in 1826, about £90 per annum, principally applied in education. Poor rates, in 1838, £163 16s. Acres 2,510. Houses 225. A. P. £3,875. Pop., in 1801, 580; in 1831, 1,204.

HARTSIDE. See HAWDON, CLINK, and HARTSIDE.

HARTSOP AND PATERDALE, a chapelry in the parish of Barton, county of Westmoreland; 5 miles north of Ambleside. There is a daily school here endowed with £5 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 72. A. P. £1,842. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 400. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 14s.

HARTWELL, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 2 miles south-west of Aylesbury. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Little Hampden, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 5s. 5d.; gross income £226. Patron, in 1835, J. Lee, Esq. The patron, in 1838, presented the perpetual advowson of this rectory to the Astronomical society. The church was erected by the late Sir W. Lee. This was the residence of Louis XVIII. during his stay in England. The only charity connected with the parish, in 1832, was a gift from that sovereign to the poor of Hartwell and Stone, yielding £4 1s. 10d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 8s. Acres 680. Houses 28. A. P. £1,513. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 137.

HARTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Cleley, union of Potterspurty, county of Northampton; 7½ miles south-south-east of Northampton, near the London and Birmingham railway. It includes part of the hamlet of Old Stratford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, certified to value £20; gross income £70. Patron, in 1835, W. Castleman, Esq. There is here a small Norman church or chapel, now consisting of only a single pace, and without a tower. The exterior, from its various alterations and mutilations, possesses no beauty, and very little curiosity, if we except some herring-bone work, a dog-tooth cornice, and other indications of its early style; but it appears that its interior is far more remarkable: "In the north wall is the interesting range of four Norman arches, which originally separated the nave and the aisle. They are supported on circular pillars, with rather shallow capitals, varying in design, but with circular astragals and abacuses of plain flat mouldings. The connecting archivolt mouldings have a beautiful effect, and consist of large bold nailheads with a peculiar enrichment, each being divided from the other by a row of smaller ones, and the whole bordered on the outside by another row."—Baker's Hist. and Antiq. of Northamp. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,850. Houses 95. A. P. £1,578. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 531. Poor rates, in 1838, £229 6s.

HARTWITH WITH WINSLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Malzeard, west riding of Yorkshire; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Knaresborough; bounded on the south-west by the river Nidd. Acres 5,470. Houses 153. A. P. £4,098. Pop., in 1801, 449; in 1831, 943. Living, a perpetual curacy, with that of Winsley annexed, formerly in the dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £103. Patrons, in 1835, the Rev. J. Swire and R. Roundell, Esq. There is a day and Sunday National school in this chapelry, endowed by Mr. Robert Haxby with £29 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £329 15s. Here are Brimham Crag, "one of the most astonishing natural curiosities that can be conceived. The scene which opens to the view, on approaching these rocks, is so awfully magnificent, and rudely picturesque, as to astonish every beholder. This extraordinary work of Nature covers no less a space than forty acres, and exhibits the most striking view of her wild and uncultivated grandeur. 'From the towering summits of these rocks, immense fragments appear to have been precipitated and hurled to a considerable distance: others hanging by trifling points, and projecting considerably over the base, threaten to crush the trembling visitant. Two rocks, each above ten yards square, have been completely disunited, leaving an area at least four feet wide; they exhibit so exact a correspondence of parts as to convince the observer, that they once formed a solid mass, and can only have been left in their present state by some violent and tremendous convulsion of Nature. The rocking-stones constitute one of the most striking objects of this surprising scene; they are formed by a rock, worn by the attacks of wind and rain to an obtuse point at the centre, which rests on the plain surface of another: of these, the two largest are calculated to weigh above 100 tons each, and can be put in motion with ease by the hand; time will perhaps give to other detached masses the same surprising power of rocking, as they are composed of a very friable kind of grit.'—Farrer's Hist. Ripon, p. 228. In these rocks are many cylindrical apertures of different diameters: some entirely perforate the mass; others penetrate only a few feet. But two of them, called the Cannon Rocks, are very remarkable. They are entirely perforated. The diameter of their perforations is about one foot, and nearly, if not exactly, uniform from end to end. One of them penetrates through a huge mass of rock: the lower end of the aperture is easily accessible: the other extremity opens on the opposite side, where the perpendicular crag rises to a terrific height, and is consequently of difficult access, and invisible to a spectator at the bottom. Ingenious writers and tourists differ greatly in their conjectures concerning these wonderful works, some imagining that this chaotic scene was one of the sacred places of the Druids, and that these perforations in the rocks were made for delivering their oracles, as no place seems better adapted to the solemn and tremendous mysteries of their religion, while the opinion is rejected by others as not sufficiently supported by historical evidence. Hargrove, the historian of Knaresborough, in describing this Cannon rock, says, 'To a person stationed on this side, the voice of another placed at the mouth, or lower extremity of the cylinder, sounds most dismally, and as if it issued from the very centre of the cliff. Immediately above this orifice of the cylinder, and on the very summit of the rock, are two small grooves about two feet asunder, and of equal dimensions: they are perfectly circular, of about two inches in width, and the same in depth; and might serve for the insertion of two pedestals or props, which, it is not improbable, may formerly have supported the figure of some oracular idol; for these tubes, which are internally rugose, were capable of augmenting the sound of the voice, and giving its tone a degree of almost supernatural vehemence and terrible solemnity; and by the artful management of the Druid priests might occasionally become instruments for the promulgation or oracular decrees.' Here is also, among these chaotic fragments of convulsed nature, a rock of a very singular shape, which Hargrove supposes to have been a rock-idol, or a stone consecrated to some principal deity. It is forty-six feet in circumference, and seems to have been separated from the adjoining rock. The pedestal on which it rests is at the top only one foot by two feet seven inches. The marks of the tool are visible in many places, particularly on the base of the pedestal, which has been shaped into a polygon, approaching towards a hexagon, but part of the sides has been defaced by time. Hargrove considers the hazardous undertaking of shaping this rock and pedestal as a proof that the Druids had some knowledge of mechanism, and gives a reference to the third volume of the Archæologia in support of his opinion. He then concludes with these words, 'that this was a place set apart for the celebration of religious rites, during the dark ages of pagan superstition, there can be little doubt; from the great number of tumuli seen here, similar in situation to those near Stonehenge, within view of the place of solemn meeting,' &c. Farrer, the historian of Ripon, acknowledges the fitness of the place for druidical mysteries, but contends that the fact of its appropriation to this use rests on no evidence. In speaking of the Cannon rocks, he says, 'It has been conjectured that the Druids made use of this (perforation) to deliver their delusive oracles to the credulous pagans, and certainly no place could be more suitable to the performance of their mysteries and deceptions; and sounds issuing from the centre of the cliff might be so modulated, as to occasion sensations of fear and amazement in the listening attendants. The forms of the detached rocks, and the rude figures some of them exhibit, are, however, to be attributed solely to the hand of nature. The supposed druidical circles exist only in imagination; and there appear few grounds of belief that this scene of grandeur and sublimity has ever been dedicated to the celebration of religious rites.' Such is the difference of opinions concerning the appropriation of this place to druidical worship; and it may be fairly presumed that the question can never obtain a satisfactory solution."—Beauties of Eng. and Wales. Nearly in the centre of this astonishing scene, is a house with suitable offices. It was built in the year 1792, by the Right Hon. William Lord Grantley, the noble proprietor of the estate, for the accommodation of company resorting to view this stupendous work of nature.

HARTY (ISLE OF), a parish in the hund. of Faversham, lathe of Scray, union of Sheppey, county of Kent; 9 miles south-east of Queenborough, and north of the Swale. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £20 6s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £59. Patron, in 1835, James Foord, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,530. Houses 8. A. P. £2,649. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 67. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 18s.

HARVINGTON, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 4 miles north-east by north of Evesham, and west of the river Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £300. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Worcester. Charities, in 1830, £5 0s. 9d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 14s. Acres 1,290. Houses 71. A. P. £2,351. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 318.

HARWELL, a parish in the hund. of Moreton, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Wantage, and in the line of the Great Western railway. One of the termini of a projected railway from Oxford to the Great Western is in this parish. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 4s. 2d.; nett income £220. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Chetwode, Bart. There are a here daily school, endowed with 5 cottages and 22 acres of land; and 3 infant schools; also an almshouse for 6 widows. Acres 2,720. Houses 157. A. P. £4,709. Pop., in 1801, 671; in 1831, 780. Poor rates, in 1838, £552 19s.

HARWICH, a borough, sea-port, and market-town in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex, 18 miles east-north-east of Colchester, with which it has been proposed to connect this port by a branch from the Eastern Counties railway. The town of Harwich is situated on the point of a tongue of land, at the mouth of the river Stour, locking in with a headland on the opposite coast of Suffolk, and forming with it, in the estuary common to the Stour and the Orwell, the port of Harwich, or the Orwell haven,—Harwich having first risen into importance, it is said, on the decay of a town named Orwell, which was situated where there is now a shoal five miles from the shore, called the West rocks, on which the ruins are yet visible at low water. The harbour is of great extent, affording good anchorage, and depth of water sufficient for ships of the largest burden: the bay or road will also admit first-rate vessels; and it is stated that 100 sail of war-ships, and between 300 and 400 sail of colliers, have been safely and conveniently riding here at anchor at the same time. Landguard fort, on the Suffolk side, erected in the reign of James I., completely commands the entrance to the harbour, which, though between 2 and 3 miles wide at high water, will only admit the entrance of ships by a deep but narrow channel on the Suffolk side. The navigation is difficult without an experienced pilot.*

On the south of the town, a cliff divides Orwell haven from the bay that extends to Walton Naze. This cliff is observed to be constantly giving way to the action of the sea, which, it is suspected, will, at some future period, force a passage to the opposite shore, and insulate Harwich and its vicinity. The cliff contains many acres of land: its greatest height is about 50 feet: at the bottom, a stratum of clay-like substance, on exposure to the air, gradually hardens to a kind of stone, with which the streets of Harwich are paved. The town walls were also formed of this material, as were the castles of Oxford and Framlingham. This eminence is named the Beacon cliff, on which there was formerly a signal-house and telegraph. The prospect from this elevated station presents a view of the higher parts of the town, with the two light-houses, the handsome new church, and other public buildings, the shipping in the harbour, and on the ocean. Between this station and the town there is a pleasant walk named the Esplanade, and on the cliff stands a circular martello tower, the largest of the kind in England. The wall is 8 feet thick, faced with granite, and bomb-proof. It is mounted with 10 guns. There is a range of barracks at Landguard fort. The scenery of the river is extremely beautiful. The town consists of three main streets with several lanes branching out on either side. It was formerly enclosed by a wall with four principal and three inferior gates, and there was a castle and an admiralty house. Among the principal buildings are the town-hall, the jail, customhouse, places of worship, schools, theatre, assembly and reading rooms. Harwich comprises the two parishes of St. Nicholas and Dover-Court. The town is situated wholly within the former parish. In the latter are situated Lower Dover-Court, a sort of village about half-a-mile distant from Harwich, which has been entirely built within the last 35 years. There is also another village in this parish called Upper Dover-Court, situated two miles from Harwich on the London road. Acres 2,060. Houses 660. A. P. £12,392. Pop., in 1801, 2,761; in 1831, 4,297.

The living of Dover-court is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Harwich; rated at £5 0s. 10d.; gross income £228. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The ancient church was founded about the 13th century, by Roger Bigot, earl of Norfolk. It consisted of a nave, two side-aisles, supported by 10 pillars, and a chancel. It had a quadrangular stone tower, with a wooden frame, embattled, above which was a spire. In 1821, this ancient and venerable structure was taken down, and a magnificent new church was erected at the cost of nearly £20,000. It is built chiefly of brick, with stone buttresses and steeple, and measures 100 feet in length by 60 feet in breadth. An Independent church was formed here in the 17th century, and a Wesleyan Methodist in 1794. There are 23 daily schools, one of which is a free-school, erected previous to 11th June, 1725, by Humphrey Parsons, Esq., and now supported by the corporation. There are 32 scholars on the foundation. Here are two small almshouses in West-street occupied by four poor widows. Four almshouses appointed to be erected in 1718, formed in 1836 part of the poor's house. Other charities more particularly connected with the town of Harwich, produced, in 1836, about £96 per annum, of which £80 were applied to parochial purposes. Charities more particularly connected with Dover-court, about £126 2s. 6d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,893 10s.

Harwich is a borough by prescription. Its first charter was granted by Edward II. at the request of his brother Thomas de Brotherton, earl of Norfolk, who was lord of the manor. Other charters

* In order to guard vessels from a sand-bank called the Andrews, which forms a bar across the entrance to the harbour from Landguard fort into the rolling ground, where there is good anchorage, there were formerly a blazing fire of coals, and 6 candles, 1 lb. each in weight, kept burning during the night, in a large room, with a glazed front over the principal gate, on the southern extremity of the town. In the time of Charles II. this purpose was more completely effected by two light-houses erected under letters patent, and furnished with lamps of a peculiar construction. One of these, built of white brick, yet retains its original form: the other was rebuilt with grey brick in 1818. Rising to the height of 69 feet above high water, it forms a conspicuous object at a great distance. These lights are situated at the south-west entrance to the town in 51° 36' 39" N. lat., 1° 17' 8" E. long. The old light-house is near the beach. The lights are seen to a distance of 12 miles in clear weather. They are both fixed, and they lead between the Andrews and the Ridge, and through the rolling ground.

were granted by Edward III., Richard II., &c., but a charter of James I. was the basis of the municipal constitution previous to the passing of the new municipal reform act. The government of the borough was vested by the charter in a mayor, recorder, 8 aldermen, 24 capital burgesses, and subordinate officers. The corporation were appointed to hold quarterly courts of session, and to form a court of pleas every Tuesday for recovery of debts not exceeding £100. A court of admiralty was instituted, but fell into disuse about the end of last century. The municipal commissioners state, in their report on the borough, that the loss of this court was a subject of regret and complaint among those interested in the shipping of the port, as it frequently happens that ships in distress are assisted into this harbour by boatmen, pilots, and others, and differences generally arise upon the demands made for their services. When the local court was no longer held, these disputes were frequently carried either to the high court in London, or before the magistrates at Colchester, whereby much expense and trouble have been occasioned. The old borough of Harwich was co-extensive with the parishes of St. Nicholas and Dover-court, a great portion of the harbour being subject to the jurisdiction of Ipswich. The limits laid down in the new boundaries' report exclude the parish of Dover-court altogether; but, under the new municipal act, the parliamentary boundaries, which coincide with those of the old borough, were appointed to be taken until altered by parliament. The borough is now governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; the style of the corporate body being the 'Mayor and burgesses of the borough of Harwich.' It is included in schedule A, amongst boroughs to have a commission of the peace, which has accordingly been granted. The income of the borough for 1839, was £621 16s. 6d., chiefly arising from rents, tolls, and dues: expenditure £607 12s. 3½d., consisting, among other items, of

Salaries and allowances to municipal officers,	£197 2 6
Public works, repairs, &c.,	114 18 7
Police and constables,	53 16 10

Harwich returned two members to parliament previously to the reign of Edward III., when the privilege was suspended; but it was restored by the last charter, and has been since regularly exercised. The right of voting, previously to the passing of the reform act, was in the mayor, aldermen, and capital burgesses; the greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to 1831, was 20. The number registered in 1837, was 167, of whom 12 were freemen; the number who actually polled at the general election, in 1837, was 146, 5 of whom were freemen. The mayor is the returning officer.

The prosperity of Harwich has very much declined of late years. During the last war with France, it was in a very flourishing condition, owing to the influx of strangers who entered and quitted the country at this place; to the convenience of its spacious harbour; its thriving fishery; the extensive public works carried on by Government, and the large garrisons kept up here and at Langward fort on the Suffolk shore. Some of these advantages continued to a certain extent whilst the Government packets to Holland, Germany, and Sweden were stationed here, but, since their removal, a great diminution of trade has taken place. The fishery has greatly declined since the commencement of the present century. In 1778, there were 78 fishing vessels, averaging about 40 tons each, belonging to this port: in 1833, there were not more than 10. Some advantage is derived from the fact of its being the only harbour between Yarmouth roads and the mouth of the Thames that is capable of affording refuge, in gales of wind from the eastward, to vessels navigating the eastern coast. During the prevalence of strong north-east winds, sometimes from 200 to 300 light colliers and other vessels proceeding northwards may still be seen anchored in the harbour. For the purpose of improving it still further, and especially during war, as a harbour of refuge, it is proposed to extend and fortify the pier. In 1833, the number of vessels belonging to this port was 96, with a tonnage of 5,513 tons. The gross receipt of customs-duty, in 1838, was £1,575 18s. 4d.; in 1839, £1,630 19s. A considerable traffic is maintained, by means of wherries, with Ipswich and Manningtree. Ship-building is carried on by a private individual who rents the Government dock-yard. A patent slip has recently been constructed here, on which ships of very large burthen can be hauled up with great facility, for repair. Cement is manufactured to some extent. A market is held on Tuesday and Friday, and fairs for toys are held on 1st May and 18th October.

Harwich derives some benefit from the numerous visitors who frequent it in the bathing season. There are excellent accommodations. Bathing machines have been introduced; but the private baths are very neat, and comfortably fitted up. They stand in a large reservoir of sea-water, which is changed every tide, and supplied with fresh water every hour by a contrivance on the principle of a natural syphon. In some of these baths the water is made hot for invalids. There are also vapour baths; and machinery to throw the sea-water, either hot or cold, on any part of the body.

"Herwiche," says Lambard, "is interpreted the towne wheare tharmye lay, by which armye the Danes are always understode; for the maner of speche is comon in the auncient chroniclers, that the armye laye here, and the armye landed there," &c. "Orwell," he also observes, "is called of some Harwiche haven, and hathe bene the comon place of arryval and shippinge, eyther to or from the lowe countries." Near Harwich are remains of a Roman camp, and other ancient fortifications, the road to which, from the town, is still called the Street. Roman coins and a tessellated pavement have been found. The most ancient record of any important occurrence here is of a naval engagement, which took place in the estuary at the mouth of the Stour between the Anglo-Saxon and Danish fleets in 884. The Danes were defeated. Isabel, Queen of Edward II., landed here on 24th September, 1326, with an army of 2,700 men, and numerous foreign and English nobles, in rebellion against the king, whom she pursued into Wales, and seizing Hugh Spencer, the father, caused him to be cut up alive and quartered, in the 90th year of his age. Edward III. sailed with his fleet and army from Orwell haven to assert his right to the French crown. Proving unsuccessful, he returned to England, landing at Harwich. He afterwards sailed from Orwell haven, and gained a victory over the French fleet off the harbour of Sluys. Others of the royal families of England have visited Harwich, and, in 1761, Lord Anson anchored his squadron here with the intended Queen of England, who landed at Harwich.

HARWICH, a hamlet in the parish of Whitstable, county of Kent. The pop. is returned with that of Whitstable.

HARWOOD, a chapelry in the parish of Middleton-on-Teesdale, county of Durham; 10 miles north-west by road of Barnard castle. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Durham. Pop. returned with the parish.

HARWOOD, a township in the parish of Bolton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2½ miles north-east of Bolton-le-Moors, and east of the river Medlock. Here is a daily school. Dimities and other light cottons are woven here. Harewood, or Harwood, was a lordship subject to Manchester, in 15^o Edward II. Lomax-Fold is a seat in this vicinity. Acres 1,100. Houses 357. A. P. £2,492. Pop., in 1801, 1,281; in 1831, 2,011. Poor rates, in 1838, £418 14s.

HARWOOD, a township in the parish of Hartburn, county of Northumberland; 14 miles west-north-west of Morpeth. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 34; in 1831, 47. Poor rates, in 1838, £8 7s.

HARWOOD-DALE WITH SILPHO, a township in the parish of Hackness, north riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles north-west of Scarborough. There is a daily school here. Acres 8,430. Houses 51. A. P. £2,087. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 336. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 7s.

HARWOOD (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish and hund. of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles north-east of Blackburn, and intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £14 15s.; gross income £126. Patron, the vicar of Blackburn. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,510. Houses 419. A. P. £4,806. Pop., in 1801, 1,659; in 1831, 2,436. Poor rates, in 1838, £835 14s.

HARWOOD (LITTLE), a township in the parish and hund. of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster. Acres 730. Houses 54. A. P. £1,414. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 341. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 4s.

HARWORTH, a parish in the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Worksop, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles west-south-west of Bawtry. It includes part of the township of Styrrup. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 9s. 7d.; gross income £695. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Norfolk. Here are a boarding school and an almshouse. Charities, in 1827, £101 18s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £208. Acres 4,320. Houses 98. A. P. £3,958. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 526.

HASCOMB, a parish in the hund. of Blackheath, union of Hambleton, county of Surrey; 3¼ miles south-east of Godalming. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 3s. 9d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, — Mackenzie. Here are 3 daily schools. In this parish is an eminence called Castle hill, on which are the remains of a small Roman camp. The works are single, the area almost square, as the ground allows it, and the works not great. It commands an extensive view of the country. The soil of this hill is peculiarly adapted to the growth of beeches: one of these trees, of extraordinary dimensions, is known by the name of Hascomb-beech, and may be seen at a great distance round. Here is a telegraph, forming part of the line between London and Portsmouth. Acres 990. Houses 38. A. P. £1,398. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 317. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 9s.

HASLEBEECH, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 11½ miles north by west of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 14s. 9d.; gross income £323. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Apreece. There is a daily school here. Charities, in 1830, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £162. Acres 1,790. Houses 33. A. P. £3,226. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 140.

HASELBURY-BRYAN, a parish in the hund. of Pimperne, union of Sturminster, county of Dorset; 9 miles west-north-west of Blandford. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 19s. 9d. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Northumberland. There are 5 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,010. Houses 120. A. P. £3,830. Pop., in 1801, 454; in 1831, 611. Poor rates, in 1838, £316 4s.

